Thoughts For the Thoughtful

Every poor specimen of manhood that we must see in life is a more urgent call for us to be men in Christ Jesus.

They that know God will be humble; they that know themselves cannot be proud.—Flavel.

Job was richer without his possessions than with them, because the loss of them brought him nearer to God.

Pray as He did, till prayer makes you cease to pray. Pray till prayer makes you forget your own wish, and leave it or merge it in God's will.

God can always see our inner selves, and as time goes on our outward features become so like our inner selves that those about us have only to look to know our actual characters.

I commit my soul to the mercy of God, through Our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and I exhort my dear children humbly to try to guide themselves by the teachings of the New Testament.—Charles Dickens, in his will.

The New Testament has nothing to say to a solitary man apart from the Church. All the messages it has for Christian men and women presupposes them in company with the Church of Jesus Christ. The Christian warfare is too difficult a task for individual Christians to wage. Trying to be a Christian alone is like trying to render Handel's "Messiah," on a single violin.—Selected.

Music and flowers were always precious to the serious people. Music was dear to John Bunyan; all heaven was full of sweet sounds to him. When other arts were denied, or renounced, the saints kept to their music, and it is in its sacred music that this race has given its finest gift to the art of the world.

The Church should press forward with new courage and assurance. The Gospel, which has nominally conquered the world, will not halt until it has ushered in the reign of Christ-righteousness and peace among all nations. The Easter message of deliverance, of victory and of immortality should uplift every downcast soul; cheer every soldier for the right, dry every tear-dimmed eye; and awaken the response from a ransomed world.—C. M. Sheldon.

HOME---A "SIGN" OR A HAPPY REALITY?

In a most interesting chapter in that fascinating volume, "A People's Life of Christ," Dr. Paterson Smyth asks this pertinent question, "Did you ever think how unchanging is that child world which changes nothing in all the passing centuries, playing the same sort of games today and singing the same sort of rhymes as this child world has been doing since the Tower of Babel?"

Then he goes on to point out how modern scholars have discovered that it was just one of these childhood rhymes that Our Saviour used to bring His accusation against the Pharisees in after life.

Undoubtedly what is said of the infancy of children is true—that their games are the same through the centuries, and that they employ very similar simple rhymes in playing them.

Is it equally true that the adolescence and youth of our young people varies as little as does their early childhood? Many people would reply that it does not. They will tell you that young people today are more wilful, less obedient, less respectful and more restless than they ever were before.

One has to admit that this criticism is largely true, but is it fair to blame it all on the rising generation? We think not. It is the rarest thing today that you see parents who require or expect prompt obedience from their children, even while they are very small, and if it is not inculcated then it is hopeless to expect it later.

It is natural that children in their teens should expect to enjoy themselves, and many parents seem to think that it is not fair to keep them at home and "deprive them of their pleasure."

It is perfectly right that young people—and old ones, too—should not be "deprived of pleasure," but why should staying at home have this effect? What we need in this country today is more pleasure in the home.

Among deaf mutes there is a very useful method of communication known as the "sign language." It is not confined to the spelling out of words with the finger alphabet, but has a sign for a whole word—sometimes for a phrase. It is a sort of shorthand method of expression without vocal speech, and is for the most part only known among the deaf mutes themselves, although not entirely confined to them, as the writer once had occasion to discover through a rather ludicrous incident. While waiting for a train one hot August night, a young woman approached the ticket window of the station, and began to spell on her fingers.

As principal of a State School for the deaf we had become familiar with the sign language, and also with the fact that frequently the deaf have difficulty in making themselves understood, so we approached, and, in the sign language, asked if we could be of any assistance, and upon being told in the same way that we could not, and, as the ticket was bought, proceeded to converse in this way, as the young woman said she was a teacher of the deaf in another State, and there is great community interest in this profession throughout the country. After we had expressed ourselves for some time in the sign language to the great interest of the other travelers in the station, a friend came up and asked us some questions in an ordinary voice, and upon receiving a reply, the stranger exclaimed in the most disgusted way: "Can you talk?" "Why certainly," we replied, in equal surprise.

It turned out that she had been spelling to a deaf friend, and was a teacher of the deaf, though not a deaf teacher, and we had gone to great exertion and made ourselves very conspicuous in the depot, all through too much knowledge of the sign language and too great a zeal to be helpful.

This language originated in France a century or more ago, and many of its usages have a very pretty and quaint symbolism. Thus, pressing the hand over the heart means "love," and the vigor and elaborateness with which the motion is made represents the degree of affection. Again, plucking at the left elbow with the right hand is the sign for "poor" or "poverty." It comes from the old expression, "He is out at elbows." Perhaps the oddest of these signs and the most difficult to comprehend is that used for names. It consists of the two first fingers of each hand placed across each other like a capital X. The reason of it is that when this language was first invented so few people could sign their own names and so many had to make this mark, the symbol being X inserted between the two names, that this was the most appropriate sign that could be used.

However it is not our purpose to teach the sign language in these columns, but to learn a lesson from it about the importance of preserving the sanctity and beautiful attractiveness of the home, and we must get on with our main purpose. To do so it is necessary to learn two more signs, which, combined, make a third. That for "eat" is made by putting the fingers together and pressing them to the mouth, as one does when putting a small piece of bread into the mouth. The sign for "sleep" is made by leaning the side of the head against the palm of the head, as one would rest the head in sleep. Now, the sign for "home" is the combination in quick succession of the eating and sleeping sign, because the home is where one both eats and sleeps.

Such a representation of the home does very well for a sign language, because as we have said, it is a sort of shorthand for handicapped people who have not the full powers of speech. One of the greatest troubles with our country today is that this language is taken too literally, and too many people think that a home is just a place in which to eat and sleep, and too many parents let it go at that and do not try to make it any more than that.

A home—a real home—should be a great deal more than simply a place to eat and sleep. It should be the most attractive place in the world for every member of the family, the most attractive loafing place for the boys, the most agreeable meeting place for the girls. A place where games, and fun will be enjoyed by all, after the study period, in the winter evenings, where picnics and tennis parties will be arranged for in the summer.

What this country and our Church and every other Church needs most of all today is more homes, real homes, not sign language homes, that are just places to eat and sleep. But homes in which the father and mother are the chums, and companions, of their children, sharing in their interests, their games and pleasures, helping to bear the responsibilities of their studies with thoughtful guidance and encouraging interest.

The people who can and must make such homes are the parents. The children cannot do it, no matter how much they may desire it and long for it. The parents can, and it is their first and biggest Christian duty to do it, and if done in the proper spirit it will also be their greatest joy.

Let us stop abusing the young people of the day, and put the blame, if blame is necessary, where it belongs, on those who are responsible for the bringing up of these young people, whose first duty in life is to provide a home that will be so attractive that other places of amusement will lose their lure, and the youngsters will be kept at home, not by the power of compulsion, but because it will be the pleasantest place they can find.

It will do the parents good to stay young with the children, and it will be the saving of the country for the children to grow up in the companionship of their parents.

A SCANDINAVIAN PIONEER

The people of the Scandinavian peninsula have always been of an adventurous and virile sort and at various times have wielded great influence in European affairs.

As will be remembered the Danes have the distinction of being one of the two nations to be able to conquer England, and the other conquerors of that sturdy little island, the Normans, were also of Scandinavian origin.

At one time Charles the Tenth of Sweden was the dominant figure in Europe, and here in America we have reason to know of the adventurous spirit of the Norsemen, by reason of explorations of Lief the Lucky. His exploits are cutting deeper and deeper into the prestige of Christopher Columbus year by year, and no doubt he will ultimately be recognized as the real European discoverer of America.

Now, however, news comes of the pioneering of these hardy peoples in quite a new field. From Denmark it is reported that a bill has been introduced into the Danish Parliament to abolish the army and navy, and hereafter to maintain only an armed force sufficiently large to maintain order within her own borders.

It will be an interesting thing to see if the country whose war galleys once struck terror into the heart of Alfred the Great, will be the first to go onto a truly Christian basis, and make peace a policy of necessity by depriving herself of the means of carrying on war.

We call this policy "pioneering," because we firmly believe that the abolishment of armies and navies throughout the world as a means for settling international quarrels is just as certain as the abandonment of duelling pistols in adjusting private disputes.

It may take centuries, or it may take only decades, but a warless world is looming into sight more rapidly than the most optimistic could have hoped for.

The proposals of Premier Ramsay McDonald to submit all international questions to arbitration is a long step in that direction. The plans now being worked out by the League of Nations is another, and the proposal of Denmark to be the first nation officially to abolish her army and navy is quite in line with these momentous happenings.

It will not be necessary for the United States to enter all the details of the League of Nations for us to join a universal arbitration pact.

President Coolidge has announced that his foreign policy may be summed up in the one word "peace." Mr. Davis has stated that he will go further than is stated in the Democratic platform to bring world peace. Senator La Follette was a pacifist even in the heated and stirring days of the late war. So there can be little doubt but that the influence of this country will be exerted toward disarmament no matter how the election goes.

A warless world is drawing nearer day by day, and surely it is a big enough cause to be worthy of the support of every one calling himself a follower of the Prince of Peace whatever may be his Church affiliations!

The Coming of the Kingdom

A strong appeal was made by the Rt. Rev. G. Ashton Oldham, Bishop-Coadjutor of Albany, for the Church to take a more active interest in the cause of World Peace in an address delivered at the open-air service at the Washington Cathedral, Sunday afternoon, September 7.

Bishop Oldham began by stating that, under the shadow of the Peace Cross and in these times and circumstances, only one theme seemed appropriate, namely, the subject of peace on earth. He said: "If you were in my place, dear friends, what theme would you speak upon today? What in this great Cathedral in the Nation's Capital would you consider the subject of paramount importance? I have thought long and hard upon it and have come to the conclusion that in these surroundings and at this time I could choose no other theme than that of the coming of the Kingdom of God on earth. Too long have we, taking counsel of our despair and not of our hopes, been content to relegate that Kingdom to a state of spiritual blessedness hereafter instead of bending every energy to bring it into being here upon earth. God's Kingdom is none other than that state of affairs in which men in all their relationships are subservient to the will of God. We are daily praying that God's will may be done 'on earth as it is in heaven.' We cannot honestly pray for it unless we mean also to work and struggle for it. The Kingdom of God is peace. Can any sane man doubt that Almighty God wants peace on earth? That was the angels' refrain which greeted His only begotten Son on His entry into this world, and in spite of two thousand years of His example and teaching we seem as far away from it as ever.

"I say 'seem' advisedly because I am not yet willing to admit that mankind has failed utterly to learn the lessons of the last terrible conflict which tore the mask from war and disclosed him in his true and horrible guise. But man's memory is proverbially short. We have already forgotten many of war's horrors and the new generation coming up really knows almost nothing about it. Consequently, in spite of its unpleasantness, we must repeatedly call it again to mind until its lessons have been really learned."

The conclusion of the sermon was an appeal to America to live up to her high destiny and use her great powers not for selfish purposes, but for the benefit of mankind. He wanted more enthusiasm shown in the cause of peace and went on to say:

"Some of my friends who cling to other methods frequently say to me with some indignation: Do you suppose we love war? Don't you think we, too, want peace? Ah, yes, they want it in the lukewarm way in which many Christians want heaven—if it doesn't cost them too much trouble or involve too many risks. I have no doubt that all sane men want peace but, too often, they do not want it passionately. There is no ardor, no faith, no determination, no enthusiasm in their desire. They do not want peace as the lover wants his sweetheart, or the administrator the success of his plans, or the army officer the taking of a position. In all these cases the wish is followed up by definite and determined action such as will insure the end desired. Whenever the majority of mankind want peace in that spirit they will have it.

"America First" is just now a very popular motto, and to it I subscribe with all my heart.

"America First—not merely in matters material, but in the things of the spirit.

"America First—not merely in science, inventions, motors and skyscrapers, but also in ideals, principles, character.

"America First—not flaunting her strength as a giant, but bending in helpfulness over a sick and wounded world like a Good Samaritan.

"America First—not in splendid isolation, but in Christ-like cooperation.

"America First—not in pride, arrogance and disdain of other races and peoples, but in sympathy, love and understanding.

"America First—not in treading again the old, worn, bloody pathway which ends inevitably in chaos and disaster, but in blazing a new trail, along which please God other nations will follow into the new Jerusalem, where wars shall be no more.

"Some day some nation must take that path—unless we are to lapse once again into utter barbarism—and that honor I covet for my beloved America. And so, in that spirit and with these hopes, I say with all my heart and soul, 'America First!'"

JUDAS ISCARIOT

By the Reverend John H. Powell, Jr.

"And he cast down the pieces of silver in the temple, and departed, and went and hanged himself."—Matthew 27:5.

THOSE words mark the end of the most tragic life in human history. Judas Iscariot!—the man of Kerioth, a little town in the south of Judah. He was born in the time of the redemption of Israel; he played a prophesied part in the program; "and he went away and hanged himself." He was one of the twelve who were to sit on twelve thrones in the Kingdom, judging the tribes of Israel; but in the end he only judges himself, and friendless and alone, goes out to execute his sentence.

He was a traitor to his Lord, the One who had been kind to him and had taught him the most he knew of heaven and the things of God. The rest of that little company—they went into all the world and preached good tidings to the poor. They were killed, most of them, beaten and starved and tortured to death; but they were loyal. Only Judas: I suppose he hanged himself on an olive tree that grew on the side of a hill without the city wall. And when the tightened knot was strangling him, and his feet were kicking in the air and he was struggling and fighting to clutch the little skein of life that was slipping away, the rope broke and he fell headlong into a clay pit below,—a torn and crumpled mass of loathsome flesh. There's always something weird about the inevitable irony of fate; that clay pit was the ground the priests bought with the thirty pieces of silver, "the field of blood," "to bury strangers in." Judas Iscariot; that is a name to conjure with,—an evil charm, a term of scathing reproach on every continent.

The meager story of Judas' life is familiar to us all,—just three outstanding facts, around which are grouped the scantiest references. He was called to be a disciple of Jesus Christ; he betrayed his Master; he hanged himself. There is just enough known about his life to make it one of the greatest enigmas of all time.

Why did Judas betray his Master? Because he was covetous, because he was ambitious, because he knew that Jesus looked into his heart and saw the sin that was there. But the other disciples were covetous, too; they were not free from avarice. You remember Peter said to the Lord, "Lo, we have left all, and followed Thee; what then shall we have?" They were all of them thinking that there was to be a time of recompense. And they were ambitious, too,—contending among themselves which should be greatest. You remember that James and John got their mother to come and request the chief places in the Kingdom for them. Judas wasn't the only one who was covetous and ambitious. And the others knew too that Jesus looked into their hearts and saw the sin there. The real difference between them was that Judas did not believe that Jesus was the Christ, the Son of the living God; and the rest did. In the last analysis that is the thing which accounts for the betrayal,—that lies back of the avarice and the bitterness of disappointed ambition and the personal enmity. Judas did not believe that Jesus was the Son of God.

G. A. Chadwick says that Judas is "the only mortal whose dark fate we surely know." But there are other, more sanguine commentators who would not go so far, and who would hold out some hope for the fallen disciple.

Of course I refer here not to such wild speculations as those of the Cainite Gnostics; nor to the ancient view of Origen, who contended that Judas went away and hanged himself in order to immediately join Christ in the realm beyond the grave and there throw himself on the Master's mercy. These are groundless imaginings. But there are modern scholars who present a more plausible argument, based on the statement of Judas' repentance here in the third verse of the 27th chapter of Matthew: Samuel Cox, for instance, contending that Judas brought forth "fruit meet for repentance," in that he flung from him the wages of his iniquity, confessed his sin, proclaimed the innocence of the One whom he had wronged, and then hanged himself because his grief was too much to be borne, and his mind was so distraught that more deliberate and laudable procedure was impossible for him. It is true that the despair of grief for sin is sometimes so great, the sense of guilt so intense, that there is no hope in the heart for forgiveness, and it is only after days and weeks, and sometimes years, of agony that the truly repentant sinner comes at last to cast himself on the mercy of God. The reason he did not come before was not that he lacked desire, but that he felt his guilt was such that there could be no mercy for him. It takes time often for one to become aware of the fact of God's mercy.

And yet, because Judas' action was hasty does not relieve him of the responsibility for hanging himself. The hanging may attest to the realness of his remorse; but it only adds to the probability of his being eternally lost. In fact Jesus in the great prayer in the seventeenth chapter of John says that not one of the disciples perished, "but the son of perdition; that the Scripture might be fulfilled," and the reference is very clearly to Judas, and the meaning not particularly obscure. There is no absolute certainty with regard to the meaning of Peter's expression in the first chapter of the Acts, that "Judas fell away, that he might go to his own place"; though there is probably little doubt but that the apostle meant to say that his former comrade was lost. In any case, the statement of Jesus seems to imply pretty clearly that the fate of Judas was sealed and that his name was not written in the Book of Life.

The promise of eternal life is to those who believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and there is no evidence that even in the end Judas believed. If he had, he would have run to Golgotha and received forgiveness even there. If only with the overpowering sense of his guilt in betraying innocent blood there had come the full realization of the true enormity of his crime—that he had betrayed the Son of God, his Lord,—then he would have sought Jesus instead of the priests. Nothing could have kept him from that, for he had known Jesus in the flesh.

Three things in the life of this man:

First, he was called to be a disciple of the Lord Jesus,—if not to betray Him, then in spite of the fact that Jesus knew certainly that he would;

Second, he betrayed his Master because of avarice and disappointed ambition and enmity in his heart;

Third, so far as we know he was eternally lost, because he didn't believe that Jesus was the Christ, the Son of God.

We do well to contemplate the life of this man; for

THE SOUL'S SINCERE DESIRE

By Glenn Clark

Condensed from The Atlantic Monthly—

I do not know why God should have blessed me for the past two years with an almost continuous stream of answered prayer. Some of the answers were marvelous, many unexplainable, all of them joy-giving. But, greater than any particular blessing that came with any particular answer, greater than the combined blessings of all the combined answers, was a gift, a blessing, that was so much larger, so much more inclusive than all the other special gifts, that it encompassed all within itself. I refer to the peace and happiness and absolute liberation from the bondage of fear and anger and the life-destroying emotions that came to me and revealed to me the practicability of finding the Kingdom of Heaven in the practical world of men.

Concomitant with this great blessing came the impulse to share it with others—to pass it on that they too might have their burdens eased and their paths made smooth. But whenever I approached a friend to tell him how I prayed, my brain stumbled and words failed me. My method was so simple, so natural, it seemed to me, that its very simplicity defied analysis. Like the air I breathed it could not be captured and confined in any form.

So two years went by. Then one day while walking home from college a student said to me: "I wish very much that you would tell me how you pray. Won't you tell me some time?" It suddenly occurred to me that this was the first time any one had put that question to me. I do not know whether it is that every question has its own answer residing in it, just as every seed contains the entire life plan of the completed plant; or whether the commands of Jesus, "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you," were meant to be applied to questions we ask of each other as well as questions we ask of God when we do so in the spirit of Christian humility and love; but this I do know: late in the evening the answer to this question leaped full-fledged into my brain. For two years I had striven in vain to answer a question that no one had ever asked; and then in a twinkling, before a question asked in all sincerity and with honest purpose, the answer came.

I find the "frame" for my method in the Lord's Prayer and the Twenty-third Psalm. I say "frame" because either one of these can be recited in less than half a minute, and a prayer such as we materialistically minded moderns need is one which will demand at least fifteen minutes of our time.

Let me stand in the market-place with the physical culturists and demand, as they demand, fifteen minutes of your time every day for two months. And while I hesitate to promise, as they promise, that at the end of that time you will find yourself a new man, this I can say; at the end of that time you will find yourself in a new world. You will find yourself in a friendly universe, where religion will no longer be a thing to be believed or disbelieved, a thing to be worn or cast off, but where religion will be a part of life as blood is a part of the body. You will find yourself in a new world where your God no longer dwells in churches and meeting-places and forms and days, but where He governs every minute of every day of every year. You will find yourself in a new world where immortality will no longer be sought as something far away, to be found at some far distant time, for you will know that you are immortal now and that the entire universe with all its good and with all its beauty belongs to you now and forever.

Let us take then as our model the zeal and steadfastness of the physical culturist and utilize it in the field of the spirit. To associate these two fields in our mind will prove very helpful for our present purpose, for a prayer should be for the spirit exactly what calisthenics should be for the body—something to keep one in tune, fit, vital, efficient and constantly ready for the next problem of life.

Now what are the underlying principles in Walter Camp's Daily Dozen?

1. The first principle is that the man shall stretch his muscles, as the caged lion stretches, whenever he can. And, mark you, the muscles that are seen are not so important as the muscles that are unseen—in the language of Walter Camp, "the muscles under the ribs." This should be the first principle of prayer also. One should first of all stretch the mind to take in God, not a one-sided, two-sided, or a three-sided view of God, but all. Moreover, this stretching should not be for the objective mind—which is out where we can see and control it—so much as for the subjective mind, the mind that is out of sight, the mind that is "under the ribs."

2. The next principle underlying the daily dozen, as well as all other good setting-up exercises, is to breathe deeply and freely. There is nothing that clears the brain and avenues of circulation like breathing with eleven-elevenths of the lungs and not with one-eleventh—breathing out the old waste poisons and breathing in the new clear life from the atmosphere which surrounds us. This should be the second step in our prayer. We should pray out the bad and pray in the good; dismiss from our mind the trouble which seems imminent and restate emphatically the great promises of God; forgive the sinner and accept forgiveness for the sin.

3. The final phase of these exercises is that they should be kept up steadily, daily, until the habit of deep breathing has been transferred to the nervous system; in other words until it becomes an automatic habit, so that a man between jobs at his office unconsciously stretches his legs under the table and continues all day to breathe deeply and freely from the depth of his lungs. This is also the goal of all true prayer—to make the "stretching" of the mind to see God a continuous habit all through the day, to make the deep breathing of the soul—which mentally denies entrance of the bad thought to the brain and expands the good thought—a steady automatic habit of the subconsciousness. This is in accord with St. Paul's admonition, "Pray without ceasing."

As stated above, we find this "frame" suggested to us in the Lord's Prayer and the Twenty-third Psalm. The first phase—the expanding of the mind to take in all of God—is given very briefly in these short half-minute prayers; nevertheless, they were full of connotation to the ones to whom they were addressed. "The Lord is my Shepherd." "Our Father Who art in Heaven, hallowed by Thy Name." Think of what the words "Shepherd" and "Father" imply!

The second phase of prayer, the denial and affirmation, is suggested figuratively in the Psalm by "Thy rod and Thy staff," and the actual denials are given in very clear-cut form: "I shall not want," and "I shall fear no evil." Each of these is followed by a series of affirmations. In the Lord's Prayer, this rhythmic handling of our problems is suggested by "Forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors." This suggests the in-breathing and out-breathing of that prayer which is real communion with God.

The third phase—that is, keeping the prayer thought as a continuing force throughout the day—is suggested very beautifully in both the examples we are using: "Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life, and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever"; "Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done, in earth as it is in Heaven." You can see in these statements a realization of the Kingdom here and now, about us, in whatever activity we may be engaged.

How then shall we apply these principles to our own prayers? Perhaps some examples may help here. The following may open your eyes a wee bit to the possibilities you yourself might work out in prayer.

I. Stretching the Mind to Take in All of God.

1. Our Heavenly Father, we know that Thy Love is as infinite as the sky is infinite, and Thy Ways of manifesting that Love are as uncountable as the stars of the heavens.

2. Thy Power is greater than man's horizon, and Thy Ways of manifesting that Power are more numerous than the sands of the sea.

3. Thy Wisdom is greater than all hidden treasures, and yet as instantly available for our needs as the very ground beneath our feet.

4. Thy Joy is brighter than the sun at noon day and Thy Ways of expressing that Joy as countless as the sunbeams that shine upon our path.

5. Thy Peace is closer than the atmosphere that wraps us around, and as inescapable as the very air we breathe.

6. Thy Spirit is as pure as the morning dew, and yet as impervious to all that is unlike itself as the diamond which the dew represents.

7. As Thou keepest the stars in their courses, so shalt Thou guide our steps in perfect harmony, without clash or discord of any kind, if we but keep our trust in Thee. For we know Thou shalt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee, because he trusteth in Thee. We know that if we but acknowledge Thee in all our ways, that Thou shalt direct our paths. For thou art the God of Love, Giver of every good and perfect gift, and there is none beside Thee. Thou art omnipotent, omniscient, and omnipresent, in all, through all, and over all, the only God. And Thine is the Kingdom, and the Power, and the Glory, forever. Amen.

II. The Deep Breathing of the Soul.

Before it is possible to breathe, one must be surrounded by atmosphere and atmosphere must be in one. Likewise, before it is possible to commune with God, which is a more conventional way of characterizing the deep breathing of the soul, one must know that God surrounds all and God is in all; that the Kingdom of Heaven is here and now.

As breathing is a mere rhythmic interchange of that which is within with that which is without, a casting-out of that which seems to be bad and a receiving, in its stead, of that which seems to be good, so the breathing of the soul is a casting-out of all that would poison, cramp, or belittle life—in short all that is unlike God, and a taking-in of all that is pure, perfect, and joyous, and which enriches life—in short, that which is like God.

Without question the very finest examples of this rhythmic communion with God are to be found in the Psalms of the Old Testament. And as our forefathers used to begin the day by offering a prayer and reading a Psalm, why can we not emulate their example and add to it perhaps just a touch of originality by offering a prayer and improvising a psalm? Indeed, is not the psalm as much a part of worship as a prayer, and is there any more reason why present-day worshippers should be limited to the collection of Psalms preserved for us in the Old Testament than that we should be limited in our prayers to the petitions preserved for us in Isaiah, Jeremiah, and the ancient Prophets?

The only new and revolutionizing idea that I am introducing into this discussion of prayer, in fact, is a plea for reinstating the psalm, the little brother of prayer, in our private and public worship. We find it now lost completely to our private worship and reduced to a mere form in our public worship. What I wish to see is the bringing of the psalm back in the form and manner that the old Psalmists themselves made use of as a frank and spontaneous improvisation in the presence of a real need, an imminent calamity, a present sorrow—an actual outpouring of that particular need, trouble, or sorrow upon the outstretched arms of God, and the breathing in of His healing peace, comfort, and love. Such spontaneous psalms were in themselves prayers—the finest and purest examples of prayer that the world has ever seen, of prayer which is dynamic and healing, of prayer which is a real communion with God.

As our first spiritual exercise of the morning was a stretching of the mind to take in God, so this is a breathing of the soul. And just as in physical breathing we give a quick expulsion of the poisons we wish to eliminate, and then drink in slowly of the new, fresh, life-giving, body-building ozone, holding it, first deep in the lungs, then high, turning it over, so to speak, till we have extracted the life-giving oxygen it contains, so we should give our denials with expulsive force, turning instantly to the constructive, soul-building affirmations. The trouble with most of our praying, as with our breathing, is that it is too negative. We shut ourselves up in a cramped little three-dimensional room with our negations, breathing in again and again the troubles that we should let vanish into thin air, instead of turning to new and fresh air—to God.

Marvelous results will come if one will turn in thought to God and Heaven, deny the existence in Heaven of the wrong thing felt or thought, and then realize that in God and Heaven the opposite condition prevails. One must dismiss from his mind completely the thought that the wrong thing felt or seen is permanent, and then follow instantly with the realization that the opposite condition exists here and now.

For money troubles, realize: There is no want in Heaven and turn in thought to 1, 2, and 7 in Exercise I.

For poor health, realize: There is no sickness in Heaven, and affirm 1, 7, 6, 2, and 5.

For aid in thinking or writing, realize: There is no lack of ideas, and affirm 3 and 7.

For happiness: There is no unhappiness in Heaven, and affirm 1, 4, and 5.

For criticism and misunderstanding: There is no criticism in Heaven, and affirm 1, 4, 5, 6, and 7.

For friends: There is no lack of friends in Heaven, and affirm 1, 4, and 7.

For worry: There is no worry in Heaven, and affirm 4, 5, and 7.

This is the kind of prayer the Psalmists of old had recourse to in their hours of trouble—the most beautiful example of which is the Shepherd Psalm:—

First Phase:—

The Lord is my Shepherd.

Second Phase:—

I shall not want.

He maketh me
to lie down in green pastures,
He leadeth me
beside the still waters,
He restoreth my soul.
He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake.
(Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death)

I will fear no evil.

For Thou art with me.
Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me.
Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies.
Thou anointest my head with oil.
My cup runneth over.

Third Phase:—

Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life, and I will dwell in the House of the Lord forever.

III. Practicing the Presence of God.

And now, having finished the prayer which in form is something like a Psalm, and having finished the Psalm which is similar to a prayer, let us consider how we can turn the strength derived in the quiet hour into the daily routine of the world of action. For the test of every life is, after all, How do the hours of contemplation harmonize with the hours of action?

The value of Walter Camp's Daily Dozen is that, after the fifteen minutes' exercise in the morning, you find you are breathing a little deeper all day. We should expect the same results from our fifteen minutes of prayer every morning. We should be living in the Kingdom of God a little more vitally all day. How? Let me tell you.

Here is where we can learn a lesson from the movies. No longer does one have to depend upon newspapers for news; one can see the world's news thrown on the screen if one desires. Then why does one have to depend entirely upon one's prayers for contact with God? Cannot one see, if one knows how, the spiritual ideas of God revealed in the cinema pictures that flash by in actual life? The moment one awakes to the fact that one lives in God's world here and now, one begins to see in every event that comes, a part of the beautiful symmetrical plan of God. Of course, as it flashes by in little separate pictures of a fraction of a second each, not every picture may seem the most perfect. Neither would every stitch of a famous mosaic tapestry appear perfect to an eye looking through a microscope.

Once reach this stage and you have found the secret of following Paul's seemingly impossible command, "Pray without ceasing." And now miracles will begin to happen around you.

When a visitor comes, accept him as a messenger from God, and before long a divine message actually will come to you. Accept every disappointment as a signpost to show you to another path, which is better, and you will always find the other path is there. Gradually this practicing the presence of God, or living in the Kingdom of Heaven, will become a habit. Then you will wonder why for so many years you had not been living there before.

But remember that the best way to get there is to stretch the mind frequently to take in all of God that you can, and practice frequently the deep breathing of the soul. In other words, one can enter the Kingdom only by prayer and meditation. "Love the Lord, thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul, with all thy strength, and with all thy mind." "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness; and all other things shall be added unto thee."

Thoughts About Prayer.

- I. Think of God and Heaven, not of the bad thing you are tossing off into the air.
- II. Pray if possible out of loyalty to God, for the joy of it, not for results.
- III. Do not pray to bring things to pass; pray to see things that are already in the Kingdom.
- IV. Do not limit the avenues by which God will answer your prayers. Remember that God's ways of manifesting His love are as uncountable as the stars of the firmament.
- V. Do not feel responsible for your prayers, or the answer to them. God alone is the planner and knows best. Love, rejoice, and be thankful for the unfolding of His plan as you see it.

THE LIFE OF LIVES: THE STORY OF OUR LORD JESUS CHRIST FOR YOUNG PEOPLE. By Louise Morgan Sill. George H. Doran Company. $1.50.

In this Life of Christ we have a narrative suitable for boys and girls in their teens, reverently told, and with a charm of style that is the more pleasing because it never obtrudes, but allows the great story to unfold itself in compelling simplicity. There are a few inaccuracies, too slight to detract from the main impression. Our Lord's portrait is drawn with a reverent and devoted hand, and the human figure moves throughout against the background of His divinity. The book may with benefit be put into the hands of candidates for Confirmation, and used in teaching the Life of Christ in Sunday Schools and High Schools.

THE LITTLE CHILDREN'S BIBLE. The Macmillan Company, New York. Price 90 Cents.
THE OLDER CHILDREN'S BIBLE. The Macmillan Company, New York. Price $1.50.

These attractive books originated in a syllabus prepared for the schools of Cambridgeshire, England. The editors are Canon Nairne of Cambridge, Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch and Dr. T. R. Glover. The Little Child's Bible consists of short passages from both the Old and the New Testament, in an arrangement that will heighten the interest of children. After the Story of Christmas comes Stories that Jesus would learn from His Mother (not, however, including the Fall of Man); the Baptism, Kind Deeds of Jesus, etc. The Older Children's Bible follows the same general order, with further selections and covering a wider field. There are a few good illustrations in color, and the topography and make-up of the books will recommend them to youthful readers. The Little Children's Bible is issued "for children up to the age of seven"; the larger book for those from eight to eleven years. But the limits could well be advanced, for children up to ten or eleven years will enjoy reading for themselves their little Bibles, while the more advanced volume will prove attractive up to the age when serious Bible study is begun.

CHARACTER AND HAPPINESS. By Alvin E. Magary, Minister First Presbyterian Church, Cedar Rapids, Iowa. Charles Scribner's Sons. Pp. 214. Price $1.50.

We welcome these twenty-one brief talks, whose very titles are arresting, and we recommend them unreservedly as an antidote to much of the wrong-thinking which bars the way to that real happiness which can be founded only on character. Particularly we would mention the fifth chapter—"What is Your Income?" and an essay called, "Between Dreams and Visions," which deals with the opportunities and privileges of those burden-bearers, the middle-aged. Both are delightful in their helpful sanity. Mr. Magary has a sense of humor and his point of view is high and wholesome. Altogether Character and Happiness is a worthwhile book and its moderate price should put it within the reach of a large reading public.

ANCIENT FIRES. By I. A. R. Wylie. Published by E. P. Dutton and Company, New York. Pages 375. Price $2.00.

This book is one of the most interesting unusual stories reviewed this year, and we recommend it strongly to all lovers of good novel reading. The author's forceful graphic descriptions, keen analysis and insight into the heart and soul of man is remarkable.

The dual personality of John Smith is very interesting, his fascination, audacity, goodness and villainess are curiously blended, and that it is possible for a clever, beautiful woman to be so blinded to his faults and to be almost hypnotized by his charm, as to think of happiness with him is an interesting study.

Sir Evan makes the world better for his example of all that is splendid in life—honesty and love and self-sacrifice—big enough to carry his own heavy burden, a character that we all love.

The savage rough life in Central America is very interesting and picturesque, and one finishes the book with regret.

MANY WATERS. By Eleanor Chipp. D. Appleton and Company, New York. Pp. 331. Price $2.00.

Eleanor Chipp's book, "Many Waters," is very interesting and the characters are cleverly drawn.

There are many Connies everywhere, very beautiful and fascinating, with an angelic appearance, but heartless, treacherous and mean.

She finds her match in fascinating, handsome Donald, who is incapable of loyalty or sincerity, but who charms all with whom he meets.

Marion loves him, overlooks his deceptions, and is blinded to the splendid worth and goodness of her real lover, Mark Wetherell.

The author idealizes Marion and would have us think her perfect and yet all through the story Marion is cheap and weak. She refrains from eloping with Connie's husband (though she receives his attentions), not from any sense of wickedness, but because she fears he will tire of her.

All through the story there is a lack of regard for morals, and religion seems to be left out of the characters, which makes the book shallow.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letter to the Editor" will appear in our columns except over the signature of the writer.

A PLEA FOR A 100 PER CENT. CITIZENSHIP.

Mr. Editor:

In an eight-column list of ministers in America who are cooperating with the Homiletic Review in its timely "Get-Out-The-Vote" campaign the names of only eight of our own clergymen occur. The Review is behind a movement to get the clergy interested in the matter of arousing Church members to their duty as citizens and inducing their entire membership to go to the polls this fall and vote for their choice of candidates for office.

It is possible that our own clergymen are enrolled with some other organization which is undertaking the same thing. If not more of them should enlist in the Review's campaign and pledge their efforts towards getting out the Church's membership to the polls in November.

We speak of "majority" rule in the United States. It is a misnomer and an absurd travesty. Fewer than half the people vote in our elections! A majority of this "fewer than half" is conservatively estimated at fewer than one-fourth of the people! This country is distinctly and noticeably run by a minority—and this minority is not infrequently a bad element in society, an element induced by the professional politician to go to the polls.

Citizenship carries with it serious Christian obligations and the foremost of these is to help to elect the best man for the offices of State. If Christian ministers and Christian laymen do not concern themselves more with this vital matter, things are destined to grow progressively worse than they are now in our political life. The political status of the United States makes the "rotteness in Denmark" seem not a Herculean task, but the task of a pigmy by comparison. What will the Church do about it?

Yours for Good Citizenship,
THOS. F. OPIE.

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

The Rev. R. Cary Montague, Editor.

"DO YOUR OWN BUSINESS."

I Thessalonians, Chap. IX, Verse II.

Now that the day of election is only about six weeks distant the interest is growing more and more intense in that great American event that occurs every four years, and the question of whether a person is really a citizen of these United States of America or only a resident is worth considering.

Every now and then somebody proposes a compulsory voting law, which would only provide one more asset to the statistician who delights in figuring out the fact that the United States is already the most lawless nation in the world.

If people won't exercise the franchise as a privilege they are almost certain to try to avoid it as an obligation.

Doctor Charles W. Eliot, President-Emeritus of Harvard makes the following comment on the suggestion of compulsory voting:

"The paper on compulsory voting by Mr. Lincoln C. Cummings of Brookline, will, I think, be useful now in drawing attention to the importance of voting at the coming presidential election. The real issues in that election are not material but moral or spiritual. The speakers during the campaign will give the larger part of their time not to economical or financial topics, which many voters cannot understand or take no interest in, but to moral issues, such as Prohibition and the abandonment by the American people of their selfish and indifferent attitude since the Armistice. A larger proportion of the total number of voters than has been usual of late ought to be brought out at such an election. More women than ever ought to take part."

The statement of Mr. Cummings to which Mr. Eliot thus calls the attention of the public is as follows:

"The people, who vote, are the real legislators. One of the greatest evils in our system of government is the failure of citizens to perform their duty at the polls. The citizen is the real legislator and upon his choice as expressed at the polls depends the character, both of representation and enactment. The province of the citizen is, by his vote to delegate another with right or authority to act for him."

The "will of the people" is now expressed at the ballot by the votes of only an interested minority, and a government of negation, instead of a government of affirmation is in our midst. Majority rule is endangered. It is already difficult to discern between sovereignty of all the people, and the absolute and autocratic power of the minority.

In order to secure and perpetuate equality of opportunity under our law, and avoid the pitfalls of inequality and class legislation, we must look to the majority of the electorate, naturally more judicially-minded and conservative, rather than to a minority which is more apt to be advocative and radical. We should not depend upon any class. None is strong enough.

About twenty-five million so-called American citizens never vote at elections, about one-half the qualified voters of the United States are in fact political slackers. Shall we continue to function under rule of this minority or shall we return to majority rule? If the latter, how shall it be accomplished.

Statutes which have broadly determined what the citizen shall not do, may wisely be exploited to determine, what the citizen—should do. The citizen should realize as he too often does not now, that national expenditures, as well as direct taxes, affect him, that citizenship—spells duty, that by not voting he is sowing the seed of a fatal infection, and as in Belgium and now in Australia, he should be required to pay the price of citizenship in the United States—by vote or penalty.

The only outward visible sign of substantial interest of a citizen in the state—is the citizens' vote. He, strictly speaking, has no "liberty not to vote." The non-voting citizen is violating his own liberty and franchise. Government means the voluntary agreement of individuals, who have become qualified citizens, to surrender their natural liberty, and submit themselves to, and function in, the supreme government. The citizen who is required to vote has suffered no loss of liberty.

In Belgium non-voting is punishable as a misdemeanor, and in Australia by a penalty of $10, and when liberty degenerates to license and anti-social default, it but works injury to the citizen himself, and to the State.

As the citizen is required to pay taxes, he should also be required—to vote; both functions are indispensable, to the welfare and continuity of government. As citizens are conscripted for duty in time of peace; and in order to provide against the neglect and indifference of the citizen at the polls and in order to induce performance of the duty of citizenship, it is to be hoped that some constructive measure of compulsory voting will be devised."

As we have said in the beginning of this article we believe that a law compelling voting would be evaded as far as possible. We believe however that the end desired could be attained in a much more effective way by imposing an additional tax, say, doubling the poll-tax, on those persons who do not vote, or better still, making a law that a receipt from a voting clerk shall be a credit in part payment of the poll tax.

In this connection, however, it is an interesting fact of American history that the three Presidents who would probably be called our most distinguished Executives only received a minority of the popular vote in their first elections. Washington, Lincoln, and Woodrow Wilson did not get a majority of the popular vote at the election to the first term in office. Of course in Washington's case there was no opportunity given for a popular vote.

Voting is a Christian duty. In his letter to the Thessalonians St. Paul tells the Christians that they should "Do their own business." Part of the business of citizenship is to help govern this country.

A popular occupation among a certain class is to criticize the politicians, and yet these same are utterly opposed either to holding public office themselves or to urging their friends and relatives to do so. Such people are like persons who criticize a tailor for making indifferent clothes, but won't allow the tailor to procure good material to improve his product.

HE KNOWS.

The word unspoken, Jesus knows its woundings,
And sees the unspent arrow's fatal mark;
He sees the eventide before the dawning,
And needs no sun to guide Him in the dark.

The wind that blows, He knows from whence it riseth,
And ere it cometh knows what good and ill,
It wafts ahead, what billows and what soothing;
And knows that even now His voice can still.

He knows my teaching hour before it testeth,
And bids me gird with prayer my armor on.
He watching stands unseen to view the conflict,
And gives me joy for pain when it has gone.

His word means safety ever, for He knoweth
How storms shall end before they have begun
And better than I know the yester-mornings,
He knows, and holds my morrows, one by one.

The Great Commission

A GIFT TO THE CATHEDRAL SCHOOL AT ANKING.

The Young People's League of the Diocese of Newark has pledged a gift of $400 as a designated offering for Priority No. 81 in the General Church Program. Priority No. 81 looks to the construction of new buildings for the Cathedral School for Boys at Anking, China. They are imperatively needed, if one of the most successful educational enterprises in the China Mission is to continue to go forward. In making the designation the young people of the Newark Diocese have not only set an example worthy of general emulation, but have made an exceptionally wise choice.

The Cathedral School at Anking dates back to the year of the foundation of the Chinese Republic; unlike which, however, its progress has been ever onward and upward. Primarily intended as a choir school for Holy Saviour Cathedral in Bishop Huntington's district, its growth from the start has been so constant and rapid that it long ago passed beyond the stage of its initial purpose; and it is today the largest school in the District of Anking, excluding the two Church universities, with an enrollment of upwards of four hundred youths, nearly all of them Christians, and an average waiting list of as many more. Not only do the Chinese Government schools fail to keep pace with the educational demands of its people, but by preference our Christian schools are selected because of their discipline and efficiency.

The function of the Cathedral School in the educational system of Anking is most important, since it is the natural focus of most of the fourteen out-station primary schools, and takes the boys through four years' preparation for St. Paul's and the other high school of the Mission. Then, too, in another very essential respect, the school is a vital part of the Church's work. An unusually large number of its graduates eventually pass into the service of the Mission.

Still one more factor of high import in connection with the Cathedral School is that it is managed and directed by the Rev. C. C. Yen, graduate of Boone University and holder of the M. A. degree from Teachers' College, Columbia University, and an accomplished educator and Christian gentleman. It means something to the Church people of America that under the administration of Mr. Yen the school has been made not only self-supporting, save for his own salary, but that in addition he has been putting away $500 a year toward the construction of the badly needed new buildings.

The present plant of the school is not only utterly inadequate, but is, in plain language, rotting away—lacking accommodations for its present needs, to say nothing of the future, lacking facilities for the proper education of the boys who are the future hope of China, and, what is equally to the point, it is encroaching seriously upon accommodations needed for the purely evangelistic work of the Church. There is no greater need in the China Mission today than these new buildings for the Cathedral School.

Mr. Yen illustrates a point in which the Home Church is especially interested. The Chinese Christians are helping themselves. He isn't asking us in America to do it all. What with the money he has saved out of the school returns, and a contribution of $200 from the Governor of the Province, and a promise of $1,000 more from provincial educational funds, and promises from other personal sources, Mr. Yen has in sight about $8,000 of the $15,000 needed to construct these new buildings. The Young People's League of Newark has started the ball rolling to make up the balance.

WANTED—A HEATING PLANT.

When the Church General Hospital, Wuchang, China, was built in 1918, the money gave out before provision could be made for a heating plant. Rather than keep patients waiting until a heating plant could be procured, the Hospital doors were thrown open, and its wards and clinics have been full ever since.

A heatless hospital is uncomfortable enough for Chinese patients in bed under blankets and padded quilts, but when you are neither a Chinese nor a patient, but just an ordinary American doctor or nurse, an unheated hospital is no longer a discomfort, it is positively painful.

Dr. Theodore Bliss, writing about his hope that a heating plant may be secured some day, says: "When I was home last year I got a leather 'aviator's' suit from one of the army and navy stores, and I found it just the thing for wear about the hospital last winter. The blanket-lined leather sleeveless jacket and riding breeches with a sweater extra during the coldest part of the time did the heat retaining necessary; and a white-duck long coat like a butcher's gown (a bit too suggestive, that, for a surgeon isn't it?) kept the outside capable of being laundered and sterilized."

AN INTERESTING EXPERIMENT.

St. Mark's, Wusih, seems to have reduced the maintenance charge for a boarding school to a minimum. Fourteen cents a day, Mexican, is its cost for providing food for a pupil. That means seven cents gold. St. Mark's is working out an interesting experiment in education by taking boys from the small towns and the farms within a radius of eight and ten miles of the great city of Wusih, and giving them an education entirely in Chinese. Many of the boys come from the poorer Christian families of the country districts. For the most part they are boys who it is expected will return to the small villages and farms instead of being drawn into the whirl of big business because they have a command of English.

Church Intelligence

"Breaking Home Ties."

This Fall no doubt in larger numbers than ever, our boys and girls are breaking the home ties for the first time. Thousands of them are going to all kinds of schools and occupations after the summer vacation.

This exodus from our homes and parishes was seriously discussed at a meeting of the Department of Religious Education. It was resolved to offer the following suggestions to the clergy of the diocese through the Bethlehem Churchman.

1. Have a corporate communion for them before they leave. If the parents are included it will be all the more impressive. This is a bit late for this year. Do it next year.

2. Send a list of your people to the clergymen nearest to the school. Tell him what they did at home. Ask him to get them busy at school in some phase of Church work.

3. Send them the Bethlehem Churchman, and occasionally a letter or the parish paper. Prove to them that "out of sight," is not "out of mind."

4. During the Christmas holidays have a dinner for them at the rectory, if possible, or at the parish house.

5. Give them a good book on the Church to read. Latta Griswold's, "The Episcopal Church: Its Doctrine, Teaching and Worship," was suggested. Use your discretionary fund to pay for the book. If this is impracticable the Department will pay for as many books as you need to supply your College men and women. (The Gorham Co., Publishers.)

Bishop Tuttle Memorial.

The campaign for the Bishop Tuttle National Memorial and Endowment Fund will start on October 12, and the children's national campaign on the first Sunday of October when each child is to be given a story of Bishop Tuttle's life and a box with the request that they earn or save one dollar during the month for the memorial.

The Memorial is to be a building in connection with Christ Church Cathedral, St. Louis, which was Bishop Tuttle's Church for the thirty-seven years he was Bishop of Missouri. It will be offered to the National Council when a central place is desired for meetings or any branch of the work, it will be the center of the diocesan work of Missouri, and serve as a great community center for down-town St. Louis, thus fulfilling the three-fold purpose so dear to Bishop Tuttle.

The St. Louis committee includes leaders of the Episcopal Church and other churches, prominent business men and representatives of many varied organizations, all united in the desire to do honor to St. Louis' best known and best loved citizen. The national committee includes many bishops, closely associated with Bishop Tuttle during his twenty years as Presiding Bishop of the Church, and laymen, as follows:

Bishops Thomas F. Gailor, Ethelbert Talbot, C. P. Anderson, J. W. Atwood, T. D. Bratton, Benjamin Brewster, Chauncey B. Brewster, W. C. Brown, W. T. Capers, E. M. Cross, T. C. Darst, W. F. Faber, T. Teacher Training in the Diocese.

Acting upon the conviction that the key to the improvement in the great task of the religious education of the young lies in the more careful training of teachers, the Department of Religious Education of the Diocese has made plans for the most ambitious teacher-training program that it has ever undertaken. Already complete arrangements have been made for schools in Cincinnati, Dayton and Columbus, and plans are being made for other schools in Springfield and Circleville. In Cincinnati the program will be:

First Period:—

1. Grade Conference:

Course A and B—Miss Jeanette Platt. Courses 1 to 4—Mrs. Gordon Graham.

Second Period—Outline Course on the Bible, the Rev. E. F. Chauncey; History of the Christian Church, the Rev. Harold Hobly; Training for Social Service, the Rev. Floyd Van Keuren; Course for Leaders and Officers of Young People's Societies, the Rev. Maurice Clarke.

The work of the schools will be divided into two semesters of five weekly meetings each; the first beginning the second week in October and closing the second week in November; the second beginning the second week in January and closing the second week in February.

A new departure in the Diocesan Teacher Training Program is the inauguration of Correspondence Courses under the supervision of the Executive Department of Religious Education, to meet the needs of those who either cannot attend Normal Schools, or wish more advanced work than is provided in them. Several enrollments have already been made for work in this Department.

In both of these Teacher Training methods, teachers are being urged to work for credit and membership in the National Accredited Teachers' Association.

ALABAMA.

Rt. Rev. C. M. Beckwith, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. G. McDowell, D. D., Coadjutor.

Meeting of the Executive Committee.

The Executive Committee of the Diocese of Alabama met in Birmingham September 11, the Rt. Rev. W. G. McDowell, D. D., Bishop-Coadjutor, presiding. The entire Executive Committee visited St. Mark's Industrial School for Negroes in Birmingham, to inspect the property with a view to advising and acting wisely with respect to proposed improvements of this work.

An item of $250 was recommended for the 1925 budget to apply on the salary of a missionary for the deaf in the Province of Sewanee.

Likewise an appropriation was made toward the salary of a provincial field worker in the Department of Christian Social Service.

The Bishop-Coadjutor was requested to write in the name of the Executive Committee to the National Council requesting that no retrenchment be made in the missionary policy of the Church before every reasonable effort shall have been made to collect the budget quotas from delinquent dioceses.

Recommendations were made that the Diocesan Field Department should include in the 1925 budget a substantial item to apply on the education of young men for the ministry, there being at this time twelve men either in training or preparing to begin their training for the ministry.

A resolution of appreciation was adopted by a standing vote, expressing thanks to the Rev. M. S. Barnwell for his past services to this Executive Committee, and wishing him success in his work as a Field Secretary of the National Council.

The Bishop-Coadjutor was counselled to man certain strategic missionary centers as soon as men may be found for the places, notwithstanding the fact that the cost will exceed somewhat the present diocesan appropriation.

Institution: On Sunday, September 7, Bishop McDowell instituted the Ven. V. G. Lowery as Archdeacon of the Tennessee Valley, with headquarters at Sheffield, near Muscle Shoals. A large and enthusiastic congregation attended the service and plans are in process of unfolding for a strenuous extension of the Church's influence in the Tennessee Valley.

Bishop McDowell and nine of the diocesan clergy of Alabama were present at the Sewanee Summer Training School, some for part of the time, and some for the entire four weeks.

The cornerstone of Grace Church, Woodlawn, Birmingham, was laid recently by Bishop Beckwith, assisted by the Rev. Oscar deW. Randolph and the Rev. Carl Henckell, rector of the church. Every Protestant minister in Woodlawn attended the service. The new building is being constructed of stone, the old place of worship having been moved to the rear of the lot to be used eventually as a parish house.

Death of the Rev. Frank Roudenbush.

The Rev. Frank Roudenbush, rector of St. Thomas' Church, Hollywood, Cal., died suddenly of heart disease Sunday morning, September 14, while returning to his home from the morning service. He officiated at the early service and, despite ill health, insisted on taking the service at eleven o'clock.

He had been rector of the church since its organization in 1920. Formerly he was rector of St. Luke's Church, Kalamazoo, Mich. He graduated from Albion College in 1898 and attended Bexley Hall. He was prominent in Masonic circles.

Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, D. D., Coadjutor.

Annual Pilgrimage to Jamestown.

Under the auspices of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, the third annual pilgrimage to Jamestown was made on Saturday and Sunday, September 13 and 14.

In spite of bad weather, a large number of men from Norfolk and vicinity assembled at Christ Church Saturday afternoon, and went in automobiles to Williamsburg, where they were the guests of Dr. Chandler, president of William and Mary College.

A short service was held Saturday night in preparation for the Holy Communion. The Corporate Communion was held at Jamestown Shrine at 7:30 Sunday morning.

The party attended morning prayer at Old Bruton Church, Williamsburg, and evening prayer at Yorktown.

The Brotherhood was fortunate in securing the Rev. William A. R. Goodwin, D. D., as leader, again this year. He took for his theme, "The Human Guest for God."

All who were present felt that the services were most helpful and inspiring.

St. John's Church, Hampton.

The Rev. C. E. McAllister, rector, is planning to observe the completion of the additions to the Parish House with a house warming and congregational meeting. These improvements give St. John's one of the largest and most complete Parish Houses in the Diocese.

The Annual Church School Canvass was held last Sunday afternoon. The aim is to have every member of the parish a member of the Church School.

Church of the Good Shepherd, Norfolk, the Rev. Newton Middleton, rector: Six new Sunday-school rooms, kitchen and pantry are being built, and will be ready for use in about two weeks.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop.

New Rectory at Christ Church, Roanoke.

The congregation of Christ Church has found that the quarters in their Parish House are now too crowded to accommodate properly the Sunday School. The rectory is next door to the Parish House, and it has been decided to build a connection between the two and use the rectory for the same purposes as the Parish House is now used for. This, of course, necessitates the erection or purchase of a building elsewhere for a rectory. No decision as to the location of the new rectory has as yet been announced. The Rev. G. Otis Mead has been the rector of Christ Church for eleven years. Under his leadership the present handsome church and parish house were built. The parish, however, has experienced such rapid growth as to cause the extension now contemplated.

St. John's, Roanoke.

The Rev. J. Manly Cobb on Sunday, September 21, entered upon his duties as assistant to the Rev. Karl Morgan Block, D. D., rector of St. John's Church. Mr. Cobb, who is a native of Washington, D. C., is a graduate of the Virginia Seminary, and took a post-graduate course at the General Seminary, New York City. During his student days he spent one summer at one of the mountain missions in this diocese, and he found a pleasant welcome awaiting him here.

New Chaplain at the Virginia Episcopal School.

The Rev. Richard H. Baker has become the chaplain and a member of the faculty at the Virginia Episcopal School, Lynchburg, of which the Rev. William G. Pendleton, D. D., is rector. Mr. Baker is a native of Norfolk, and a graduate of the Virginia Seminary, and already has many friends in Southwestern Virginia.

Activities of Ministerial Students.

During the past summer a number of candidates for the ministry from the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia have been serving various churches and missions in the diocese. The Rev. Theodore H. Evans, who was ordained deacon at the Virginia Seminary in June, has had charge of St. John's Church, Waynesboro, and has conducted services at the Church of the Good Shepherd, Brookewood, both of these being located in Augusta County. Mr. Evans will this winter take a special course at the General Seminary in New York, and will serve as assistant to the Rev. Dr. W. Russell Bowie at Grace Church. Mr. John S. Wellford, of Roanoke, candidate for Holy Orders, who is a student at the General Seminary, had charge during the summer of St. Peter's Church, Roanoke, and has returned to take up his Seminary work. Mr. Fred P. Hamlet, of Bristol, a postulant, served as assistant at St. John's-in-the-Mountains, Endicott, a mission in Franklin County, under the charge of Miss Ora Harrison. Mr. Hamlet is a student at the University of Virginia. Mr. Jaquelin Ambler, of Amherst, a postulant, served as an assistant at St. Peter's in the Mountains, Calloway, another mission in Franklin County, under the charge of Miss Caryetta L. Davis. Mr. Lynne B. Mead, of Roanoke, a candidate for Orders, is pursuing his studies at the Virginia Seminary. Mr. George Gunn, of Lynchburg, a postulant, is a student at the University of Virginia.

The Associate Missions Field.

Miss Gladys Charrier has succeeded to the position formerly held by Miss Mabel Hicks, assistant to Deaconess Maria P. Williams at Dante, Virginia. Miss Nellie Stewart of Petersburg is temporarily in charge of Trinity Mission, Richlands. For several months this work was under the care of Miss Sarah D. Alfriend, who resigned August 15 in order to take a special course of study.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D.

Dr. Phillips Takes Charge of Epiphany Church.

The Rev. Z. B. T. Phillips, rector of Epiphany Church, preached at the morning and evening services at Epiphany on Sunday, September 21, and assumed active charge of the parish, of which he became rector last June. Dr. Phillips brings to Epiphany a wide experience in administrative work and Church organization and is also recognized as a preacher of great force and power. Epiphany Church is a parish of great importance, situated in the heart of the downtown business section and ministering to a large number of resident as well as visiting people and is to be congratulated upon having for its rector such a person as Dr. Phillips.

Sunday School Work For the Year.

The Board of Religious Education of the Diocese of Washington has issued a bulletin covering its program for the year and if arrangements are carried out as planned, constructive and helpful work will be accomplished for the Sunday School work of the Diocese. The Annual Convention of the Sunday School Institute will take place on October 22, and for this splendid speakers are listed, including the Bishop of Washington, the Rev. Henry Lubeck, D. C. L., the Rev. Karl M. Block, D. D., and Miss Mabel Lee Cooper, Sunday-School Field Secretary of the Province of Washington. Two teacher-training courses are to be conducted by the Rev. Edward Pinkney Wroth, the subjects of these courses being: "A Study of the Pupil," "How to Train the Devotional Life," "The Principles of Teaching," and "How to Teach the Mission of the Church." Beginning in October under the direction of the Rev. John S. Moses, a monthly diocesan coaching class in the Christian Nurture series will be held for all teachers using this course. In addition to all these, there will be monthly meetings of the Board of Religious Education for the purpose of the better development of such phases of work as the Font Roll, Church School Service League, the Young People's Movement and other branches of Religious Education.

Altogether the program is forward-looking and progressive and deserves the hearty support of all interested in the work of religious education.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop.

Bishop Murray's Fifteenth Anniversary.

St. Michael and All Angels' Day this year will mark the Fifteenth Anniversary of the Consecration of the Rev. Dr. John Gardner Murray to the Episcopate.

The Diocese of Maryland will celebrate this completion of fifteen years of wise, loving and progressive pastoral administration of Bishop Murray and testify to their love and devotion to their Bishop.

A committee of clergy and laymen was appointed at the last Diocesan Convention to make all arrangements. Complete details of this Diocesan celebration will be announced in the near future.

During the last fifteen years missionary contributions have quadrupled; confirmations increased and forward work in church buildings, parish houses and rectories, in both city and country, has been continuous and is still in progress.

A Quiet Day, preceding the winter activities, will be held under the auspices of the Church Service League in the Pro-Cathedral, Baltimore, on Wednesday, October 8. The Rev. F. L. Vernon, D. D., L. D. D., rector of St. Mark's Church, Philadelphia, will conduct the devotions.

The success of the cafeteria at St. Paul's Church House, Dr. A. B. Kinsolving, rector, has made necessary the erection of a three-story extension building. Added facilities for the work of the various parochial organizations will also be afforded.

GEORGIA.

Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D. D., Bishop.

The Fall Campaign.

Beginning early in the Field Department of the Diocese of Georgia, has proved the wisdom of such procedure, for the first of October will find the Diocese all set to begin active preparations for the fall campaign for the Church's Program. The Diocesan Department met the last of June and adopted the Flying Squadron plan. Two squadrons, one headed by the Rev. Karl Morgan Block, D. D., representative of the General Church, and the other by the Rev. J. A. Schaad, former General Missioner (but by October 1 will be one of the diocesan clergy), will tour the Diocese and will hold a two days' conference in eight centers, each squadron to visit four places. The other members of the squadron are diocesan workers and include Mr. Marion G. Ridgely, senior warden of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Augusta; Mr. George W. Urquhart, secretary of the vestry and member of the Men's Club, St. John's Church, Savannah; Mrs. H. D. Reed, president of the Woman's Auxiliary of Grace Church, Waycross, and Miss Edith D. Johnston, Executive Secretary of the Diocesan Field Department.

The Diocese has been divided into seven districts with a clergyman for chairman and a layman for vice chairman of each district, and the actual preparing of the various parishes and missions has been assigned to these officers who will urge attendance at the conferences on the part of the members of the Church. The district chairmen and vice chairmen are: the Rev. David Cady Wright of Savannah, the Rev. Jackson H. Harris of Augusta, the Rev. E. W. Halleck of Waycross, the Rev. J. W. Fulford of Brunswick, the Rev. Robb White, Jr., of Thomasville, the Rev. James B. Lawrence of Americus, and the Rev. C. M. Hobart of Hawkinsville, Mr. F. H. MacFarland of Savannah, Mr. John D. Twigg of Augusta, Mr. Roy E. Breen of Jesup, Mr. R. A. Gould of Brunswick, Mr. R. R. Turnbull of Moultrie, Mr. John A. Davis of Albany and Mr. J. K. Hollowell of Dublin. The conference centers include Brunswick, Waycross, Valdosta, Fitzgerald, Thomasville, Americus, Albany and Dublin.

NEWARK.

Rt. Rev. E. S. Lines, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. R. Stearly, D. D., Coadjutor.

Death of Two Devoted Church Workers.

The death of Mrs. William Read Howe, following closely the death of her husband, the Chancellor of the Diocese and a most useful layman, has brought a peculiar sense of loss to the whole Diocese. Mrs. Howe had been very active in the Woman's Auxiliary and especially in the Guild of St. Barnabas' for Nurses. Her will is announced as containing bequests of $10,000 to the Diocese, the income to be used in the service of the clergy; $10,000, the income to be used in connection with the Woman's Auxiliary, in the service of the wives of the clergy of the Diocese; $10,000 for the Cathedral Fund. There are several smaller bequests for Church and charitable purposes and some which become available at the end of life interests.

In the death of Mr. Henry P. Winter, Junior Warden of St. Andrew's Church, South Orange, the Parish and the Diocese have lost one of the most useful and devoted of men.

Clerical Changes.

By recent changes in the Diocese, the Rev. Donald MacAdie and the Rev. Karl E. Warmeling, ordained deacons in June, are in charge, respectively, of the churches at Haledon and at Allendale. The Rev. William N. Harper, M. D., is taking charge of the Church of the Incarnation, Jersey City, and the Rev. Maxwell Williams of St. Aidan's, Paterson. The Rev. Percy C. Hall is in charge of Christ Church, West Englewood. The Rev. Duane Wevill has become rector of St. Thomas' Church, Newark. The Rev. George D. Harris, of Belvidere, Delaware and Hope. The Rev. Peter Deckenbach of Christ Church, Belleville.

Eagle's Nest Farm, on the Delaware River, in the second year of its camp life, has been used by about two hundred persons with great satisfaction. There have been conferences of the clergy, the Brotherhood of St. Andrew and the Italian clergy; by choirs, Boy Scouts, Sunday-school classes, and many individuals unattached. The large development and use of the one hundred and eighty acres, eight miles below the Water Gap, appear certain.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. J. B. Chesire, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. A. Penick, D. D., Coadjutor.
Rt. Rev. H. B. Delaney, D. D., Suffragan.

Meeting of the Executive Council.

On September 17 the regular quarterly meeting of the Executive Council of the Diocese met in Greensboro, with Bishop E. A. Penick, presiding. Bishop Cheshire and Bishop Delaney were also present, as was Archdeacon Hardin. A budget of $93,706 was approved for the year 1925. The principal items of expense were: $46,000 for the National Church Council (an increase of $6,000 over last year); $17,081 for the department of missions and church extension, including the three convocations, and $11,025 for religious education (including salary for executive secretary). The budget represents $8,600 more than was asked for 1924.

It was decided by unanimous vote that the churches in the whole diocese be requested to devote their Christmas offerings to the Japanese Rebuilding Fund and that the Bishop make a special appeal to the people and churches of the diocese to give liberally for re-establishing the work in Japan.

At the suggestion of Bishop Cheshire the movement to devote all Church School offerings in October to the Bishop Tuttle Memorial Fund, was endorsed and the Bishop has issued an appeal to all the Sunday Schools in the diocese to honor Bishop Tuttle's memory with "a mouth of Sunday's."

The Kanuga Lake Assembly Grounds proposition was referred to. The special committee cooperating with other committees from nearby dioceses was continued with power to act. A tract of several hundred acres in the mountains of Western North Carolina, with thirty-one cottages, hotel and beautiful lake, is offered to the Church for $88,000—$13,000 cash, and the rest in deferred payments. This matter will come up for action at the Synod of Seawane in Wilmington in November.

This was the second meeting of the Council, since its creation by canon last spring. The Council has a rotating membership and will meet every three months in Trinity Parish House in Greensboro. The next meeting will be December 17. This is an administrative system which promises to put the diocese in the forefront in efficiency and in business-like dispatch of its departmental affairs.

The Rev. R. E. Gribben, rector of St. Paul's, Winston-Salem, has been named associate secretary of the Field clergymen throughout the American Church, who will assist in the work of the department in its forward program. Mr. Gribben was diocesan chairman for the Nation-Wide Campaign last fall and conducted the movement with eminent success.

During the summer the Rev. G. Floyd Rogers, rector of St. Peter's, Charlotte, successfully combatted the usual apathy of summer congregations by conducting a series of services at which he spoke on special vocations and trades. He preached to a large congregation each Sunday night, and much interest was aroused.

The Church of the Holy Comforter, Burlington, the Rev. T. F. Opie, rector, has again started its free community kindergarten, which proved so helpful to the parish and the community last year, under Mrs. Wellington Ogden, of Lynchburg. No distinction is made as to denomination. There are boys and girls in the kindergarten from the Baptist, Methodist, Christian, Lutheran, Presbyterian, Methodist Protestant, and Episcopal Churches. The capacity of the kindergarten hall, which is the old church building reclaimed and equipped for the purpose, is taxed to accommodate the children and the enterprise has tended noticeably to establish friendly feelings on the part of members of the other churches of Burlington.

T. F. O.

UPPER SOUTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. K. G. Finlay, D. D., Bishop

Grace Church, Camden.

The Rev. Ilbert de Lacy Brayshaw assumed charge of Grace Church, Camden, on September 1. He comes to the Diocese of Upper South Carolina from the old mother diocese of South Carolina, where he has been rector of the Church of the Redeemer, Orangeburg, for the past two years.

Field Department.

The Rev. Henry D. Phillips, D. D., rector of Trinity Church, Columbia, and Chairman of the Field Department of the Diocesan Executive Council, has arranged for a series of conferences on the Program of the Church, under the leadership of the Rev. William H. Milton, D. D., from Monday, October 27 through Friday, October 31. These conferences will be held in the Church of the Good Shepherd, Columbia; the Church of Our Saviour, Rock Hill; the Church of the Advent, Spartanburg, and Christ Church, Greenville. The clergy, the vestrymen, and the women of the Auxiliary will meet in separate groups, but will all have an opportunity to hear and confer with Dr. Milton.

Miss Theo Young, the daughter of Mrs. John K. Young, of Union, has volunteered, and been accepted by the National Department of Missions, for the Mission Field of China.

Miss Young is a member of the Church of the Nativity, in Union, and, in addition to being an active worker in her own home parish, she is closely associated with the Department of Religious Education, in the Diocese. She has held the position of the Diocesan Supervisor of the Church School Service League, for the past year, and will, it is believed, become a great addition to any point in the Foreign Field, to which she may be appointed. She expects to leave for the Orient in the late Fall or early winter.

MICHIGAN.

Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop.

Dedicate New Community House.

The Rt. Rev. Herman Page, Bishop of Michigan, formally opened and dedicated the new St. Andrew's Community House, Detroit, Sunday afternoon, September 21. The special speaker for the occasion was the Rev. Samuel S. Marquis, D. D., rector of St. Joseph's Episcopal Church, who made an address on "Bringing Back the Neighborhood."

The new building, just recently completed, is one of the most completely equipped small buildings for community service in this part of the country. It was built under the direction and largely with the help of Mr. Fred Wardell, a member of St. Andrew's Church. The building is of stone and follows the old English style of architecture, even to containing a small open-air court in its center.

During part of the past summer a portion of the building has been used to house a Daily Vacation Bible School which numbered an enrollment of one hundred and twenty. It is hoped that during the next year a week-day school for religious education may be organized, running during the school year with the cooperation of the public school authorities and during the regular school periods of the children. In other parts of the United States more than 5,000 such schools are already in operation among various Protestant communions.

The building is also equipped with a large auditorium and a large stage, where plays and pageants by the boys and girls of the community will be given. Plans for the use of the building also include the holding of community dances during the winter.

Another attractive feature of the building is a large attractive club room which will be used as a lounge and for small gatherings of all kinds.

An enlarged program of boys' work will be undertaken by the parish in a portion of the building specially set aside which will include the formation of a court of the Order of Sir Galahad and combining with certain features of the Boy Scout and the Y. M. C. A. program.

According to the Rev. William L. Torrance, rector of the church, the new building will attempt to minister to the needs of the neighborhood surrounding it regardless of creed.

St. Matthew's Anniversary.

In 1849 a few colored families in the City of Detroit organized themselves into a society for worship according to the doctrine and teaching of the Episcopal Church. This first congregation attracted to it James T. Holly, a member of the Roman Catholic Communion, who was later made a priest of the Episcopal Church and still later the first Negro Bishop of the Episcopal Church in the United States with the care and oversight of the Diocese of Haiti.

This congregation, St. Matthew's Episcopal Church, during the week of September 14-21 held a joint celebration of the Seventy-fifth anniversary of the Church and the fiftieth anniversary of the consecration of the late Rt. Rev. Theodore Holly, Bishop of Haiti.

Sunday morning, September 21, at 10:45, the Rt. Rev. Herman Page, Bishop of Michigan, made his annual visitation to the church, taking part in the celebration and confirming a large class of candidates. At this service the sermon was preached by the Ven. Henry L. Phillips, D. D., of Philadelphia, Sunday evening at 8 P. M., in addition to a special musical service, the Hon. Fred R. Moore, Editor of the New York Age, made an address.

A series of special services and other events featured the celebration on Sunday, September 14, the Rev. John A. Williams, Omaha, Neb., and the Rev. Louis H. Berry, Newark, N. J., both sons of the local parish and now in the ministry of the Church, preached at the morning and evening services. A public reception was tendered these men the following evening, at which representatives from many of the Episcopal Churches in the city were present.

On Wednesday evening, September 17, the parish tendered a parish dinner to Bishop Page at St. Paul's Cathedral, and on Thursday evening a recital was given at the church with Mrs. Lorainetta LeBon as organist.

St. Matthew's Church, which is now one of the leading colored congregations of the Episcopal Church in the United States, has had an unusually interesting history. The old church building was first located on the southeast corner of Congress and St. Antoine Streets, where the Colonial Laundry now stands. The pioneer work in the parish was done by the Rev. William C. Monroe, who was ordained a deacon in the old St. Paul's Church, Detroit, by the Rt. Rev. Samuel McCoskrey, the first Episcopal Bishop of Michigan.

Following the completion of the first building in 1851, considerable difficulty was encountered by the new congregation. The colored population of Detroit at this time was continually fluctuating owing to the arrival and departure of fugitive slaves. The fugitive slave law which was enacted by the United States government in 1850 began to demonstrate its destructive effect upon the colored people of the city, and Detroit being the terminal of the fugitive slave "Underground Railroad," slave hunts and arrests were frequent. As a result, a great number of the terror-stricken people, many of them members of St. Matthew's Church, fled to Canada and elsewhere.

However, a faithful few kept alive the spark of devotion to the Church and in 1863 the present building was erected on the corner of St. Antoine and Elizabeth Streets.

The present rector of the parish, the Rev. E. W. Daniel, is one of the leading colored clergymen of the Episcopal Church in the United States and came to Detroit in 1922 after a distinguished service in New York City.

In the near future the congregation hopes to begin the building of a community house near the present church.

Keep, we beseech Thee, O Lord, Thy Church with Thy perpetual mercy; and because the frailty of man without Thee cannot but fall, keep us ever by Thy help from all things hurtful, and lead us to all things profitable to our salvation; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

St. Michael and All Angels.

O everlasting God, Who hast ordained and constituted the services of angels and men in a wonderful order; Mercifully grant that Thy holy angels always do Thee service in heaven, so, by Thy appointment, they may succour and defend us on earth; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

Angels.

I too have looked on angels,
The angels of the Lord,
Not Uriel standing in the sun,
Nor Raphael whose plumed sandals run
Upon the winds, nor that holy one Nearest the throne, great Gabriel,
Nor Michael of the sword.

I saw no wings of angels
Arched over Palestine,
Not above Ornan's threshing floor
Where the Wrath was stayed, nor above the sore
Thirst of the desert where Hagar bore
Water of life to Ishmael,
Led by celestial sign.

Altars, but never angels
Ascending in the fire;
Beggars, but not in seraph hold
Borne skyward; river, but no gold
And beryl of high heralds told
To show to fainting Daniel
The end of world's desire.

Yet I have looked on angels,
The angels of the Lord,
And entertained them unawares,
Worn men and women bowed with cares,
Pilgrims whose patient eyes were prayers,
Binding rebellious Israel
With love's tenacious cord.

All quietly God's angels
Go lifting hearts that fall,
Slipping our prison doors ajar,
Shining more softly than a star
Where glooms have been and shadows are,
Guileless as Nathaniel,
Undaunted as Paul.

Saint John beheld glad angels
At the gates of the jasper wall,
But I have seen them spent with grief,
Homeless as wandering autumn leaf,
Reapers that sink beside the sheaf,
Yet ever like child Samuel Arising at the call.

Oh, I have looked on angels,
The angels of the Lord,
With none believing their report,
Of the Philistines made a sport,
Rejected, yet the temple court
Of God's own grace, Immanuel,
His worship their reward.

STUDIES IN THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

The Last Discourse

II.

The Rev. Louis Tucker, D. D.

The promise of the Holy Spirit, fulfilled at Pentecost and in ordinations and confirmations, is further fulfilled in the private life of every repentant Christian. His work is world-wide. Heathen come to Christ by Him. Therefore He comes to some still heathen. As Giver of Life He is best worshipped by preservation of His temples, our bodies, in perfect clearness of thought and deed. Giver of Life Spiritual, He is best worshipped by attention to the promptings of conscience. Giver of Life Mental, He is the Lord of Common Sense, the Enlightener. As such, He is best worshipped by common sense as distinguished from erudition and from worldliness. The practical mechanic, or the competent mother or father of a household, worship Him more acceptably than the most learned professors of theology, or the most ascetic monks or nuns. To make good machines that work, or plant good grain that grows or raise good children that love God, or do any other homely honest common-sense thing, is serving Him better than to write great learned books or grow, by prayer and fasting, into ascetic holiness. Yet the Holy Spirit spoke through the prophets and made some of them ascetics; and the man or woman who was good farmer or mechanic or sensible housewife or parent may, after that work is done, receive the call. Nuns are good, but we believe, with St. Paul, that they should be widows over fifty. Monks are good, but we believe, with the Brahmins, that man should be student warrior and householder before he becomes ascetic. He whom the Comforter comforts will understand.

Home is where God is. Our Lord's going is foretold for their sakes. They are able to bear it because He has left His peace with them. This is not mystical. Full knowledge of good facts brings peace.

Our Lord continued with the saying of the vine and its branches. One who has seen a vineyard pruned to make it bear will understand. You must prune a branch and purge it—clean off dead bark and all that can harbor blight and pests—if you want grapes. Also, for the sake of the other branches, you must cut off all that are barren.

The early Christians loved this saying of the Vine and its branches most, fondly well. It shares with the Good Shepherd the midmost of their art. Wherever we would put a crucifix they put the Good Shepherd bringing home the lost sheep, and wherever we put any religious decoration except a crucifix they put a vine. The vine and its branches twined over all their art. There is a chapel in the catacombs the very walls and roof of which are carved with a branching vine. Their symbol of the Good Shepherd was truer than ours of the crucifix; for not in the suffering, but in the purpose of the suffering lies its meaning. Their symbol of the Vine and its branches is truer than ours of the trefoil window, the eagle lectern, the lamb and other like things; for it sums up the mysteries these separately teach and adds more. The vine symbolizes Christ and His Church, and is thus immeasurably the fittest decoration for Christian Churches.

God is love. Motive for keeping the commandments, like the ultimate motive for giving them, is love. This, in the long last, is sanction for heaven and hell; even for hell; for he who would hurt your beloved must be shut up where he cannot hurt your beloved. But those who love one another may go free.

Our Lord gives two reasons for exaltation of the eleven from servants to friends. He is about to die for them, and has told them the things God told Him. Both are practical. If you admit a servant to your confidence, so that the information sent you is his, you make him a friend. If you die for that servant, or even risk your life for him, by that act he doubly, trebly ceases to be servant. He may serve you; but it is as a friend. This is obvious to a gentleman and hidden from vulgarians and bores. Our Lord is a Gentleman. Perfect strength is combined with perfect gentleness in God alone. In so far as it is shown by any human being, that person approximates the ideal gentleman or gentlewoman. Out of immeasurable depths of suffering Christ, Who was strong for endurance or attack, has brought up for us a priceless truth; that one who is NOT strong for attack may, by strength for endurance combined with gentleness, approximate the nature of the Divine. We defend the definition of Gentleman as A man who is gentle, when, by derivation, it means a man of race and ancestry—Gens. It was because men of race and ancestry often exhibited a certain quality that that quality got itself named Gentleness. That man is the highest-bred, the greatest gentleman, who has most of this quality of Our Father in him, utterly irrespective of his earthly family; and that is the most aristocratic, exclusive point of view the world has ever known, and also the most socialistic and democratic. By all the great true gentlemen who have brightened this globe, combining gentleness with strength, the saints shall be the greatest aristocracy and purest democracy. Those found worthy of the Lamb shall be a brotherhood of such gentlemen, of such gentlewomen, as the world has never known; perfect democrats because perfect aristocrats; utterly strong because their strength is based on God; utterly gentle, because they stand before the Lamb.

Mutual love among all Christians is the purpose of Our Lord's farewell discourse. Human beings frequently find each other unlovable. Christ loves both. There is something lovable in even the properest. Success in prayer is here based, by Our Lord, on bringing forth much fruit. When a drummer sells the goods no wise house trims his expense-account. Would you have your prayers answered? Bring forth fruit. Love the man who brings forth fruit, too, whether you approve of his style or not.

There is no statement more prominent in ancient and more carefully left out of modern Christianity than that concerning hatred of the world for Christians. The feeling seems that Christianity ought to have transformed the world. Christianity has gained the upper hand in the world several times, conversion of Constantine being the first; but the world ended by transforming it. The stubborn old world sincerely believes any man who does all that Christ said is a fool; and the world will not obey fools. Christians holding secular authority, to retain that authority must cease to be "Fanatic" and become "Reasonable" or "Liberal," that is, worldly. He who follows Our Lord, remaining unworldly, becomes, in the eyes of the world, a harmless dreamer and visionary, to be despised, or else a dangerous dreamer and visionary; a fanatic to be fought and feared and hated.

Yet there is comfort. When the world despises and rejects Christians, it is not personal. They have not failed where better men would succeed. Those who reject the Master reject the servants. But those who accept the Master will accept and obey the servants so far as they have his "Word."

The problem of predestination and prophecy has been dealt with. Jews were not caused to hate Christ to fulfil an Old Testament prophecy. That prophecy was made because Jews, being quite free to do what they chose, chose, in the time of Christ, to hate Him. Their act was the cause of the prophecy, not its effect. Why, then, is it referred to by Our Lord in language which, at first glance, seems to imply that the prophecy caused the hatred?

Is it not because hatred and consequent prophecy were both effects? Jews would have hated Christ even if that hatred had not been foretold. Hatred was primary result, and the prophecy of it was secondary result, of natural law.

He Appeared in Another Form.

Jesus was not disguised, simply in other ways than the disciples were used to seeing Him. He appeared after the first Easter. He was the same Lord with His limitations laid aside, His disabilities discarded, His humanity folded up and laid away as carefully as His grave clothes.

He had reassumed the limitless powers of the God-head. For our sakes, He had become like us. For the same reason, He became unlike us. In these five words, "He appeared in another form," we have the history of Jesus since the Resurrection.

His sudden appearances in human life, unexpected manifestations in the church, tangible demonstrations of power throughout the ages, make up the romance of Christian history.

He keeps Himself out of sight, apparently out of human touch, one would think, at times out of human call!

"He hides Himself so wondrously;
As though there were no God.

He is least seen when powers of ill
Are most abroad."

But when human resources are exhausted, and a mighty deliverance is needed, at the acute stages in life, by methods that are strange, in ways new, and in disguises that surprise, "Jesus appears in another form."

It is part of the strategy of the Son, in bringing many sons into redemption, that He can accommodate Himself to every stage in life.

With an adaptability that only God is capable of, and a divine condescension, He can become "a Kindergarten Saviour, suit Himself to the mind of a little child, down at his mother's knee, saying:

"Gentle Jesus,
Meek and mild,
Look upon a little child."

To boys and girls in the adolescent stages of life, when all the world looks young, and every lass is a queen, and they are thinking the long thoughts of youth, living in cottages and building palaces in the air, another, and yet the same, Christ, in the winsomeness of young manhood, appears. Instead of thorns on His brow, He wears the dew of eternal youth. He shows Himself as a leader, saying, "I have trod these paths in sorrow that you might tread them in joy."

In the dangerous, sobering years of middle life, when the fires of youth begin to die down, enthusiasm cools, and the judgment grows balanced, even then the Lord becomes visible in another form.

Then when the hill of life steeply down and old age begins to seep in, and the hurrying years wrinkle the brow; when the disillusionments of life creep into the soul like a black frost in December! in the evening hours, He appears in another form to give light.

Jesus showed Himself in a different form to the men on the way to Emmaus. Prophecy of the manifestations of Himself to dissimilar characters in ages wide apart.

To Paul, as a light and voice from Heaven; Athanasius, as God, actual, and in essence with the Father; Martin Luther as a justifier of guilty men, before a righteous God; John Calvin, as Sovereign God, head of home, church and state; John Knox, as the author of an intelligent Christian faith; John Wesley, as the one who gives assurance in religion, a provoker of Hallelujahs; Countess of Huntingdon, as a foundation whereon to rest; General Booth, as a moral scavenger, picking up the debris of our ruthless civilization; John G. Patton, as God's great sunrise in the soul, and to a host of others, He has appeared in a manner that suited their personalities.

In a deeper sense than the militant Germans imagined, there is a "German God," for He adjusts Himself so wondrously to the varied sons of men that there is a German, French, Italian and Greek Christ. The same Lord in essence, a national, and an international character, and yet "the image of the invisible, the first born of every creature."

To Tolstoi, and the Russians, Jesus was a poor peasant. Hindoos can only conceive Him as a lonely, meditative, ascetic Holy man. To Michael Angelo, He is the Maker of Art; Handel, as the music of the world, and to Americans, He looms up as a man of action, doer of deeds. He accomplishes things.

To these different types of character, with their emotionalism, or lack of emotion, gifts, idiosyncrasy, speaking different tongues, living in ages and countries far apart, to them, He appears in satisfying form. For by Him were all nations made.

To the thinker to whom "the real is the rational," and to the mystic to whom everything is spiritual, Jesus appears in still another form.

One great service which mysticism has rendered to the church has been to deliver it from rigidity. When men have become encased in doctrines like a knight in a coat of mail, mysticism has entered, melted the crust, and said, "Come and walk in the light of the Father's love."

"A Christian mystic withdraws into the silence with all that he has learned in Jesus Christ, of a God who has a Father's heart, and who knows the yearning of a Father's love. Like the poor prodigal, he says, I will arise and go unto my Father. And so he arises from the world of sense, and goes to the quiet homeland of his soul. And there he is met in silence and in secret not by a cold and unintelligible spirit, but by a Father who hath never ceased to love, and loving hath never ceased to hope."

Here is the larger hope of the Church of God. He dwells in it. It is His earthly garment, and He is constantly demonstrating His watchfulness over it. Every revival of religion, outbreak of missionary zeal, discovery in scholarship, progress in Christian education is an Epiphany of Jesus in another form.

Jesus is manifesting Himself in our social order. He is not an idle spectator. He is the critic of our civilization. An industrial system that produces cheap goods and poor humans is not to His mind.

Lest we settle down in our ease and say, "There now, we have produced the best, nothing can be better," Jesus steps into the midst of things. He appears in the church, asking preachers if they have declared the truth; folks in the pews, if they have lived the truth. To the wronged He asks, "Have you forgiven your enemies, as I forgave and prayed for mine?"

"God clothed Himself with Gideon," is the graphic Old Testament way of saying that he was God's instrument. So the great Physician clothes Himself with every Christian doctor who heals the sick and alleviates pain.

He appears in the kitchen, and manifests Himself to housewives. He was familiar with smoky lamps, patched clothes; knew about sweeping rooms, swelling yeast in bread, the incessant call of street beggars and peddlers.

He can appear in any form, to any man or maid, in any age, at any hour of the day or night, speak any language, disguised in garments of mourning, sometimes dressed as a guest at a wedding. He can come with a vision, a scourge, a balm, a message, and a crown. In any fashion that suits thee.

Even so came Lord Jesus!—Presbyterian Banner.

The Missionary Spirit in Cape Mount.

The Missionary Society of our Church at Cape Mount in response to an appeal made by the rector for the Emergency Fund for Japan, has sent the amount of $36.62 to the Church Missions House. The rector asked for the amount of $15, and it is interesting to see how hearty was the response. The majority of the membership of the Society is made up of the boys of St. John's School, and the girls of the House of Bethany, and it is a fact to inspire us that their contributions were largely gathered from the sale of their daily allowance of rice which they denied themselves in order to help the Fund. This is truly the missionary spirit.—Exchange.

Christian worship is our greatest chance to get the ice thawed around our hearts, to be touched anew to sympathy and unselfishness, and to be awakened anew to the possibilities of the human race and of society.—Sir William Ashley.

For the Young Folks

Revelations.

A wee wind flower,
Reclining on a woodland bed
Its fragile life by beauty bred Reveals God's power.

A quiet strain,
The evening vesper of a thrush
God's voice that echoes through the hush,
That Love shall reign.

A crooning breeze,
That stirs the leaflet hearts to song,
Instills new life and makes them strong Majestic trees.

A bright-eyed star!
That clasps the misty twilight fold
With pin point fire of twinkling gold,
God's gate unbar.

A tiny prayer,
The lisping of a little child,
With trustful eyes, with soul so mild,
Naught seems so far.

How great God's gifts,
His tender Love for all mankind,
His thoughtful care with Hope combined,
Each life uplifts.

The Baby Moses.

Down by the river bank in the far-away country of Egypt grew many long, strong reeds, and one day, many, many years ago, a woman gathered a big bundle of them. When she brought them to her house she began weaving them into a basket, and as she worked I am quite sure that her little son Aaron watched her fingers as she pulled the reeds in and out and back and forth.

"Little Sister Miriam was a bit older than Aaron, and I suppose that she took care of the baby while her mother was busy.

"Keep him quiet, Miriam, dear," mother said; and Miriam would cuddle him very close in her arms and try to keep him from crying.

"Isn't he a pretty baby, mother?" Miriam would say over and over again as she looked into his face; and mother would answer, "Yes, my dear; he grows prettier every day."

Then Miriam would remember the command of the cruel king, "All the little boy babies of the Hebrew people must be killed."

She would shudder as she whispered, "The king must not find our baby!"

Father had to spend all his time working for the king, and he was very tired when he came home. Sometimes, too, he had a sad story to tell of how the overseer had struck him when he could not work fast enough. The king's overseers were very cruel to all the Hebrew people who were building his great buildings for him. They often forced the brickmakers to gather their own straw to mix with the mortar, but they demanded that just as many bricks be done at the end of the day.

Father would sigh! "How long! How long," and then mother tried to comfort him.

By and by the little cradle was finished, and it was just big enough to hold baby brother.

Mother made it quite water-tight by covering it on the outside with pitch. Then she placed baby inside, and carried both baby and cradle down to the river. Quietly and gently she hid it among the tall grasses that grew at the edge of the water.

"Watch him carefully, Miriam," she said. "Do not go too near the place, because some one might see you. I will go home. But if harm comes to baby brother, be sure to come and call me."

How the little "mother-sister" watched that tiny basket. She did not mind tired back or aching feet. As she stood just where her mother told her to stand, she thought of mother's words, "God is good. God is strong. He loves little children." Then she would whisper to herself, "Surely He will take care of little baby; surely He will save him from the king."

Presently the faithful little sister heard a sound. Some one was coming! She strained her ears to listen; then her heart seemed almost to stop beating! The princess was coming! The king's daughter was coming to the river! What should Miriam do?

The royal lady and her attendants came close up to the river bank. Then the princess spied the tiny basket. "What is this?" she cried.

One of the maidens lifted the basket for her mistress to see.

"Open it!" she commanded.

The maiden opened it, and there lay the helpless baby.

"It is one of the Hebrew children!" she said.

Then God did a wonderful thing. He put it into her heart to be kind to the little slave child.

"What a beautiful little baby!" she exclaimed.

The baby looked about; mother was not there; he could not see sister Miriam. He cried.

"Poor little baby!" exclaimed the princess.

Miriam came nearer. Then she heard the princess say, "I shall keep this beautiful baby for my own. Carry him to the palace."

What a marvelous thing for the princess of Egypt to say! Could Miriam believe her own ears? But she had heard aright.

It was a hard thing for a little slave girl to speak to the royal lady, but brave little Miriam spoke. "Would you like a good nurse for the pretty baby?" she asked timidly. "I know some one who would take care of the baby so well!"

The great lady looked down into the sweet face of the little girl. "You may go bring her," she said.

Then Miriam ran as fast as she could right back to her mother. "O mother, mother!" she panted. "The princess has found the baby! She loves him! She is going to keep him! She wants a nurse to take care of him! Come!"

Mother ran to the riverside. The princess put the little baby into her arms. "I want a nurse for this dear little baby. I shall call his name Moses. You shall take care of him."

This was God's wonderful way of taking care of a little baby who was in great danger.—Selected.

Penny Forget-Me-Nots.

Jackie Sanders looked with shame upon his dirty hands and feet, then straightway he went in search of his mother.

"O, Jackie," sighed the mother when she saw him, "I was hoping you were going to add another penny to the forget-me-not account today, you had stayed clean so long!"

"I'm sorry, mother," the little boy admitted, "but seems I just can't remember things as I should."

"I think, perhaps," interrupted Father Sanders, "if we would change our penny account it might work better."

"How, Father?" asked Jackie interestedly.

"Well, suppose instead of putting a penny in our forget-me-not box every time we went through the day remembering the things we were told to do and keeping our resolutions as we should that we put in a penny every time we forget anything."

"I—I guess that might make a difference, father," answered Jackie; "but I'm afraid the forget-me-not penny bank would get all my pennies."

The forget-me-not bank was a little metal bank that Jackie's best-loved Aunt Sara had given him when he was a little boy, and while he was still a little boy the bank was about his most treasured possession.

Almost ever since he could remember he had been putting pennies into the little bank for the things he did that pleased his parents. For instance, if he went all day without crying, they gave him two pennies to put in the bank; if he went all day without fussing one penny went in; and when he went all day without soiling his clothes, three pennies was the reward. And now father was suggesting that the old method be done away with and a new one installed; and since both his parents agreed to it, naturally he must.

Realizing that the pennies that would go into the bank under the new system would come from his own pocket, Jackie went to bed that night feeling very blue, and perhaps he had a right to, because the next morning before he got away from the breakfast table he realized that he had forgotten a very important thing which he should have done—he had forgotten to wash his face—and before night came down again he had left off two other important things; consequently that night three pennies from his own savings went into the bank.

"I say, dad," he said presently, "what shall we do with the money we contribute to the forget-me-not bank?"

"I think, since it's all due to our carelessness," answered father, "that we should give the money to some charitable cause."

At first the little forget-me-not bank flourished. Every day it seemed to Jackie that it called on him for every penny he could beg or earn, but by and by he began to get up in the mornings thinking about the things he was going to do that day. He began to listen to the things that mother and father told him to do and then doing them, and after a while father noticed that the little bank was growing slim.

Twice flowers had been paid for out of it for the charity ward in a big hospital, once it had brought a chicken for the washerwoman's birthday, and three times it had been emptied for missions—all for good causes. But somehow Jackie thought he'd rather do these things differently; so he kept remembering and thinking and doing until the little bank was completely emptied.

"I say," exclaimed father when he discovered the condition of the little bank, "I guess it's time we were going back to the old method. It seems that our little boy never forgets anything any more, and he's nice and clean when supper time comes and so polite I'm almost scared of him myself."

Jackie slipped onto his father's knee and looked up into his face lovingly. "I just couldn't let auntie's gift be filled with my forget pennies, father," he said slowly. "You know that little bank was a forget-me-not bank, and I think I've learned a lesson by it."

"So do I," laughed the father pleasantly. "In fact, I'm most sure my little boy has learned a great lesson; so we'll lay aside the custom of banking our forgotten duties and keep it just for love's sake."

And that night Jackie felt as though he was the happiest little boy in the world, for no longer was the little bank a reminder of something he had left undone, though it was a long time before he ceased to save his pennies in the forget-me-not bank.—Christian Advocate.

Doing Things.

Don't you see how strong I am,
Digging with a spade?
If there's any work to do,
Boys are not afraid.
When I'm tired I'll stop and rest
In the garden shade.

Don't you see how wise I am,
Counting one, two, three?
Pretty soon I'll go to school,
Then I'll work, you'll see;
Learn to read and write and spell,
Fast as fast can be.

Lots of fun in doing things,
Little boys all know.
Working, playing, resting, too,
That's the way we grow.
If you'll try my recipe
You will find it so.

The Poppies.

Eugenie du Maurier.

Just before the poppies begin to think of coming out, their little heads straighten upright. Poppies do not hang their heads when they blossom. The poppy ladies are not at all careful of their clothes, although they have very pretty ones. The rose ladies curl their petals very carefully. But the poppy ladies' petals are just crushed tight together inside the hard green buds. The poppy ladies are not afraid of wrinkles.

If you go out early to the poppy beds, you may see the poppy ladies open and float their skirts upwards as if the poppy ladies did not care whether they danced on their feet or their heads. But, children, dear, you must have sharp eyes. When the poppy ladies get their invitations to garden parties they make very great haste. So you see first the bud. But if you look away for but a moment, the flower poppy lady has arrived. The green case—the calyx—has split and dropped to the ground. The petals (the poppy lady's skirts) that were crushed so tight are lovely. They are wonderful things.

The poppy ladies don't look a bit sleepy. They are ever bobbing their heads and courtesying to the sun. But there is something made from the poppy seeds that induces sleep. The poppy seed is very tiny and light. But it holds the sleep charm. Animals, and insects, and plants are sensible people and can always go to sleep at the right time. It is only people who have forgotten how to sleep that must get the poppy to help them.

I have seen bees take a piece of a poppy petal to line their babies' bedroom—perhaps, that the little ones should sleep very soundly. This kind of a bee makes a chamber in the ground. After it is nicely hollowed in the ground, if the earth walls are not quite to her taste, the bee sometimes cuts pieces out of the poppy ladies' shirts and papers the walls with crimson, yellow or pink. Then, too, the mother bee often mixes together a little honey and pollen dust from the poppy flowers and makes a little pile of bee-bread in the pretty room. That is for the little fellows to eat before they have become bees. Then, the mother bee hangs a little curtain and makes ready the place for another bee-egg.

Lora Surprises Them.

Grandmother Martin watched her daughter's trembling fingers as she basted the skirt of a filmy pink net dress onto the waist. "Jane, why do you work yourself nearly sick to get that dress done today?" she finally asked, solicitously.

"Lora said she absolutely wouldn't go to her senior party unless it was finished and I'd hate to have her miss that," answered Mrs. Sessions, nervously. "It's five o'clock now and I don't see how I'm ever going to finish it for this evening. I've done my best but I'm afraid that won't be any excuse to Lora."

Grandmother Martin's lips compressed to a fine line. "Jane," she said, "I've lived in your home a long time and you know I've never interfered with anything, but I really can't let this pass without saying something. Every time Lora doesn't get exactly her own way she raises a perfect tempest in the home and we all suffer. She is almost a young lady and I think that it is a shame for you to continue to sacrifice yourself and to allow her to grow up thinking only of herself."

Jane Sessions shrank back as if stung. "I know," she finally admitted, "but she's always been that way and I've never seemed to be able to overcome it. Other members on both sides of the family have had her disposition, so I can hardly blame her."

"Nonsense," declared Grandmother Martin, emphatically. "We could all blame our faults onto someone else if we tried and how dreadful it would be if every one shirked responsibility that way."

Before Mrs. Sessions could answer, the front door banged, and, her fingers trembling more than ever, she bent again over her sewing. A moment later, a sweet-faced blond girl with a smile on her lips appeared in the doorway. She hurried over to Mrs. Sessions.

"Oh, Mother, I'm so sorry you've worked so hard on that dress," she exclaimed, regretfully. "You can't possibly get it finished now so put it away and rest a while. I'll wear the old yellow one tonight and save this pink one for some other party."

Mrs. Sessions gasped. "But Lora, you said you wouldn't go unless you could have it. Maybe I can get it at least basted together so you can wear it this evening," she answered, tremulously.

"I know I said that, and I'm sorry because it has caused you to work so hard, but I don't mind wearing the yellow a bit. I think I'll run up now and start to get ready. Daddy gets home so late, I wouldn't have time to dress after dinner."

She kissed her mother and then her grandmother and hurried out of the room. The two older women looked at each other in bewilderment as the happy strains of a pleasing song reached their ears from Lora's bedroom overhead.

"What could have happened?" demanded her mother, finally.

"It's too good to be true," replied Grandmother Martin, skeptically.

At eight o'clock Lora left with pink cheeks and shining eyes, wearing her last year's party dress. Her mother waited up for her, and when she went in to Lora's bedroom the last thing to kiss her good night, she put her arms around her daughter.

"Lora, dear, you do not know how much I appreciated your consideration of me this afternoon when I was unable to finish your dress on time," she said, softly.

"Oh, Mother, I'm so ashamed of the way I've acted so many times," Lora almost sobbed, "but I'll never do it again. Today Marie said something in school that provoked me terribly, and, to keep the girls from seeing how I felt, I rushed into the cloak room, but I was seething inside. Then I caught sight of myself in the mirror and I almost thought the awful looking person was some one else. Oh, Mother, if I look that way outside, what a dreadful tempest there must be inside."

"I'm so glad you've seen the truth at last," breathed her mother thankfully.

"Yes, Mother, I'm so happy to think I've learned to still the tempest," answered Lora, earnestly.—Presbyterian Banner.

Polly Girl's New Hats.

One morning last summer the postman on Thirteenth Street came to the Merriman House with a big box addressed to "Polly Girl, care of Mrs. Merriman." Polly was at the door, and she was so excited over the big box she almost forgot to ask her friend, the postman, about his health and his little girl. But the postman didn't mind, for he knew that big packages always made little girls get excited. And so he just smiled as Polly Girl ran hurriedly in with her big box.

"Gracious me," said Mother Merriman, "who can be sending you such a big box? Polly Girl?"

"I suspect it is from Aunt May," said Polly Girl, as she untied the strings. Then she gave a little cry of delight as she lifted off the cover. In the box were two dear little hats—one of blue silk with little frills, and the other a little brown straw almost the color of Polly Girl's brown curls.

Polly Girl clapped her small hands with joy. These were her very first hats. Mother Merriman had always made pretty bonnets for her little girl, and a real store hat was something that Polly Girl had not expected.

"I guess Auntie May knew I had started to Sunday School and would like a sure-enough hat," she said joyfully. Then she tried them on, and turned round and round, asking mother how they looked, just as she had seen grown-up ladies do.

Mother said they were lovely, and also thought Polly a lucky girl to have two hats at the same time.

Polly Girl thought so, too, and then she asked if she might go down the street and show them to the neighborhood grandmother. Mother said yes, and away went Polly Girl, one hat on her curly head, the other in one hand.

An hour later Polly Girl came back, her eyes shining and with only one hat.

"Why, Polly Girl, what have you done with your other hat?" asked her mother.

"Oh, mother, I gave it to Dimple!" said Polly Girl. "You see, her papa has been sick and she didn't have any hat. I wanted her to go to Sunday School with me. I really didn't need but one hat, so I just gave her the blue one, 'cause it looked just like her eyes, mother dear."

Mother Merriman gave Polly Girl a big hug. "The hats are very pretty, but not half so lovely as my little girl's unselfishness," she said.—Our Little Ones.

QUALITY—SERVICE.

A Lullaby.

Little folk all are gone to rest,
Birdies wee in their downy nest;
Cloudlets in the golden west,
Hush-a-bye, baby bye!

Birdies all day long did fly;
All day cloudlets ran the sky;
Now in slumber sweet they lie.
Hush-a-bye, baby bye!

All day long upon the wold
Lambkins played—now in the fold
Are they sheltered from the cold.
Hush-a-bye, baby bye!

Little fish within the deep
Safely lie and sweetly sleep
Till the day begins to peep,
Hush-a-bye, baby bye!

When the morning light shall break
Birds and lambs and fish will wake.
All for darling baby's sake,
Hush-a-bye, baby bye!

Resolutions.

The following resolution was adopted at a meeting of the Vestry of St. Thomas' Church, Richmond, Virginia, held September 25, 1924, for the purpose of taking suitable action as a mark of respect to the memory of S. RUTHERFORD ROSE, for eleven years a vestryman of the church and for eleven years junior warden.

Whereas he served the church in many responsible capacities, being unswerving in his loyalty, a man of the highest type of Christian character, whose simplicity of life and willingness in the service of this church furnished an inspiring example to all with whom he came in contact; be it

Resolved: That in his death St. Thomas' Church and the community have suffered an inestimable loss, the vestry extend to his family their deepest sympathy in their bereavement, and that in honor to his memory this resolution be placed upon the records of the church, a copy be sent to his family and copies for publication to the Southern Churchman and the Virginia Churchman.

who has been serving Christ Church, Stevensville, and who will continue there as minister-in-charge. At the same time the Bishop elevated to the priesthood the Rev. James Archibald Mitchell, A. M., B. D., who is now rector of All Hallows Parish, Snow Hill. A large number of the clergy of the Diocese were present and took part in the services. The Rev. Raymond A. Adams, Canon of the Cathedral, read Morning Prayer, after which the service of ordination was taken up. The Bishop preached an able sermon on the ministry, and personally addressed the candidates. Mr. Eastburn was presented by the Rev. Victor S. Ross, of the Diocese of Maryland; while the Rev. Mr. Mitchell was presented by the Rev. Edmund Burk, Ph. D., rector of St. Paul's-By-the-Sea, Ocean City. The Bishop was celebrant, assisted by the Dean of the Cathedral, the Very Rev. F. J. Bohanan, D. D., the Rev. Sewell S. Hepburn, D. D., and the Rev. Samuel Borden-Smith. Dr. Hepburn read the Epistle, and the Rev. C. L. Atwater, Chairman of the Examining Chaplains, read the Litany, the Rev. Walter C. Eastburn reading the Gospel in the ordinary course of the ordination service.

Mr. Eastburn comes to us from Philadelphia, and has endeared himself to us by his earnest and consecrated work on Kent Island; while Mr. Mitchell, whose father was for many years the rector of St. Paul's Parish, Centreville, is well known throughout the diocese.

New Activities in Easton.

With the increased attention to the rural work in the Diocese, several of the old parish churches have been reopened for regular services, which have found a ready response. The Rev. Mr. Virgie, Trinity Church, Edenton, opened old St. Augustine's Parish Church. Mr. Quinn, of Northeast, has opened the old Parish Church of St. John's, Elk Neck, and Trinity, Church Creek, has also been reopened for services.

Children's Home Improvements.

The improvements to the Children's Home in Easton, which is the only Home for Children on the Eastern Shore, are proceeding rapidly. The entire building is being remodeled and modernized. A new infirmary has been built, several more bed-rooms and bath rooms have been added, together with a play and study room; and the entire building covered with stucco. The improvement will not only add to the convenience and comfort of the children, but also gives a new dignity to the Cathedral grounds.

PITTSBURGH.

Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., Bishop.

Fall Conference of the Woman's Auxiliary.

The fall conference of the Diocesan and Parochial Officers of the Pittsburgh Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary took place at Trinity House, Pittsburgh, on Thursday morning, September 18. The Rev. F. C. Lauderburn, of Trinity Parish, said the opening prayers. Twenty-five parishes and missions were represented by about seventy-five delegates. Plans were considered for the winter's work along the various lines of activity in which the Auxiliary is engaged. Progress was reported in the collection of the Auxiliary Special for 1925, the Bishop Tuttle Memorial Houses to be located in New York and in the South. November 6 was set as the date for the Fourth Ingathering of the United Thank Offering of 1925, to be held in Trinity Church, Pittsburgh. In connection with this service it is hoped to have a display of pictures of the work of the Church in China, by Mrs. Pancoast, of Philadelphia. A gift of $200 was made in behalf of the home for Church Workers in Anvik, Alaska, lately destroyed by fire, by the Sybil Carter Memorial Fund, which is devoted to the interests of work among Indians.

The allotment of missionary boxes, personal, school, and hospital, was made and the demand almost exceeded what has been assigned. There seemed an eagerness on the part of the various too often we pass over him in scorn. For that Judas in the upper room, planning to betray his Master, with only a half-concealed sneer upon his face as he watched this impractical teacher bathing His disciples' feet,—for that man, we have only loathing—a man guilty of the most despicable crime recorded. But for that poor distracted creature who goes running to the temple in the hope that even yet he may be able to annul his agreement and save the life of an innocent man by returning the wages for his crime,—for that poor man, I have only pity. Sightless, blind to everything about him, possessed by this awful despair, knowing nothing but the agony of remorse, seeing only the face of the man he had betrayed, feeling only the burning sting of the kiss upon his lips,—a maniac, and yet unable to flee from his thoughts,—with not one thing to cling to and give him hope: that man was the most wretched creature that ever lived.

We so often study about Peter and Paul and James and John, and see in them ourselves. But we would do well sometimes to consider this Judas, lest we become proud, and feel too far removed from him. Do you think because you were brought up in a Christian home that you have nothing in common with this man? He enjoyed every advantage, too; he was reared in a religious atmosphere,—a home in which they thought and talked much of the coming of Messiah; this Judas as a boy was filled with hope for the future,—the same sort of hopes for his life that we have for ours,—the longing to see the day when his people should be free from bondage, when he himself should become great among them because of his service of the King. In those days he saw visions and dreamed dreams, and there was a mother that looked as proudly upon him as ever we were looked upon. Do you think that because you've spent near three years in a theological seminary that you've nothing in common with him? He spent most of three years in the company of Jesus Christ. Are you thinking now of the sermons you've preached, of the souls you've won to Christ? He preached sermons, too; doubtless he won men to the Master, more perhaps than any of us; he healed the sick and cast out demons and did mighty works in the name of the Lord. But he went away and hanged himself, and was lost. In a way "he saved others; himself he could not save." Think not that you are so different from him; for every one of us has the possibility of a Judas in his heart. We have avarice, desire for wealth and gain; we have ambition, too, the craving of place and power and the esteem of men; and in our hearts is enmity and malice, and sometimes we are displeased because the plans of God are not according to our liking. Some day we may betray Our Lord,—not to the Jews, but to the world,—not for thirty pieces of silver, but for pleasure and wealth and power, or even for the honor of our Church and Creed and name. And we shall, too—unless we believe!

Be not proud, and lift not up your hearts to thank your God ye are not as other men. "Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall." Judas Iscariot, who became a traitor! The life we live is more than we think for; and we fight with forces that are greater than we know.

branches to get started early with the work.

The following delegates and alternates were elected to represent the Diocese at the Provincial Auxiliary called to meet in Charles Town, West Virginia, in November: Delegates, Mrs. Charles Bailey, Mrs. Hugh P. Allen and Mrs. W. C. Hawley. Alternates, Mrs. C. C. Burgess, Mrs. T. J. Bigham and Miss Jean Bailey.

Peace and Joy.

Peace does not mean the end of all our striving.

Joy does not mean the drowning of our tears,

Peace is the power that come to souls arriving.

Up to the light where God Himself appears.

Joy is the wine that God is ever pouring,
Into the hearts of those who strive with Him,

Lighting their eyes to vision and adoring,

Strengthening their arms to warfare glad and grim.

Bread of Thy Body give me for my fighting,

Give me to drink Thy sacred blood for wine,

While there are wrongs that need me for the righting,

While there is warfare splendid and divine.

Give me for the light the sunshine of Thy sorrow,

Give me for shelter the shadow of Thy Cross,

Give me to share the glory of tomorrow
And from my heart take the bitterness of loss.

Education and Religion

"Education and religion are absolutely essential to true democracy," states a Bishop of the Church; and he adds: "It has been the province of Hobart College to blend the two to a remarkable degree."

That fact is the basis of Hobart's strong appeal to students who come from homes in which a definite religious atmosphere has been maintained. Hobart, ever since its founding, has recognized the value of religion to its students and has always given them ample facilities for the exercise of their religious instincts.

It is not surprising that many students, after entering Hobart, seek affiliation with the Church; nor is it surprising that nearly four hundred Hobart graduates have been ordained to the Protestant Episcopal Ministry.

Applications for admission to the 103rd class are now being received. For information address the Rev. Murray Bartlett, D. D., President.

A Friend In Need.

This friend was a tame stag that belonged to a lady living near Manila, in the Philippine Islands. He was a great pet and allowed to roam about at his will.

The ponies did not have the same freedom. When they were taken out, they must be tied.

One day, the man who fed the ponies tied one of them with a very short rope, and then carelessly put its bunch of hay beyond its reach.

The poor little beast strained in vain at its rope to reach his meal. His owner, watching from the window, was about to go to his help, when she saw the stag standing by, taking in the situation. She waited to see what would happen.

The stag soon found a way out of the difficulty. He bent his proud head, lifted part of the hay on his antlers and put it down under the pony's nose.

Then he went back for more; in a few minutes the grateful little pony had its full meal before him, and was making a hearty breakfast.—The Outlook.

A Moment's Prayer.

I cannot tell why there should come to me

A thought of some one miles and miles away

In swift insistence on the memory

Unless a need there be that I should pray.

Too hurried oft we are to spare the thought

For days together, of some friends away.

Perhaps God does it for us, and we ought

To read His signal as a call to pray. Perhaps just then my friend has fiercer fight,

And more appalling weakness and decay

Of courage, darkness, some lost sense of right

And so in case he needs my prayers, I pray.

Friend, do the same for me if I intrude

Unasked upon you in some crowded day;

Give me a moment's prayer as I include,

Be very sure I need it, therefore pray.

THE RESPONSIBILITY OF PROPERTY---SHOULD WE TITHE?

In the course of conversation with a young newspaper woman she remarked to the writer:

"You're a minister, and there is one verse in the Bible I have never heard satisfactorily explained, and that is 'Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness; that when ye fail they may receive you into everlasting habitations'. Can you tell me what that means?"

Of course the answer is known to every clergyman, but since this verse had been so puzzling to one of the laity it may also have made others wonder, and sometimes we of the clergy are a little apt to take too much knowledge of the Bible and Bible subjects for granted, so at the risk of being somewhat elementary in our information we are going to take this opportunity of explaining a verse which may have given some a wrong impression of Our Saviour's teaching.

There is probably no verse in the Bible which has suffered so greatly through the wrong translation of the compilers of the King James' version as this one, which is the ninth verse of the sixteenth chapter of St. Luke's Gospel.

The purpose of this whole chapter is to teach the responsibility that comes with wealth, and the proper uses that we should make of such financial advantages as God gives us.

The chapter begins with the parable of the unjust steward, illustrating how a man will at once bring to bear all his resources to rescue himself from a material calamity; and concluding with the story of Lazarus and the rich man.

The more correct translators of the Authorized Version get what we feel to be the real intention of Christ's teaching on this subject when they use the words, "And I say unto you, make friends by means of the manner of righteousness, so that when it fail they may receive you into everlasting habitations."

Thus it is easy to understand the double teaching, first the temporary nature of wealth (mammon), and second the permanence of the "habitations" created by the power of love and gratitude.

The way to use money is so to distribute it that we may reap a reward from it in the lasting impression that it makes in the hearts of others.

Of course the giving of money is only a small part of what we should give to others, and in itself is not all that is expected. As St. Paul puts it in his great paragraph on, "Though I bestow all my goods upon the poor and have not love (charity) it availeth nothing."

Nevertheless the love that will be engendered in the hearts of others by such gifts will help somewhat and will go toward the building of habitations that will be everlasting.

Of course all Bible readers are aware that the divisions into chapters are of comparatively modern application. The original manuscripts not being divided into words much less verses and chapters. It is not often that the real meaning has been so well brought out as is done in the setting apart of this chapter.

In its conclusion Christ pictures the rich men in torment, not because he is rich, but because being rich he had also been utterly selfish, and that selfishness had created a great gulf between him and Lazarus, whereas if he had been willing to give of his abundance to the latter, even though his gifts had not been accompanied by much personal concern or love, yet they would have created in the heart of Lazarus a love that would have found some way to bridge that gulf, or more likely still, would have built a spiritual home for the reception of the coming benefactor into an everlasting habitation.

It is interesting to note that in this consideration of the responsibility of wealth the Evangelist (St. Luke) does not record any reference to the Jewish standard of tithing or giving of one-tenth of the income to religious and charitable purposes.

We believe that tithing is both ideally and practically a good thing. It is eminently practical, because it sets aside a definite amount for the individual to give, and creates a fund from which he can draw for all church and charitable purposes. It is ideal in that it complies with an ancient Scriptural injunction and sets aside for unselfish objects a good deal larger amount than the average person is willing to give. If everybody were to start tithing the churches, hospitals, relief organizations and community chests would all immediately emerge from the condition of "frenzied finance" in which many of them exist at present.

Nevertheless, while we heartily approve of tithing and earnestly commend it to our readers, it has its objections and is not perfect, and we believe that Our Lord recognized this and so refrained from giving it the additional weight of His specific approval.

In the first place it is a mistake to attempt to standardize our relations with God. Paradoxical as it may sound, it is nevertheless true that "one-tenth" of the income does not represent the same proportion in every case. For instance, two men may receive a salary of $3,500, but the one has five children and an invalid mother to provide for, while the other only has a wife and one child.

Again there are a few persons to whom the giving of one-tenth would mean no sacrifice and little effort.

It has been said that those who start tithing never give it up. This may be true, although it is doubtful, because there is an inherent inclination in mankind to keep secret his feelings, and this is particularly the case when the failure is of a spiritual nature.

Perhaps another reason why Christ did not mention this ancient custom is that one of the glories of following Him is that He leads us on to ever-advancing heights of idealism, and fixes no limits, either to our gifts or our services.

It is not our desire to discourage "tithing," on the other hand, as we have said, we commend most heartily and urge it as a move in the right direction, but let not even the tither think that he has fulfilled all righteousness or accomplished the utmost end of Christian liberality. Neither should he who is struggling to support a family and giving as liberally as he honestly feels that he can feel that he is a religious slacker, because his gifts do not reach to one-tenth of his income.

God is a loving Father as well as a just judge and knows all our struggles and efforts and knowing His Son Our Saviour did not set a fixed standard, and if we do our best we can depend upon His loving knowledge and sympathetic understanding for the rest.

M.

HELP! HELP!

We note that two of our best diocesan exchanges are bewailing the difficulty that they find in getting the clergy to report Church news.

The invariable reply that comes from clergymen when asked to write up some incident in connection with their work, is that they do not like to advertise their own activity. As a matter of fact, however, this is very much more of an excuse than it is a reason, because a piece of successful work in a parish can be written up by the clergyman himself without mentioning his own name at all. Or, if the incident is of such a personal nature that this cannot be done, and it very rarely is, the rector can ask some member of the congregation to do it, and forward it to the diocesan organ or some one of the four Church papers of general circulation.

Nowadays great numbers of our parishes have monthly parish publications. Rectors or business managers should see to it that the Living Church, the Churchman, The Witness and The Southern Churchman and their own diocesan paper are always placed on their mailing list at the re-opening of each year's work in the fall, or that these names are kept on the mailing list if there is no cessation of publication during the summer months.

Of course, parish notes are not always of sufficient importance to have a significance throughout the diocese, but a good many more people are interested in your parish than you may realize, and, any way, rectors should give the editor at the news headquarters of the diocese the opportunity to glean what he may from the happenings in their parishes as recorded in any publication that may be issued.

It should be remembered that all churches have more or less the same sort of problems to face, and that plan that works well in one place may help some other congregation somewhere else to overcome a similar difficulty if they can hear about it.

Church papers rarely have any funds to spare, never being able to pay very much to their correspondents, and sometimes can do no more than send the paper without charge, so that to send in matters of general interest is really performing a Christian service.

A good diocesan paper properly supported by the clergy, by which we mean a paper in which the clergy take enough interest to help along by news contributions or suggestive letters, is a real asset to any diocese, and can wield a most beneficial influence in creating that spirit of brotherly cooperation which makes for Christian fellowship.

On the other hand it must be borne in mind that preparing a paper for publication is something like dress-making. It requires a certain amount of "cutting and fitting," and sometimes communications have to be "boiled" a good deal to make them go into the space that is not otherwise taken, so correspondents should not feel "injured" if communications do not always appear just as sent in.

Also it is equally true of newspaper offices as of farms, that "it never rains, but it pours," and very often one week we have to empty our files and scrape the desk drawers to get enough "to fill up," while the next week we may have to use the shears and red pencil with equal vigor.

On this subject the editor of the Diocesan Record of Southern Virginia says:

"There are important churches in the diocese, doing a work of immense proportions, yet who rarely if ever report their accomplishments in the columns of our diocesan paper.

"When asked the reason why, the usual reply is, 'We do not care to blow our own trumpet.' Analyze this excuse and you will never use it more. Modesty is enthroned upon its surface, but arrogance lurks, underneath.

"The work is the Lord's, not ours. The personnel of the congregation constantly changes; rectors come and go; but the work continues. To whom is all success due, but to Him without Whom we can do nothing? Whose praises should be sounded, as He blesses our feeble and unworthy efforts, bringing them to an undeserved success? 'His is the power and the glory.' What can it mean, therefore, when a congregation fails to report its successes, not wishing to blow its own trumpet, except that they have thought the Lord's success was their own, and are taking to themselves the glory that belongs to Him who doeth the works?"

"Blow the trumpet in Zion! Praise Him for His mighty acts. Praise Him according to His excellent greatness. Praise Him with the sound of the trumpet. Blow, trumpet, blow!"

The Editor of the Southwestern Episcopalian from the adjoining diocese of Southwest Virginia quotes his brother and adds this practical call to his own people, which is applicable throughout the country:

"We hope that with the opening of fall activities in our various churches our correspondents may come out of their long summer nap refreshed and reinvigorated and will let us have a parish letter from each parish each month. This is your paper and it is 'up to you' to see that your local congregation receives due publicity. We hope that our readers will not act on the principle of letting George do it. If George does not do it, take your typewriter in hand and send to the associate editor nearest to you any items of interest to your congregation."

Remember that editors are not mind-readers and we cannot print the news unless it is sent in by some one.

M.

THE SERMON

Preached at the Consecration of the Chapel of Emmanuel Church in Boston, on Wednesday, October 1, 1924.

By the Right Reverend Charles Lewis Slattery, D. D.

Bishop Coadjutor of Massachusetts.

Give unto the Lord the glory due unto His name: bring an offering and come into His Courts. O worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness.—Psalm xevi, 8, 9.

WE have come together with joy this morning to offer to God a building made as beautiful as art and gratitude and love can make it. It is a gift to Him. Humanity, entering in, will be still; and, sharing the gift, will be inspired to worship Him in spirit and in truth. If silence is broken and words are uttered, they must be honest and faithful words, to meet the honor and faithfulness of the builders; or they must be words winged with the radiance of music, that the glory of carving and of color, of light and of shade, may be interwoven with the richness of human melody. This building will tell future generations, we trust, how, once on a time, God put it into the hearts of His servants to worship Him in the beauty of holiness; and these generations to come will be filled with aspiration to bring the beauty of an inner holiness of life and character, that it may be a living response to the silent verse of that beauty of holiness which is about and around and above them as they pray.

I.

One of the most beautiful sanctuaries of the Old World is the Church of Brou. Planned by his wife as a thank-offering for the deliverance of the Duke of Savoy from peril, both she and her beloved had died before a stone was placed; and a reverent son set himself to carry out his mother's desire. He too died, and the wife of this younger Duke, in loyalty to him, at length fulfilled the plan. Cunning workmen, the most skilled in Europe, came from the North to put her dreams of worship into stone. Marguerite of Savoy, out of a great sorrow, having discovered the pity and the consolation of God, lifted up her heart to Him with an offering of such beauty that the traveler today, standing within her church, is thrilled with the beauty of holiness.

This chapel, which is now being consecrated, has, within its stones, the imperishable story of a love fused through the mystery of sorrow. A father wished to honor the memory of a beloved daughter who, on her wedding journey, across the sea, met death with her husband in a cruel act of the War. Being himself a poet, he sought distinguished makers of beauty to build this temple, that it might be the symbol of a character which he loved. Then, the work unfinished, he too passed into the unseen, and his wife carried on the work till it has become what we see it today. She, like another Marguerite of Savoy, has given to the New World a church fraught with the pious memory of a family united in love one for another, and also united in a common adoration of the Eternal.

We sometimes wonder why churches in the New World are not so beautiful as the most beautiful churches of the Old World. It is not always because of lack of skill or of taste. Certainly it is not from lack of material wealth to lavish upon their building. Rather is it because we are only slowly appreciating that the beauty of a church is not a merely material thing. Beauty cannot be bargained for and bought. Many a church in all parts of the world has the abundance of art: its lines are correct, the labor expended on its details is enormous, its mass is stupendous, the height, the color, the length, all inspire awe—but the elusive quality called beauty is not there. It might as well be a dignified railway station or a gorgeous custom house; for it is not a church in the deepest sense of the word. Another building may lack what the technical critic thinks indispensable, but it tells of the glory of the human heart lifting its sorrow and its joy to God, and it is a church crowned with the beauty of holiness.

II.

We in this country need especially to remember that beauty stands with goodness and truth as an end in itself. Even among the best of us, our virtues smack of the counting house or the market-place. We know that we must be honorable in all our dealings. But we, as a people, are somewhat impatient with the man who pursues truth in and for itself. We want to know the use of it; and particularly we want to know just whither it may lead us. And when we hear of beauty as an end in itself, we are apt to be quite upset. If we are moral and pay our debts, and are kind to the neighbors, we really think we have a perfect right to live in ugly houses on hideous streets, and go on Sundays to churches which are either bare and secular, or full of cheap tinsel, confused and garish.

A church like this will tend to teach us that beauty is a solemn quality of life which we must honor with all our hearts and minds and souls. It is something which we ourselves must have, and which we must provide for the community and the world.

This ancient city well understands the obligation to exalt beauty. The public library with its courts and staircases and noble paintings; the art museum with its vast spaces and its ordered treasures; Trinity Church, the first monumental church of the land, the result of the architectural genius of Richardson and the spiritual leadership of Brooks; the Charles River Basin, with its surrounding pavement—these tell of a brotherhood reaching out towards the ultimate value which the people shall put upon beauty—and end in itself.

And now we are saying that beauty must be offered, with our goodness and our pursuit of truth, as an offering to God. It is not a mere decoration, something interesting, but quite superfluous. Churches may be as huge as an ocean steamship, or as small as a rowboat; they may cost the wealth of Ormus or of Ind, or they may cost the small savings of a few farmers on a country hillside—but they must be beautiful. Beauty cannot be snared by the world. It is born through the graciousness and love of humanity. It is a gift from God, a gift so wonderful that, when we have once put our life into it, we must then give it back to Him.

III.

Now you will ask me to prophesy to you what this chapel may mean, in the days to come, for those who live in these glad and yet tragic streets, and also for the stranger. Let me, out of many possible answers give you four.

First, may the beauty of this chapel waken men and women from the dullness of life. It is said that when a certain Florentine painter centuries ago had finished a small picture of great beauty, all the shops in Florence were closed, and all the people, with songs and garlands of flowers, went with the painter to the church where the picture was to be given to the Lord God as a perpetual part of His temple. How those people must have gone afterwards, day after day, to the shadowed doorway of that church, then through its coolness into the presence of the beautiful picture. So may this chapel refresh all who will freely enter its portals with the joy of its beauty. May life lose its drabness and display its glory; may the Light of the Most High shine through the cloud!

Then, in the second place, may they who see the beauty of this chapel, instinctively understand that a thing of such transcendent beauty, consecrated to God's worship, must endure. Other buildings will give way to the new and the perhaps better structure. But here is something that cannot give way. As the years increase, the beauty will increase. Into its outward aspect will melt certain luminous qualities of the spirit. There will come the mirth of children who here have been baptized; the happiness of the man and the woman who here have been married; the yearning of the aspiring venturer, who here has found his vocation; the sorrow of the mourner, who here has rested in God's comfort; and finally the peace of the triumphant soul, conscious of the approach of the mystery called death, who here has seen the very gates of heaven unfold before him. All these will enhance, with their quivering experience, the intangible and infinite beauty of which the outward aspect of this chapel is the priceless shell.

Happy are the families who shall today form associations with this place of glorious beauty. They may confidently dream that their descendants shall worship here, from generation to generation; and, however far they roam, however distant their permanent homes may be, their feet shall tread again and again upon this pavement, and they shall worship in the beauty of holiness.

And may the stranger who, having come from far, pauses for one glance within the door, feel that this chapel is also his. May he come again, whenever he is moved to come, either to look about upon the beauty or to pray, until the beauty becomes his own—just as the Frenchman on his journey pauses once more to see the Church of Brou.

In the third place, may those who enter these gates be convinced that beauty belongs to God. The Puritan inheritance is a sturdy inheritance, making for the strength and integrity of a people. I would not say one word which could in any way diminish our gratitude for what the brave Puritan spirit has given us. But the Puritan was apt to banish beauty to the realm of paganism. He was afraid of it. He believed in goodness as an end in itself. Moreover, he was willing to die for what he believed the truth: truth too, for him, was an end in itself. But he did not recognize beauty as an end in itself: those who made much of the joy and beauty of life were as heretics to the Puritan.

This chapel must help the people who learn to love it that beauty is not most at home in secular surroundings, but is absolutely at home in a house dedicated to God. Beauty is a sacred thing.

Children understand this. A child stood in a village street after a summer shower. The sun had come out in its afternoon splendor, and made strange lights in the pools that lay along the road. The child looked down the street, and seeing the reflections in the shimmering water, clasped his hands and said, "Thank you, God, for the beautiful light." He knew that all beauty belongs to God.

So may this chapel teach those beyond childhood—who perhaps have forgotten—that the beauty of the world is the beauty of holiness and is entirely God's.

The final gift which I trust this chapel may have for those who come and go through yonder door is that they may be led, through its beauty, to Christ. God's beauty is expressed in Nature and in the genius of man. But, most of all, is it revealed in the life and character of Christ. Therefore everything of lofty beauty in the world must, if given its full chance, lead ultimately to Him. For He is, in Himself, the very Beauty of Holiness.

It is quite easy, as we study the life of Our Saviour, to discover how He absorbed all the beauty of His surroundings. The Parables show how, while He was yet a boy of Nazareth, He must have regarded the changing seasons. It is legitimate to imagine how He climbed the hills beyond the village and looked down over the landscape. Evidently He was not thinking of old battles, which were fought long before, on the plains which He could see—for He did not later speak of them, so far as we can tell. But He must have seen the sower sowing his seed, the fields white unto harvest, the loving shepherd and his picturesque flock, the trees and the grass and the flowers and the birds—for all of these He spoke in words which have come down to us. He evidently liked to watch graceful and beautiful children at their games. For He told how they would pipe and dance as at a festival, and then droop into a melancholy dirge. They ran to Him and clung to Him, and He said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, . . . for of such is the Kingdom of God." In His life as a Wandering Teacher, I think no one so exulted as He in the changes of the light on the Sea of Galilee, on the surrounding hills, and on the snow which crested Tabor and Hermon. It is recorded that often, when He would pray, He withdrew into a mountain. He climbed the Mount of Transfiguration at evening, and on its summit He entered into the beatific vision.

In Christ's time, men with hard rules tried to limit approval to moral quality. The Lord Jesus found beauty in lives which His countrymen had condemned, and, through the beauty of their tenderness and love, He gave to these incorrect lives moral rectitude, and they became thenceforth as the stars, to shine for ever and ever—because their goodness was translucent with truth, and then transfigured by beauty.

The Church has often called people saints who have only goodness, a strict and sour correctness of life, or who, in an equal sternness, have grimly and stubbornly died for the truth. High honor to such souls! But, if this is all we can say of them, they are not saints. The saints of Christ not only have the integrity of goodness, and the willingness to die for the truth, but their faces shine with the glory which is within, which can flash through irregular features and put upon them the divine light—such light as shone upon the face of Moses when he came down from the Mount, such light as Saul of Tarsus saw upon the face of Stephen, when the angry stones of his persecutors did him to death.

So may this chapel lead us to that beauty which is within the depths of life, which we see in the distant view at the setting of the sun, which is enthroned in the majesty of Christ, and thereby is supreme in the heart of God. May this chapel lead men and women—and little children too—into the centre of God's Being, where they shall see face to face the King in His Beauty, and know in all completeness for ever the beauty of holiness.

HOW A DREAM CAME TRUE

By the Reverend Louis Tucker, D. D.

Once upon a time there was a group of men who had a dream come true. It is very disconcerting to have a dream come true, because it picks you up and takes you with it, and makes of you an instrument and a force in higher hands; but it is exciting.

There is a Church whose laity is growing so much faster than its priesthood that it lacks boys to man the little congregations and open up new work. There are men by the hundreds who would serve, but it costs seven years of life and five thousand dollars in money to get ready, and then, in the small congregations, most of what is learned is useless. God thinks in deeds, and His finger touched the souls of certain of His children, and there were little bishops who changed the law, and thereby grew to be great Bishops, for vision had come to them; and more men dreamed.

Having been in touch with these things from almost the beginning, it was given to the writer this summer to watch the dream come true. It came true in steel and concrete, and in men. He went and walked over the piles of broken stone, and stamped on the concrete, and lifted a rod of steel. It was just as solid as other steel and yet it was part of a dream. The concrete was a dream, too, a dream to house fifty men, with ninety waiting for a chance, and thirty trained and gone already. He went out alone and sat on a barrel and looked at it all, after moonrise, and a mocking-bird woke in an oak-tree over the oratory, and said "Chuck-chuck—cheerio!" and then sang the Doxology in mocking-bird-ese.

Fire cannot burn the great new building. Not even an earthquake, if Japan is right, can shake it down. THAT dream is solid. There is a farm, too, that raises most of the food. It was queer, the next day, to walk over acre after acre, and eat vision-strawberries and dream-tomatoes, and lecture to thirty students on the Life of Christ. They work in classes and on the farm, and live around in rented rooms, where they can, until the new building is ready. The rooms are inspected. I have an idea that a certain Carpenter of Nazareth looks in at times.

There was a fat little rector and a thin little missionary at the clerical meetings at Sewanee. They looked just like anybody else, except, perhaps, a shade neater and quieter. They were doing successful work, each in his own country field, and one of them had a parish automobile up with him, that could climb mountains like a cat. They were quite practical and successful and real, and just like other clergy. Yet they, too, were part of a dream—they, and thirty more elsewhere like them, who were laymen three years ago, with their present growing flocks then diminishing and unshepherded. The writer slapped one of them on the back to see if he were quite solid. He did not understand in the least, but he laughed, and told about baptisms and marriages and confirmations and congregations growing, and men under him who served the Lord.

And so the writer searched out the first dreamer—under God—and asked questions. Only thirty thousand dollars needed to finish the building; and an endowment started which pays a thousand a year; all graduates doing well, and a manifest blessing of harmony on the work; but everything cluttered, hammered, festooned with too much success; applications for entrance past all power to handle or support them, and more behind.

And so, to another and a greater dream—the vast needs of the Church; a Ford-car, circuit-riding missionary system that shall cover the whole nation; and a DuBose Memorial in every Province, to furnish the men who shall lead the forgotten and half-heathen districts of America to God.

How the Idols Stopped the Flood

By the Reverend C. H. Horner.

This is a funny and strange old country, and the most puzzling part of it all, is Hunan. It is odd that one of the most backward of China's provinces should be the most progressive and at the same time the most conservative. Will any one of the West ever fully plumb these Oriental minds and understand the motives which drives them to all sorts of unreasonable things? It makes little difference how violently logic pulls at their sleeves, bidding them to reason, they will not listen, for when they are moved, they move and nothing can stay them.

Recently two famous idols were brought to Changsha from a distance to turn back a flood. They came into the city unseen and were placed in a little forgotten temple along the river. A short time after their arrival the water left the city. For four days they sat in the mud, all but forgotten. And then the villagers came to the city to take back their gods, and then the city awoke. Those two gods of the mountains instantly grew very precious and the city rose to do them honor before they were replaced amid the dust and cobwebs of their shrines. These idols are mummified bodies of two men who lived over a thousand years ago and are purely of local fame.

"Were they not Hunan men, and did they not turn back the water and stop the flood?" asked the priests. And the people, of a hundred names, answered, "Yes."

So all the historical characters of China's long past were called to do them honor. For nearly three hours a pageant, splendid in color and crude in conception, passed in front of the idols. The air was rent with fire-crackers. The blare of the conch, the roll of the drum, and the whine of ancient instruments, made the day hideous. There were dragons that went rolling down the street, some of them a hundred feet long, and of every color of the rainbow. Great smoking sticks of incense, some of them a foot thick, made the air heavy and stupefying. Old and ancient weapons of a symbolic character protected the idols from those who did not come in a spirit of reverence. Thousands of men and women were carrying bronze burners in which incense was burning. Thousands of coolies carried banners on which were characters beseeching the gods for blessings of happiness and wealth. Embroidered umbrellas, of red and yellow and green, and large enough to protect a king, covered ancestral tablets. Strange and forgotten symbols of philosophy and religion were rediscovered to add to the feeling of weirdness. Highly decorated women and warriors of ten centuries ago mingled in the jam with the coolies in rags. The robes of the priests, in yellow and brown, were gorgeous with Oriental lavishness, and you forgot the ignorant priest under his covering of prodigal extravagance. Great embroidered dragons, on banners of heavy blue silk, floated over these representatives of Buddha. With eyes fixed in front of them, or when reading their sutras, they looked for once as if they were really trying to believe their doctrine of the "emptiness of all things."

But the din of it all was deafening. No matter what else was carried, every one had a split bamboo, and the whak, whak, of bamboo on bamboo, added to the clamor.

I have not seen so much color since I have been in China and was thoroughly enjoying it from the upper window of the gate house. But when I introduced the camera the whole pageant turned on me. I had only gotten four pictures, when I was discovered with a camera, and immediately the procession became a mob, and even the blessed idols were forgotten in their anger for the foreigner who dared to take their pictures. Part of the procession that had passed turned back and the oncoming ones rushed up. The Chinese clergy had presence of mind enough to close the gate and keep out the mob. I did not remain to discuss it with them, but went out the back gate of the compound and took my camera home. Until the city cools off it is going to remain locked in my desk drawer.

I thought that these people had gotten over their superstition about photography and that everybody in Changsha had been photographed. But evidently not, for here was a great mass of people that we know nothing about, and who represent the old conservation of ancient China. A foreign doctor at the Yale Mission was attacked for taking pictures and battered up, before the police could come to his rescue and escort him home. The Japanese photographer was almost mobbed for taking pictures. And so the story goes.

A Christian doctor stood up before a great mass of people and told them that what they were doing would set the progress of the province back for ten years. As a Chinese he "got away with it," but a foreigner never would have escaped.

In all this enthusiasm there is a prophecy of the future, when this same single-heartedness will be transferred to the Church, and when these people will be better Christians for having first been good Buddhists. Next to Kuantung, there is no place in the world where Buddhism is held in more respect than in Hunan. But when they understand; when they see what a pale and colorless thing it is when compared to Christianity, the history of things will be different.

Making Europe Solvent

By the Reverend James I. Vance.

(This article, by one of America's foremost preachers, is of especial timeliness because of the author's extensive experience in Europe during the past summer. He has just returned to this country, and the following is his first public statement concerning his impressions of the situation in European Protestantism.)

The Dawes plan for refinancing Europe has been approved by the Powers and is on the way. It shows that America could not quit with the war. There was more than an army needed. Nations must be made solvent, if trade is to prosper. Those who study the question of Europe's need at close range, and with an analysis that seeks to discover the forces which are really constructive in nation building, must be convinced that it is not enough to make and keep a country financially solvent. Moral solvency is a bigger thing.

Here religion functions. Integrity, either individual or national, is not the result of fat bank credit. It is rather the cause of such credit. A nation's credit determines the value of its currency; and the credit of a nation, like that of an individual, depends on faith in its integrity even more than on faith in its ability to pay.

America cannot, therefore, afford to be unconcerned about religious conditions in Europe. We must not stop with the Dawes plan. The statesmanship that does is blind to what is best in civilization, and what is also at the bottom of America's credit. The basis of America's credit is not merely that we own half the gold in the world and are able to make our paper good. It is rather that we can be trusted. If the day comes when we cannot be trusted, our gold will canker.

There is no bigger, no more pressing matter before us, in connection with helping Europe, than this which has to do with the religious life of its people. The Christian Churches of Europe must be made solvent. They must be helped to their feet, so that they can function as a virile force for character building. They must be saved in order that they may save; in order that they may minister to the spiritual needs of the people. These needs are always deepest. Our religious moods are our profoundest. What men worship determines the kind of men they become and the sort of world they build.

Protestantism in Europe is on the brink of bankruptcy. Is it worth saving? What say the Protestant Churches of America? Is protestantism worth saving in America? If it is worth saving in America, it is not worth less in Europe. Indeed the situation is far more acute in Europe, for the need of that which only the Gospel can supply is more desperate.

I am not claiming that the people of America are innately any better than the people of Europe. I do not think we are. I should hate to be understood as assuming a self-righteous attitude in this matter. If America had been as hard hit by the war as Europe, I wonder where our Churches would be. And with our religious institutions on the brink of bankruptcy, I wonder where we would be.

We have learned that we cannot stay out of world-life; that we cannot herd by ourselves. So cheap a thing as money has told us that. So fine a thing as religion says it too. We must not leave the Churches of Europe in the lurch. The appeal for Protestant relief in Europe, with the special emphasis on Reformation Sunday (October 26 or November 2) which I am happy to hear is to be widely observed this year, should meet with a generous response from all who want a safe and solvent world.

"A MISSION FIELD AT HOME."

Mr. Editor:

I have just read with keen interest and appreciation the editorial, "A Mission Field At Home," in the Southern Churchman of September 20. Being in touch with the college work, which the Church is trying to do, I want most heartily to commend this editorial. You have, in my judgment, put your finger on one of the most important spots in our life today and of tomorrow.

Gathered in our universities and colleges are the men and women who are to be the leaders in all branches of our life. They are a splendid host and they are being trained, highly trained, for the several places toward which they are looking. But, as you have pointed out, along with the technical training there must go that spirit which will constantly be on the alert to find the value and meaning of all life, and a hearty desire on the part of the one being trained for an ever enlarging sense of moral values.

The Church has been far behind in this. It is well within the memory of this generation, that the Church really began, in a systematic way, to face this problem of meeting the college and university men and women on their own grounds and interpreting Christianity to them in terms of every day living. But we are yet following afar off.

Just to illustrate this, in the large majority of cases, some of which you cite, the Church is asking her representatives to do a most difficult piece of work and all the equipment that is supplied is "good wishes." While that may help, yet it doesn't afford a meeting place for college men, nor does it supply an adequate and dignified physical symbol of the Church's life.

Here at the University of Virginia the work has been established for fifteen years, but we are still using the little wooden church covered with tar paper that was built by Dr. Hugh Melhany in thirteen days, so I am told. It is true that we do have under construction a parish house which will be of inestimable value in our work, but the need of a church building is imperative. Perhaps some one will ask why the parish house is being built now. Why doesn't the money go toward the church? The answer is simple—by placing a heavy mortgage the parish house can be built, but the cost of the church will be more than treble the amount of money we had to spend and we could not borrow the sum necessary.

In this simple, yet splendid setting, amidst these halls set apart for what we call "secular" studies, there is the little frame shack. Does it stand here representing our conception of the place and dignity of our religion? The buildings which Thomas Jefferson left to Virginia are without rival and the Church should have here, adjacent to these University buildings, a physical symbol representative of her high part in human affairs, a symbol that will challenge, not only the eye, but the heart as well.

Another University year has begun and, after the first of the coming year, the Diocese will have begun in a systematic way, to render aid in the work of construction, but, at the present rate, it will take years to accumulate enough even to begin. Meantime, each year some two thousand men and women are passing this way, are going out into the world with a picture of the stately University buildings and along with that picture, one of the shabby little church.

Here, Mr. Editor, is an opportunity for some one or for many, to do a piece of real Christian missionary work. Unless the Church express herself as she should to those who are so soon to be moulders of opinion along all lines, how can we expect the Church to prosper and enter into her right heritage?

As you have pointed out, this is not the problem of any one locality, but is a sad condition which prevails throughout a goodly part of our country. Parish churches spend large sums to make their own houses of worship beautiful and useful and this is to their credit. They should do it. But then the sons and daughters of these well-equipped parishes go to the colleges and universities in the days when their opinions are being formed and their judgments of value are being set and see what represents the whole Church in such centers. And then we have the temerity to ask why so many of those who have gone to college and university, turn their backs on the Church. With such a glaring contrast between the buildings devoted to what we call "secular" education and the buildings which are devoted to the worship of God, it seems to me, Mr. Editor, we should ask, Why do so many take an interest in the Church in the face of this deplorable condition?

Thank you for your editorial. I am sure that every one trying to carry the message of the Church in college and university communities will join with me in saying this.

THE MISSIONARY DISTRICT OF NEVADA.

Mr. Editor:

The coming session of the House of Bishops will have among its other tasks, the one of filling the vacancy caused by the death of the late Bishop Hunting of Nevada. The writer would like to express his conviction that certain additions to the territory to be administered by the new Bishop would be desirable.

A glance at the map will show that certain parts of the Diocese of Sacramento lie to the east of the Sierra Nevadas in California, and adjacent to Northwestern Nevada. The character of the country included in this strip of California is more closely similar to the adjacent territory in Nevada, in climatic conditions, in the nature of its industries, in the density (or rather, sparseness) of its population, and the retention by its people, of much of the "atmosphere" and manner of living of the old frontier; than it is to California. Besides this, there is the argument of convenience of access by the Bishop. From Reno, the see city of Nevada, this strip of California territory is much more easily and quickly reached than it is from Sacramento. And the Bishop of the latter diocese to reach it must either travel over into Nevada (to Reno) first, and then on to the points in his diocese which he wishes to visit; or else he must nearly do so, traveling by train for a number of miles close to the Nevada line.

These conditions are caused by the position of the "high Sierras," which rear a great natural barrier near the eastern border of California, which separates the Sacramento Valley from the Inter-Mountain country, which includes Nevada and the part of California contiguous to it, and produces so great a difference climatically, industrially and otherwise, as well as the important item of convenience of access.

Identically the same line of argument would apply with equal force as to the strip of the Missionary District of San Joaquin which lies east of the Sierra Nevadas. Situated similarly to the strip of the Diocese of Sacramento, just referred to, and being really a southern continuation of it, it is separated from the San Joaquin Valley by the great natural barrier of "high Sierras," separating its people and its country from that section, climatically, industrially and otherwise. The argument of convenience of access by the Bishop applies here, with perhaps even greater force. In traveling from Fresno by rail, to any point in this strip, the Bishop either must pass through Reno, going for many miles through Nevada, or must go a long circuitous way to the south. He may avoid these alternatives only by traveling directly east, over difficult roads, through high mountain passes, which are impassable, by reason of being snow-bound, through many months of the year.

The writer ministered for some years in Nevada, as a priest, and came to know and love its people and its country. He believes that the natural boundary established by the "high Sierras," makes a better one than the arbitrary one of an imaginary line surveyed by theodolite and compass. He knows something of the solidarity of feeling of the people of the Inter-Mountain country, which stretches from the Sierra Nevadas eastward; and believes that there is a community of interest among them that would justify throwing them into common lot under one Bishop; besides relieving the Bishops of Sacramento and San Joaquin of some of their jurisdiction which must be at times, at least, geographically inconvenient.

It is a satisfaction to note that the proposal to add Nevada to Utah seems to have abated. To place so vast a territory as Utah and Nevada under one Bishop would impose upon him too heavy a burden; the distances to be traveled by the Bishop being too great, and the people too scattered. But the proposal above set out would seem to give a territory more compact, as well as more closely bound together by route of travel, and thus more easily administered.

Christianity and the Community

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

CONSTRUCTIVE COOPERATION.

We feel that bringing to the attention of our readers anything that produces harmony between capital and labor, that smoothes out the differences between employer and employee, is bringing Christianity into the Community.

For this reason we quote this week from The Readers Digest the condensed account of the plan now in operation on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, whereby its shopmen are working in cheerful harmony with the management for greater efficiency and industrial peace.

"The basic anti-union argument of employers is that by union rules, and a 'make-work' philosophy, union labor is against production. The union shopmen on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad have been engaged for the past year in repudiating this charge, not by argument, but by action. At a time when railroaders, statesmen, and the general public are about ready to despair of the railroad labor problem, the 'B. and O. plan' makes interesting and hopeful reading.

"The plan is simple, but it is a definite achievement in industrial statesmanship. William H. Johnston, President of the International Association of Machinists, proposed it, and with the whole-hearted collaboration of Daniel Willard, President of the B. and O., it became a living reality. Its main points are these:

"The union enters into a definite agreement with the employer to take steps which shall improve service and economy, and increase production. To do this, engineering methods are worked out by joint committees of management and men. (Not worked out in advance and applied by authority and instruction.) The union even does the hiring of the engineer. Of course the benefits of such a scheme are mutual, and the men have by contractual agreement between the unions and the employer an assurance that any benefits to the railroad resulting from the plan will be fairly shared with them. This is the heart and substance of the plan. The employer recognizes that the union is an essential part of industry; the union agrees to cooperate with the employer toward an efficiency which shall be of mutual advantage to both.

"Like any trade-unionist, Johnston believed that men on the job aren't happy without certain elementary standards of wages, hours, etc., such as form the groundwork of union demands. He believed, like any unionist, that the strike is often the only way to gain these. But he felt that such standards should be the beginning, not the end, of union policy. They ought to be supplemented after this elementary status was gained by a more constructive attitude. Therefore, he proposed that some progressive employer should, on the basis of a full recognition of unions and their standards, make an agreement with them for cooperation to improve service and economy. The unions are interested in the agreement, first because it definitely establishes their status as a recognized part of the administration of industry, and, second, because it makes possible improvements in their own condition which can scarcely be gained through controversy. The employer is interested in it, because the organized employees bring their collective intelligence and power to bear on improved methods of operation rather than merely on grievances.

"Here is the story of how the plan grew. It was discussed with several broad-minded railroad executives before the shop strike of 1922, but the intervention of the strike prevented its actual trial until the spring of 1923. The first experiment in putting it into operation at a local shop was not attempted until it had been fully discussed at union meetings and had received a vote of confidence from the men who would have to control it. Then regular bi-weekly meetings on improved shop practice were installed between the Federated Shop Committee of the six local craft unions—each of which had a fairly well-defined function in the shops—and representatives of the local management. Consideration of grievances was excluded from these meetings. Grievances were taken up in the usual way whenever they arose.

The joint committee soon discovered a real mutuality of interest. The men were interested in a more considerate attitude on the part of certain foremen, in better drinking and washing facilities, in better means of transporting material from one part of the shop to another, in better supply and condition of tools, in the elimination of a hundred and one obstacles in the smooth performance of their work. They were also, of course, interested in greater steadiness of work. The management was interested in better quality of work, fewer delays, lower unit cost, more complete use of plant and equipment, smoother operation, reduction of tardiness and absenteeism, reduction of labor turnover. It did not take long to see that what the men wanted was in most cases just a way of gaining what the management wanted—and vice versa.

"Collective ingenuity was applied to bring about the common ends. Improvements of plant facilities were made. Personal attitudes on the part of a few on both sides were altered. Tools were gone over and put in good condition; deficiencies were supplied; a systematic management of the tool room installed; grinding standards adopted. An employment bureau was founded, under the charge of experienced craftsmen who applied rigorous tests to the skill of applicants, and after their employment instructed them in the cooperative routine of the shop. Delay and progress charts, readily understandable by all, were displayed.

"The result of these and many other detailed measures, developed gradually with the understanding of all and watched over week by week, was seen in many ways. Quality of work was markedly improved; delays were reduced; unit costs were lowered; more work was assigned to the shop; employment became larger and more steady—hence wage incomes increased. And, more important than any of these measurable achievements, the feeling tone of the workers was changed. They saw the plant and its job as a whole in which each had an essential part. They understood the progress being made, and their responsibility for it. They became informed, eager participants—the job was not merely a dull routine.

"Now, the same process is going on in every shop point on the system. The unions spread the news of the development to their various units; their local committees furnished a ready-made machinery to put it in operation. In the first meetings all over the line an average of eight or nine subjects were taken up by the joint committees; in the same week the committee of the shop where the plan was first installed considered over eighty matters. The national unions have succeeded in convincing the railroad management of the importance of long-time stabilization of shop work and employment, and measures to effect such stabilization are now under consideration.

"After all, it has been found that the workers and the masters have much in common. That is one of the main reasons the plan has triumphed. The plan improves the processes of the job itself. Few active and intelligent men can work in an environment where they have little voice in management without encountering obstacles in equipment or routine which dishearten and discourage. Such obstacles are twice as annoying to the men on the job as they can be to any supervisory officer. The waste inherent in them is galling to any good workman. A real chance to deal with such matters at the place of work will outweigh all the theoretical abstractions in Christendom.

The Churches Interested in the War Zone in China

According to Press Dispatches, Protestant Christian Churches of America have millions of dollars invested in church educational and hospital property, and maintain scores of American missionaries and hundreds of native workers in and about Shanghai, the centre of the present internal disturbance in China.

The civil war there has riveted attention in missionary circles at home on these institutions. Virtually all the board has cabled from their home office, most of which are in New York, to the heads of their mission stations there, inquiring as to the safety of the missionaries, giving instructions not to curtail expenses when it came to the protection of the missionaries, and asking what help can be supplied from this end.

Among the denominations which do extensive missionary work in and near Shanghai are the Presbyterian, the Episcopal, the Methodist and the Baptist. The oldest Chinese mission of the Presbyterian Board is in Central China, which includes Shanghai. The City of Ningpo was one of the treaty ports opened in 1842. Two years later, as soon as it was possible for missionaries to enter China, the Board opened a station at Ningpo, and here a church was organized in 1845. Among the founders of this station were some of China's most distinguished missionaries.

In 1850 missionaries transferred from the Ningpo station began their labors in Shanghai. In 1859 the first convert was baptized, and a native church was organized in 1860.

In Shanghai today there are under the Presbyterian Board nine churches and groups, six out-stations, twenty-one Sunday Schools and one hospital. There are thirty-eight American missionaries and eighty-nine native workers. There are 1,173 communicants and 1,400 pupils in the Sunday Schools.

The work includes the South Gate Church, the North Gate Church, seven other churches and groups, twelve Sunday Schools, the Newberry Bible School, two kindergartens, the Lowery Institute for Boys, the Mary Farnham School for Girls, eight other schools, the Nantao Institute for Men and Women, county clinics and baby welfare centres.

The Presbyterian Church also is engaged in union work with the associated mission treasurers, the Mission Building Bureau, the National Christian Council, the China Educational Association and the Christian Literature Society. A missions building is on a central site facing the beautiful grounds of the British Consulate. It houses many of these agencies, coordinating their work in an effective way.

The missionary district of Shanghai supported by the Protestant Episcopal Church of America includes that part of China lying within the Province of Kiangsu. It has an area of 44,500 square miles and a population estimated at 38,000,000. Its present Bishop is the Right Rev. Frederick Rogers Graves, who is one of the most honored members of the American House of Bishops. There are fifty-two mission stations. The appropriation made for their support by the National Council of the Episcopal Church in 1922 was $184,419. There are seventy American and twenty-one Chinese priests, two American and six Chinese priests, two American and six Chinese deacons, three Chinese candidates for holy orders. There are eight American and sixteen Chinese physicians, fourteen American and 163 Chinese teachers.

The last issued report of the National Council, which is for 1922, gives the missionaries at Jessfield, of the Shanghai District, as follows: the Rev. Dr. F. L. Hawks Pott, the Rev. Dr. J. W. Nichols, the Rev. W. P. Roberts, the Rev. M. H. Throop, the Rev. L. W. Faecett, Dr. C. S. F. Lincoln, M. P. Walker, J. A. Ely, H. F. MacNair, C. F. Remer, J. R. Norton, D. Roberts, W. H. Taylor, W. M. Porterfield, G. S. Bresham, E. H. King, E. N. Tucker, M. E. Votaw, P. B. Sullivan.

The Misses M. S. Mitchell, E. W. Graves, L. J. Graves, C. Fullerton, M. H. Bailey, G. L. Cooper, R. H. Pumphrey, O. H. Pott, M. S. Norton, J. L. Hutchison, E. L. Houghton, F. C. Sullivan, F. G. Hays and H. F. MacNair.

St. John's University and St. Mary's Hall are two of the educational institutions in this district. St. John's has a Science Hall which was made possible by a gift of the China Medical Board. A few years ago a group of buildings was added and they are known as the New St. Mary's Hall.

The Methodist Church has long maintained an Episcopal residence in China. For some years past the head of it has been Bishop L. J. Birney, who was one of the noted figures at the Quadrennial General Methodist Conference last May in Springfield, Mass. There is a union publishing house, a union mission book company and a union school for the missionaries' children in Shanghai, all maintained by the different branches of the Methodist Church.

At Nanking, at the extreme end of the disturbed section, there is a great Methodist University, and under the auspices of the University is a large hospital.

The American Baptists maintain a college in Shanghai and two years ago this became coeducational. Heretofore it had been only for young men. In 1922 this college had 565 pupils and a faculty of fifty.

The Baptists are also cooperating in the Department of Agriculture and Missionary Training at the University of Nanking.

The Shanghai Baptist College, which includes a theological seminary, is supported jointly by Northern and Southern Baptists and is said to rank with the first three of the sixteen missionary colleges in China. Closely allied with it is the Yangtzepoo social settlement, located in the centre of the industrial region and considered the most effective Christian social settlement in China. The expenses are met every year by the community.

The Margaret Williamson Hospital, a union institution, is the largest for women in China, and in connection with it are maintained a nurses' training school and a school for public health workers. The North Shanghai Baptist Church is serving particularly the college students in Shanghai. The general treasury of the three Baptist missions in China and the office of the secretary of the East China Mission are located in Shanghai, and the Baptists have two churches there.

There are also in Shanghai the administrative headquarters of a large number of missions as well as of interdenominational organizations serving the whole Christian constituency in China.

A Record and a Hope

No movement in the Episcopal Church has developed more interestingly than the United Thank Offering of the Woman's Auxiliary.

In 1889: One woman missionary supported and one mission church in Alaska built.

In 1922: Nearly two hundred women missionaries supported and churches and schools in all parts of the mission field.

One must search far to find a parallel to this record. What is the history of an endeavor so striking in its growth and so far reaching in its influence?

On October 11, 1883, in the Church of the Epiphany, Philadelphia, the Holy Communion was administered for the first time to the women of the Auxiliary gathered as a representative body. At the service and at the meeting which followed the sum of $371.21 was collected, which was divided between the foreign and domestic fields.

The next Triennial was held in the year 1886, and at the service preceding the Woman's Auxiliary meeting the offering was $82.71, which went to the Bishop of Florida for work among the colored people of that diocese. These sums were disappointingly small, and such a record had its lesson for the Auxiliary. Some of the women had been set to thinking with the result that shortly before the time of the next Triennial a suggestion was made which resulted in the establishment of the United Thank Offering.

A member of the Auxiliary, Mrs. Soule, then of the Diocese of Pittsburgh, in a letter to Miss Emery made the suggestion that at the coming meeting of the women an offering by all for some one purpose be made. To this was added the request that the secretary should select an object and that an account of the plan be published in The Spirit of Missions at least one month before the meeting—a sharp contrast to our present day methods!

Miss Emery's suggestion was that whatever sum should be offered at the Triennial service should be divided equally between the domestic and foreign fields; a church building with furnishings for Anvik, Alaska, and the outfit, traveling expenses and a year's salary for a new missionary teacher needed in Japan were proposed, each object requiring about one thousand dollars.

The first United Thank Offering was, therefore, with only a month's preparation, presented at the Triennial service held in the Church of the Holy Communion, New York, on October 3, 1889. The result was looked for with great eagerness and it was with very real disappointment that the sum was found to be only four hundred dollars—one thousand six hundred dollars less than desired.

One member of the Auxiliary came to the rescue, giving the thousand dollars needed for the church building at Anvik, and the remaining six hundred dollars was contributed, which made possible the sending of the first United Thank Offering missionary.

As the years passed, interest in the new offering grew. Throughout the Auxiliary there developed the feeling that a service of thanksgiving could not be complete without an offering of thankfulness. The system with which we are familiar has been the result, until now there is hardly a diocese or missionary district without its United Thank Offering Custodian, while throughout the Church, in the city parish as in that of the rural community, in mission stations in the foreign field and at home, and among isolated Church-women far from the privileges of parish life, the little blue boxes have a place.

This offering most truly deserves the term United. More than one hundred dioceses and missionary districts have a share in it. The Woman's Missionary Band in China and the Woman's Auxiliary in Japan give faithfully and generously. The women in Alaska make bags and moccasins for sale. The Indian women on the reservations in South Dakota sell lace and bead work, while the contents of the little blue boxes are sent from farms in Maine, from ranches in the West, from rural parishes and from those in the great cities; from American Church-women living in Europe, from Brazil, from Mexico, from the Philippines, and from New York's East Side. Is it any wonder that the record of such consecrated and united effort should be a notable one?

So much for the past—what of the future?

In the American Church there are somewhat more than five hundred thousand women communicants. To far the greater number, the United Thank Offering is unknown. If each one of these women were to take a United Thank Offering Box and were to give even as little as one cent a day, in one year the Offering would amount to the sum of $1,825,000 and at the end of three years our Triennial Offering would be $5,475,000! The thought of it kindles one's imagination. So great an Offering would open many doors of opportunity, doors now closed, when, if the women of the Church would have it so, they might swing wide.

The Great Commission

CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP.

A course of study of Christian Stewardship has been offered by the Field Department of the Church Schools. The course culminates in an essay contest and the whole project is planned so as to influence the adults as well as the children of the Church.

Material is provided for brief instruction in the Church Schools on four Sundays beginning with October 12. The instruction consists mainly of stories intended to reveal the fundamental principles underlying stewardship. It is proposed that on Sunday, November 9, all the children of twelve years and upward, divided into two groups, shall be required to write something on the subject, though very brief, to show what they have learned from the instruction. These papers will be turned over to a committee and the writers whose papers show the most promise will be urged to enlarge their papers into essays. The best of the essays will be read on a public occasion and prizes awarded.

Following the parish contest there will be a diocesan contest in which all the prize winners in the parishes will compete, and prizes will be awarded at some public service. This in turn will be followed by a national contest in which the prize winners in the dioceses will compete and it is planned that the winning essays in the national contest shall be presented before the General Convention at New Orleans. Every effort will be made to secure as much publicity as possible for the winning essays in parish, diocese and nation.

Full information concerning the course of study and the essay contest can be secured from the Field Department at the Church Missions House.

CHURCH ACTIVITIES IN TOKYO.

Bishop Motoda, writing to the Department of Missions, expresses the gratitude of the Diocese of Tokyo for the generous help that has come in the past from the Church in the United States. He is laying plans to aid all of the present churches in the diocese to become self-supporting within the next few years. Every church in the diocese made an offering for the Japan Reconstruction Fund on May 25. All of the congregations are now supplied with barrack churches. These are necessarily temporary in character and it is most important that permanent buildings replace them as soon as possible.

Bishop Motoda recently ordained the Rev. T. Takase and the Rev. H. Nose to the priesthood, and Mr. S. Yamaguchi and Mr. Y. Yumita to the Diaconate.

"I have opened two mission stations," he says, "in the suburbs, and expect to open two more soon. Some of them are having services in tents, and others in private houses owned by Christians. I am trying to make them self-supporting from the beginning. It has been my long wish to do something in the suburbs of Tokyo. I now feel thankful for being able to do this even in a small way."

PROGRESS AT ST. FAITH'S SCHOOL, YANGCHOW.

Bishop Graves writes that he is greatly gratified by the progress made at the St. Faith's School, Yangchow, where the first class of students was recently graduated.

"It has been a long fight," he says, "to get the conservative people in Yangchow to take to the school, but they are manifestly doing so now and the ladies who are doing the teaching are doing very thorough work indeed. Incidentally the policy of moving the school from Mahan School compound has been justified by the results. The real cause of the success is the ability and energy of Miss Bremer. While she is in charge the Church has a thoroughly sound institution and she is ably seconded by the other ladies.

"Marriage has worked havoc in the ranks of our women workers. In this way, we have lost Miss Stephanie Bradford, Miss Anne Piper and Miss Katharine Deahl. Fortunately all have married within the Mission, but do not forget that we shall need trained workers to fill their places."

Since the first of April Bishop Graves has confirmed three hundred and forty-six people in the Missionary District of Shanghai.

FAMOUS SHIPS.

Famous Ships in American History was the subject of an American Book Company calendar a few years ago. It might be amusing and profitable to make a list of Famous Ships in the Bible, both Old and New Testaments, Famous Ships in Church History, in "Missions." This could include small boats. How many boats, for example, are mentioned in the Gospel? And, to name only a few, there could be fitted into their proper lists the Ark, the ship that took Jonah from Tarsus, the ship that wrecked a later missionary, at Miletus—and the Golden Hind, the Morning Star, the Pelican. Does any one know the name of the ship that brought Chaplain Robert Hunt to Jamestown in 1607, the ships that took our first missionaries to three continents, the ship that brought Bishop Seabury, our first Bishop, back to us?

THE BISHOP OF LONDON ON RELIGIOUS KNOWLEDGE FOR TEACHERS.

The Bishop of London writes in his diocesan paper about religious education for children and young people, and the need of better provision for it, saying, ". . . Nor can we ignore the danger of 'drifting into secular education by a side wind' through the continued failure of the state to provide those who are training for the teaching profession with opportunities of acquiring religious knowledge. There are many vital issues of this nature concerning which the conscience of the nation needs to be awakened. The public assumes that all is well, and we know that much is amiss. The nation, we believe, desires a religious basis for all its public education; it is for us to see that such desire becomes articulate. This duty of educating public opinion is no less urgent than that of maintaining our schools, and there is no discrepancy between the two; for fidelity to our trust as Churchmen is quite compatible with our responsibility as citizens toward those institutions which are not under our immediate control."

MISSION HOUSE AT FORT YUKON DESTROYED BY FIRE.

A missionary family of fourteen, including nine orphans, were rendered homeless in the dead of night at Fort Yukon, Alaska, last Wednesday, when the Mission House connected with the Episcopal Hospital at Fort Yukon was completely destroyed by fire, according to a dispatch received at the Episcopal Mission House, 281 Fourth Avenue, September 25. Dr. Crafton Burke, Superintendent of the Hospital, and his wife, escaped in the clothing they had on. All supplies and perishable food and clothing for the winter were burned, and the last boat out of Fort Yukon for the winter was leaving as the dispatch was filed. No lives were lost and the hospital escaped damage.

Dr. Burke's dispatch says: "Am distressed to have to report that mission dwelling with all supplies and perishable food and clothing for the winter burned last night, total loss, leaving family of fourteen homeless, temporarily housed at school. Can send few children home, but must be responsible for nine orphans unable physically adopt native life. Mrs. B and I got out only with clothing we had on. Have written details last boat today."

The mission house was only recently completed. The orphans referred to in the dispatch are children whom Mrs. Burke had in her care. Dr. John W. Wood, Secretary of the Episcopal Department of Missions said yesterday that an effort was being made to have the Postoffice authorities accept some clothing to meet the needs of the fire victims, especially with winter coming on, and forward it to Fort Yukon. This is the second mission house of the Church in Alaska, to be destroyed by fire in a few months.

Great marble tablets on the walls of the Cathedral in Hankow are engraved with the names of each communicant who dies. The names are written in small characters so there is room for every one, rich and poor, to be remembered in this way.

Church Intelligence

Nazarene Society Adopts New Policy in Forward Move at Washington, D. C.

The Society of the Nazarene in its Annual Conference-Mission held at Trinity Diocesan Church, Washington, D. C., September 14-19, adopted a new Constitution, framed a new policy and gave some practical demonstrations of its methods and teachings.

The attendance exceeded that recorded at any previous Conference and included representatives of thirty-four local Guilds in addition to a large number of unattached members.

The general subject of the Conference was "The Place of Healing in the Life of the Church," and this was dealt with under the following daily topics: The Divine Channels of Healing (Prayer and the Sacraments); The Agencies of Healing—Religion, Medicine, Psychology and Metaphysics; Cooperation in Healing—by means of the Priest, the Physician, the Nurse and the Deaconess; Missions of Healing, including Teaching, Evangelizing, Practical Healing and Follow-up Work. Friday, the closing day, was devoted to the work of the Society and its members.

A special feature of the Conference was the presence of Dr. Sinclair Bowen, a prominent physician and surgeon of Washington, who delivered an address on "Medicine as an Agency in Healing." Notwithstanding the subject as thus stated, his address was really a powerful argument in favor of spiritual healing and a plea for active cooperation between the Priest and the Physician.

Thirteen other addresses were delivered on the phases above mentioned and the quality and inspiration of these were such that the Conference resolved unanimously to have the proceedings printed in full and more than two hundred dollars was instantly subscribed to assist the Society in publishing a verbatim report of the Conference. This will be ready for distribution towards the end of October.

The chief business transacted was the discussion and final adoption of a new Constitution for the Society of the Nazarene. Substantially, this means that the Society now becomes a definite Church organization whose officers and active members must be communicants in good standing, though associate membership is still open to all Christian people. The annual report of the director showed that the work has nearly doubled in twelve months and that it has been found necessary to adopt a Provincial organization. A Provincial Director and Secretary have been appointed for each of the eight Provinces of the Church. These Provincial officers are all Priests of the Church.

Every night during the Conference a healing mission service was held in Trinity Church, conducted by priest-members of the Society. Frequently four of the clergy were simultaneously laying hands on the sick. Careful instruction and preparation were given to the sick people who came and it was required of them that they attend three services before receiving the laying on of hands. The Sacrament of anointing was also administered several times to those previously prepared.

All the clerical delegates at the Conference were guests of the Washington clericus on Tuesday afternoon at Epiphany Church. After luncheon the problems of Spiritual Healing were discussed and many questions were asked by the clericus and answered by the delegates. As a result of this meeting many of the Washington clergy assisted in the mission services, which were held each night. Eight Washington parishes have Nazarene Guilds actively at work. Bishop Freeman has written to the Society expressing his interest in its work and attended part of the opening meeting of the Conference at Trinity Diocesan Church.

Hobart College.

Hobart College, Geneva, N. Y., opened on September 19 with the largest enrollment in its history, and with a freshman class second in size only to that of two years ago, when entering class records were shattered in colleges all over the country. A preliminary survey of the registration figures indicates that there will be at least two hundred and forty students in attendance, ninety of whom are new men. The percentage of students coming from private schools and distant states has been found to be increasing slightly, while there is a marked advance in the number of candidates for Holy Orders.

During the summer months several thousand dollars were expended in improvements to buildings, grounds and equipment. The dormitories, Medbery Hall and Geneva Hall, were extensively repaired and redecorated, and every article of furniture in both buildings was refinished. At the opening of College, two excellent new tennis courts located on South Field were turned over to the Tennis Association for the use of the student body.

Announcement was made at the opening Chapel service that during the coming year there will be a daily Celebration of the Holy Communion at 7:30 o'clock in the morning. Heretofore the Holy Communion has been celebrated only on Sundays and Holy days.

President Murray Bartlett's course in the Philosophy of Religion and Chaplain J. B. Hubbs' Bible Study course, are proving popular. Not only candidates for Holy Orders, but students preparing for many vocations, have registered for these courses.

The registration of one hundred and forty students at William Smith College has taxed the capacity of that institution to the utmost. A large number of well-prepared applicants had to be refused for lack of dormitory facilities. The combined registration at Hobart and William Smith is three hundred and eighty students.

A Question and Its Answer.

There are sixty-two days in the months of July and August. For every one of those days, including Sundays and holidays, expenses are accruing to the Church.

To meet these expenses the receipts applicable to the General Church Budget have been equal, during these sixty-two days, to the Budget quota for only twenty-three days.

Question: "Where do you suppose the Church obtains the income to take care of the other thirty-nine days?"

Answer: "By borrowing from the bank."

Receipts to September first are $40,000 less than for the same period last year on an enlarged Budget quota.

Vacation time is over. Let's get busy and make up the lost ground.

Straw, Bricks and Buildings.

It is a far cry from the Egypt of Moses and his Pharaoh to the United States of America and the Church Building Fund. But it is not so far from bricks without straw to buildings without bricks. The Israelites were effectually stopped from delivery of their quota of bricks because their base of supplies was cut away from them. The Building Fund cannot erect Churches, Rectories and Parish Houses, if it has not the supplies.

The September Meeting of the Trustees showed a fully-loaned Permanent Fund and a waiting list of applicants. Every week loans are declined from lack of funds. A recent day established a record of $80,000 requested. Will the Church continue to hold up the supply? If so, Church building will receive as severe a set-back as they received who were told that they could not have straw for their bricks.

Meanwhile the Building Fund will continue its one hundred per cent efficiency with what it has. It has already loaned this year $138,000 and has promised $129,000 more when papers are prepared. It has given and granted $26,000 and promised $31,000 additional, including an initial Gift of $5,000 for Japan Reconstruction Work.

But the bricks need straw and the buildings of many applicants need bricks. Will the Church supply its own Building Fund with the needed material?

From the Opening Address of Dr. Bell of St. Stephen's College.

With one hundred and thirty students, an advance of twenty-five per cent over the number enrolled in any previous year in its history, St. Stephen's College, Annandale-on-Hudson, N. Y., opened its sixty-first year on September 21, with an address by President Bernard I. Bell, on "A True Theory of Education."

In the course of his address Dr. Bell said: "Every educated man today knows that man, whatever else he may be, is an animal, but against a common belief that man is nothing more than an animal this college, supported by the best educational theory and the leading scientific knowledge of today, stands firmly entrenched. The world is in danger of forgetting man's peculiar dignity, the God-like part of him. Because animals forage without restraint and if necessary fight with one another, by individuals and in packs, for what they can grab, it does not follow that man may do so also without killing all that is his glorious destiny. There is a type of education which consists in training people to be more successful predatory beasts than their fellows. Thousands of students are entering schools and colleges with no nobler notion than that by four years or more study they can go out and carve off more stuff and have an easier time than if they had gone directly to work. Against that utilitarian conception of education this college, and every really decent college, stands committed. Man has a soul, the part of him with which he loves. Love is a passionate investment of one's self in the furthering of causes nobler than one's own advancement. It is the divine spark which turns workmanlike efficiency into artistic achievement. A true education does more than enable a man to earn a living. Its most important purpose is to make poets, dreamers, sacrificers, men of vision, makers of a new world, fearless builders out of the accomplishments of the past of a new and better world."

Meeting of the Executive Council.

The Executive Council of the Diocese met in Charleston on September 17, and received reports and laid out plans for the autumn campaign. Eighteen members of the Council were present out of a possible twenty-one. The Bishop presided and appeared to have regained his wonted vigor.

This diocese is unusually fortunate in its treasurer, who is Mr. William Godfrey, of Cheraw. Mr. Godfrey is not merely an able financier whose reports make clear at a glance the financial condition of the Diocese, but he is also a devoted Churchman, who shows his faith by his works, which have been unremitting and invaluable to this diocese for the past fifteen years or thereabouts. A resolution was passed by the Council expressing its appreciation of his services.

The Hon. George E. Grimball recently elected a member of the state legislature, was elected a member of the Department of Social Service.

Two laymen of the Council, Mr. O. T. Waring of Charleston, Superintendent of the Atlantic Coast Line, and Mr. W. A. Boykin, of Hagood, accepted appointments to confer with the vestries throughout the diocese as touching their acceptance of the quotas assigned them for 1925.

The chairman of the Department of Religious Education announced that week-day Bible and Church instruction in cooperation with the public schools of Charleston, had been arranged for during a trial period this fall; the children to be excused for one hour a week to that end.

The department of publicity reported the generous attitude of the Charleston daily papers with respect to publishing Church news, leaving nothing to be desired in that direction.

Church Schools in the Diocese.

The condition of the Church Schools in the Diocese, which include St. Christopher's and St. Catherine's, Richmond; St. Margaret's, Tappahannock; Christ Church, Middlesex; St. Anne's, Charlottesville, and St. Agnes', Alexandria, is better than ever before, and prospects for the session now opening are more promising than in any year in the history of the Diocese.

St. Agnes' School for Girls, recently organized at Alexandria, while not operated by the diocese, has been formed under diocesan auspices.

The assets of the schools now total approximately $800,000 and are constantly increasing. Current operation has already become self-supporting, and profits this year from the institutions give promise of being much larger than ever before. These profits will be expended for buildings and necessary equipment.

Christ Church School, Middlesex, was recently given $10,000 for a gymnasium.

A new dormitory cottage was built during the summer at St. Margaret's School, Tappahannock, which increases the school's capacity for boarding pupils to thirty-six. Every accommodation at St. Margaret's is now filled. New gymnasiums are now under construction at St. Margaret's and at St. Anne's, Charlottesville.

Miss Louise deBerniere Bacot, B. A., of Charleston, S. C., has been chosen principal at St. Catherine's School, Richmond; Miss Laura Fowler, B. A., of Baltimore, has been elected principal at St. Margaret's, and Barton Palmer, B. S., is the new head of Christ Church.

Meeting of The Richmond Convocation.

The eighty-first meeting of the Convocation of Richmond, is to be held at St. James' Church, Ashland, the Rev. T. S. Russell, rector, on Wednesday, October 8, beginning with a Holy Communion Service at 10:30 A. M. All clergymen are urged to come, if possible, and to send, or bring with them, at least one lay member of each congregation. The meeting will last but one day, and all may, if they wish to do so, return to Richmond when the meeting closes.

St. George's Church, Fredericksburg: In the absence of the Rev. Dudley Booger during the month of August, the pulpit of St. George's Church was most acceptably supplied by the Rev. Joseph Baker, a retired clergyman of the Diocese of Virginia, now resident in Fredericksburg.

Mr. Baker's helpful messages from Sunday to Sunday will be remembered with pleasure and profit by all who were privileged to hear him.

An all-day meeting is to be held at the Church of Our Saviour, Hanover County, on Sunday, October 5. There will be a celebration of the Holy Communion at 11:30, with a sermon by the rector, the Rev. T. S. Russell, and lunch will be served on the grounds. A vestry meeting and a meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary will be held at 2 P. M., with an address by Miss Louisa Davis of Leesburg. At three P. M. the closing Evening Prayer service will be held with a sermon by the Rev. W. H. Burkhardt, D. D., of Richmond.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D.

The Cathedral.

The afternoon service at the Washington Cathedral on Sunday, September 28, was emphasized as an anniversary service of the consecration of the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., which service took place on St. Michael's and All Angel's Day, September 29, one year ago. Bishop Freeman delivered the sermon and the hymns used at the consecration service were used again at this anniversary service. The Bishop has visited during the summer many resorts, where he has found a very responsive interest manifested in the building of the Washington Cathedral. In September he visited several New England cities, where he received most cordial interest and cooperation. Visitors to the Bethlehem Chapel of the Cathedral now average about five hundred a day and a curator has been appointed to answer questions and give information concerning the work of the Cathedral.

The District of Columbia Branch of the Lord's Day Alliance has established an office and permanent secretary at St. Stephen's Church, 3017 Fourteenth Street. The rector of St. Stephen's Church, the Rev. George Fiske Dudley, D. D., has been elected president of the Alliance and the Board of Managers will consist of representatives of all the churches and organizations which desire to endorse in this way the movement.

The Annual Presentation Service for the United Thank Offering of the Woman's Auxiliary will be held at St. Thomas' Church, October 19, at 8 P. M. The goal set for the three-year offering to be sent to the next General Convention from the Diocese of Washington is $10,000, and if the offering this fall and next year is as large as last year, this goal will be realized.

The fall services at the Episcopal Chapel of the Transfiguration for the students of the University of Pennsylvania began Sunday, September 28. The chaplain, the Rev. John R. Hart, Jr., spoke in the morning, and in the evening the address was made by J. Hartley Merick, vice-provost of the University of Pennsylvania and a member of the Advisory Board of the Chapel. He spoke of the function of the Chapel in the life of the students.

The Rev. Llewellyn N. Caley, D. D., rector of St. Martin's Church, Oak Lane, delivered the first of a series of six sermons on "The Earthly Life of Christ" Sunday afternoon, September 28, in the Central Y. M. C. A. Auditorium, Philadelphia. He illustrated his address with slides copied from famous paintings.

Lecture Course: The services of Dr. Arthur A. Holmes, Professor of Psychology at the University of Pennsylvania, have been obtained by the Department of Religious Education of the Diocese, to conduct a free to the public lecture course in connection with the fall term of the Church Normal School, which opens October 9. Dr. Holmes' general subject will be "The Psychology of Prayer," and all sessions of the Normal School will be held in the Church House, Philadelphia.

Dr. R. B. Teusler, Founder and Director of St. Luke's International Hospital, Tokio, was the speaker Sunday night, September 28, in St. Michael's Church, Germantown. Dr. Teusler spoke on "The Reconstruction of the Church in Japan."

St. Mary's Mission, Chester: A class of nine awaited Bishop Garland's visit to St. Mary's Mission, Chester, Sunday morning, September 28. The Every Member Canvass was made in the summer with the view to the making of the budget for 1925. The minister in charge, the Rev. Charles S. Sedgewick, is a newcomer in the ranks of the colored clergy of the diocese, and has also been placed in charge of Holy Cross Chapel, Bryn Mawr. Mr. Sedgewick comes from the Diocese of Michigan, where he had been in charge of St. Cyprian's Mission, Detroit, since 1919.

The Rev. George Copeland, rector of St. Peter's Church, Weldon, has been appointed by Bishop Garland editor-in-chief of the Church News of the Diocese of Pennsylvania.

R. R. W.

ALABAMA.

Rt. Rev. C. M. Beckwith, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. G. McDowell, D. D., Coadjutor.

The Church of the Advent, Birmingham: The Rev. Middleton Barnwell held his farewell service in the church in which he has ministered for twelve years Sunday, September 21, and his successor, the Rev. Mr. Clingman, who comes from the rectorate of Trinity Parish, Houston, Texas, entered upon his duties on Sunday, September 28.

Bishop McDowell delivered an address on Wednesday, September 24, to the Kiwanis Club at their weekly luncheon in Ensley, making his main topic "The Religious Education of Our Young Folk." His audience was deeply impressed and very unmistakably voiced their concurrence as a body and severally. Afterwards Bishop McDowell held a Confirmation Service at St. John's, Ensley.

Bishop Beckwith has just returned from Asheville, N. C., where he conducted a week's teaching mission in Trinity Church, covering two Sundays.

St. John's, Ensley: On the evening of September 25 the DeMoulays, at their own request, came in a body to St. John's for a special service, which was presided over by the rector, the Rev. Edmonds Bennett. The church was filled, and with others, talks were made by the Rev. William Mansfield of the Methodist First Church, and Commissioner Cloe. The DeMoulays of Ensley comprise a fine fellowship of youths of marked intelligence, ability and character.

On the evening of September 26 the Y. P. S. L. of St. John's put on a very successful social entertainment in the newly opened parish rooms, to which came both seniors and juniors, parents and friends in ample numbers.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. J. B. Cheshire, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. A. Penick, D. D., Coadjutor.
Rt. Rev. H. B. Delaney, D. D., Suffragan.

The Rev. H. B. Lane, of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Raleigh, has been made chairman for the Nation-Wide Campaign in the diocese this fall and is now engaged in preliminary plans looking to a vigorous campaign throughout the territory.

All offerings in the Church Schools of the diocese during October are solicited by the Bishop for the Tuttle Memorial and an appeal to this end has been sent to every rector in the diocese.

Plans are on foot looking to a student pastor at Chapel Hill to assist the Rev. A. F. Lawrence, rector, in the work of ministering to the scores of Episcopal students and others at the University. The other North Carolina Dioceses will be asked to contribute to his support.

PITTSBURGH.

Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., Bishop.

The Trinity Lunch Room for business girls and women, run under the auspices of the Trinity Branch of the Girls' Friendly Society, opened for its eleventh successive year, on Monday, September 22. There were eight hundred and thirteen served that day. The average daily attendance for last year ending in June was eleven hundred persons.

The Rev. Donald Kent Johnston, rector of St. Peter's Church, Uniontown, is taking his vacation, and services are being supplied in his absence by the Rev. C. J. de Coux, of Pittsburgh.

LOUISIANA.

Rt. Rev. Davis Sessums, D. D., Bishop.

Preparations For the General Convention.

Bishop Sessums has appointed the chairman and some of the members of the most important committees, in arranging for the next General Convention. The halls have been leased by Mr. Fry, Chairman. The place for the daily luncheons has practically been determined by Mr. Lake, Chairman, and, when all have returned from their vacations, the details of the Convention will be considered by the Executive Committee. The Hotel Committee, the Rev. J. Dirickson Cummins, Chairman, 1622 Sixth Street, New Orleans, will receive all applications for rooms at hotels, boarding houses, etc. Many of the people of New Orleans will probably desire to entertain some of the missionaries and other delegates, and the Rev. Mr. Cummins should be so advised.

The first formal application for hotel reservations was received recently from Dr. John W. Wood, Executive Secretary of the National Council.

EAST CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., Bishop.

Group Meetings.

Group meetings of women in the Diocese of East Carolina are coming to be very popular. Usually from four to eight parishes or mission churches constitute a group for the study of problems affecting the peculiar work of the women, and three or four all-day meetings are held in the course of a year. Such a meeting was held in Christ Church, Creswell, on September 25, with a splendid attendance of delegates from Creswell, Columbia, Roper and Plymouth. Mrs. R. P. Walker, of Grace Church, Plymouth, is president of this group. The program was featured by an address on the "Discussion Group," by Mrs. C. W. Melick, of Christ Church, Elizabeth City. The picnic dinner, always a feature of the meetings, was highly successful on this occasion.

Dr. Carrol M. Davis, Secretary of the Domestic Division of the Department of Missions and Church Extension of the National Council, is to deliver a number of addresses in East Carolina in October, according to an announcement from the office of the Diocesan Executive Secretary.

The Business Man's Hymn.

Lord, we are busied with a thousand cares
And sleep comes hardly to our anxious eyes;
Lo, in our dreams we climb the endless stairs
That never reach beyond our clouded skies.
Are there no angels, filled with holy calm,
Who can descend upon our troubled sea,
To do Thy bidding that no storm shall harm
Those who have put their confidence in Thee?
Lord heal the fever of our throbbing mind
Lift us above the fret and fear of strife,
Show us where in this turmoil we may find
The first pale promise of eternal life.

Grant us the vision of Thy steadfast Face,
Set with resolve that banisheth dismay,
And of Thy mercy let us surely trace
Thy blessed footsteps in the Heavenly Way.

So shall the joy of certitude be ours
That Thou art One with us in life and death,
And neither principalities nor powers
Can shake the Peace which us encompasseth.

—Home Words.

Where shall we find the first beginnings and the satisfying foretaste of our heavenly inheritance but in the experience of life with Christ on earth? It doth not yet appear—there are mercies in reserve; but the beginnings of Christlikeness will be visible to others, if not yet to ourselves, and heavenly-mindedness will be Heaven's forerunner, bringing us rest of heart.—Matthew John.

Silver Poplars.

God wrote His loveliest poem on the day
He made the first tall silver poplar tree.
And set it high upon a pale-gold hill,
For all the new enchanted earth to see.

I think its beauty must have made Him glad,
And that He smiled at it—and loved it so—

Then turned in sudden sheer delight, and made

A dozen silver poplars in a row.

Mist green and white against a turquoise sky,
A-shimmer and a-shine it stood at noon;

A misty silver loveliness at night,
Breathless beneath the first small wistful moon.

And then God took the music of the winds,

And set each leaf a-flutter and a-thrill
Today I read His poem word by word
Among the silver poplars on the hill.

STUDIES IN THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

The Last Discourse.

III.

The Rev. Louis Tucker, D. D.

Self-satisfied and godless men resent being shown God. They live in sin and do not know it; so that, to them, it is not sin; at least, not very sinful. To men in darkness enters one who brings light. If they have in them something of the Divine—they welcome him, for they have been puzzled and uneasy and felt that something was lacking, and he brings clear and perfect explanation. They receive and act on it. But if the spark of the Divine born in every man has flickered out, the bringer of light is hated, not welcomed. The man who sinned without blame and with very little intention of wrong-doing, suddenly finds himself exposed. He promptly flies into a passion and asserts that the light-bringer brings false light; that he is not really a light-bringer at all, but a shedder of darkness, and as such must be punished. He persecutes the light-bringer; and is made spiritually worse, because he fights what he feels to be right. He is thus changed from an ignorant sinner to a living lie. The result is hatred of the light-bringer so thorough, so ample, so generous in outline and painstaking in detail, that we, who do not feel it, cannot understand it at all.

Our Lord let in a flood of light upon some tremendous corruptions. Therefore, He was hated, as, in lesser degree, His faithful followers and light-bearers have been. Spiritually, the hatred is without cause. From the worldly point of view it has the best cause in the whole world—the revealing of wickedness to itself.

The Holy Spirit is the Spirit of Truth. This is an aggressively truthful, a militantly truthful, a truculently truthful universe. We speak of a lying world, and David said, in his haste, that all men were liars; yet, against every liar we can set two children and a fool, besides those honest men and good women for whom earth is the richer. Full of falsehood as it may be, the world, on the whole, is virulently truthful. Whatever is not truthful breaks and perishes, from automobiles whose cylinders are not true to men whose souls are not. The scrap-heap of the universe is made of machines, theories, plans, projects, statements and men that did not fit the facts, that were not true.

How did the Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites, commit the sin against the Holy Spirit? By refusing to acknowledge Truth when they met Him face to face. What IS the sin against the Holy Spirit? Is it not asserting that truth is a lie till you believe it yourself? The Holy Spirit is at discord with all lies. The most awful, the most deadly, the most dangerous thing in the world, transcending dynamite, is a lie. The danger of the lie is to the liar. Nothing that fails to square with facts can last very long. The Spirit of Truth is Giver of Life.

Our Lord was practical. He predicts the persecution He foresaw and thereby makes them aids to faith. If Christianity had gone unpersecuted it would have been untrue. Elsewhere He predicts corruptions. If Christianity had remained pure it would have been untrue. He adds the reason why He tells. He is going away. While He was with them they needed no warning.

In this, as at the cleansing of the ten lepers, Our Lord shows it possible to treat Him with a reverence unduly reverent. He missed the kindly note of human interest which would have asked where He was going. This, we take it, is the mistake of modern Christendom. We have made Him unreal, a phantom, a gracious misty Figure, when He was the realest man who ever trod this globe. He needed meals and a place to sleep. He had money-troubles and went hungry because of them. He now and then got angry, though without sin. He was the most eloquent orator the world has ever seen and the best teller of anecdotes and the deepest student of human nature and the shrewdest politician and the greatest philosopher. He far surpassed His apostles in all-round human qualities. Nay He was even the best maker of anathema. For concise eloquence, stating the facts and all the facts and nothing but the facts, nothing approaches His "Woe unto you Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites." Denunciation, for two thousand years, has hung its head abashed and fled to profanity in despair of that peerless peroration. He was the most human man who ever walked this earth, and we do err in losing sense of His humanity in His Divinity. And now He longed for one word of human sympathy, one kindly interruption, and did not get it. Of course He judged them rightly and kindly. It was because sorrow had filled their hearts, just as our kindred mistake is because reverence fills ours.

It was expedient that He go away. Suppose He had stayed. He would be somewhere, now—Jerusalem, for choice. When a hundred thousand Christian Churches worship him tomorrow—and there will be in each some flicker of true worship or there would be no church at all—He would be present in one and absent from the rest. As it is, He is present in all. Perhaps a few thousand would have spoken with Him next week. Now, every Christian man who walks this globe may speak with Him today. If He went to and fro in Galilee He might have turned a few from evil yesterday and healed a hundred. As it is, He walks by every loving soul, and speaks in every listening ear; and the ten thousand hospitals of Christendom, which would not exist except for Him, will this day discharge a hundred thousand cured or more. He is present with us through the Spirit more fully than if, without the Spirit, He were in person in the world.

There is a deeper presence of the Spirit, through Christ's absence. We have here but touched the fringes on the hem of a great curtain. We could tell more; but to what purpose? We cannot lift the curtain. There are some mountains whose lower slopes a man may climb, but whose upper peaks are hidden in the heavens.

The Holy Spirit is to convince the world that it is sinful, lacks righteousness and shall be judged, by making plain the nature of sin, righteousness and judgment. The world will make the application. The world does not yet understand these, though it has a partial and growing knowledge of all. But Christendom does. There is a new spirit abroad since Our Lord's time. Things the ancient world did not understand, things the heathen world does not yet understand, are axiomatic with us. Christendom has been convinced; not religious Christendom only. One who knows criminals, or others supposed to have little religion, will grasp the meaning. They may do wrong, but they know it. They sin, but know it is sin. They defy judgment, but expect the judgment they defy. Things any Roman philosopher would have done without a thought are abhorrent to the basest of Christendom. They may DO them; but they abhor them. Characters too lofty for any Grecian moralist to grasp are common knowledge for every coal-heaver. He may not imitate them, but he feels that there might be that kind of a person and ought to be. A few human monsters in the Churches have hardened themselves past feeling by hypocrisy, a few outside the Churches by misapplication of some principle of science, as, for instance, the principle of the survival of the fittest misapplied into the sense of let the weakest go to the wall; but, except such, all Christendom, religious and irreligious, knows and feels the axiomatic truth of principles to which non-Christendom, ancient or modern, is deaf and blind.

The eleven were in no condition for detailed teaching. The foundations of their earth were broken up. Their Lord was leaving. It might really be that He was going to die. He seemed so sure; and they had let Judas the traitor get away. They were approaching true bewilderment, and could not bear deeper things.

Guidance by the Holy Spirit into all truth, here promised, is basis of the principle "Semper ubique et ab omnibus." Those things on which Christendom was once unanimous must be true. Their common belief is right.

Yet "Leading into truth" implies growth, and who shall say the growth is ended? Take the abolition of slavery. Freedom is a necessary deduction from the principles of Christ. For eighteen centuries the Christian Church itself did not see this. Here is a "Leading into truth," scarcely yet completed. What if there be other truths into which we are still to be led?

God Knows.

God knows, not I, the devious way

Wherein my faltering feet must tread,
Before, into the light of day,

My steps from out this gloom are led;
And since my Lord the path doth see,
What matter if 'tis hid from me?

God knows, not I, how sweet accord

Shall grow at length from out this crash

Of earthly discords, which have jarred

On soul and sense. I hear the clash,
Yet feel and know that on His ear
Breaks harmony, full, deep, and clear.

God knows, not I, why, when I'd fain

Have walked in pastures green and fair,

The path He pointed me hath lain

Through rocky deserts, bleak and bare.

I blindly trust, since 'tis His will;

This way lies safety, that way ill.

His perfect plan I cannot grasp;

Yet I can trust Love Infinite,

And with my feeble fingers clasp

The Hand that leads me to the light.

My soul upon His errand goes;

The end I know not, but God knows.

The Call of Christ-likeness.

The most distinctive fact about Christ, that which sets Him in a place apart and supreme as the object of our admiration and imitation, is that He gave Himself without reserve, and without cessation to the service of others. Men are all egoists; He was completely an altruist. This is distinctive; this is what characterizes Him. No other person known to us in life or in history conveys this impression with such clear, sheer, absolute, unrestricted force. We find no instance, no suggestion, of His ever considering even for a moment His own welfare, gain, pleasure, comfort, or life.

"This is what He would have men do; He would have them like Himself in the sense that they should live for others, that they should conceive themselves as sent into life to serve the rest, that they should do this at all costs, even to the sacrifice of self and life. 'Take up your cross and follow Me' is the call of Christ-likeness.

"We have to learn the secret of our Master, that every true service, however slight, is in touch with the whole, has an effect on the whole, is not only particular but universal. It is this secret of Jesus which enables us to work effectively and cheerfully at obscure tasks, to do the thing which comes to hand, and yet to feel that in doing it we are contributing to God's great purpose, promoting His Kingdom on earth. This secret of Jesus is the spring of joy and of effectiveness. Three men were working in a stone-mason's yard. 'What are you doing?' said a visitor to each. One answered, 'I am just squaring and finishing that stone, as you see.' The second answered, 'I am working to get my wages to support myself and family.' Third said, 'I am building a Cathedral.' That assuredly is the teaching of Jesus."—R. F. Horton in "The Mystical Quest of Christ."

Spiritual Radium.

The Rev. Thos. F. Opie, D. D.

Radium is one of the basis elements. It is our most priceless substance. There is doubtless lots of it hidden away in the world somewhere, but at present man is in possession of less than a pound of this valuable product. At the present price, a pound of radium would be worth only a little under $50,000,000.

This remarkable substance throws out powerful rays. The American revised version of the Bible translates Psalm 34:5 as follows, "They looked unto Him and were radiant!" Here is a helpful analogy, indeed!

While "spiritual radium," like the material product, is rare, according to present appearances—and according to the actual conduct of men—yet the world is full of it! Those who are really charged with the spirit of God are "radiant." They radiate powerful forces.

Now, this is no mere hyperbole. The spiritually radiant man sends out beams of joy, beams of spiritual force, beams of pure light, beams of radiant happiness. We have mistaken religion for moroseness and gloom long enough. Religion is happiness in its sweetest essence.

Christ was the most preeminent exponent of the spiritually radiant that the world has ever seen—or felt. Even after nearly two thousand years and despite the inadequate appreciation and perception of those who wrote about Him, we still sense this indescribable force. He literally radiated goodness, truth, beauty. He was like our rarest substance, radium. He threw off or radiated spiritual force that has surcharged the world with the very life of the race.

God is the source of all this radiance—this luminous, radiant force. Those really in touch and communion with Him are radiant Christians. They looked unto Him and became "radiant." Their faces shine with the Spirit of Christ. They send out, they radiate power, purity, personality—as a dynamo or a magnet emits unseen forces that we call electricity.

The world needs radiant Christians. The times call for men and women who radiate peace, kindness, cheer, joy. God, give us more of this rare force in our individual and national life—spiritual radium!

Don't Enter Into Children's Quarrels and Arguments.

"I don't like Dick's mother," Bud confided one day when he, Aunt Emmy-Lou and I were having a little heart-to-heart talk.

"And why not, Bud?" we wanted to know.

"Well, every time us fellows get into an argument, she's always poking her head out of the window and asking, 'Now what's wrong? Can't you play without quarrelling?' And then out she comes to settle matters. Seems pretty nibby to me. She's always spying on what we're doing. I tell you, we don't often go to Dick's—not any more'n we can't help."

After Bud left, Aunt Emmy-Lou, whom all children love, scolded, "Why will mothers alienate the affections of their children's friends! When Dick is older, and Margaret wanting him to bring his friends home, she'll be wondering why they won't come. I dislike these mothers who are always taking part in children's arguments and little quarrels. Children should have a little privacy of their own, and we grown-ups should respect it, the same as we expect them to respect ours."

"Well, you're right, Aunt Emmy-Lou," I admitted, surprised as always at her wisdom.

"Margaret will make Dick unpopular all his life if she keeps this up," she continued. "I was there one day when Dick came home with a torn shirt, grimy hands and all the ear-marks of a scuffle. After she had fairly forced the child to tell his tale of woe, she started toward the door. 'Where are you going, Mother?' Dick asked. 'I'm going to see that rough Dowds boy!' she snapped. 'Oh, Mother, please don't do that!' Dick pleaded. Margaret was determined. But I was determined she shouldn't go. And she didn't. I gave her some good straight-from-the-shoulder advice, but I guess she didn't heed it."

After Aunt Emmy-Lou left, I thought, "Well, I know one thing. I'm never going to have my boy's friends dislike me, if I can help it." And I deliberately walked into the house and closed the door, leaving a crowd of youngsters in our front yard having a most heated argument.

When Sonny hopped in a while later with, "Gee, Mother, you're a brick!" I only smiled, for I knew why he thought Mother a "brick."—Helen G. Green.

Evening.

At evening time—when day is done,
Life's little day is near its close,
And all the glare and heat are gone,
And gentle dews foretell repose;
To crown my faith before the night,—
At evening time let there be light!

At evening time—when labor's past,
Though toils and storms have marred my day,
Mercy has tempered every blast—
And love and hope have cheered the way;
Now let the parting hour be bright,—
At evening time let there be light!

Wesley Always Ready.

Mr. Westey was once asked by a lady, "Suppose that you should die tomorrow night at twelve o'clock, how would you spend the intervening time?" "How, Madam," he replied; "why, just as I intend to spend it now. I should preach this night at Gloucester, and again at five tomorrow morning. After that, I should ride to Tewkesbury, preach in the afternoon, and meet the societies in the evening. I should then repair to friend Martin's house, who expects to entertain me, converse and pray with the family as usual, retire to my room at ten o'clock, commend myself to my Heavenly Father, lie down to rest, and wake up in glory."—Selected.

A Month of Gold.

We crown thee with gold, Queen October,
We clothe thee with purple today;
But we leave King November the ermine
To wear with his garments of gray.
The maples, brave knights of thy kingdom,
The oak trees, thy counselors strong,
Are gracefully spreading their mantles
For the queen they have waited so long.

The gentians and asters, thy pages,
Creep lovingly close to thy feet;
The pansies, thy maidens of honor,
Lift faces all dewy and sweet.
Resplendent thy ladies in waiting
Stand graciously near to thy side,
The cardinal flower in her beauty,
The golden rod stately with pride.

Simple-Liza.

Louise H. Powell.

It was queer, I own, to see the sense and devotion of a pet like Simple-Liza. I never thought a cat could possess so much sense. Why Mammy said whenever "Miss Connie," went to her Aunt Robie's for the summer, Simple-Liza would whine and cling to Connie several days before her departure, seeming really to sense her going. There always had to be a "shutting-up" of Simple-Liza while Connie rode away in the big carriage through the fine grounds and out of sight.

Constance was the adored little sister in a large family, there being six brothers older than she. Every summer Mr. Gregory sent Constance to her Aunt in Carolina, thinking it better for her there than at his plantation home on the Alabama River. Connie had been a delicate child and Mr. Gregory might have lost his little girl if Mammy Elsie had not been so faithful and used the good judgment that so many of our white-souled black mammys possessed.

Connie had always seemed willing to make the summer trips until the time for parting came. Then she cried when she left Simple-Liza and kept it up until her father kissed her tears away at the train, telling her each time that Simple-Liza would be happy and not fare the worse for being left to seek her resorts in shady nooks at home.

When Constance was nine years old, her good and beautiful Mother went to live with the angels. On the very day Mrs. Gregory died, Connie found Simple-Liza. It was very hard on Constance to give her Mammy up. Mammy had said many times, "De globrious saints! Can' noboddy cry like dis here chile," and the saying proved true on this day surely, for slipping away from the house, Connie ran to the barn where she and "Red" and "Freck" had always gone when things went wrong with them. As she jumped sobbing into the hay, a faint cry caught her ear. Up she bounced and found a tiny kitten at her feet. Its big, pretty eyes told her that it too, was in trouble.

Now where did the kitty come from? For a minute Connie forgot her own grief, and went to work to find the kitty's mother. But the little cat seemed to be quite alone.

Hugging the kitten close to her heart, Connie sat very still on the hay and soon her tears stopped flowing.

In the meantime, Mammy having missed Connie, was searching everywhere for her. At length a dear old head, tied in a bandanna kerchief, was stuck inside the barn door. "Umph huh, O yas, here mah chile." She went closer to Connie. "Dyah now, baby chile doné foun' her a little simpleliza. Bless mah chile, she done quit crying. Wheresomever did yer git dat, precious?" Connie flung herself with the kitten into Mammy's protecting arms. From that day on, the kitten bore the name Mammy gave it then.

Now, the summer that I want to tell you about, when the time came for Constance to prepare to go to Carolina, she told Mammy she was not going one step unless they'd let her take Simple-Liza along.

"Honey," said Mammy, "you couldn't take no cat fur as dat. An' laws-a-mussy, you's a gittin' on now ter where's the gemmens is a-lookin' round at yer, and ef dey sees 'a pretty girl a-luggin' er cat erlong, dey never ax yer to marry 'em," said Mammy.

"Why, Mammy dear, what do I care? Haven't I a Daddy and six big brothers to care for me?"

"Das alright, but jus' yer wait an' see, yer gwine ter be sorry fer fetchin' ol' Simple-Liza 'long sho is."

All this time, Simple-Liza was purring away on the open valise which Mammy was trying to pack. Nevertheless, the next morning, a box was found for Simple-Liza and she was ready. Mr. Gregory and Mammy Elsie felt doubtful about the cat's trip, but Constance insisted they'd get along, splendidly.

When Mr. Gregory left them on the train in care of his friend, the conductor, he saw that Constance was in gayer spirits than she usually was on leaving him, and he was very glad for he knew the change was good for her.

Soon after the train had started, Connie took off her hat, arranged her curls, and took Simple-Liza out of her box. But the rumble of the train frightened Simple-Liza so badly, she begged to be put back into her box.

By and by the coaches began to get crowded. There remained only one vacant seat, and that was beside Constance, who was getting anxious to talk to some one, but she dared not open a conversation with just any one, for Mammy had cautioned her so often, "Don' yer never fool 'long wid noboddy yer don' know nothin' 'bout; dey liable ter be po' white trash, and not eben got a rooster ter wake 'em up when day come."

But presently the train stopped at a little way-station and a splendid looking young man got on. He entered the coach in which Connie was sitting and walked up and down the aisle looking for a seat. Just as he was passing Connie's seat, the conductor came along. He recognized the young man and introduced him to Connie as Captain Yancy, the son of one of Mr. Gregory's best friends. Connie offered Captain Yancy a seat beside her and soon the two were chatting away as though they had been friends all their lives.

Soon it was lunch time and Connie opened her basket, displaying all sorts of cakes and sandwiches which she and Captain Yancy began to work on in real earnest. Connie knew that little Simple-Liza was hungry, but she remembered what Mammy had said and she feared she might lose her companion if she let it be known that she was taking her cat with her. So poor Simple-Liza slept away her blessed trip, which took from early dawn to past twilight and never once did she betray her mistress with a "me-ow."

Finding that Captain Yancy was to be a guest at her Aunt Robie's, Connie began to figure to herself how she was going to take her cat from the train without his finding out her secret.

At last the train pulled into the station. The conductor came to help with Connie's baggage and she gave him Simple-Liza's box. As she handed it to him, Simple-Liza just couldn't help but move and Captain Yancy said excitedly, "Why, what's in that box? It moved." In an instant Connie replied, "O, those are my evening slippers. I shall need them tonight." But the old conductor knew that this was not true for he had seen the cat and he knew why Connie did not want to own Simple-Liza now. Chuckling to himself, he turned away with his charge.

Having been often in Mr. Gregory's home and knowing the story of the cat, the kind old man knew that Connie would be deeply grieved if she should really lose her pet. He, too, had some little girls and he understood how Connie felt. He thought Simple-Liza stood a slim chance of being entertained, even if she should ever reach her destination. Suddenly he thought of a way out of the situation. Going to his locker, he took Simple-Liza out of her box. Then fastening the box up as it was before, and leaving kitty secure, he reached the car steps just as the passengers began to get off.

At the steps were Aunt Robie, Doris and a young man. Now dear little Connie was in trouble. She just could not let Captain Yancy know about Simple-Liza. Mammy had said it would never do and—she liked Captain Yancy. But while the box was being packed away at their feet in the carriage, Connie longed to take Simple-Liza to her heart and beg her pardon. "Why doesn't she make a little noise?" thought Connie, and a big lump came in her throat.

At the house, Simple-Liza's box was found to be empty. Constance saw her Aunt Robie throw it aside and the lump in her throat grew larger, but she didn't tell any one about it. Where was her precious kitty now? This thought kept her awake all night.

Every kind of good time was provided for Doris' guests and each day seemed fuller than the ones that had gone before. Captain Yancy was the life of the crowd, but he seemed to know that there was something biting on Connie's heart and he made a special effort to keep her laughing all the time. Once he caught her with tears in her eyes, and he believed she was homesick. Connie was never so ashamed in her life as when he caught her crying, but she would not tell him what was the matter.

Soon the day came when Captain Yancy was to leave. Every one hated to see him go, but Connie most of all for he had been specially kind to her.

Constance had been at her Aunt Robie's only three weeks when her father received a letter from her saying that she must come home for she was "kind-er ill" and the climate wasn't agreeing with her. Mr. Gregory wasn't greatly surprised at this letter for something that might explain it had happened at the old home on the Alabama River.

As Connie's train stopped at the home station a very sad-faced girl stepped from it into her daddy's big arms. "Why, my darling," he cried, "you aren't looking well. We must go by to see Dr. Hooper about you."

In the carriage Connie burst into tears that had been pent up so long. She told her father of her naughtiness and of how she was now suffering. Mr. Gregory listened patiently to it all. When Constance had done, he said in his kindest tone, "Little daughter, there is a beautiful lesson to your story. Shall I tell you what it is?" Connie could only nod her head as her face was buried in her daddy's arms.

"Now since Simple-Liza has left you, you see how very badly you can hurt yourself as well as others by saying what is not true, and by denying, neglecting or shunning old friends when they need you most. If you had listened to your Mammy Elsie, you would have been spared all this."

By the time he had finished speaking, the big house came in sight and Connie began to dry her eyes to keep "Red" and "Freck" from seeing that she had been crying. As she was getting out of the carriage, Mr. Gregory said to her, "Mammy has a surprise for you, Pet. Run, see it."

And what do you suppose it was? Well, there was Simple-Liza. I cannot tell you our little girl's joy on seeing her kitty again. Mr. Gregory said Mammy wept to see her baby's joy, and Mammy said that she shed a few tears also.

"Mammy, darling," said Connie as she sat on Mammy's lap that night, "I promise never to do anything again without asking your advice about it."

Simple-Liza lived in luxury for many years after this. But that is another story and I must not tell you all at once.

Old Dobbin's Joke on the Twins.

The Martin twins, Bobby and Betty, who had lived in a city all of the seven years of their lives before, now stood in the barnyard of their Uncle Ned's farm waiting for him to come home from town their round little faces all puckered into worried, anxious frowns.

"And to think it happened today just after we had promised dear Uncle Ned to take care of everything while he was away!" mourned Betty.

"I don't believe that Uncle Ned will think it is our fault that it happened," answered Bobby hopefully.

At that moment their Uncle Ned came into sight, and the twins raced down the lane to meet him.

"O Uncle Ned!" they both cried at once. "We are so sorry! We have let something bad happen. We've let old Dobbin get sick."

Dobbin was Uncle Ned's gentle, old gray horse, on whose broad, flat back the Martin twins had taken their first horseback ride.

"He must be very sick," said Bobby. "He just stands there with his eyes shut; but he is not quite dead yet, for when we called his name he opened one eye and looked at us just once."

Then the three went to look at poor Dobbin.

"Why, children," said Uncle Ned, "Dobbin is all right. He is just taking a nap."

"A nap?" Standing up like that?" cried the excited twins. "Why, Uncle Ned, can horses sleep standing?"

"All horses do most of their sleeping standing, just as Dobbin is now," answered Uncle Ned; "and a great many animals never sleep any time except standing."

"Oh!" said the twins, looking very blank and feeling very foolish.

"Elephants always sleep standing, and dogs and cats sleep in more different positions than any other animals," said Uncle Ned. "In this they are more like human beings, for they will sleep lying on either side or upon their stomachs with their chins resting upon their fore-paws and sometimes flat upon their backs."

"I saw old Rover sleeping that way only this morning," said Robby.

"Wild animals, such as lions and tigers, generally sleep flat upon the side; while squirrels, raccoons and opossums sleep curled up in round, furry balls. And raccoons, which old hunters and woodsmen tell us sleep through the cold winter months without water or food, suck one of their paws while they sleep."

"I'd think it would keep them awake to suck their paws," said Betty. "I didn't know one could sleep and do anything else."

"Ducks sleep out in the open air," said Uncle Ned, "and to keep the waves from drifting them ashore they keep paddling the water with one foot, which keeps them swimming slowly around in a circle. It seems to me that it would be easier to sleep while sucking a paw, as the coon does, than it would be to keep paddling the water with one foot, as the ducks do. Gulls and cranes and all the long-legged water fowls sleep standing on one leg with their heads tucked beneath their wings. And nearly all the song birds sleep in this way a great part of the time. Chickens sleeping on a perch usually sleep with one leg drawn up under their feathers. Then, too, we read of birds that sleep hanging head downward, very much as a bat sleeps."

Just then wise old Dobbin opened both eyes and whinnied softly. "That's his way of reminding us that it is about dinner time," said Uncle Ned. "We will feed him and then go in and get our own dinner. I'm sure your aunt has it ready."—Selected.

The Proud Dahlia.

Gorgeous was the name of a beautiful, big dahlia who bloomed most abundantly all summer and fall. Ever since early Spring, good old Mother Earth had fed her just the right food to make her grow. Then the rains had come, so that her thirsty roots might be satisfied. The sun gave her warmth, and the soft winds stirred her leaves and stem for exercise. So she grew and grew, as all healthy, well-cared-for children will. The Man-Who-Owned-the-Garden kept the weeds away, and Gorgeous was very glad. She did not like weeds. They seemed to her as wild animals seem to little human boys and girls. Gorgeous wanted to thank the man, and Mother Nature, and the sun, and the winds, and the clouds that sent the rain. So one morning, she gave them something she had been making for them for weeks and weeks, such a beautiful something that all the world seemed happier for having seen it. She was glad it was a success, for she had tried very hard to make it beautiful. What do you think it was? Yes, it was the lovely red bloom that made every one call her by name.

So she blossomed right through the Summer, and when the first beautiful flower grew old and faded, she had another all made to take its place. Each one she tried to make lovelier than the last. Now, when Gorgeous was a child plant, she was very sweet and modest, but she had heard so many say how beautiful she was that at last she opened up her blossoms, not in gratitude for what had been done for her, but just to hear them say:

"Isn't this one beautiful?"

The summer passed, and fall came. The winds grew cold. Jack Frost lightly touched Mother Earth and Mother Earth shivered.

"Come, children, it is time for your naps," she whispered to her flower children and her tree children. All of them obeyed her except Gorgeous. That silly little dahlia had become so vain that she thought she was better than any one else and didn't have to take a nap.

"Come, Gorgeous, crawl into your little brown bed, and get to sleep before Jack Frost bothers you."

"Let him come! Jack Frost won't bite me. He loves beautiful things. Look at the pictures he paints. He couldn't destroy anything as lovely as I."

"But your bloom is about gone, and if you will not mind, the sun and the wind and the rain won't help you to make another. Then where will your beauty be? See, your sisters have slept for a week. You will be sleepy next spring if you do not come now," coaxed Mother Nature.

"I won't come!" replied impudent little Gorgeous.

"All right, Gorgeous, but when children won't mind their mothers, something always happens. Remember that, dear." And Mother Nature went on looking after her other children.

That night, Jack Frost was fitting about, looking to see what mischief he could do. He saw Gorgeous, standing so straight and tall, with her last red bloom just starting to fade.

"Well, look who's here!" he said, laughingly. "So you are the little lady who wouldn't mind her mother. I'm afraid I'll have to bite you for that," and he gave her wonderful red bloom such a nip that every bit of it turned an ugly old brown.

The next morning the Man and his children walked in the garden.

"The frost got the last dahlia," said the Man. "Last night I thought of cutting it, but it looked so sort of impudent there that I hadn't the heart. Its beauty is all gone, now, isn't it?"

"Nasty old thing! Ugly old thing!" cried the children, stamping the wilted blossom under their feet. Gorgeous hung her head lower and lower, then she saw that even her stem was dark, and she was so ashamed that she lay right down on top of the ground, so she could whisper to Mother Earth:

"I'm sorry, Mother dear."

And because she had once been so beautiful, and because she was truly

The Echoes.

Eugenie du Maurier.

Deep down in valleys, surrounded by high mountains or even some hills, very often across lakes or ponds, live the beautiful nymphs called the Echoes. They are lovely little people, laughing at the whole world from among the hills. Their hair and eyes are dark like shaded pools. Their necks and arms are white as snow. No earth child can ever see how very fair and beautiful the Echo children are. They can run faster than the deers and ever so much more gracefully. Their teasing, mocking voices are all we can ever know about the Echo children. And yet we can hear them calling to each other at night. We can hear them laughing under the stars, in shaky nooks and even where the sun shines brightest. But we never hear them unless they are disturbed by the earth children.

We can never see the Echo children. They fly far away as soon as the earth children follow them. They laugh at the earth children just over the next hill or around the corners of places where big houses nestle close together. Their fairy mother has taught them to "talk back" when the earth children become too much in earnest about looking around to find their home in the woods.

And the earth children say they are being mocked when they hear the Echo children speak. But that is only because the earth children have been impolite enough to speak to them without an introduction. The little Echoes are too shy to show themselves to the earth children; indeed, if they did, they would not be Echoes any longer. They live far away in the shady, pleasant, cool woods, and beautiful surroundings have a great deal of influence upon everybody's disposition. That is one reason why all the earth children love the Echoes. They are always so good-natured, and they always make people laugh.

"Open mine eyes, that I may see
More beauty blessed Lord, in Thee;
Unstop mine ears, that I may hear
Thy voice in accent soft and clear.
Keep Thou my body, spirit, soul,
Completely 'neath Thy blest control,
And fill me with Thy fulness, Lord;
Then Thou alone shalt be adored."

GREENABAUM: Entered into life eternal, in the early morning of September 12, 1924, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. E. M. Rice, Oriental, N. C. MRS. SARAH GREENABAUM, widow of Leon W. Greenabaum. Interment was in Oakdale Cemetery, Wilmington, N. C., September 13. "Until the day break, and the Shadows flee away."

MRS. HORACE WELLFORD JONES.

In His Sermon on the Mount our Lord Jesus Christ said: "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in Heaven."

Some souls there be who instinctively obey this command, whose good works, quietly and unobtrusively done, shine in their homes and communities.

Such an one was MRS. HORACE WELLFORD JONES, daughter of Dr. Wilmer Nelson and Sally Berkeley, his wife, and descended through both her father and mother from many notable Virginia families.

Born at old "Timberneck," the home of her paternal grandfather, Hon. John Walker Catlett, in Gloucester county, with but a narrow strip of lawn between the house and the broad York River, Fanny Nelson's earliest impressions of the world were a happy, holiday place, all blue sky and blue water and ancient trees filled with song birds. She was too soon to find herself an orphan in the bleak years following Civil War. In later times she was a childless widow with the roar of the battle of life in her ears. But she was always a shining example of courage.

Though never robust, she was energy personified and gifted with marked executive ability. In choosing from the few doors to independence then open to gentlewomen that of keeping a boarding house, she carried the traditions of plantation life into a business whose success depends upon progressive ideas. These she furnished and not only made of her ever expanding house a home, but of her work a career and not merely a means of keeping soul and body together. Her generosity was unbounded and she gave liberally of her handsome earnings to many charities. When there was need she gave herself as when she remained all night in a hospital with a woman whom she had befriended, never leaving her until the cry of a new-born child announced that her vigil was over.

During the World War she made her home the Richmond headquarters of a group of Pennsylvania soldiers at Camp Lee, entertaining them hospitably whenever they chose to come over for weekends. A recent letter from one of them calls her the "mother of the soldiers."

Part of her heritage was love of the Episcopal Church. She was never too tired or too busy to serve St. Paul's, of which she was long a member. Letters of both the present rector and his predecessor witness her valuable and remarkable work there.

An illness in 1923 made her realize that she had earned a rest and that the time had come for the fulfillment of her lifelong dream of seeing foreign lands. After nearly a year in Europe she went to England to meet her only sister, Mrs. Sally Nelson Robins, the author, with whom she was to continue her travels; but when the sister arrived she was having an enforced rest in a London hospital. The sister, accompanied by a daughter, yielded to her wish and went on her way, fully assured that Mrs. Jones would be able to join them ere long in Paris. She met them in the French capital, but only to be laid low again, and, from the American hospital at Neuilly, on August 26, 1924, to pass peacefully on to that port where sickness and sorrow are unknown and whence no traveler returns.

The mortal part of her was bought home to Virginia, and Gloucester, and interred, on September 10, in the family plot at Ware Church, the old colonial church of her forefathers, in the presence of many of those who had been her earliest neighbors, and others. Masses of flowers from old gardens she had loved in her youth mingled their fragrance and beauty with those that went from friends in Richmond and elsewhere.

She is gone, but long will linger the influence of the light that so radiantly shone before those who saw her good works.

DEATHS.

The Rev. Gouveneur Cruger, the founder, and for many years the pastor, of the Church of the Divine Love, Montross (formerly known as Verplank's Point), N. Y., died on Sunday, September 14, in St. Luke's Hospital, New York. The funeral was held on September 16, at the church, of which he was founder.

The Rev. William Naylor Webbe, rector emeritus of Emmanuel Church, Great River, N. Y., died at his home in Warwick, N. Y., September 8.

Parables of Prayer.

There are some plants whose leaves and flowers fold themselves when the sun goes down and unfold again when softly touched on the morrow by the sun's light. In this way, they absorb the warmth and light of the sun so necessary for their existence and growth. So, in prayer, our hearts are open to the Sun of Righteousness; we are safe from the dangers and difficulties of darkness, and grow into the fullness of the stature of Christ.

We may not change God's plans by prayer, but the man who prays is himself changed and is brought into harmony with God's plan.

Ctenophores are so extremely delicate that the splash of a wave would tear them into shreds. Whenever there is even a hint of an approaching storm, they sink deep into the sea, beyond the reach of the storm. So, when the man of prayer anticipates Satan's attacks and the storm of sin in the world, he may enter into the ocean of God's love where there is eternal peace and calm.

The wonderful peace which the man of prayer feels while praying is not the result of his own imagination or thought, but is the outcome of the presence of God in his soul. The vapor rising from a small cloud cannot become large clouds and descend as a great shower of rain. It is only from the mighty ocean that large clouds, filled with the rain, can come to quench the thirsty earth and make it fertile. It is not from our little subconscious minds, but from the illimitable ocean of God's love, with which we are in contact in prayer, that the peace comes.

The sun shines perpetually with the full light of noonday, day and night, and the succession of the seasons is not due to changes in the sun, but to the rotation and movements of the earth. The Sun of Righteousness is "the same yesterday and today and forever." We may be alternately exalted with joy or sunk in gloom, but this is owing to our changed position towards Him. When we open our hearts to His light and love, in meditation and prayer, then the rays of the Sun of Righteousness will heal the wounds caused by our sins and will give us health and joy.—Sadhu Sundar Singh, India.

A Triumph of Friendship.

A fine story comes from India. The famous and influential Hindu, Mahatma Gandhi, was recently attacked by acute appendicitis while he was in prison, whither his opposition to the British government had brought him. Something had to be done at once. In other times such a man—a rebel in the eyes of the prison authorities—might have been allowed to die while the red tape of the prison rules was being unwound; but the English doctor, Colonel Maddock, seeing that no time ought to be lost, ordered out his own car and hurried his patient to the Poona Hospital, where he operated upon him.

Gandhi was under chloroform and the doctor was ready to use his instruments when suddenly the electric light went out, and everything was in darkness. There had been a breakdown in the machinery, but there was no time to wait for repairs. Under the pale gleam of a hurricane lantern the doctor calmly proceeded with the operation and thus saved the man's life.

Doctor and nurses attended their patient with all possible skill, and their tenderness and consideration made a deep impression not only upon Gandhi but upon the Indian population far and wide; for in the eyes of the Hindus, Gandhi's life is sacred because of his love for the poor and his self-sacrificing career.

When he was released from prison Gandhi, whose gratitude to the man who had saved his life was touching, said to the doctor: "I trust you will allow me to remain your patient a little longer." And he remained there at the prison until he was quite strong again. A warm friendship has sprung up between the two men,—two of the finest specimens of East and West,—and that friendship may have the happiest consequences for India. The British doctor, by his devoted conduct toward his prisoner, has genuinely touched the hearts of thousands who were previously only too ready to call themselves the enemies of his race.—Youth's Companion.

Education and Religion

"Education and religion are absolutely essential to true democracy," states a Bishop of the Church; and he adds: "It has been the province of Hobart College to blend the two to a remarkable degree."

That fact is the basis of Hobart's strong appeal to students who come from homes in which a definite religious atmosphere has been maintained. Hobart, ever since its founding, has recognized the value of religion to its students and has always given them ample facilities for the exercise of their religious instincts.

It is not surprising that many students, after entering Hobart, seek affiliation with the Church; nor is it surprising that nearly four hundred Hobart graduates have been ordained to the Protestant Episcopal Ministry.

Applications for admission to the 103rd class are now being received. For information address the Rev. Murray Bartlett, D. D., President.

HOW LONG TO THE END---Dan. 12:6

Does the Chronological Prophecy in Daniel 12 point to the very year of our Lord's Return?

When the difference in the lengths of the four periods in this chapter (which were given as an answer to the above question) is regarded as occurring at their beginnings, instead of at their endings, they are found to have a common end, because they culminate in a single year, the present one.

Is not this the answer requested and the opening of God's long-closed time-lock, the unsealing promised to "the wise" in "the time of the end"?

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

No man does his best who works only for pay.

It is difficult for truth to travel on the wings of suspicion.

The way we treat man is the surest test of the state of our hearts toward God.

Christian benevolence sees the bare feet of a little child across the ocean.

Realizing what Christ has done for us ought to make us put heart into everything we do for Him.

"I should be a traitor to my country if I did not do everything in my power to abolish war."—Major-General John F. O'Ryan.

"Be thou faithful" is the word that rings from heaven in every ear, in every smallest piece of work we are doing. Faithfulness is a lofty standard. It means our very best and most always. Anything less is unfaithfulness.—J. R. Miller.

Dr. Parker was discussing with some impatience the long words which are used to express simple concepts. "You talk," said he, "of heredity; you mean the flesh; of environment, you mean the world. You talk of tendency; you mean the devil."

"I never knew a night so bleak
Light failed to follow on its track;
I never knew a storm so gray
It failed to have its clearing-day.
I never knew such bleak despair
That there was not a rift, somewhere.
I never knew an hour so drear
Love could not fill it full of cheer."

Human perfection is reality of desire, and sincerity of endeavor, and that in Christ is accepted; perfect righteousness was attained only by Christ, and that is imputed; these are two joyful truths of our religion; and I know of no other that can quiet the soul, or carry it on with so swift a progress towards real holiness.—T. Adam.

CAN A MAN KNOW GOD?

It is a difficult task for the mind untrained in science to grasp the significance of the discoveries that are being made in the laboratories. We had hardly accustomed our thought and speech to the early tenet of the science of evolution that nature always works in uniform fashion and never proceed by leaps, before the new discovery is announced that nature has no concern with uniformity, that every advance is by leaps, that all life is creative and continually seeks new forms of expression.

In biology as in physics we are confronted with the statement that there are no "things," only "action" in the universe. We are told that the ultimates that constitute the atom are so charged with potential energy that should the energy latent in a few drops of water suddenly be liberated, this sudden play of energy would in an instant wreck our planet, and fill the space about us with debris more impalpable than star-dust. The further statement is made that if the ultimates of the atom could be broken up, the result would be free energy; and the belief is expressed that somewhere in the universe these ultimates are so broken up.

The mind staggers when it is invited to contemplate a condition in which matter is being made and unmade. Some dreamers in the laboratory tell us that life is but one mode of this primal energy.

The poetic imagination of the ancients used to picture a cave of the winds where lived the forces that roamed at will through the open spaces. The facts of science have passed beyond the furthest reach of poetic fancy. Eager and unafraid men follow the track of creative energy till the breath of the infinite is in their faces.

Marvelous as has been the progress in the knowledge of the constitution and laws of the physical universe, it is hardly too much to say that this increase of knowledge has furnished us no data as to the being of God. The most that science can do for man in his quest is to furnish him with a vocabulary of thought, convenient symbols in which to frame ideas. The term "free energy" promises great aid to the student of the spiritual.

Truth conceived as the faithful image of physical reality has intrinsic value but truth so conceived cannot lead man to God.

The value of beauty is an intrinsic and not a derived value, yet not even beauty can aid man in his unending quest. The child, who turns in his hand a kaleidoscope, creates an almost unparalleled beauty of form and color from the casual grouping of a few bits of broken glass. The experimenter in the laboratory, who runs his fiddle-bow along the edge of a mounted plate of brass upon which sand has been scattered, beholds an ever-changing scene of beauty in forms as graceful and intricate as those seen in a spider's web. Neither the consciousness of power nor that of beauty can give us God.

The scientists and their philosophic disciples seem to have forgotten that the one great problem of philosophy and religion is to grasp the personality of God. The ancient physicists and philosophers alike never failed to keep this truth in plain view. With the data of physics and the data of psychology before them, they one and all asked: "Does it mean anything?"

The story of the quest of the English scientist, George Romanes, is one of the most interesting narratives in Christian history. The intimate friend and associate of Darwin and Huxley—a child of the law if there ever was one—he was forever asking the question of the ages: "Does it mean anything?" Year after year he wrote out the data gleaned in the laboratory. Geology, physics, biology furnished the material. The story of the rocks, the stars, the flora and fauna of earth was taken in evidence; and still the sum of the equation always proved to be a finite result. One day as he was checking his data, he asked himself: "Have I put down all the facts? Under the head of 'man' I have written out the data gleaned in the laboratory, but there are facts learned outside the laboratory upon the truth of which I would more readily stake the integrity of my intelligence than upon any ascertained data of the laboratory."

When next he wrote out his data, instead of the abstract term "man," he wrote "my mother and my wife," and then made the addition. With something like a shout of jubilation he exclaimed: "I have found the infinite. Nothing but an infinite source of characterized energy can explain these two human beings whom I know better than I know all else of earth." This is the Christian revelation. Through the human we reach a knowledge of the divine. Character is the essence of divinity. It is difficult to grasp even the idea of character in an isolated and utterly unique deity. This is where the ancient philosophy broke down. It attempted to predicate a bald unit of knowledge and power; and however predicated, it was forced to deny to that unit, character, or to man any possibility of communion therewith. Personality means penetrability. It is this mark of penetrability that gives meaning and worth to the terms "human" and "social." It was Christ, and Christ alone, Who gave to the world the conception of a God in whom is all that we call "human" and all that we mean by "social." The Trinity, human in its penetrability, and social in the fact that character directs its energies, is an essential assumption for a philosophy that keeps in view the one great question of the human mind: "What does it all mean?"

IS THE BUNG-HOLE A PART OF THE BARREL?

In other days there lived in Augusta County, Virginia, a cooper who enjoyed a wide reputation for skill at his trade. He advertised his business by proclaiming that if any one sent him a barrel stave or hoop or a part of the barrel head he would guarantee to reconstruct the barrel in the exact form of the original. To this statement he added a footnote, saying: "There is no use sending me a bung-hole and expecting me to reconstruct the barrel. I cannot build a barrel with nothing but a bung-hole to start with."

The story of this cooper is respectfully submitted to those ingenious critics who are casting away the staves, the hoops and head of the historic faith, and proclaiming their ability to reconstruct the container of human hopes by a computation based on a unit of measure which is the size of the auger hole made by the latest investigator.

WHITE TO HARVEST

By the Reverend W. S. Claiborne

The summer is gone, and with it, conferences on rural work. How much has been accomplished, God alone knows, but much that has been said and written during and after these conferences seems to miss the mark.

The rural people haven't horns and hoofs. They have minds and souls like other people, and can easily be taught to make the most of themselves, given proper leaders. They even have certain advantages not generally recognized by settlement workers direct from large cities—country people are patient. They know nothing of pretense and veneer; their ideas are simple and direct. They know nothing of the nervous rush of urban life. They live with nature and long to know God. Regardless of locality, they are always interested in religion and politics. One can always rouse their constructive interest in God and good government, if one has something to give in the way of faith and sound counsel.

The Church has an excellent opportunity to go into the highways and by-ways, and bring men to Christ. But how can this be done? In our judgment, by establishing a small mission school in each little settlement, and giving each school a leader who is interested in the things that interest the people of the community.

This teacher must understand and love the people, and be capable of teaching them to do the things they needs must do, in a better way.

A group of half a dozen small mission schools, with a priest going from one to another, is preferable to one large institution with its urban atmosphere and inevitable tendency to grow out of touch and sympathy with the rural attitude toward life.

We Americans have been worshipping "big" things, forgetting that the really worth while things in life are the smaller ones—such as the little village school, whence the mission teacher goes from home to home, listening sympathetically to the trials and troubles of everyday life, suggesting, as occasion arises, remedies for these troubles, gathering the children to school, teaching them to read and write, and keep their hands clean and their clothes neat. That is a big job, and one well worth while. Such a way of doing things is far more valuable than one large institution, reaching but a few people.

One woman, with the love of God in her heart, and the grace of common sense, is far more valuable than the best professionally trained person turned out by the large institutions. Training that does not give constant personal contact is almost valueless in rural work. To make efficient rural workers, we must get away from cut-and-dried professional training, and somehow obtain a more natural development, under conditions similar to those the trainee will later serve under.

We must get all the consecrated, common-sense women we can find, and put them to work in the mission stations. Then we must find (if we can) real missionary priests who are willing to serve God and man. Thus only can it be done.

After twenty-five years in the mountains of Tennessee, having had all sorts and conditions of helpers, I realize that the best help I have ever been able to get, came from those who have written me that they had no training in the kind of work I wanted done, but only understanding and a desire to be of service. Many a time have I replied "Come on—we will do the training." We worked together, and they were successful. No two people can do everything alike. Each individual personality must be used, and this factor is of great value, provided common-sense and love exist in the individual.

Religiously speaking, our rural sections are in frightful condition. The Christian Churches have very largely deserted, and the country is being left to quacks. As a result the more intelligent men and women in the country have no contact, with the Church and of course will have nothing to do with the quacks. They prefer to sit under a tree and discuss crops, politics, and their own theories of religion, rather than listen to the harangue of the illiterate and untrained. Revivals are becoming a thing of the past in the country.

A few grown people who live on excitement, and the young who are out for a lark, welcome the revival, but I am persuaded that rural persons of intelligence remain uninterested. This does not mean that they are less religious, but more religious, and more intelligent, for uninformed fanatical preaching seems to them irreverent. We will have no trouble getting these intelligent people to church, if we have anything to give them. As a matter of fact, it is easier to interest them, than to interest their city prototypes. So, if we expect to save America, we must get hold of rural America.

How Criminals Are Made

By the Rev. William E. Cashin,

Chaplain of Sing Sing Prison, in the New York Times.

"Many philanthropically inclined persons of means have become interested in aiding in the restoration of ex-convicts to normal civil life. While their intentions are to be commended, it is more difficult to praise their methods.

"Not long ago I was invited by the wife of a prominent banker to take tea with her and several friends who were interested in the after-prison problem. I met a young banker, a young attorney of considerable prominence, a business man with large interests and another guest whom I took to be a gentleman of leisure. The hostess explained to me that each of these men, as well as she herself, wanted to interest themselves in one released prisoner. She said it was their intention of lending these unfortunates a helping hand until they were capable of helping themselves.

"They were surprised when I shook my head in dissent. I said that I couldn't see it at all. I pointed out that they could never hope to get the viewpoints of the men they would try to assist. I made it plain that the gulf between them was far too wide. The benefactors would find themselves reaching down to the beneficiaries and there would be all sorts of friction and misunderstandings. The former convicts would either ridicule or be in awe of the banker, the lawyer and the business man.

Home Influence Counts Most.

"I had what probably seemed to be an even more brutal message for the woman. I had seen her hastily dismiss her children who had come into the room to talk with her. She had impatiently sent them off to the moving pictures with a governess, saying that she had to discuss important matters with me.

"I told her that she should give her personal attention to those children and not disturb herself about other people's erring offspring. I made it plain that 70 or 80 per cent of the criminals had come from unsympathetic homes and that there was no greater preventive for wrongdoing than a great desire on the part of parents to understand their children, to pay attention to them and become their confidants. Social work, like charity, should begin at home, I told her.

"Her husband vigorously applauded my sentiments, told me later that she had been so shocked and unnerved by what I said in the presence of her pleasant callers that she had taken to bed for three weeks, but he said he didn't mind and the way he shook my hand convinced me that he felt I had rendered his family a service.

"Whenever I speak to people about my work at Sing Sing I stress the need for more amicable relationship in the home. It is not surprising that children, after they get old enough to select their own friends, do little more than eat and sleep at home. If they get in some minor scrapes they know that they cannot get sympathy at home. They go where they will get a comforting pat on the back and where they will not be nagged by the hour.

"It is, perhaps, a far cry from answering the endless questions of a child to the clanging of the big gates of Sing Sing. And yet I have seen how closely the two are related. Only seldom do we get boys from homes where there was understanding. I do not refer to wealthy homes. Even the poorest parent can give what the richer one often neglects to provide—the whole-hearted effort to make the boy feel that his parents are his best friends. The boy should not be coddled, of course, as that deprives him of his individuality. But there is a happy and safe medium which should be the goal of every parent."

THE CHURCH IN PALESTINE

By the Right Reverend Rennie MacInniss, D. D.

Bishop of Jerusalem, in "Bible Lands."

IN regard to the political position of things in Palestine I think not much is happening either way. That is to say, the people of the country, the great majority of whom are in such intense opposition to Zionism and British policy in Palestine, are not becoming more bitter.

Palestine proper is populated by only three-quarters of a million people. Of this number, 620,000 are Mohammedans, 75,000 are Christians and 80,000 are Jews.

You will see, therefore, that the Jews in Palestine only number one in ten. A great many people think of Palestine as populated with Jews, with a few Arabs living amongst them.

It is just the reverse.

Amongst the Mohammedans most is being done by the hospitals with their excellent influence, and by the schools teaching the children. It is indeed remarkable how much they earn in these schools that remains with them all through their lives. I am glad to say that the attitude of the Mohammedans in Palestine is nothing like as fanatical or bigoted as in many other parts of the Moslem world.

But first let me tell you how good it is that there are encouragements in the missionary work amongst the Mohammedans. The results, of course, are small; we cannot expect that they will be anything else.

No man could be baptized in Palestine before the war without instant risk of death and the certainty of having to go off to Egypt. Last Summer I had the great satisfaction of baptizing a young Mohammedan openly by immersion in a specially-built font. It was really a very thrilling opportunity. The Church Missionary Society asked me if I would do it, saying very wisely: "We want this to be as public as possible. We want it to be well known. We want the people to know that their own Chief is in entire sympathy with us. Will you have it at St. George's?" "With all my heart," I replied.

When the moment came, I took him by the hand and led him down the steps, he into the water and I into the part that was dry. There, standing facing him, I immersed him thrice, under the water in the Triune Name. Then I took him by the hand and led him up the steps again. A cloak was flung around him; he was taken out through a door close by to resume his clothing, and we had a hymn and a short address until he came in for the conclusion of the service. That is only one example of work that is going on today, live work in which we are privileged to take our part, work which I believe is going to be and should be multiplied indefinitely.

In regard to the Jewish position in Palestine, I believe the opportunities are very unique, owing to the great number of Jews coming into the country.

There are already about 80,000 Jews in the population, and about 10,000 Zionists a year are coming in. Of these a large proportion—I should suppose the greater number of them are orthodox Jews who are religious people and keep up the old customs and the old ideas of the Jewish people.

At the back of our work is the hope that the day will come when, possibly by means of the efforts we are making, just like all the Societies in Palestine, the Jewish people will again be a blessing to all the nations of the world. They were in the past. Do not forget that. It is the most wonderful thing. We ourselves trace back all that we hold most dear to Jewish sources, Jewish writers who wrote our Holy Book, Jewish men who went out to be the first martyrs, the first apostles, the first missionaries; and as they were the first, so they have ever remained the finest missionaries that the world has ever produced. It is possible to imagine the time when Jews, who lived in Palestine, Jews who are now coming into Palestine once again, revived and redeemed by the blood of Jesus, will go forth into all the world to make Him known; and none can make Him known better than the Hebrew Christian.

But these Jews are not evangelized. We cannot do it. It is only the Church alive in many lands that can give us in Palestine the means to make the Gospel known to the Jews in that country. It is of great importance, because there is a very remarkable change of mind on the part of many of the Jews today.

A very large number, particularly, perhaps, of the non-orthodox Jews, hold an entirely different view of Jesus Christ from what they held years ago. Years ago it was impossible for any orthodox Jew to name His Name without spitting on the ground or showing some other evident mark of contempt and abuse. Now, on the contrary, in a very large number of cases, that attitude has gone altogether, and I could give you many examples of this. I know Jews in good positions who are not merely ready to read the Old Testament, but are reading the New Testament with pleasure and profit. They say, "Well, but this Jesus of Nazareth is not only yours, but ours."

That was put to me most forcibly again in America last year by several people, but the most striking example of it was in the case of Rabbi Stephen Wise.

Rabbi Wise, of New York, is known, of course, all through the United States and the rest of the world. I came into contact with him and felt very much drawn to him. I went to see him one day and, while I was waiting in his room, I was surprised to see a picture of an incident from the life of Christ, I think the Baptism; then I looked around and, to my surprise, every picture in his drawing room was a picture taken from the Gospels. When he came into the room, he said, "I see you are interested in my pictures. I expect you are surprised to find these pictures from the life of Christ in a Jewish Rabbi's room."

I said, "It is very surprising to me. I had not the least idea that that would be your mind. Tell me what it means."

"We regard Him," he said, "as not yours only, but ours. He was the greatest Jew that ever lived. We want to venerate Him; we do venerate Him. I could tell you at length of all that I have written about Him, of what I say about Him when preaching." He went on at some length speaking in a most interesting way of his views of Jesus.

I said, "Yes, that I can understand entirely, but what beats me are these pictures of the Crucifixion. What do they mean to you? Why have pictures of the Crucifixion? Who was He whom you crucified?"

He looked very grave. "Well," he said, "that was the most tragic blunder we ever made. But there are bad men in every age. Caiaphas was a bad man. We have suffered for his iniquity ever since. But you want to know more of what I think of Him whom we crucified. I think the position is this. We regard Him not so much as God come down to man, as a Man who lived so near to God that He drew others with Him into the Holy Presence."

If that is not a change of mind, I do not know what is. This Jewish Rabbi ended up by saying, "Now I want you to preach in my Synagogue on Sunday morning." We tried to plan it out. Unluckily my berth was booked for the Saturday and I could not do it. He tried hard to persuade me, saying, "I have not only the Sabbath service on the Saturday, but a large service attended by about two thousand people in the Synagogue on the Sunday morning. A great many Christians come, and I would like you to preach."

I said, "Do you mean to say you would let a Christian Bishop loose in your pulpit to say what he likes, because, of course, I would not come under any other condition?" He replied, "Of course I should not expect you to come unless you told us all you wanted." I assured him that I, too, would have loved to come, and that I hoped later to have the opportunity offered me again.

So, then, if there be only ten men like that in Palestine, and there are far more, if there be only a hundred, if there be only a thousand Jews in Palestine who feel like Rabbi Wise in regard to Jesus of Nazareth, how great is the call to you, the members of the Church at home, to give them the chance of hearing about Him.

"I WAS IN PRISON AND YE VISTED ME"

By Frank Moore, President of the American Prison Association

THE last Sunday in October, has, for years, been set aside as Prison Sunday in the Churches.

The American Prison Association, therefore, wishes to make an appeal to all churches to observe the day this year on October 26. Each minister is asked to make the work of the prisons their subject at least at one service.

That which effects the prisons of the country has an important bearing on the lives of a large number of its population. These prisoners are often times forgotten because they live behind walls where the public does not see them. They are, however, human beings, whose needs are very great, and whose interests must not be overlooked by those who are followers of Him Who said, "I was in prison and ye visited me."

Crime is on the increase in this country to an alarming degree:

The Census of 1904 showed one hundred prisoners for every one hundred thousand of our population.

The Census of 1910 showed one hundred and twenty-five prisoners for every one hundred thousand of our population.

The Census of 1922 showed one hundred and fifty prisoners for every one hundred thousand of our population.

The Census, therefore, shows that from 1904 to 1922, crime increased in this country at the appalling rate of fifty per cent.

Every year approximately one out of every six hundred and sixty-six citizens of the country greets the New Year in prison.

In 1910 the entire number confined in prisons was 479,736. A population greater than any one of our ten smallest states, and larger than the combined population of four of our smaller states: Wyoming, Nevada, Alaska, and Delaware.

Therefore, the question of what can be done in handling the offender is a subject which should require the suggestions and combined wisdom of all who seek to make this a better land in which to live. And the discussion of this topic throughout the country in every pulpit by those who are interested in the betterment of mankind is earnestly sought.

Recently, it was found in one of the penal institutions of the country that only one out of every hundred inmates attended church regularly before they were arrested. This certainly ought to be food for thought. It is not a question of one being out on the mountain, and ninety and nine in the fold, but of the reverse. What ought the churches to do about a problem like this? What can they do? If the churches could solve this problem they would greatly decrease the number who are in prisons.

That which the penal institutions of this country needs more than anything else is the establishment within them of a strong moral power that would turn men from sin to righteousness. There was a prison two thousand years ago where a man was bound by chains, hand and foot, and closely watched by strong guards, both when he awoke and when he slept; but it is said of this prison that an Angel came into it and a light shined in the prison and Peter's fetters fell off and he girded himself and went out a free man. But the other side of that story is that in a certain house in that city there was a company of men and women praying for him, and the Angel entered the prison in answer to their prayers; and so Peter was freed.

If men in prisons are going to be made free from sin and from the fetters that bind them, the churches must take an interest in the prison problems of the country. It is not a question of punishment but of reformation that must be worked out in the prisons. Revenge does not belong to man—"Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord."

Prisons are influenced too much by politics and by business, and this is largely because the religious world has not made itself more potently felt in backing up the moral work which the prisons ought to do. The force of no influence of the country is so needed to be brought to bear upon the prisons of today as the influence of the churches, in order that the prisons may more strongly enter into the work of "Character Building," which is their highest duty.

If the churches would be more like the little band of Christians that prayed for Peter, no greater power could be brought to bear upon the prisons to make them better.

There are many men in charge of prisons of the country who are anxious to do a great amount of moral work with their charges, but are not able to do it because they do not have men and women who would be willing to work with them in reaching the individual offender. The head of a penal institution with hundreds and it may be thousands under him has so many duties that personal work with each individual is to him a physical impossibility. The Church could be of valuable help to him if it would only offer its assistance.

A new light is needed in prisons. It is the light of religion which is the foundation of morality that should be more fully let into prisons so that there might be no moral darkness in them.

Therefore, the Prison Association makes an earnest appeal that this year the churches see their opportunity, which is a great one, and that beginning with the present time they may exercise a greater and more constant influence upon the moral and religious work of penal institutions.

It is with this in view that it is hoped that every pulpit in the land shall take "Prison" as its subject Sunday, October 26, 1924.

Internationalism and Christianity

By John Fredstrom.

The enormous development of trade and intercourse between the peoples of the world during the past century has made nations dependent on one another to a very great degree. The time is therefore ripe for undertaking, as a common task, not by isolated efforts, the creation of a new and truer civilization. Old dogmas and prejudices, the baneful outgrowth of ignorance and selfishness, must yield to a higher conception of the world and the interests of humanity.

The foundation for that judicial order which is destined to unite men into a brotherhood of international cooperation was laid by the Great Master of Nazareth two thousand years ago. He was called the Saviour of the World. In His teachings, a religion of wonderful ethical beauty, we not only find the wisest laws of conduct, based on divine love supreme, but we discern therein the ground plan for a civilization that shall make for human happiness and welfare.

Holy Writ tells us that when the Lord came in the flesh, under the simplest circumstances, the angels sang this song in the hearing of the Bethlehem shepherds:

"Glory to God in the highest,
And on earth peace and good will to men."

No matter how we interpret this glorious hymn from the realms above, it remains a prophecy of a new world order to be established along lines of true Christian doctrine.

On one occasion Jesus said that He was come to kindle a fire on earth, and that He wished it were already burning. What was the fire Christ had in mind? We may be sure that He meant the fire of love, divine truth, and eternal righteousness, destined to destroy all evil and untruth in the world. The great Nazarene proclaimed powerfully, especially in the Sermon on the Mount, that lies and all manner of evil shall be overcome by the power of truth and Christian love. He exhorted to righteousness and peace in these words: "Love your enemies, and pray for them that persecute you." The Master's parable of the Good Samaritan likewise instructs us how to deal even with strangers and enemies according to the individual and the nation.

Christ taught us to pray: "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." But the kingdom of God cannot be realized on earth until the peoples of the earth have been taught to deal in the spirit of Christ one with another.

Under prevailing political and religious conditions a most vigorous and highly systematized campaign of education in all lands is called for to bring about in actuality the brotherhood of man.

A World Peace Mission is necessary. The time has come when the people of all nations must obey the mandate of the Prince of Peace requiring us to love all men.

When the various nations shall have been brought to the knowledge of wisdom and truth it will be a comparatively simple matter to outlaw war and put an international system of jurisdiction in its place. All that remains then is for each nation to declare by popular referendum for complete disarmament.

The United States of America, with a population representing all races and nationalities, offers the very best field for the work of an affective World Peace Mission. There is not the slightest doubt that among more than a hundred millions of people speaking all the languages of the earth are found a great number of high-minded and well qualified persons who, with lectures, pamphlets, newspaper articles, will enlist as missionaries in the cause of peace and an international judicial system.

DR. FOSDICK RESIGNS

Dr. Fosdick's Letter to the New York Presbytery, Presented October 6, Was as Follows:

THE REV. EDGAR WHITAKER WORK, D. D., Center Lovell, Maine.

My dear Dr. Work:

I have before me your letter of September first, informing me of the action of the General Assembly with reference to my relationship with the First Presbyterian Church of New York. I agree with you that this action is a sincere and kindly endeavor to find a solution for a trying situation and, from my first acquaintance with the Assembly's decision I have so understood it. It is with the more regret, therefore, that I must write you my declination of the proposal which you so courteously have transmitted to me.

My declination to become a Presbyterian minister is not at all due to denominational reasons. Were the transfer of my membership from one denomination to another the only question involved, I have no sectarian loyalties that would make the change difficult. But that is not the only question involved. The proposal of the General Assembly calls for a definite creedal subscription, a solemn assumption of theological vows in terms of the Westminster Confession.

In answer to this proposal I must in all honesty set my long standing and assured conviction that creedal subscription to ancient confessions of faith is a practice dangerous to the welfare of the church and to the integrity of the individual conscience.

There have been two historic attitudes toward creedal subscription among evangelical Christians. Some have welcomed it, have founded their churches upon acceptance of definite formulations of faith, and then with the passage of time and the coming of new ways of thinking have sought liberty from the literal meanings of their confessions by emendation and interpretation.

Others, equally evangelical, have felt that this practice is perilous to honesty and hampering to the free leadership of the Spirit. They have distrusted the ethics and feared the effect of subscription to ancient forms of statement, involving successive reinterpretations of the meaning attached to the words. They have refused to require this in their churches, and, as individuals, they have not submitted to it. To this second way of thinking I unreservedly belong.

There are many creedal statements such as the Augsburg Confession, the Westminster Confession, the Thirty-nine Articles, which express in the mental formulas of the generations when they were written abiding Christian experiences and convictions. I honor all of them; they represent memorable achievements in the development of Christian thought. But for me to make a creedal subscription in terms of any one of them would be a violation of conscience.

Let me add also that this general and longstanding attitude toward creedal subscription is necessarily heightened by the particular situation in which I now find myself.

In theology I hold the opinions which hundreds of Presbyterian ministers hold. I am an evangelical Christian. So many men of my position have been cordially welcomed into the Presbyterian ministry, as holding the substance of doctrine for which the church stands, that I have no reason to suppose that the Presbytery of New York would fail to receive me. But, after two years of vehement personal attack from a powerful section of the Presbyterian Church, I face now an official proposal which calls on me either to make a theological subscription or else leave an influential pulpit. Any subscription made under such circumstances would be generally and, I think, truly interpreted as moral surrender. I am entirely willing that my theology should be questioned; I am entirely unwilling to give any occasion for the questioning of my ethics.

One further reason for my declination remains. I undertook my present relationship at the First Church with entire good faith. Knowing nothing about Presbyterian regulations with regard to the employment of ministers from other denominations, I refused to take responsibility for any decision in the matter. When, however, the Session of the Church, the Presbytery and the Synod had passed upon the proposed arrangement without a dissenting voice, I supposed that my relationship with the church was without taint of irregularity.

It was the interdenominational character of the arrangement which chiefly attracted me. Here was an object lesson in the new freedom with which Christians could disregard denominational lines and work together. The arrangement at the First Church has been so regarded in popular thought and I have rejoiced in that aspect of the relationship.

The proposal of the General Assembly, however, would reverse all that. I recognize that the Assembly's decision concerns the particular relationship at the First Church and cannot fairly be interpreted as a general rule excluding the ministry of non-Presbyterians from Presbyterian pulpits. Nevertheless, the principle involved in the decision, if logically applied, would certainly tend to discourage the employment of any except Presbyterian clergymen as ministers in Presbyterian pulpits.

It may not enact a rule but it suggests a precedent. It encourages a return to the principle of a denominationally "closed shop." It represents, so it seems to me, a retrograde sectarian movement. As a convinced interdenominationalist, therefore, who does not believe in an exclusive but in an inclusive Church, I must not consent to the decision. To concur with it would be to agree with an attitude with which I radically disagree, to fall in with a denominational spirit which I regret and deplore.

As you see, my reasons for declining the courteous invitation which you have extended to me spring from my conscience. I must not do what for me would be a disingenuous and fictitious thing, under the guise of taking solemn vows. I am sure you would not have me do it.

Let me add a final expression of my cordial thanks for all the goodwill which I have met in my Presbyterian associations in New York. As associate minister at the First Church I have spent five of the most memorable and enjoyable years of my life. I sincerely regret that so much uproar has attended the latter part of my ministry, but I am grateful that it has been uproar from a distance and that among my brethren in the Church and Presbytery I have had such unfailing friendship and such generous support. I leave these relationships now with a most lively sense of my indebtedness to you and to those whom you represent and with prayerful good wishes for the prosperity of the great Church to which you belong.

I am sending a copy of this letter to the Clerk of Session of the First Presbyterian Church together with my resignation as associate minister.

(Signed) HARRY EMERSON FOSDICK.

When one that holds communion with the skies
Has filled his urn where these pure waters rise,
And once more mingles with us meaner things,
'Tis even as if an angel shook his wings:
Immortal fragrance fills the circuit wide,
That tells us whence his treasures are supplied.

So when a ship, well freighted with the stores
The sun matures on India's spicy shores,
Has dropped her anchor, and her canvas furled
In some safe haven of our western world,
'Twere vain inquiry to what port she went:
The gale informs us, laden with the scent.

THE DEEPER VOICE. By Annie Steger Winston. George H. Doran Company, New York. Pp. 134.

Annie Steger Winston, some twenty years ago endeared herself to a discerning group of readers through her Memoirs of a Child. So simple a delineation of the thoughts and preoccupations of childhood that its art was forgotten in one's frank amazement at meeting oneself "in a book" after many years. In her new volume, Miss Winston's art is found to have gained and her spiritual insight to have been quickened, while her knowledge of child nature has taught her to bring home to us the lesson of the Deeper Voice—that the one remedy for the evils from which our faith suffers today lies in that childlikeness of approach to Christianity enjoined by Christ Himself. "Most of us, nowadays, feel the need of finding our way home out of wildernesses of perplexity, confusion, dismay . . . the very goodness of God ceases to be a certainty to be carelessly assumed. It becomes a faith to be fought for" and for this faith as it is in Christ Jesus the book is an exquisite plea, so striking in diction that we are tempted to quote phrase after phrase.

MAN'S FIRST DISOBEDIENCE. By Leander S. Keyser, D. D. The MacMillan Company, New York. Pp. 81.

The author of this little volume sets out to discuss the age-old problem of sin and suffering. He addresses himself to this question of antiquity "with the hope that cheer may be brought to burdened souls." He is a vigorous advocate for the literal interpretation of the Book of Genesis, his method being to state his own position in the first chapter, then to prove it by setting up the various other opinions, and demolishing these to his own satisfaction. He then proceeds to put forward his arguments which are excellent ones, and well stated for the historicity of Adam and Eve and the Garden of Eden. The book is an interesting, and well-written contribution to the discussion now going on as to the interpretation of the Bible.

M.

DEEP IN THE HEARTS OF MEN. By Ba Mary E. Waller. Little, Brown and Company, Boston, Mass. Pp. 459. Price $2.00.

This book represents the best side of life—real goodness, where all the characters are worth while and trying to do their bit.

The plot of the story is laid in the coal mines, and every nationality is represented. While the hero and heroine have been brought up in a cultivated atmosphere, with every luxury that money can give, their chief aim and effort in life is to uplift and help their fellowman and snobbery or superiority seems absolutely foreign to their nature. Social Service is splendidly demonstrated all through the story. It is an inspiration to come so closely in touch with such a spirit of helpfulness.

The love story is clean and interestingly developed and gives one a fine insight into the home life of the miners.

The book is splendidly summed up in two verses, preceding one of the chapters:

"What care I for caste or creed?
It is the deed, it is the deed;
What for class or what for clan?
It is the man, it is the man.

"It is the heart within the breast;
It is the faith, it is the hope,
It is the struggle up the slope,
It is the brain and eve to see—
One God and one humanity."

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions. No "Letter to the Editor" will appear in our columns except over the signature of the writer.

A LETTER OF THANKS.

Mr. Editor:

I ask the privilege of your columns to make an announcement which is most gratifying to South Dakota and its friends. On June 14 last we suffered a disastrous tornado which totally destroyed six of our Indian churches and wrecked others. Through the kindness of the National Council and the Church Press an appeal for reconstruction was widely and effectively circulated. The response, even during the summer when congregations are scattered, has been so unexpectedly generous that we find ourselves on October 1 absolutely assured of receiving the total sum asked, which was $15,000. Cash receipts have been remarkably prompt and there are definite pledges of further help when congregations reassemble this fall. From these two sources the authorities of the District are confident that our needs will be met, and we do not feel justified in further promoting the appeal.

It seems right also that we should notify those who may be planning to help, but have not expressed their intention, in order that we may not be receiving surplus funds when so many other worthy causes are in urgent need of help.

May I, in closing, express my profound gratitude to the astonishing number of friends who have come so promptly to our aid and assure them that through their help we are able to push forward the reconstruction. Before the winter sets in we hope to have more of the destroyed churches restored and the injured ones repaired, and by the first anniversary of the disaster we ought to have all of them again in use and in better condition than before the tornado.

We are deeply thankful for the prayers and gifts of this host of friends, and we gladly look upon this achievement as a demonstration that the generous heart of the Church will always respond to the appeal of a definite need.

First Things First

By Laird Archer.

"We are spending too much for relief—we can't afford it."

A man of large business affairs said this to me when I told him what I had seen recently in the Near East. He is a wise man. Certainly he knows business conditions. Therefore I thought he must be right. Possibly we can't afford it—foreign markets are upset—farm values are not what they ought to be—collections are slow. I became concerned. I began to investigate. Had we overspent ourselves on refugee children? I brushed aside the Biblical philosophy that he who gives prospers in the end. No idealism. Only cold facts.

Fact Number One surprised me. Government figures showed that we paid thirty-three million dollars in a year's time for—peanuts!

Thirty-three million—and I had been dubious about ten million for the lives of orphan boys and girls.

But I wasn't convinced. We need peanuts. They are food. University figures rate peanut butter as one of the necessities of life.

I went further. It took a hundred and seventy thousand people working hard to keep us supplied with the corsage bouquets and dinner flowers we demanded last year. Goodness knows what we paid for the flowers. A florist explained the other day that coal conditions were the reason I had to pay more than I used to for a half dozen roses. But flowers are necessary.

And if it has to be orphans or flowers—as compared with a lusty, travel worn, foot-sore orphan a beautiful, fragrant flower may be preferable, although it does cost more per half dozen than would feed that boy for a month.

I looked on. We spent sixteen million dollars in a year for paper flowers.

Paper? No fragrance—no life?

Only color! And I thought of the need for color in the cheeks of a child I saw in Syria.

However, color is necessary in our drab lives.

I found that we made up for what the paper flowers lacked by fifty million dollars worth of perfumery. That was the value of smelling stuff made for Americans last year.

But perfumery is necessary in the city's congestion of choking fumes.

Then I found that we spent $115,000,000 in the year for pictures of ourselves. In these "hard" times we still must have ourselves photographed. That is right. Photographers must have work. Our friends must have pictures.

But I had a picture in my mind of a lean lad fresh from a period of starvation getting out of Turkey and weakly trying to learn how to make shoes in an American orphanage at Beirut. I wondered what kind of a picture of him in a year's time would be produced by the saving of a few pictures of each photographed American.

After that I learned that the plumes of our hats cost us $16,000,000. Thinking again of my manufacturer friend, I agreed that the plumes were necessary—although I'm inclined to believe that the best feather in our hat last year was the ten million invested in young lives.

I went on through the list of necessities as compared with unnecessary orphans.

We spent $93,000,000 for regalia and society badges.

I prize my lodge and my fellow lodgemen and I am honored by the badge I wear, although I might have paid less to the jeweler and got a less expensive one. This led me back irresistibly to the white star badge of Near East Relief I saw on the arms of women and men toiling to rescue children on the Anatolia frontier.

We invested fifty-two million in chewing gum.

We are chewing thirty-five million dollars more of it than we were in 1914.

It took sixty-two factories and nearly four thousand busy people to keep us supplied.

They also need the work.

But I couldn't forget the boy I saw chewing a black crust of bread that the average American boy would throw to the winds.

Twenty-three million for sports—two hundred and nine million for ice cream and confectionery—but why go farther?

The money is spent.

Is there more? Have we anything left for boys?

We paid $15,000,000 alone for pocket books in which to carry our earnings for 1923.

How about a few million for children?

Appeal for World Peace

The time has now come when powerful efforts must be made to create a new spirit in world affairs. If selfishness and hate are to continue to be the ruling passions of nations, the human race is irredeemably doomed to a greater disaster than that of 1914. But such folly must not be again. The dominant perils of earth must be conquered by Christian love and the divine power of truth. This can be brought about only by an effective campaign of enlightenment carried on systematically among all the nations of the world. A World Peace Mission is imperative. Noble, clear-visioned champions of peace must show the peoples how a system of international justice is to be put into practice.

The time to begin this work is now. Now, if ever, nationalism and chauvinism can be superseded by a sound world conception making for a union of all peoples in a common world parliament.

For the reasons stated the World Peace Mission appeals to all noble-minded men and women possessed of a desire to go to other countries as missionaries for world peace to unite with this movement by applying at once to The World Peace Bureau, Minneapolis, Minnesota. Applications should be in by the first of November, each applicant giving age, occupation, state of health, education, and language used, besides English. In addition, send certificate by the Governor or other higher official as to qualifications as speaker, writer or organizer.

The plan contemplates that every peace missionary shall, within the field of his or her activity, by public addresses, published articles, and pamphlets, in a forceful and convincing manner show up militarism as an inefficient and antiquated system, disastrous in its consequences, therefore to be supplanted by an international system of jurisdiction.

A truly civilized world order can be evolved only by an intensive campaign of education raising the intelligence and moral conceptions of nations step by step. The World Peace Mission must teach men to think soundly before they can act nobly. From a sense of brotherhood and unity of interests will grow other human virtues, essential to the establishment of a new world order, in keeping with high culture and true civilization.

Very respectfully,

THE COUNCIL OF THE WORLD PEACE MISSION.

AMONG THE REFUGEES IN GREECE.

When Dr. Landes, the General Secretary of the World's Sunday-School Association, visited Greece in March of this year, he met a group of Greek and Armenian students from the School of Religion of Constantinople. These students because of their nationality were obliged to leave Constantinople and were continuing their studies in Athens. Inasmuch as these students are all ardent Christians and preparing to give their lives to Christian work, arrangements were made to have ten of them give four months of their summer time to organize Sunday Schools in the refugee camps located in and around Athens and Saloniki. Over a million Greeks and Armenians are now to be found in these camps.

A letter has been received at the World's Association headquarters from one of the students working in the Salonica District, in which he says: "There is a whole community here from Pontus in Asia Minor on the coast of the Black Sea. They are Greek Evangelical Protestants. We helped them organize a church in a house and also a Sunday School for the children, the whole town is now a refugee Protestant town. An appeal has gone to the Greek government officials for a place of worship and they have consented to the use of the old now unused Moslem mosque.—World Wide Sunday-School News.

SOMETHING DEFINITE.

The ideal organization of a Diocese for Social Service Activities is to have a Social Service Committee in every parish. When, however, one comes to the practical side of this matter the question immediately arises, "What shall the Social Service Committee in the parish do?" In order to answer this question in a way that shall be both definite and practical the Board of Social Service of the Diocese of Virginia has prepared a circular offering suggestions for specific purposes along this line.

As there is nothing local about the problems that are presented for consideration we are quoting this folder in full, in the hope that it may be helpful to rectors or heads of Church organizations in planning their social service activities. The folder reads as follows:

A Parish Program—Christian Social Service.

Dr. J. R. Brackett, in "Social Service Through the Parish," defines it thus:

"Christian Social Service is the practice of the good neighbor, of the warm heart and well informed mind, in the way of Jesus for the more abundant life of all; in fulfillment of the command to love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy mind and THY NEIGHBOR AS THYSELF."

Christian Social Service may also be defined as: "Christianity in Action," or "Neighborliness"; in other words, any helpful thing voluntarily done for anybody in the name of Jesus Christ is Christian Social Service.

This little folder is a reminder or a call to all members of the Church to search themselves in order to find out whether they are obeying Our Lord's command to "love thy neighbor as thyself." It also calls attention to some activities that may be listed as Christian Social Service. But, if you contemplate going out to do anything in the name of Christ, it asks you first to take account of your self and see if you have steadfastly set yourself to accomplish those things that should come first in every Christian life.

1. Are you regular in church attendance?
2. Are you regular in attendance at Holy Communion?
3. Are you a regular contributor to Church expenses?
4. Do you give rightful attention to the Church's Missions?
5. Do you give regular time to prayer and daily reading of Scripture and meditation thereon?
6. Do you exert every effort to make your home happy?

No person can do the most effective work in Christian Social Service as herein suggested, unless he has carefully regulated his own daily life as suggested above. When this is done, it is next suggested that he should duly decide the amount of leisure time from other duties he may offer the Church for neighborly service.

In every community there are found more or less delinquency, crime, preventable accidents and diseases, and premature deaths. Every Christian is pledged to love his neighbor as himself. Your community is your nearest neighbor. What is your Church doing about the problems in your community? What are you doing about them? Do you love your community? Is it a safe place in which to live? Is it a good place in which to bring up children?

Is your school the best school possible?

Is your church the best church possible?

Are your roads the best roads possible?

Are your children healthy?

Are you healthy?

What is the situation and attitude of your community in regard to divorce?

Does your court have a long list of criminal cases?

What kind of Almshouse have you?

Is your community sanitized?

What is the infant death rate for your community?

These are questions to make you pause and think. Is any non-Christian blaming your Church for not taking an active part in the elimination of these evils? What can you as an individual or your Church as a body, do to take away this reproach?

To "tithe time" may be objectionable to some of us who feel that all of our time as Christians is at the disposal of Our Lord, but if at present we are not giving any definite time to service to the Church, would it not be a good thing to plan to give a definite period of time daily or weekly? Let us try it out for a while until we have advanced to the place where we do not need to pledge ourselves but are actually known to be constantly on the Lord's business.

Suggested Community Activities For Christian People.

1. Take people to church.
2. Take invalids and old people to drive.
3. Act as "Big Brother" or "Big Sister."
4. Teach an illiterate to read and write.
5. Give volunteer service to State or City Health Agencies, Red Cross, Associated Charities, Juvenile Courts, Welfare Organizations, etc.
6. Conduct Sunday morning Day Nursery for babies and young children.
7. Help ex-prisoners to find friends and a job.
8. Help the handicapped and the unemployed to find jobs.
9. Visit the almshouse, orphanage, old people's home, hospital, or jail.
10. Establish a loan closet for welfare work in county or city.
11. Make some weekly recreation possible for over-worked mothers.
12. Organize a Community Chorus.
13. Visit shut-in, lonely or sick people and strangers.
14. Serve on Community Committees.
15. Give help in time of sickness.
16. Organize Little Mothers' Leagues, Mothers' Classes, Home Nursing Classes, etc.
17. Chaperone dances, picnics, excursions, etc., or provide other forms of wholesome recreation.
18. Assist in night school, day nursery, play grounds, etc.
19. Get treatment for crippled children and other invalids.
20. Teach regularly in Sunday School.
21. Sing regularly in the choir.
22. Organize corrective clinics for Sunday School or day school children.
23. Secure annual medical examinations for your Church's Cradle Roll.
24. Adopt an orphan.
25. Instruct one or more children daily in the practice of the principles of Christ.

It is suggested that every Christian give at least one hour a week (fifty-two hours a year) to neighborly service—the amount of time given should be in accordance with one's leisure time.

On a separate page which is arranged so that it can be detached is a pledge wherein a person may select and specify the particular kind of work that he or she is willing to do. The idea is to keep some record of what is accomplished, partly to inspire persons outside of the Church with information as to what is actually being done by the Church, and partly to check its own members and see if they are complying with their pledges.

We give herewith the pledge and paragraph that accompanies it:

Pledge.

The following pledge is binding only as long as the individual desires. It should be filled out, the desired work specified and noted, signed, and left with the minister or chairman of a Society designated by him. It is further suggested that a monthly report be given in order that the minister may know just what is being done by the members of his congregation in neighborly work. In order for the Central Office of the Church to know to what extent all its congregations are engaging in Social Service work, it is suggested that a summary of the monthly report be sent at the end of the church year to the proper recording official.

Christian Social Service Pledge.

I, as a Christian, member of.....Church and of the.....Society having a little leisure time, do promise that for the space of one year from date, I will try to give..... hours a week or a

OPENING OF THE NATIONAL CAMPAIGN FOR THE BISHOP TUTTLE MEMORIAL.

The national campaign for the Bishop Tuttle National Memorial and Endowment starts Sunday, October 12, and will continue during the month. A mass meeting will be held in Christ Church Cathedral, Sunday evening, when the opening address of the campaign will be made by the Rt. Rev. Thos. F. Gailor, D. D. The children's effort for Bishop Tuttle has already begun, boxes having been distributed with a story of Bishop Tuttle's life, in all the Church Schools of the country on the first Sunday of the month, with the request that each child make an effort to earn or save a dollar for the memorial to the dearly beloved Bishop who always signed himself in his annual messages to the children in "The Spirit of Missions," as "Your Commander-in-Chief."

The Memorial is to be a building in connection with Christ Church Cathedral, St. Louis, for General Church and Community Service, the two purposes so dear to Bishop Tuttle. It will be offered to the National Council as a central place for conferences and meetings, and there will be space, should it be desired at any time, to establish a sub-station of any department of the work. It will house the Bishop of Missouri and other diocesan officers and organizations, and it will enable Christ Church Cathedral to greatly enlarge the tremendous program of work it carries on as the only Protestant Church left in the very heart of business St. Louis. The memorial is planned to be a living, ever active reminder of Bishop Tuttle's great love and service for God and his fellowman, and men and women all over the country who knew and venerated Bishop Tuttle are asked to help in the erecting of his memorial.

Bishop Tuttle's life story is one of the great chapters of our American Church, and one that should be familiar to all of us that we might take pattern after it. His courage and faith in his days as a pioneer of law and order in the Far West with a great territory of 300,000 square miles, his untiring service for God and his fellow man, his great humility, his heart like that of a little child, his wise brain and his limitless tolerance, his unerring guidance of the affairs of the Church during his twenty years as Presiding Bishop, his tremendous influence over the lives of thousands of bishops, priests, men of his own communion, other faiths and men of no church at all—all of these are to be treasured in our hearts and minds.

The memorial was endorsed by the National Council and has the hearty commendation of the Rt. Rev. Ethebert Talbot, D. D., Presiding Bishop, and the Rt. Rev. Thomas F. Gailor, D. D., President of the Council, and on the list as national chairmen are many prominent bishops, and laymen. The headquarters of the campaign are in the Arcade Building, St. Louis, Clinton Whittemore, Treasurer, and contributions may be sent there, or made through Diocesan Memorial Organizations or to the Church School Children.

Church Intelligence

From the Presiding Bishop and Council.

Bishop Gailor announces the resignation of the Rev. Lester Bradner, Ph. D., from the Department of Religious Education.

Dr. Bradner began his work in national education in 1913 as Secretary for Teacher Training in the General Board of Religious Education. His contribution to the educational work of the Church has been far-reaching in the field of teacher training, and in the production of Christian Nurture material he has set standards for religious education not only in the Episcopal Church, but in other communions. He has been called the "father of teacher training," for the many teacher training institutes, normal schools, summer conferences, the Standard Course in Teacher Training, and other movements were due to his initiative and conviction that the secret of success in religious education rested in the trained teacher.

Dr. Bradner's home during the coming winter will be in Summit, N. J. From there he will act as consultant in religious education for parishes and dioceses desiring his services.

The Church's Program: A very important feature of this fall's work is the program for studying the principles of Christian Stewardship in the Church Sunday Schools. No such systematic educational program for the young people of the Church has been offered by the Field Department since 1919, the year the Nation-Wide Campaign was inaugurated. The plan proposes a brief presentation, in story form, of Stewardship fundamentals on four Sundays beginning October 12, followed by a written exercise by all the pupils of the School on November 9. Each parish is urged to select the writers of the best papers and have them expand their papers into essays, entering them in a Stewardship Essay Contest—parochial, diocesan and national. Full information on the plan has been communicated to the clergy and is contained in the Field Department's publication No. 2113. It is expected that one of the most important by-products of this program will be the education in the principles of Stewardship which parents will receive from their children.

October will see the educational work in full swing all over the Church. Massachusetts will have three Western Bishops covering the Diocese—Bishops Johnson of Colorado, Cross of Spokane, and Remington of Eastern Oregon. Rhode Island will hold Normal Institutes on the book, "My Father's Business," followed by Group Meetings on the subject in November. Bishop Page, of Michigan, will also spend a week speaking in the Diocese. Connecticut has a strong laymen's committee at work to reach every parish. Mr. Franklin will conduct a city-wide Conference on the Church's Mission in Waterbury, October 19.

New Jersey has secured a full-time Executive Secretary, the Rev. Walter Mitchell, D. D., and is planning to push the Church's Program with full vigor. The work opens with a series of "Bishops' Conferences" for vestrymen and other laymen the middle of October. In Western New York, the Rev. L. G. Wood will devote the major part of October in preparing the cities of Buffalo, Rochester and Bath for city-wide conferences on the Church's Mission in November; to be led by Mr. Alfred Newbery, Bishop Cook of Delaware, and the Rev. Dr. R. W. Patton.

The Diocese of Chicago opens its work with a Diocesan Training Institute the middle of October, led by Mr. Franklin. The Diocesan Field Department, under the leadership of its new chairman, the Rev. George H. Thomas, has been hard at work since last Spring preparing for a thorough educational program this fall. Chicago has made an advance each year on the Church's Program and expects to continue the process this year.

The Erie Diocese is directing the thought of its membership towards the Program this fall through Preaching Missions. The Rev. Dr. Loaring Clark is holding a Diocesan Clinical Mission in Oil City, Pennsylvania, October 12-19 to train the clergy for the work.

These are but a few indications of the work that is going on all over the Church. It would seem that the Dioceses are doing the most constructive work yet in preparation for the final year of this triennium. If results are commensurate with the efforts, 1925 ought to mark a decided advance over preceding years.

Meeting of the Prayer Book Commission.

The Prayer Book Commission held its final meeting before the Convention of 1925, at Swansea, Mass., September 15, and was in session for three days. Its Fourth Report, completed at this time, will, it is expected, be published early in the winter. There were two questions before the Commission: Whether there were any "obviously necessary or advisable changes" to be recommended in those services or sections of the Third Report passed at the Convention of 1922; and whether the sections of that Report not yet acted upon by Convention ought in any particulars to be amended. In regard to the first, it may be said that only a few changes will be put forward by the Commission, the chief alterations recommended being in the Baptismal Service. As to the second, the sections will be reported substantially as before, the more considerable amendments being in the Collects, Epistles and Gospels and in the Offices of Instruction.

JOHN W. SUTER, Secretary.
Prayer Book Commission.

The Annual Advent Corporate Communion for Men.

For seven years the confirmed men and boys of the Church have been persistently called into Corporate Communion on the First Sunday in Advent, November 30.

Steadily, year after year, has the movement gathered force till now many thousands are brought together, and hundreds of parishes and missions are enjoying the happy results wherein so many have been led to renewed faithfulness to this great celebration.

A score of bishops have signified their hearty approval and are giving it their active support.

The Brotherhood of St. Andrew, from its National Office in the Church House, Philadelphia, is fostering this movement for a Corporate Communion. It supplies cards of invitation for distribution by parishes.

Distinguished Clergymen to Be Associated With the Washington Cathedral.

Three distinguished clergymen have accepted invitations from the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop of Washington, to associate themselves with the activities of the National Cathedral, Washington, D. C., according to an announcement made by the National Cathedral Foundation. These men are the Rt. Rev. Philip M. Rhinelander, D. D., former Bishop of Pennsylvania; the Rev. Anson Phelps Stokes, D. D., LL. D., for twenty-two years Secretary of Yale University, and the Rev. Henry Lubeck, D. D., of New York City. Although Bishop Rhinelander is a member of the Chapter and Canon of the Cathedral, the announcement of his decision to make his permanent residence in Washington, D. C., has been received with enthusiasm by all the friends of Washington Cathedral who recall his pioneer work last year in connection with the College of Preachers.

On the other hand, the election of Dr. Stokes and Dr. Lubeck as Canons of the Cathedral is an indication of Bishop Freeman's determination to bring to Washington Cathedral outstanding clerical leaders in the United States. At the recent meeting of the Cathedral Chapter letters of acceptance from Dr. Stokes and Dr. Lubeck were presented by Bishop Freeman.

Dr. Stokes' main responsibility will be as a preacher in connection with the Cathedral. It is understood by the Cathedral Chapter that he will continue his membership in various national educational and philanthropic boards, with which he is connected, and that he will have the time necessary to complete the work in which he has been mainly engaged since leaving his position as Secretary of Yale University three years ago, namely, the writing of the "History of the University Movement," from its origin in the Twelfth Century until the present time. Dr. Stokes will take up his residence in Washington about November 1.

Dr. Lubeck was for twenty-eight years rector of the Zion and St. Timothy's Church, in New York City, and was regarded as one of the most outstanding preachers of the Diocese of New York. He was a deputy to several General Conventions from that Diocese. Dr. Lubeck will take up his residence in Washington about January 1.

Bishop Rhinelander was for twelve years Bishop of the Diocese of Pennsylvania, retiring from that position because of ill health. Since then he has been spending much of his time in Gloucester, Mass. While Bishop Rhinelander will reside in Washington he will continue to lecture in various parts of the United States and carry on his literary activities.

Conditions in China.

Bishop Graves, writing from Shanghai on September 2, just after the outbreak of hostilities between the so-called Kiangsu and Chekiang armies, says:

"The military authorities at Soochow, Wushih, Zangzok, Nanking and Yangchow have been seizing all soldiers and boats and commandeering coolies. A good deal of suffering among the Chinese and an immense amount of inconvenience has been caused. At Quinsan the soldiers have occupied our chapel and relieved our Chinese clergyman. The Rev. C. K. Wei of all his goods: all shops are closed in that city and most of the people who are able to flee have escaped. None of our places have been destroyed in other cities. Everybody is running for Shanghai. Rents have soared and rice has gone up nearly double—$21 a picul at present."

Opening of Berkeley Divinity School.

The seventieth year of Berkeley Divinity School, Middletown, Conn., opened on Monday, September 22, with Evensong in the School Chapel. Dean Ladd made an address welcoming the new men and speaking of plans for the ensuing year. The Department of Pastoral Theology and Homiletics in the present year will be in charge of the Rev. Gilbert P. Symons, rector of Christ Church, Glendale, Ohio. Mr. Symons' Parish, in response to an appeal from the School, consented to release Mr. Symons for this work. It is an example of cooperation between school and parish which should be helpful to both. Mr. Symons is a graduate of St. Stephen's College and of Bexley Hall. He did graduate work at Oxford and at Gottingen. He has been active in good works in the neighborhood of Cincinnati, and, with Dr. Keller, instituted the summer extension course for divinity students in the Diocese of Ohio. He was field chaplain to the German prisoners of war in Great Britain in 1917-18, and is now an active member of the Fellowship for Reconciliation. Mr. Symons' ripe scholarship and record of parish administration seems to fit him in a peculiar way for training young men for pastoral activities. The Rev. Percy L. Urban, who has recently become rector of St. John's Church, North Haven, Conn., will continue to act as visiting Lecturer on Missions, and the Rev. George A. Barrow, St. Luke's Church, Chelsea, as Lecturer on Christian Doctrine.

There is an enrollment of twenty-two students, a larger number than at any time since before the war. The school buildings have a limited capacity, and there has been difficulty in finding accommodations for the seven new men who have entered the School this fall. That Berkeley is maintaining its tradition of inclusiveness is shown by the fact that the twenty-two students enrolled in the School come from fourteen different dioceses and seventeen different colleges.

Church Work Among Sailors in Europe.

That Christian work now being done for sailors in Europe is maintained on the same plane as such work done in the United States, is the observation made by the Rev. Dr. George S. Webster, secretary of the American Seamen's Friend Society, following his return from a two-month's survey of English and European conditions.

Dr. Webster, who returned on the latest trip of the S. S. Mauretania, had visited fifty sailors' missions in seventeen ports of England and the Continent. In all of those visits he discovered only one institution not operated under Christian patronage which was erected and maintained by an atheist. He also visited only one mission where alcoholic liquors were served; the argument for an open bar there being that the sailors would observe moderation in such a setting. Among the stations visited by Dr. Webster were those in Genoa, Leghorn and Naples, Italy, where the American Seamen's Friend Society has affiliated work. Dr. Webster found this work being carried on ably and saw a number of American sailors availing themselves of the facilities there.

For Wyoming Church Girls.

One of our Church boarding schools follows a plan which is possibly unique. This is Ivinson Hall, Laramie, Wyoming. There is no resident faculty. The girls are sent to the University High School while they live at Ivinson Hall. In this way the fine educational advantages of the high school are made available to many girls from rural communities who could not possibly afford the tuition for a private school, but at the same time they live in and are trained by a home of culture and of course receive definite religious training there. Scholarships have aided in making it possible for girls from extremely poor surroundings to have the whole course of their lives altered for the good.

Resignation of the Bishop of Idaho.

The Editor of the Idaho Churchman states that, as his September number is going to press, he has received the intelligence that the Rt. Rev. Frank Hale Tourret, D. D., Missionary Bishop of Idaho, has tendered his resignation to the House of Bishops. It is understood that Bishop Touret's health has been bad for some time.

Bishop Touret was born in Salem, Mass., March 25, 1875. He was consecrated Missionary Bishop of Western Colorado, February 2, 1917, and was translated to Idaho in 1919 to succeed Bishop Funsten.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. W. C. Brown, D. D., Bishop.

Death of the Rev. Angus Crawford, D. D.

The Rev. Angus Crawford, D. D., former Dean of the Virginia Theological Seminary, died at his residence on the Seminary Hill, on Wednesday, September 10th, after a short illness, aged seventy-four years.

Dr. Crawford was born in Canada, and after his college course entered the Philadelphia Divinity School, from which he graduated in 1876. He was ordained that year to the Diaconate by Bishop Stevens of New Jersey, and advanced to the Priesthood in the following year by Bishop Scarborough. He received the degree of Doctor of Divinity from Roanoke College, and later from the Virginia Seminary.

Dr. Crawford spent the first ten years of his ministry in the rectorship of Trinity Church, Mount Holly, N. J. In 1887 he was elected Professor of Oriental Languages and Literature at the Virginia Seminary, and held that chair until his retirement in 1920. He was the Dean of the Seminary from 1898 until 1916. He represented the Diocese of Virginia in the triennial meetings of the General Convention consecutively from 1901 to 1916.

Dr. Crawford gave himself unstintingly to the development and upbuilding of the Seminary. He took especial interest in the physical development and beautifying of the Seminary property, and was chiefly instrumental in bringing it to the present state of attractiveness. The Seminary in every department, in its curriculum, its social life, and in the wise administration of its property, prospered and grew stronger under his able leadership, and shows in every phase of its larger life of to-day the influence of the life he gave to its service.

Albemarle Convocation.

"The Fall meeting of the Albemarle Convocation will be held at Grace Church, Cismont, November 4th, 5th and 6th. An interesting and inspiring programme has been arranged, and a full attendance is expected.

REGINALD F. HALL, Secretary.

Opening of New Colored Mission at West Point.

The Rev. John H. Scott, who for the past twelve years has been rector of the colored churches in Essex and adjoining counties, has been assigned by the Bishop to the charge of the new and most promising Mission which has recently been established among the colored people in West Point.

There are about a thousand colored people living in West Point, with only one colored congregation, and there was a strong desire on the part of a number of the colored residents to have the Church establish a Mission in their community. An abandoned church building has been secured and fitted up for services. Mr. Scott entered upon his duties on the first Sunday in September. A Sunday School has also been established and regular services are being held. The attendance has been most encouraging, and has been increasing from the first service.

The Mission started off with just one colored communicant, Mr. W. R. Bowie, a native of Washington, who is the principal of the public high school, and was a lieutenant in the American forces in France.

Mr. Ashton Hamilton, a recent graduate of the Bishop Payne Divinity School, has been assigned by the Bishop to the charge of the colored churches in Essex and adjoining counties, made vacant by the removal of the Rev. Mr. Scott. Mr. Hamilton has entered upon his work.

The Rev. John F. W. Field, who resigned as rector of Trinity Church, Fredericksburg, and accepted a call to Grace Church, Wilkesbarre, Pennsylvania, entered upon his new duties on October 1st.

Mr. Field's departure will be a great loss to the work of the Rappahannock Convocation, as he has been one of the leading men in the development and growth, which, in recent years, has made the Rappahannock Convocation one of the best organized parts of the Diocese.

In addition to his work at Trinity, Mr. Field took charge and maintained the services in Overwharton Parish in Stafford County, giving to the two churches in that Parish his Sunday afternoons.

The Hand Book containing the Programme of the Young People's Service League can be obtained at the Diocesan Offices, 110 West Franklin Street, Richmond, for ten cents.

PITTSBURGH.

Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., Bishop.

The Woman's Auxiliary.

At the monthly meeting of the Pittsburgh Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary held in Trinity Parish House on October 2, Memorial Scholarships in behalf of Missionaries in Liberia were paid, and a gift of $200 from the Sybil Carter Memorial Fund was given to Bishop Burleson, of South Dakota, toward the repairing of his Indian Mission Chapels, wrecked by the late tornado. Addresses were made by Miss Monteiro, of the Diocese of Anking, China; and Madame Angeline, in behalf of the work among Waldensians, in Italy.

The opening monthly dinner for the Diocesan Girls' Friendly Society took place on Thursday, October 2, in Trinity Parish House, with an attendance of two hundred and fifty. It was characterized by great enthusiasm.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. B. D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, D. D., Coadjutor.

An Interesting Service.

At Camp Robert Hunt, on Sunday morning, August 31, there was held a most interesting service: The Holy Communion was celebrated by Bishop Thomson, in connection with the regional conference of associates and members of the Girls' Friendly Society.

The Rev. Philip Tilghman, a deacon, and for the Summer assigned by the Bishop as Director of the Camp, had prepared a rustic altar from wood, rough hewn upon the ground and surmounted by a wooden cross. At a rail, consisting of the branches from nearby cedars, the communicants knelt, and in the quiet of the early summer morning, a spirit of devout reverence fell upon all. Bishop Thomson selected and used the prayers from the office of Consecration, which ask divine blessing upon all who shall here take the sacred pledges of Christ's love, and gave thanks for the blessed memory of the man of God for whom the Camp is named.

The Camp is situated very near the eastern end of Lake Joyce, which, with the little stream flowing therefrom, was anciently known as Pleasure House Creek, and is reputed to have been the probable site of the actual first landing April 26, 1607.

It is the purpose of the Camp Committee that services shall be held regularly whenever the Camp is in use.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop.

Work in the Associate Mission Field

This field includes eight and a half counties in Southwest Virginia, with some eighteen or twenty preaching points. There are eight churches and three community houses. Eight women workers, two of whom are deaconesses, are employed giving their entire time to the work of the Church.

Rev. H. H. Young is dean of the Associate Missions, and is assisted by Rev. E. W. Hughes. These two clergy are on the go continually, holding many week-night services, besides engagements every Sunday morning, afternoon and night.

During the current year Mr. Young has been able to arrange for nine missions lasting from one to two weeks. Those who have helped have been the Rev. Thomas Semmes, of South Richmond; the Rev. J. R. Ellis, of Peddler's Mills; the Rev. L. B. Gwathmey, of Wytheville; the Rev. Charles W. Sydnor, of Clifton Forge; the Rev. J. C. Wagner, of Petersburg; the Rev. Dennis Whittle, of Luray, and the Rev. Douglas I. Hobbs, of Rocky Mount.

Bishop Jett takes keen interest in this work, and last year gave an entire month for visitation, confirmations and services at all the various preaching points. This year he spent twenty days going over the same ground.

So far the Church has not penetrated Bland County, having no members or mission points in that county.

Miss Elizabeth Barber has recently taken up the work left by Deaconess Mills, at Richlands, in Tazewell County, and, with Miss Lillie Stout, will live in the Community House, conduct the Sunday school, and carry on recreational groups and other community activities through the Church.

At Dante, where Deaconess Williams is locally in charge of the work, preparations are under way for the building of a rectory, which will accommodate another clergyman whose services are badly needed in this field.

The Rev. R. Cary Montague, Executive Secretary for Social Services for the Dioceses in Virginia, conducted meetings from October 2 to 6 at five points in this field, outlining a practical plan for the organization of Parochial Social Service activities.

Under Mr. Young's direction careful records of all communicants and prospective candidates for confirmation have been compiled, and parish registers prepared and filled in with all available data for each mission.

Excellent cooperation prevails among the various churches working in this section, and the work of the Church is in a healthy and promising condition.

Great Meeting of Laymen.

On Thursday, October 2, a meeting of the Laymen's League of the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia was held in the parish house of Christ Church, Roanoke. Mr. W. D. Mount, president of the league, was chairman. The meeting opened with the singing of two hymns, followed by a prayer offered by Colonel William King, Jr., of Lynchburg. "Stand Up for Jesus" was then sung, after which the guests were welcomed by the Rev. G. Otis Mead, rector of Christ Church. The chairman discussed the purpose of the meeting and made a short address on the subject of "Service." He then introduced the principal speaker of the day, Mr. George P. Elliott, who is vice-president and general counsel of the Atlantic Coast Line Railway, Chancellor of the Diocese of East Carolina and one of the most prominent laymen in the South. Mr. Elliott made a wonderful address, impressing upon his hearers their duty as laymen to assume the chief responsibility for the practical work of financing the needs of the Church.

The central theme of Mr. Elliott's whole talk was the proper relation of the laymen to the Church. He stated that:

1. The purpose of the Church is to bring the message of Jesus Christ to every man, woman and child in the world, and to bring to man a knowledge of Jesus Christ.
2. To the extent that any individual church fails to achieve this result, to that extent does it fail in its ultimate purpose.
3. The Church has a definite object to achieve, just as a manufacturing plant strives for a definite output.
4. The same kind of ability and effort should be used in accomplishing the work of the Church as is used in the conduct of any secular business.
5. The laymen have a very definite obligation in connection with the practical side of Church work. Not every layman can be a pioneer or a missionary. It is the business of those who cannot to finance adequately the work of those who can.
6. The power of the laymen is unlimited if they will use it as members of the great organization, and maximum results can be obtained through full cooperation.

Mr. Elliott then described the situation in the Diocese of East Carolina, and described the present system of apportionment in his Diocese, which is very similar to the new plan adopted by the last Council of Southwestern Virginia, broadly speaking the self-apportionment system for parishes in determining their respective obligations in relation to the Diocesan and General Church Programs. He stated that this system, since its adoption, had worked in his Diocese, and has produced a good psychological effect and eliminated a good deal of the unfortunate friction which previously existed and has placed the finances of the Diocese on a much higher plane and a more stable basis.

At the close of Mr. Elliott's address his hearers gave him a rising vote of thanks to express their appreciation of his great assistance. Then followed an "open forum," at which time short inspirational talks were made by several gentlemen.

At the afternoon session Mr. W. C. Rierson, of Altavista, described in considerable detail the progress that has been made in our own Diocese along various lines since its organization December 19, 1919.

Mr. W. D. Tyler, chairman of the Field Department of the Diocese, outlined his plan of organization, which included the division of the Diocese into seven districts, each with a chairman, these district chairmen to appoint local vice-chairmen in each church.

Mr. C. Edwin Michael, chairman of the Department of Finance, described the new system of apportionment and the several steps that will be taken to put this into effect.

Several gentlemen from various parts of the Diocese expressed their conviction that the new plan of apportionment is logical and sound and will undoubtedly receive a full measure of co-operation.

Bishop Jett addressed the meeting, describing conditions in the Diocese and his certainty that the laymen will do their utmost to see that the work of the Church goes steadily forward.

There were fifty-eight laymen registered as present, representing twenty-one churches, and in addition eighteen clergymen were in attendance, and this was agreed on all hands to be one of the most inspiring and successful meetings that the laymen of the Diocese have had.

Miss Julia Katherine Cook sailed on October 9 from Vancouver for China, where, under a four-year engagement, she will take a place as teacher in the Primary Department of St. Mary's Hall, which is connected with St. John's University, Shanghai, and is under the care of Bishop Graves.

Miss Cook, a communicant of St. John's Church, Roanoke, the Rev. Karl M. Block, D. D., rector, has been the principal of the Primary Department of the Church School of St. John's Parish, where her loss will be keenly felt. Miss Cook is the first member of this parish to go into missionary work in the foreign field.

Christ Church, Roanoke: The laymen of Christ Church have reorganized for the coming year their Men's Club, and on the night of October 1 the attendance at the club supper was probably the largest on record. The feature of the evening was a splendid inspirational address by the Rev. O. F. Blackwelder, pastor of Virginia Heights Lutheran Church, Roanoke, who spoke on "Sun-Crowned Men." The program included a few amusing "stunts," with the singing of a number of popular songs, in which Mr. James Breakell was the leader, and the introduction of several out-of-town guests. Mr. H. C. Neren, of the Viscose Company, is president of the club, and Mr. A. C. Dunlap is secretary.

The Rev. Wilfred E. Roach, rector of Christ Church, Martinsville, has been appointed probation officer of the Juvenile and Domestic Relations Court of Henry County.

A Meeting of Interest.

A meeting in connection with the annual convention of the Sunday-School Institute of Washington, which promises to arouse much interest, is that planned especially for young people and their friends at Epiphany Church on October 22 at 8 o'clock. The address will be delivered by Dr. Karl Morgan Block, formerly of Washington, but now of Roanoke, Va., and well known for his successful work among young people.

The Bishop of Washington will preside.

Intercessory Services.

Daily services of intercession have been inaugurated by the Rev. T. W. Cooke, rector of Ascension Church, to be held in the Chapel of Intercession, which stands back from the street alongside the main church building, and is especially suitable for small numbers of people and for daily prayer services.

The Community Bible Readers' League of Washington, recently organized for the stimulation of a more general and accurate reading of the Bible, has a council of twelve members, one of whom is Canon William Devries, of the Washington Cathedral. All churches are represented, including the Jews and Roman Catholics.

The Rev. Raymond Wollen, now vicar of Trinity Diocesan Church and formerly assistant rector of Epiphany Church, and Miss Elsie Freeman, daughter of Bishop Freeman, were married Saturday afternoon, October 4, in Epiphany Church. The ceremony was performed by the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, assisted by his brother, the Rev. Henry Freeman.

A reception to the family and friends of the bride and groom and the clergy of Washington was held immediately after the service at the Bishop's House, Cathedral Close.

The Bishop of Washington was the preacher at the afternoon service at the Washington Cathedral on Sunday, October 5.

Memorial to Bishop Israel.

On the Feast of St. Michael and All Angels, a processional cross in memory of Bishop Rogers Israel was consecrated at Evensong in St. Paul's Cathedral, Erie. Bishop Brent, of Western New York, was the preacher.

Preceding the consecration, the Laymen's League of the City of Erie gave a dinner in St. Paul's Chapter House in honor of Bishop Brent, who addressed the men on being true to the ideals of manhood.

The processional cross is the work of Mowbray, London, and has incorporated in it the episcopal ring and pectoral cross of the late Bishop; also a ring about five hundred years old, which was given by a priest of the diocese. This beautiful cross is the gift of friends of Bishop Israel.

Conference for Clergy: Assembly Grounds for Southeast.

In preparation for the fall work of the Church in the Diocese, a conference of the clergy was held at Trinity Church, Asheville, on October 1 and 2. The conference dealt with the Program, its evolution, adoption, and challenge; the foreign and domestic fields. A considerable part of the conference was devoted to the discussion of the budget, general, diocesan, and parochial. Its relation to the Priorities elicited live interest. This led logically to the topic of parish conferences, group meetings and leaders, and the Every Member (Continued on Page 22.)

Thoughts of the Holy City.

And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon to shine in it: for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the Light thereof (Rev. 21-23).

We talked of heaven, the soul's dear home

Whither our footsteps tend;
And each his longing told that night,
Friend answering to friend.

"What vision haunts your dreams the most?

Not radiant, sun-lit air
Not glowing skies nor gates of pearl,
Though these will all be there!"

"It is a place," said one with tears,

"Where we shall never part!
That is the promise, treasured most
And oftenest in my heart."

"And Love, the only bond," I said;

"Each soul redeemed, shall know
Love that for all and every one
From heart to heart shall flow."

"Ah, we shall know," said eagerly

Wistful Evangeline;
"There we shall know as we are known,
And not a cloud between."

"To sin no more!" the mother said,

(The purest soul of all)
"Never to have a thought of wrong Never a moment's fall!"

Then, all our wisdom was abashed;

For, as in olden days,
Upon the lips of innocence
God set His perfect praise.

Our baby-girl was listening,

Her sweet eyes deep with prayer.
Leaning upon my knee she said:
"And Jesus will be there!"

STUDIES IN THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

The Last Discourse.

IV.

The Rev. Louis Tucker, D. D.

We see Easter past Good Friday and Ascension Day past both and so we understand—or think we do. He saw more. He saw them all come home—Andrew, and Thomas, James and Jude, Matthew who was once a publican and Simon who was once a zealot, and Simon Peter and John and the rest; saw them all come home; worn and weary, and old and glad, so glad, to get home; with holes in their hands and holes in their feet where the nails had pierced; scourged, crushed, beaten;—and triumphant. They walk with Him now through the eternal halls. They have fought the good fight, they have run the straight race, they have kept faith. Ten thousand times ten thousand follow them. The angelic host sweeps out to meet them. They see their Lord and part with Him no more; and they are glad, so glad, to get home.

The fact of a great vision, and the vision of a great fact, are hard to tell. Our Lord's promise, "Ye now therefore have sorrow: but I will see you again, and your heart shall rejoice, and your joy no man taketh from you,"—so gracious and apparently so mystical, is not mystical, hardly a promise so much as sheer statement of fact. Their sorrow in the darkest dark the world has ever known; their joy when He came again; are things so very obvious. As for the rejoicing heart and the permanence of that joy, they knew the truth that transforms the universe. They did not merely believe it, as we do; they knew it. They held the key; they had the Master-word. The seven-fold veil was drawn aside for them. They were let look through the opened door. The cloud was cleft, the earth-mist cleared away. They new the Fact, the most tremendous fact in all the universe, and, knowing, were content.

Our Lord harks always back and back to prayer. The vast complexity of the spiritual universe, rising rank on rank to regions beyond our ken, Pelion piled on Ossa, Everest on Chimborazo, ranges of created beings grander and still more grand, emphasizes the majesty of prayer. To pray is to speak, past all created beings, direct to the Uncreate. It makes man a free Baron of the Empire. It is greater than the right of the Roman Citizen to appeal to Caesar. It may even be the motive power of the universe. This world is under government of angels, as every accurate theologian knows; yet it is not by their own power that they work the works of God. The power by which Christ wrought His miracles (and that is prayer, most surely) seems that by which the great Angels of the Throne send the earth sweeping down its echoing orbit and bring about the sunrise every morning.

Our Lord keeps coming back to prayer. Our comment on this last speech of His may, in other respects, be like a water-runner, held up by surface-tension. But in this we are not shallow. He has made this so very plain that, all long this current, we can dive deep.

For He keeps coming back and back to prayer. He speaks about one thing and ends concerning prayer. He tells of another, and the finish is concerning prayer. He begins on a third and the termination touches prayer. Prayer, and always prayer, and ever prayer, interfuses this last great speech as a background integrates a picture.

Perhaps God uses prayer to make blessings, just as dust is the raw stuff out of which He made man; as the vapor which rises from water is the raw stuff out of which He makes rain and rivers, and so food and all green things. The earth receives no water from the interstellar spaces. Every drop that falls must first have been distilled as water-vapor from ocean lake river field or tree. So may not every human blessing have been transmuted from some one's prayer?

Under whatever form we image the origin of evil it must have come because the first evil one avoided prayer. Having seen how things were done by God's power, the first evil one did something: himself, not drawing on God's power. The absence of prayer was a necessary pre-requisite (we think it the only necessary pre-requisite) to evil. This will bear repetition. Christ keeps coming back and back to prayer.

His next saying may mean no more than that He came forth from the Father as you and I came forth from the last person we talked with; that is, by separation in space.

The first general rule of interpretation, given by Christ Himself, is that Scripture cannot be broken. The next is that Scripture must not be inflated. Take the minimum meaning; unless some other statement, counter-checking, shows the meaning more than minimum. Then take the minimum meaning of the combination. The wild vagaries of superstition and fanaticism into which taking the maximum meaning, unchecked, has led, are witnessed by the manifold sects of Christendom. In Bible interpretation keep cool, use common sense, and pray for more; for common sense is guidance of the Holy Spirit.

Olshausen points out that the eleven did not really understand. They only thought they did—like Olshausen. The phrase, "Needest not that any man should ask thee," may mean that there was no need, by further questions, to obtain further proofs.

Our Lord warned them that their present belief was so feeble that they would leave Him that very night; adding that He was not alone because of the presence of the Father. When we are solidly and stolidly comfortable this may mean nothing. When, in agony of body, mind or spirit we cling close to the comfort of God's presence as our one hope, it means more than all else in earth or heaven.

The statement that they would scatter and leave Him is direct and practical. To catch its force, imagine a modern general telling his staff that they would soon be under fire and adding, in casual explanation of some arrangements just made, that they would then run away and leave him. The staff would be angry, incredulous and downcast; or, if they loved and respected him too much to be angry and found him right too often to be incredulous, would be downcast to heartbreak.

But after they HAD run away their chance of peace would be that he foresaw and forgave it. Peace once attained, tribulation in the world would necessarily follow. The most peaceful place in nature is the low-pressure area in the centre of a cyclone; but the low pressure MAKES the cyclone. When the peace of God descends on a man's soul things begin to happen. The liveliest place on earth, if spiritual and worldly disturbances be averaged, is the immediate neighborhood of a man with any notable measure of the peace of God in him. Nothing can hurt him, nothing can ruffle him, he is not afraid of anything and he don't care. Therefore he has an incorrigible way of saying and doing the truthful thing, and truth and rectitude are disorganizing as dynamite.

The peace of God is a most enviable possession and the eleven, after Pentecost, the most enviable of men. If I be poor and care, I am indeed poor; but if I be poor and do not care, literally, sincerely, truthfully do not care, then no Rockefeller or Rothschild so rich as I. If I be a wanderer and homesick, then am I indeed a stranger; but if I do not care, sincerely and really do not care, then the whole wide world grows hearth and home for me and no cozy householder, so at home as I. If I be scourged and ashamed, then am I beaten in deed; but if I be scourged to save one I love, and so don't care, then they may lay bare my ribs with their cat-o-nine-tails and not one blow but really misses me. If I be hungry and care, then am I anhungered, if I be sick and care then am I feeble; but if I be hungry or sick and truly and unaffectedly do not care, then no man in all the world is so healthy and well-nourished as I. Now, a man with the Peace of God upon him does not care. Such a man may be struck through his affections only; and, even so, not by the death of his loved ones, for then he resigns them to God; not by their sin, for God will bear with them now and bring them to their senses and forgive them at last; not by their illness, for they are in God's hands. Only by the lesser things their unsatisfied desires for what he cannot give them, will he be troubled, and not over-greatly even then; for, after all, the lesser things are lesser and do not greatly matter. Such were the eleven after Pentecost. As such they wandered through the world; and as such they are enviable in this world and redeemed and blessed in the next.

The Marriage at Cana.

A Wedding Poem.

Mary Laird Tucker.

Thou who wast guest at Cana's wedding
And Thy first miracle didst there perform.
Not for some weighty end of life or death,
But to relieve a host's embarrassment;
And that, in after years, that little bride
Might not remember that the wine had failed.
Grant us, who join our hearts before
Thee here,
To keep Thee for our constant wedding guest;
That we may see each other through Thine eyes,
And there may come no disillusionment,
Nor in our lives the wine of romance fail.

Religion in Practice.

The Rev. Thomas F. Opie, D. D.

"Good morning. This is your paper. Compliments of Southern Railway System." As I took my seat in the diner, I was handed the daily paper with this agreeable salutation on it. Then, while I was reading, and before my breakfast could be prepared, the dusky waiter brought me a small cup of coffee—irrespective of my order, and without cost to me.
Now, this seems a trivial thing, but it is not so trivial, after all. One paper costs little, but hundreds of papers cost considerable. One small cup of coffee costs little, but hundreds cost considerable.

This was a generous act. It made me feel that the generous impulse had not died with the war, after all! It "set me up" for the day, to have a great railway system wish me good morning and not only to wish me it, but to take steps to make the wish possible and tangible.

A generous deed is a religious impulse! You cannot account for it otherwise. Well, it is good business psychology also. Yes, it is good business. There never was a religious impulse that was not good business!

One of these fine days more of our great corporations will awake to the fact that generosity, like honesty, is the best policy. Many great businesses have already discovered this fundamental law. When more of them find it out and begin to act upon their discovery, the whole fabric of our business and industrial life will be transformed.

We have had religion in debate. We have had religion in dogma. We have had religion in books, in art, in architecture. We have had religion in creed and in formal declaration—but what the world has needed more than anything else, is to have religion in practice. If there had been more practicable and demonstrable religion and less hazy and mystical and dogmatic religion in the life of the race, the Church would not now find itself torn with internecine strife—nor would she meet with indifference and contempt at the hands of the thousands who now treat her with little concern and with no serious attachment of love.

Yes, a railway system may be "religious," and not know it—not even intend it! Corporations that are generous, thoughtful, fair-minded, profit-sharing and just and merciful and kind—these are spreading the gospel of the Golden Rule.

The early followers of Jesus were called Followers of the Way, before they were derisively termed "Christians." Those who are following the way of Jesus, in kindness, generous impulse, thoughtful helpfulness, fair treatment, justice and magnanimity—these are easing the burdens of men, making their way more cheerful and ushering in a better day. This is religion in practice.

All Things to All Men.

The missionary must be all things to all men. The people look to him to be able to do everything. One day a policeman brought to the writer a document written in Portuguese—or something else—and asked for a translation, stating that it was probably a death certificate. It turned out that a citizen of the town, a sea captain, had sailed for the South Seas, and while there had sickened and died. The man had died in Malta. They brought back his body for burial and I was asked to translate the document into Japanese. I have never yet decided what the language was in which it was written; but since he died in Malta it must have been "Maltese." Whatever it was, it resembled Latin, and so I was able to get it fixed up so the body could be buried. It was very evident that the man was dead.

The missionary is closely watched, even to his wearing apparel; and whatever he does is rated as all right. "For," say they, "that must be the way they do it in America." And whatever America does is all right—except in an international way.

A barber was once cutting my hair. When he was through, I asked him if he could sing it, telling him of the beneficial results therefrom. He rooted around in an old drawer and found some wax tapers and singed me. A few weeks afterwards I saw the barber again and he told me that since he saw me everybody in town was having his head singed after hair-cutting.

By the way, while the above performance was going on, the barber had his assistant bring out a graphophone and entertain me. This little screechy thing played for half an hour or longer and every number was a Christian hymn, words and music. Some of them were, "There is a Fountain Filled With Blood," "Jesus Loves Me, This I Know," "Joy to the World," and "Onward, Christian Soldiers."

They are looking to us, too, for moral and spiritual leadership. A few years ago a young man, a student, came into my English Bible class. We studied together for several months. He was very earnest. Finally he graduated and I lost track of him. About a year ago he wrote me the following postal card in English:

"Dear Sir: How are you getting on? I have a question: Would you kindly write me about next question through God? Now I was forced to marry with dislike woman by my parents. I will never do a marriage without love, but it is disobedience to parents. O, what should I do? How Christ Bible teach us in such a case? Very truly yours."

I replied that he should not marry any woman whom he disliked; it was he, and not his parents, who had to live with the woman.

After a few weeks here came another letter which ran:

"Dear Mr. H.: The spring passed by like an empty dream and summer has come. At this time last season I call at your house and talked with you about religion. You taught me one must believe the true God. From that time I have thought that Christianity is the best of all religion, and now I believing it. Thank you for your kind words concerning marriage. I resigned to it on account of misfortune that I was obliged to marry her with most displeasing feeling. We had the wedding feast but now we are not living together. O, I am very painful, but I am going to receive the consolation from God. I am, yours truly."

Is there any work you can do greater than helping these young Japanese solve their eternal problems by sending them the Gospel?—Rev. J. W. Hassell, in Christian Observer.

"Come Out To Vote!"

"Express yourself!"—at the polls to paraphrase a popular song is the cry of the hour. The indifferent voter is to be the thing of the past, this election if the present nation-wide activities of the League of Women Voters accomplishes its goal.

"Vote as you please—only vote" is its energetic and hospitable nonpartisan slogan that is predicted to swell by the thousands in every locality the local registration and returns. The Young Women's Christian Association is heartily cooperating in hundreds of cities, towns and villages in the campaign. No stone will be left unturned to remind every man and woman, girl and boy of legal voting age that a vote is theirs and to come out and use it.

Booths at county fairs, moving picture slides, floats, radio talks, stuffers in bills and pay envelopes, posters, stickers, and letters to friends urging their personal vote are among the methods being employed.

Would it not be possible for every man to double his intellectual force by keeping much in the company of Infinite Wisdom?—E. P. Tenney.

Baby's Smile.

Francelia Leonard.

A sun ray flickers through the trees;
When Baby smiles;
A crescent moon lights dancing seas;
When Baby smiles.
And oh! When Baby laughs in glee
Then sing all birds most lustily.

Shadows from a dull heart must flee,
When Baby smiles.
Life's vision glows so hopefully
When Baby smiles.
And oh! When Baby laughs outright!
God's very kingdom comes in sight.

Getting By.

Fred came home from high school at the end of his first month, and extended to his father a large white envelope.

"Sign it," said the boy.

Mr. Thomas extracted a blue card from the envelope. "What's this?" he asked.

"My report."

"Yes, to be sure," and Mr. Thomas felt for his glasses. "English C, History C, Algebra B, Latin C," he read. "What do those letters signify? Um—here it is: A—excellent; B—good; C—passable, but not satisfactory; D—deficient."

He looked inquiringly at Fred, who could not quite face his father's gaze.

"How does it happen that you have no A's, and only one B?" asked Mr. Thomas.

Fred felt uncomfortable, and looked at it. "Well," he said defensively, "I didn't get any D's, did I? Bill Crowley got all C's."

Mr. Thomas said nothing.

"You can get by on C's all right," Fred continued. "They don't drop a fellow out of school unless he gets some D's, and not even then the first time. That report's good enough. You ought to see some of the fellows' reports. I'd think you'd be proud to have me do so well." Fred spoke in an aggrieved sort of tone, as if his father had really done him an injury.

There was presently heard a faint scratching of a pen as Mr. Thomas affixed his signature to the report. Then he handed it back to his son without further comment.

Fred tucked the envelope into his coat and escaped from the room. "Say, but that was lucky! I never thought I'd get off so easy as that!"

The day following was Saturday, and that night Fred asked his mother to fix him up a lunch for the holiday, as the scouts were going on an all-day hike.

But after a hasty breakfast, as Fred grabbed up the lunch, it was so carelessly wrapped that the string came off and the paper dropped away.

"Say, mother," cried Fred in considerable disgust; "My lunch isn't wrapped up right."

"What's the matter with it?" inquired Mrs. Thomas indifferently. "I thought it was good enough."

"And say!" continued Fred hotly, hardly hearing her, for he had been investigating the lunch; "there's nothing here but bread and butter, and there isn't a whole lot of butter on the bread, either!"

"You can get by on bread and butter," was Mrs. Thomas' unfeeling rejoinder. "Plenty of boys would be glad enough of the bread alone."

There was no time to get anything else, but it was a disgusted and disappointed boy who stuffed the lunch into his pocket. Half tearfully he thought of the wonderful lunches his mother used to put up for him, and he wondered if she had ceased to feel any interest in his happiness and welfare.

But Fred speedily forgot his troubles in the fun of the hike, from which the scouts did not get back until late in the afternoon.

One of Fred's tasks on Saturday night—indeed, we might say about his only regular task—was to wash the automobile. To Fred the work was rather distasteful; he much preferred being allowed to run the car, but since his father was usually more likely to let him act as chauffeur if he did a thorough job in the washing, he almost always took pains to leave the body, wheels, and mud guards looking as if they had just come from the factory.

Tonight, however, he was tired after the hike, and so he gave the car what his father would have termed "lick and a promise—more promise than lick." Mr. Thomas, noting the streaked, badly-washed automobile, spoke his displeasure.

"Aw, it's good enough," rejoined Fred. "She won't run any worse for a little dirt."

Sunday dinner was usually a very important event in the Thomas family, an event to which Fred looked forward with much enthusiasm. This Sunday, however, everything seemed to be wrong. The beef roast was nearly raw, and was undeniably tough; the potatoes were hopelessly soggy; the lettuce in the salad was flabby and wilted; and the dessert—Mrs. Thomas was a wonder at desserts—was as dismal a failure as was the rest of the meal.

No one said a word about it, and Mrs. Thomas seemed just as cheerful as if she had set before her family a rare treat. Finally Fred could stand it no longer.

"My!" he exclaimed, after vainly trying to find something on the table that suited his palate; "what struck the dinner today? It's the worst ever!"

"It's good enough, as far as I can see," retorted his father, decorating a half-cooked potato with some burned gravy.

"Certainly it's good enough," added Mrs. Thomas. "You should be thankful for food as good as this. Think of the poor boys in Belgium and in lots of other places who haven't anything at all to eat today. You can get by on this dinner all right."

Fred shot a glance across the table at his sister, Margaret, five years older than he. He expected her to come to his rescue with some criticism of the food, but Margaret seemed entirely satisfied with what she was eating.

Every Monday morning at Fred's plate was a little envelope with his allowance of spending money for the week—fifty cents. He could spend all at once if he chose, or make it last until next pay day, but he knew better than to ask for an advance when that was gone. But this Monday morning the envelope contained only three dimes —thirty cents, instead of the customary half dollar.

"Say, father you made a mistake," said Fred.

"No, I guess not," rejoined Mr. Thomas. "What's wrong?"

"I've got only thirty cents here; there should be fifty."

"Oh, yes, to be sure. Thirty is enough, I think. You can get by on thirty all right. A little practice of economy will take care of that, and be a fine thing for you as well."

"My!" cried Fred; "suppose I can get by on it; that isn't any sign that I want to, is it?"

Unfortunately for Fred, this logic failed to make any very great impression, for Mr. Thomas went on placidly eating his breakfast, as if his son's financial problem of how to get by on thirty cents a week was the least of his troubles.

After the meal Fred sought out his sister, of whom he thought a great deal, and who very often helped him to straighten out his difficulties.

"What's the matter with this family lately, anyway?" he demanded petulantly.

Margaret looked surprised. "Do you really mean to tell me that you don't understand it yet?" she asked gently.

"Understand it? What are you driving at?" Fred wanted to know.

"Well, perhaps I can make you see. What sort of father have you? What's your idea of him?"

"Oh, he's all right," Fred conceded.

"What does he do for you?"

"Oh—he buys my clothes and food, and gives me a place to sleep, and he gives me fifty cents a week—I mean he used to—and—and—oh, lots of things."

"And what do you do for him?"

"Me?"

"Yes, you!"

"Oh! Well, I clean the car, and—and—oh, I help around the house quite a bit, and do lots of things."

"I wish you'd name some of those things."

Fred tried, quite hard, to do so, but the effect fizzled out into something of a failure. It made him realize, as never before, how little actual use he was in the world. Margaret certainly could make a fellow feel awfully ashamed of himself, couldn't she? Somehow he wished he hadn't started this little talk.

"Can't you think of something you could do to show father that you appreciate the things he gives you?" Margaret continued.

Fred thought a moment, and at once he began to see things. He wondered why he had been so blind during the past few days.

"I get you," he said abruptly. "It's all come from what I told dad about my report, isn't it?"

Margaret nodded.

"Father and mother worked up a conspiracy to make you see it," she explained.

"And I s'pose dad would rather have me do well in school, and do what few jobs I have to do well, than most anything else, wouldn't he?"

"Is that too much for him to expect of you? When you come right down to it, hasn't he a right to expect that of you?"

"I guess he has; I never quite looked at it that way before." Fred was silent with his thoughts for a second or two; then he laughed. They did give me a dose of my own medicine!" he chuckled, "but now you can tell 'em to call off the dog. I'm cured."

"And you won't be satisfied with just 'getting by' any more?" Margaret persisted.

THE LITTLE POET'S CORNER.

The Moon.

Clarence A. Neff, age 10 years.

There's a jolly good fellow high up in the sky,
 He looks down on us, he's ever so high;
 He looks down on meadows and cows fast asleep,
 He looks down on children, a good watch will keep;
 He likes to be shining, and hates a thick cloud,
 He hates to hear thunder, it's ever so loud!
 He looks down on roses there, drooping their heads,
 He looks down on babies asleep in their beds.

"Say," Fred assured his sister, "I'm going to plug in so hard now that those teachers up at the school will all worry themselves half to death for fear I'll get brain fever. You just wait and see!"—Christian Observer.

Jimmy Butler the Weaver.

Uncle Ray came with two lollipops. He gave one to Mary Ruth and the other to her little sister Betty Anne. Mary Ruth is five years old; her lollipop was yellow. Betty Anne is two years old, and her lollipop was red. Uncle Ray didn't bring a lollipop for Barbara Jane, the wee baby sister, because she is only three months old and cannot even hold a lollipop stick.

After a while Uncle Ray said, "What is your favorite story, Betty Anne?"

The red lollipop had to wait a few seconds while Betty Anne said, "Jimmy Butler."

"You mean the story of the lost man?" asked Uncle Ray.

"Yes, if you please," answered Betty Anne.

Now it happened that I had never heard the Jimmy Butler story, and so I asked Uncle Ray about it.

He said that it was an old, old story—so old that no one knows who told it first. The babies' grandfather told it to his little boys and girls, and their grandfather's grandfather told it to his little boys and girls; so Jimmy Butler must have been lost in the woods more than one hundred years ago.

Uncle Ray told the story for me while the yellow lollipop and the red lollipop grew smaller and smaller; here it is:

Once upon a time there was a man whose name was Jimmy Butler. He was a weaver, and he had come sailing over the seas to live in this country. One lovely day in summer Jimmy Butler wished to visit his cousin Larry O'Tooley who lives some distance away. Jimmy Butler thought that he should like to walk through the woods to Larry's house, so he asked a man to tell him how to get there.

The man told him. He said that it would be all right for Jimmy Butler to go through the woods if he didn't get lost.

Jimmy said, "I get lost? My father was the best navigator that ever sailed the seas!"

So he started through the woods, and he walked and he walked and he walked and he WALKED, and he kept on walking till it began to get dark.

After a while Jimmy Butler was so tired that he sat down under a tree to rest and to think. He began to realize that he was lost; so he called:

"Man lost! Man lost! MAN LOST!"

Just as he finished he heard some one above his head in the tree say, "Hoo? Hoo? Hoo?"

Jimmy then said, "Jimmy Butler the weaver."

The same cry came again: "Hoo? Hoo? Hoo?"

"Jimmy Butler the weaver, I tell you!"

The cry came again: "Hoo? Hoo? Hoo?"

Now it happened that Jimmy Butler had never heard of an owl, and he didn't know that there was such a bird anywhere in the wide world.

When the cry came again for the third time, "Hoo? Hoo? Hoo?" Jimmy Butler started to climb the tree. He said, "If I go up there, I'll 'hoo' you!"

Up Jimmy climbed. Then he broke a stick off the tree and tried to hit whoever was crying Hoo?" at him. He whacked and he whacked and he WHACKED hard with the stick. He climbed far out on a limb of the tree, and he whacked and he whacked harder and harder with the stick. Then the limb broke and Jimmy Butler fell flat to the ground.

Soon he heard the tinkle of a bell in the distance, "Ding-a-ling, ding-a-ling, ding-a-ling." He knew the bell was on a cow.

"I will wait," said Jimmy Butler, "and follow the cow because there must be a settlement near, and the cow is going home."

When the cow came by, "Ding-a-ling, ding-a-ling, ding-a-ling," Jimmy Butler grabbed the cow's tail.

The cow began to run, and Jimmy Butler began to run. The cow ran faster and faster, and Jimmy Butler ran faster and faster. The cow ran faster and faster and FASTER, and Jimmy Butler ran faster and faster and FASTER.

They ran and they ran and they ran, straight to Larry O'Tooley's house, because it was Larry O'Tooley's cow.

When Larry O'Tooley heard Jimmy Butler's story he told Jimmy about our bird called the owl that was in the tree and cried "Hoo?" at him.

Then Larry O'Tooley laughed and and laughed. After a few minutes Jimmy Butler laughed too. And that is all.—Youth's Companion.

Thank God For Variety.

The long and glorious summer day would hardly be so full of joy and gladness did we not carry around with us some subtle memory of the cold and storm of winter. It is the fret and noise and worry of the day that help to make the calm, cool silences of night so grateful. How monotonous life would be if day after day there were skies without clouds, summers without a storm, the sun in its undimmed splendor throughout an unchanging year. Thank God for the sunrise that follows darkness, for the clouds that come and go and are never the same, for the storm and the cold that help to give zest to living, for the landscape that changes with every passing moment, for the green of the meadow that differs so from the green of the forest, for the great world that is so crowded with things no two of which are ever alike. The mountains differ from the plains; the quiet fields differ from the surging sea; the birds, with their myriad different forms, colors and songs, differ from the plants. There are few things indeed that we need to be more grateful for than for this great fact of variety in life. But we cannot be grateful and appreciative unless we see and realize. So one of the most constant prayers of our life from day to day should be, "Lord; help me this day to keep my eyes open to see and my soul to feel."—Selected.

He Dared To Tell the Truth.

Mr. Jones was accounted a hard master. He never kept his boys; they ran away or gave notice they meant to quit. So he was half his time without or in search of a boy. The work was not hard, opening and sweeping out the shop, chopping wood, going on errands and helping around. At last Sam Fisher went to live with him.

"Sam's a good boy," said his mother.

"I should like to see a boy that had a spark of goodness in him," growled the new master.

It is always bad to begin with a man that has no confidence in you, because, do your best, you are likely to have little credit for it. However, Sam thought he would try. The wages were good, and his mother wanted him to go. Sam had been there but three days when, in sawing a cross-grained stick of wood, he broke the saw. He was a little frightened. He knew he was careful, and he knew he was a pretty good sawyer, too, for a boy of his age; nevertheless, the saw broke in his hands.

"Mr. Jones never makes allowances," said another boy who was in the wood-house with him.

"Why, of course, I didn't mean it, and accidents will happen to the best of folks," said Sam, looking with a very sorrowful air on the broken saw.

"Mr. Jones never makes allowances," said the other boy. "I never saw anything like him. And Bill might have stayed, only he jumped into a hen's nest and broke her eggs. He daren't tell of it; but Mr. Jones kept suspecting and suspecting and laid everything out of the way to Bill, whether Bill was to blame or not, till Bill couldn't stand it and wouldn't."

"Did he tell Mr. Jones about the eggs?" asked Sam.

"No," said the boy; "he was afraid. Mr. Jones has got such a temper."

"I think he'd have better owned up at once," said Sam.

"I suspect you'll find it better to preach than to practice," said the boy. "I'd run away before I'd tell him." And he soon turned on his heel and left poor Sam alone with the broken saw.

The boy did not feel very comfortable or happy. He shut up the wood-house, walked out in the garden and went up to his little chamber under the eaves. He wished he could tell Mrs. Jones, but she wasn't sociable.

When Mr. Jones came into the house the boy heard him. He got up, crept downstairs and met Mr. Jones in the kitchen.

"Sir," said Sam, "I broke your saw, and I thought I'd come and tell you."

"What did you get up to tell me for?" asked Mr. Jones. "I should think morning would be time enough to tell of your carelessness."

"Because," said Sam, "I was afraid if I put it off I might be tempted to lie about it. I am sorry I broke it, but I tried to be careful."

Mr. Jones looked at the boy from head to foot, then stretching out his hand, he said heartily: "Sam, give me your hand; shake hands. I'll trust you, Sam. That's right; that's right. Go to bed, boy. Never fear. I'm glad the saw broke; it shows the mettle's in you. Go to bed."

Mr. Jones was fairly won. There never were better friends after that than Sam and he. Sam thinks justice had not been done Mr. Jones. If the boys had treated him honestly and "above board" he would have been a good man with whom to deal. It was their conduct which soured and made him suspicious. I do not know how that is. I only know that Sam Fisher finds in Mr. Jones a kind master and a faithful friend.—Selected.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

nvas. The conference was led by two representatives of the National Council, R. L. Galliard and the Rev. Louis Wood.

At the conclusion of the conference about ten of the clergy and laity drove over to Hendersonville, twenty miles away, for the purpose of looking over the Kanuga Lake property, three miles from Hendersonville, as a prospective site for a Church Assembly Grounds for the dioceses of the Southeast. After luncheon twenty men, including Bishop Horner, Bishop Finlay of Upper South Carolina, and the Rev. F. A. Juhan, Bishop-elect of Florida, and others from various dioceses, drove out to Lake Kanuga and with Bishop Finlay as chairman, held a two hours' conference on the desirability of purchasing the property for church purposes. The property is for sale at $125,000. It embraces a large inn, forty cottages, a recreational pavilion, a lake, and four hundred acres of land. It is secluded and yet only three miles from a railroad station, easily accessible from all points in the South. The great value to the Church in the Southeast of such a property for a Church Assembly Grounds is plain.

The purchase of this property has been before the dioceses for about a year, but no definite action has been taken as a whole by the dioceses. Inasmuch as the property will not be held for sale until all the diocesan conventions shall have met for definite action in regard to the matter it was imperative to take definite steps at this meeting. Those present, therefore, not as representatives of their dioceses, but unofficially as individuals merely, elected a committee of five to form a holding corporation with power to buy the property in order to retain it until the diocesan conventions meet and decide either to accept the offer or to reject it.

It was pointed out that with about seven dioceses undertaking this project, each holding institutes for fourteen days, the inn and cottages could be kept open for three or four months every summer and would be self-supporting. It was the general opinion that the Church in the Southeast would derive great benefit from the holding of conferences and institute for young people of the Y. P. S. L. Church School teachers, Church workers in general, and for the clergy. It is a big undertaking and a venture of faith. Its contemplation evinces the spirit which is animating the Church in the Southeast.

Missionary Work Among Colored People.

An important step was taken in the progress of the missionary work among the colored Churchmen in the diocese, when the Church of the Good Shepherd was consecrated on Sunday morning, September 28, in Sumter, S. C., by the Rt. Rev. William A. Guerry, D. D., Bishop of South Carolina. The Bishop celebrated the Holy Communion and preached an eloquent sermon from Haggai 2:9.

Those assisting the Bishop in the service were Archdeacon Baskerville, the Rev. Wm. H. Brown, Jr., rector, and a former rector, the Rev. J. Clyde Perry, of Brunswick, Ga. A brief history of the Good Shepherd was read by Dr. C. W. Birnie.

During this service Bishop Guerry dedicated an oak lectern as a memorial to the late Major Wm. Sinkler Manning, son of ex-Governor Manning, and also a hymn board as a memorial to the late lay reader of the Good Shepherd, Samuel C. Richardson.

A special memorial service was held in the afternoon in the memory of the late lay reader, Samuel C. Richardson. A short sketch of his life was read by the rector, the Rev. Wm. H. Brown, Jr., and an impressive and a touching memorial address was delivered by the Rev. J. Clyde Perry. Other ministers taking part in the service were the Rev. J. B. Walker of Sumter, and Archdeacon Baskerville.

Both of the services were largely attended by white and colored friends. High water and bad roads prevented Governor Manning from being present. He sent his regrets.

A program to increase the communicant list in the congregations among the colored people in the diocese by holding a preaching mission in each congregation before Easter 1925, has been arranged and is being carried out.

During the latter part of August the Rev. J. Clyde Perry, of Brunswick, Ga., conducted a preaching mission at Atonement, Walterboro, the Rev. H. C. Banks, rector. The Rev. J. J. Thomas conducted a preaching mission at Redeemer, Pineville, from September 7-14. The Rev. E. H. Hamilton, of Hampton, Va., will hold a preaching mission at Calvary Church, Charleston, from October 7-17, Archdeacon Baskerville, rector. Preaching missions have been scheduled to be held at the Good Shepherd, Sumter, St. Augustine's, Sumter County, and St. Andrew's, Charleston County, before December 31, 1924.

BETHLEHEM.

Rt. Rev. Ethelbert Talbot, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. F. W. Sterrett, D. D., Coadjutor.

The Diocesan Campaign.

The Field Department of the Diocese has issued four papers entitled, Let's Have Diocesan Unanimity. Every parish and mission is urged to do four things:

(a) Start the fall work with Parish Program Conference. Decide what they ought to do.

(b) Organize the group system as a permanent asset of the parish—not only to help in the annual canvass.

(c) Make a thorough study of the question of Stewardship, using as a basis Mr. Kemerer's book on Christian Stewardship.

(d) Adopt a well-prepared and adaptable educational program for the whole parish.

The reports which have come from the regional chairman thus far are very encouraging. The clergy and laity want definite objectives.

Appointments.

Since the lamented death of Dr. Mitman last spring, who was the warden of Leonard Hall, the Bishop's school for postulants, the position has been vacant. On October 4 the Bishop appointed the Rev. Arthur T. Reasoner, Diocese of Ohio, but for several years past a fellow in the General Theological Seminary. Mr. Reasoner had come on from New York to see the hall and was so well pleased with the students and building and opportunity that he accepted the appointment at once.

Last year the students of Leonard Hall stood first scholastically in Lehigh University. They all attend Lehigh for their academic training.

The Rev. S. F. Custard, curate at the Pro-Cathedral Church of the Nativity, Bethlehem, has just been elected rector of Grace Church, Allentown. He will begin his new work on All Saints' Day.
H. P. W.

DALLAS.

Rt. Rev. H. T. Moore, D. D., Bishop.

Preparing for the Nation-Wide Campaign.

Doctor Robert W. Patton, of the Field Department of the National Church, conducted a two days' conference at St. Matthew's Cathedral, Dallas, for the clergy of the diocese as the beginning of the diocesan preparation for the Nation-Wide Campaign.

The conference was not only a success in itself, but was attended by all save two of the clergy on the active list; and at the close of the diocesan clericus, it was unanimously resolved to send to National Headquarters an expression of their appreciation of the inspiring and informing conference which had been led by Doctor Patton.

On Friday evening, September 26, at the close of the clergy conferences, Doctor Patton was the principal speaker at a largely attended banquet of the leading laymen of the City of Dallas, and was successful in arousing the keenest interest in the whole program of the Church.

Personal Notes

After forty years of service, the Rev. J. J. Wilkins, D. D., rector of Grace Church, Kirkwood, Mo., has retired from active parochial work. Dr. Wilkins will be succeeded as rector of Grace Church by the Rev. F. J. F. Bloy, who has been head of the Missouri Mission to St. Louis Institutions for eighteen months.

The address of the Rev. C. A. Jessup, D. D., rector of Saint Paul's Cathedral of the Diocese of Western New York, is 88 Lexington Avenue, Buffalo, N. Y.

After serving for nearly thirty years as rector of St. John's Church, Cynwyd, Pa., the Rev. Henry A. F. Hoyt, D. D., has retired from active service. The Rev. Albert E. Clattenburg, formerly rector of St. Peter's Church, Hazleton, Pa., succeeds Dr. Hoyt.

The Rev. Frederick Blount Drane, Archdeacon of Alaska, was married to Miss Rebecca Bennehan Wood, of Edenton, North Carolina, in Seattle, Washington, on September 20, 1924, and sailed for Nenana immediately afterwards, where he expects to make his home.

The Rev. F. C. Wissenbach, at one time a student at the Virginia Theological Seminary, Alexandria, Va., has been called to St. Peter's Church, Sheridan, one of the three most important Parishes in Wyoming. He has entered upon his duties there and should now be addressed Sheridan, Wyo.

The Rev. Thomas F. Opie, D. D., rector of the Church of the Holy Comforter, Burlington, N. C., has been called to a position on the staff of Epiphany Church, Washington, D. C., and now has the matter under consideration.

Ordinations.

At Gethsemane Church, Minneapolis, on the Feast of St. Michael and All Angels, the Bishop of Minnesota advanced to the priesthood the Rev. Charles M. Brandon. The sermon was preached by the Rev. E. H. Eckel, Jr., and the ordinand was presented by the Rev. A. D. Stowe, D. D. The Rev. Mr. Brandon continues his work at Calvary Church, Waseca, Minnesota.

In St. Andrew's Church, Roswell, New Mexico, the Rt. Rev. Frederick B. Howden, D. D., Bishop of the District of New Mexico and Southwest Texas, advanced to the priesthood the Rev. D. J. Williams, on September 14, 1924. The candidate was presented by the Rev. H. King Stanley, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. F. A. T. Eller, rector of Grace Church, Carlsbad, N. M. The Ven. T. A. Schofield and the Rev. Raymond Brock assisted.

THE THIRTY-NINTH ANNUAL CONVENTION

THE BROTHERHOOD OF ST. ANDREW IN THE UNITED STATES

Wednesday Evening to Sunday Evening
October 8 to 12, 1924
Albany, N. Y.

The registration fee is $2.00 for Seniors, $1.00 for Juniors.

The first step is to register yourself, then register someone else. Bring a room-mate at least. Better organize a party from your parish. Plan to include this delightful trip in your vacation. The trip alone is worth while. Add to it the splendid inspiration and spiritual growth that are bound to come from and through the Convention, and you have surely sufficient reason for coming to this Convention, even at the expense of something else.

The clergy generally are urged to call to the attention of the men and boys of their parishes the advantage of attendance, and to make an earnest effort to assure that their parishes are represented. Registration cards may be had from the National Office, 202 S. 19th Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

company, knowing how quickly life insurance riches take wings, gives its policy holders this advice:

"We believe that trust companies offer advantages because of their permanence and their experience in handling estates. Where judgment must be exercised, where supervision is required or where the necessity of liquidation may exist, the knowledge and skill of a trust company is superior to that of a private executor."

That opinion, the result of much experience, is worth your careful consideration.

Your family needs protection, and so does the money which is left to protect them.

We invite consultations with those concerned as to the best way to safeguard their welfare.

Prayer

These are the gifts I ask of thee, Spirit serene—Strength for the daily task;
" Courage to face the road;
Good cheer to help me bear the traveler's load;
And for the hours of rest that come between,
An inward joy in all things heard and seen.

These are the sins I fain would have thee take away—
Malice and cold disdain;
Hot anger, sullen hate;
Scorn of the lowly, envy of the great;
And discontent that casts a shadow gray
On all the brightness of a common day.

Satisfied.

The shadow falls, the path I cannot trace;

Fear not, my heart, if only faith abide;
If faith abide, thou conquerest time and place;

Some day, somewhere, thou shalt behold His face;

O yearning heart, thou shalt be satisfied.

The shadow falls, the shadow cannot stay;

Hope on, pray on, thou wilt not be denied;

Over the burnt-out embers of today
The golden morrow rises, and alway

The promise stands—thou shalt be satisfied.

I cannot say to what far land I go,
When I embark upon the foamless tide;
Or if I'll find the things I yearn for so,
Ever at all, O heart, I do not know:
I only know thou shalt be satisfied.

I follow, moving toward the deep and vast,

I follow hope, my star and faithful guide;

I shall rejoice in trails overpast,
And see that face, O heart of mine, at last,

In whose dear look thou shalt be satisfied.

—Sam V. Cole, in the Congregationalist.

Wanted by Many Church Members.

A colored man who was so singularly lazy as to be quite a problem professed to be converted in a revival. His associates in the church were anxious to know whether he would now bestir himself and go to work. The negro attended a meeting and offered a prayer in which occurred the petition, "Use me, Lord, use me—in an advisory capacity!"

The memory of all God's mercies ought to be perpetuated. Every critical period, as the turning of the year; every point of success in any enterprise of life; every new relation which promises great blessedness to us; every point where we gain a higher joy, whether it be secular, or social, or spiritual; every business achievement which seems to lift us out of difficulties; every great mischief that impended as a threatening sky, but that is rolled away—every such event or experience ought to have a distinct recognition.—Henry Ward Beecher.

If the Lord's Prayer is to be the great model of prayer, as it surely is, how much intercession ought not our prayers to contain! This extraordinary prayer is so constructed that it is impossible to use it without praying for all other Christians as well as ourselves. Intercessions, instead of a clause added on to it, is woven into its very texture. Break off the minutest fragment you please, and you will find intercession in it.—E. M. Grulburn.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

Out of difficulties blossom miracles.

Good manners are made up of petty sacrifices.—Emerson.

A great sorrow—like any other possession—is a great trust.—Lady Dieke.

It is the weight of self that overpowers; Take up another's load, it carries ours.—Langbridge.

Whenever you feel moved to do anything that is good, do it. That impulse is God's inner call.—Spurgeon.

We should all of us be hoping to work some deliverance in the earth before we leave it.—Marcus Dods.

No power of the Holy Ghost can fill you while you are full of your own ideas, your own importance. All that must go.—Bishop Winnington-Ingram

There is far too much trimming and see-sawing in our day, the age wants men of stern fidelity to God and His cause.—Davidson.

"The hills of Zion yield
A thousand sacred sweets,
Before we reach the heavenly field,
Or walk the Golden streets."

The fine art of living with other people sometimes becomes the finer and more difficult art of living around them—avoiding their sharp corners, their prickly tempers, and unduly cultivated sensitiveness.

"Life is what we are alive to. It is not length, but breadth. To be alive only to appetite, pleasure, pride, money making, and not to goodness and kindness, purity and love, history, poetry, music, flowers, stars, God and eternal hopes, is to be all but dead."

Help us, O Lord! with patient love to bear

Each other's faults, to suffer with true meekness;

Help us each other's joys and griefs to share.

But let us turn to Thee alone in weakness.

—Selected.

Love makes people believe in immortality, because there seems not to be room enough in life for so great a tenderness, and it is inconceivable that the most masterful of our emotions should have no more than the spare moments of a few years.—Robert Louis Stevenson.

Open, thou trembling one the portal wide,

And to the innermost chamber of thy breast,

Take home the heavenly Guest!
He for the famished shall a feast provide,

And thou shalt taste the Bread of Life, and see

The Lord of angels come to sup with thee.

—E. F. Eliot.

I have known a malignant human being throw in the face of two poor broken-hearted parents the certain truth that their son had fallen into sin and shame, and been compelled to fly his native land, and I have thought that truth may sometimes be spoken in a way that shows the very spirit of the devil. But oh, how different it is if the truth be spoken in love, as St. Paul would have it!—A. K. H. Boyd.

IS MIRACLE AN ESSENTIAL OF CHRISTIAN BELIEF?

Today when theology is groping towards a new language in which to speak to the experience of men, there are many who have assumed that this language can be found in the laboratory alone. They are looking for a God of power, seeking some adequate suggestion, if not proof, that behind the forces there is One who uses those forces as the channels of an energy that belongs to Him as a quality of His being. This is a natural attitude of mind and one that so far from being the mark of superior intelligence, is as much the mark of a savage as of a sage. This natural expectancy belongs not to the higher but to the lower nature of man. It is common to the race. The classic picture of Elijah waiting for the revelation of God is a picture of mankind. Man wants the proof of a God of power. Even the prophet thought that the mighty wind, the earthquake and the fire were fitting vehicles of the promised message from God.

If the proposed betrothal of religion and science be no more than a joint quest for a God of power, we do not hesitate to say that it is an unholy and an unnatural union. Science is reasoned knowledge, but the reason must have the knowledge wherewith to build the thesis men call science. For centuries whatever there was of science was predicated on the indestructibility of matter. It is still an item in the news columns that scientists have been forced to the conclusion that matter is made within the universe itself. The corollaries of this conclusion have not yet been written, but inevitably they will form the foundation of practically a new science of physics and biology. The arguments against miracles will have to be recast; for if in the universe there be "free energy" convertible into chemical and physical energy and even into vital energy all that is needed to make miracle a commonplace, is for man to establish such communion with the directing will of the universe as to be able to give direction to this free energy. This is just what historic Christianity proclaims was fulfilled in the person of its founder. As Phillips Brooks says: "What are those miracles of Jesus, over which the world disputes, except the recognition by the world of its Master who speaks to it? If Christ be a manifestation of God, miracle is the very first condition of His Life. I look for it the very moment I know His nature." It is interesting to compare with this statement that of one of the spokesmen at the conference of Modern Churchmen recently held in England. He declares: "Miracles were not brought to an end with the New Testament period. They continued as long as the mentality which produced them prevailed." This was meant as a sneer at the credulity which recorded the miracles and the superstition which today accepts that record as true. With the enrichment of a single word we are willing to accept this sneer as an exact statement of the history of miracle in Christian history. "Miracles were not brought to an end with the New Testament period. They continued as long as the change of mind (conversion) which produced them prevailed." So long as Christ was to the believer the Lord of life; and thorough-going loyalty to Him the consuming passion of a few of those who called themselves disciples, miracles did prevail and were bound to prevail. "The finger of God" is the means by which Christ declared His miracles were wrought, and this means He declared He could and did put into the hands of His faithful ones.

What He gave to His chosen ones, was something that the crowd begged for themselves: "What must we do that we might work the works of God?" Christ's answer to those worshippers of power, is the Christian doctrine of miracle. "This is the work of God, that ye believe on Him whom He hath sent." This work of belief is the fulfillment of the conditions under which the divine elements in human nature have play. The work is within; and this work (ergon) in man becomes the energy whose outward sign is miracle. The teacher here as always is concerned that His disciples master the principles of man's inner being. Christ's attitude towards His own miracles has never been fully studied. To Him they are as much a part of the revelation of God's nature and man's power to share that nature as is the revelation in terms of ethical values.

Man has approached the study of God's nature from the standpoint of the evil in the world. It is as hopeless a quest as to seek to learn the principles of biology in a charnel house. To know God we must make our tests of what human life, attuned to the life of His which did function in miracle and revelation, can do.

The physiologist who declares that he has proved that perspiration from the brow of a man in fierce anger contains a toxin so strong that when it is injected into the veins of a small animal, causes death, would sneer at the suggestion of power to heal a lesion in the brain or restore a nerve to normal functioning that Christ declares to abide in the touch of one who by prayer and discipline of appetite has linked his life to God's. So firmly are we persuaded that Christ so wrought and taught that we willingly accept the sneering taunts of men who may mock the statement of our belief that if a group of Christians should be able to say the prayer Our Lord taught us to say, with undivided heart and thorough-going sincerity, that once more the directed free energy of the universe would as a mighty wind fill the house and pentecostal power be once more loosed on earth.

ROOF TALK

In the fables of Aesop the Wise there is a story of a goat who, perched upon the roof of a house, flung taunts at a wolf who was passing by. The wolf walked on without even an upward look. The goat, angry at being ignored, cried out: "Don't you hear me, the goat, talking?" The wolf answered: "I hear a roof talking but no goat."

What is here written is in mild protest against roof-talking. Luther declared that he would go to Worms if every tile on every house along the road were a devil. It is doubtful whether such a journey would have been much more uncomfortable than one along life's highway with every roof occupied by some goat of learning and specialized omniscience who flings taunts at you as you pass. This is the age of the many omnisciences. The man who corners pig iron knows the only secret of success, and is invited to a University to tell his secret to eager youth. The Doctor of Philosophy knows that he has been appointed receiver of a world bankrupt of all knowledge. The germ theory of medicine has made every physician a priest of new Eleusinian mysteries esoteric and forbidden to the common mind. No village is safe from the inroads of the roof-men who crowd their victims under tents and sell them the secrets of the universe serially or singly. A newly chartered omniscience bears the modest title of secretaryship. To become a secretary is an infallible guarantee of omniscience. If the many secretaries of many movements in an age when movement has become a fetish of the mind, should ever organize themselves into a guild, then we should have a syndicated and titulated omniscience which would speedily put every individual thinker out of business. The popular clamor for speedy knowledge has fly-blown every part of the body social. The maggots of learning develop into titled dispensers of systems and theories. The whole American people is suffering from a bad case of titularity. The doctors tell us that everybody has had tuberculosis at some time in his life. This may or may not be true, but it would be difficult to find an American citizen of either sex who is not affected with titularity or does not show scars from some former affliction of this malady. These titularians or roof-men, immune from any further doubts of their limitations in knowledge, fill the air with their taunting certitudes. The revulsion from a barren agnosticism has taken on strange forms. Nothing is so cheap as knowledge. The writer recalls with a smile the scorn of a somewhat tattered dispenser of knowledge who offered to sell him for a quarter a book which would clear away every doubt he ever had. He told the roof-man that his doubts were his burglar alarms, and that until thinking became a safer occupation than he had ever found it, he would have to keep his doubts about him. The roof-man left, thinking he had stumbled on a lunatic.

Bacon has a charming essay on vanity, which, he says, is characteristic of genius. He tells us it is a sort of varnish which gives a gloss and lasting power to reputation. Disraeli, we may infer, might have been forgotten, but for the checked waistcoat. It is really very amazing what reverence has been paid to the roof-men in all ages; and how immodest even recognized worth has ever been. Aristotle has left us his portrait of the ideal man—the great-souled man, he calls him. We have met him frequently of late. By these tokens ye shall know him, "His movements are slow, his voice is deep, and his diction stately." He is in fact a roof-man.

Taine says somewhere in his writings that vice was once so popular in France that there was not a hypocrite in the land. Something of the same kind has happened in America. Knowledge has become endemic. There seems to be no escape from it. Thought has become meaningless in a world where everything is known. It is a startling paradox, but there seems to be a gradation and caste even among the omniscient ones, and the lesser omniscience becomes a parasite of the larger. It is difficult to give description of the condition. There is the temptation to call it intellectual snobbery; but snobbery is one of the most contagious of the diseases of the mind, and a healthy terror of becoming infected therewith keeps the writer from dealing with anything that bears that name. The air is charged with crude generalizations made by these dwellers on the roof. It would be a safer world if the signs at the grade crossings: "Look out for the locomotive" were taken down and replaced by signs reading: "Watch your neighbor's major premise."

This is but the complaint of a lonely soul: one who loves the company of his fellow-man, but one who loves, too, to sit and gaze into the infinite; one who, even as a child, used to wonder what was behind the stars. Somehow the world seems smaller than it once was. The roof-men have walled in the world and shut out the stars; and the wisdom of the many Aesops grows stale and flat. Sometimes the glare of knowledge and the gibes of the motley ones drive the lonely soul away from the haunts of men. His journeys seem to his friends folly unspeakable, for he deliberately sets out to lose himself in the big woods. Leaving the high-road, and without map or compass, he follows for hours the beck of the densest shadows. When he has lost all sense of direction and is tired and hungry, he begins his search for the way out. He chooses a cloudy day, for he wants no sun to be his guide. The woods themselves must tell him of the movements of the stars and whence comes the dawn. The moss upon the trees, the spider's web, the way a flower leans, a bird's choice of a place to nest, the mold upon a fallen log—these are the voices that speak to him; a thousand seeming contradictions, but one law beneath them all. After such a day he counts the many new truths learned, and lists the many puzzles he had not sense enough to solve.

Out in the woods he learned one of Nature's secrets, which gave him joy unmeasured. This is the secret, that he who finds for himself and all alone the hidden place where truth lies hid, can, if he approach with slow and reverent tread, take the brood of truth along with the parent bird. A young truth (the phrase means nothing, save to the lonely man) bears little likeness to its parent, for a young truth is a question. It is an ugly duckling of the mind that seems sadly out of place among the graceful, wide-beaked ducks of knowledge. How rich he counts himself when he returns and uncovers in his brain the new truth and all its strange young questions, that will some day be themselves new truths and bring forth after their kind. He likes to think there are more stars than he can count, and yet he likes to try to count the stars. He does not wish to know all things, nor everything about the commonest things of earth. He likes to think that all he learns but helps his eyes to see, his hands to form. The smooth, round stone, flecked with tiny fragments of shell, that he picked up in the garden of his mountain home, has told him many things about the ancient ocean and the young earth. Some day, it may be, when he has larger grown, it will tell him something of the stars, and something, too, of Him of whom 'tis written: "He maketh the clouds His chariot, and walketh upon the wings of the wind."

ANNUAL CONVENTION OF THE BROTHERHOOD OF ST. ANDREW

Albany, N. Y., October 8-12, 1924

BROTHERHOOD man and Churchmen from all over the country, and Church boys from most of the states in the Union, gathered last week in the city of Albany, New York, for five days of intensive consideration of the general topic, "First Things First," in Christian life and work.

The Convention was opened with a great dinner for men, and another for boys, the keynote being set by Bishop Nelson of Albany, who began his address with the words "Grace be unto you and peace from God Our Father and from the Lord Jesus Christ." He urged clearness of vision and definiteness of purpose, reminding the men that "the Brotherhood of St. Andrew was organized to perpetuate an ideal of human relation to God which is vital to the preservation of our bewildered civilization, and an ideal of Christian service which has lost nothing of its validity since a fisherman of Galilee brought his brother to the living Christ."

The Bishop Coadjutor of Albany, the Rt. Rev. G. Ashton Oldham, D. D., the Bishop of Washington, the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., and Mr. John L. Alexander, Training Division, American Youth Foundation, Chicago, were the other banquet speakers.

Thursday morning the daily prayer hour, led by Mr. Edward H. Bonsall, President of the Brotherhood, was followed by the initial business session. Mr. Lawrence H. Choate of Chicago was elected Convention Chairman, Mr. Cecil H. Eby of Shreveport, La., Secretary. The Rev. W. H. Owen, of Harlem, New York City, contributed delightful reminiscences of Brotherhood men of an earlier generation, and the Convention divided into general conferences. Leaders were Mr. E. E. Piper, Superintendent of Religious Education, Diocese of Michigan, "The Individual Christian"; Mr. John H. Frizzell, Field Secretary, "The Older Boy," and Mr. H. L. Choate, "The Senior Chapter."

The discussion groups continued daily, afternoons including the subjects: "Organization and Work of Diocesan Assemblies," led by Mr. S. Mendelson Meehan, Corresponding Secretary of the Brotherhood; "Work Among Men and Boys in Rural Parishes," led by Leon C. Palmer, Brotherhood Field Secretary; "Bible Classes," led by Dr. Howard A. Kelly, Baltimore; "For Workers With Boys Twelve to Fifteen Years Old," led by Francis A. Williams, Brotherhood Secretary for Junior Work; "For Lay Readers," led by George H. Randall, Editor of St. Andrew's Cross; "For College Men," led by John H. Frizzell; "For Workers in Jails," led by the Rev. H. H. Hart, D. D., of the Russell-Sage Foundation; "For Workers Among the Foreign Born," led by William Lamkie of the Foreign Born Americans Division, New York, and "For the Clergy," led by the Rt. Rev. Arthur S. Lloyd, Suffragan Bishop of New York.

The first public meeting of the Senior Convention was held in St. Peter's Church on Thursday evening. The subject was: "The Progress of the Kingdom," speakers being the Rev. Duncan M. Genns, of Brooklyn, and Leon C. Palmer, Spartanburg, S. C. Mr. Genns discussed the subject from the viewpoint of the Organization and Use of Personal Influence, pointing out that personal influence, from the time of the apostles had been organized by means of prayer. "Prayer," he said, "was to work in three ways. It was to influence high Heaven to send down upon the one hundred and twenty, the Gift of the Holy Spirit; by the power and influence of the Holy Spirit they themselves were to be enabled to live the Gospel which Jesus had commanded them to preach; and it was to give them forceful influence to their example and preaching when they stood as witnesses for that Gospel before the world."

The speaker defined personal influence as being "that subtle, irresistible power which one person exercises over the thoughts and actions of another, and nobody is entirely beyond its power." He vigorously scored those who by their lives particularly as to their recreations, fail to turn their influence into a power for good. "We are appalled at the flood of juvenile delinquency all over the country," he said; "we are alarmed by the bad manners and loose morals of our younger generation; and yet the 'Tired Business Man' who knows the necessity for law and morality and looks to the Church to produce trustworthy, moral young men and women, is destroying the Church's influence over the young by his own Sunday pleasures. The need of the Church today is not more persuasive preaching, not the revision of its creeds, but the honest support and cooperation of sane, loyal laymen in the pew who are using their personal influence intelligently for the progress of the Kingdom of God."

Mr. Palmer spoke on the general topic from the standpoint of Religious Education. He sketched the growth of the Sunday School, from the ancient Hebrew Church, emphasized the importance of the Church School in the Church's forward movement, and demanded a large conception of the Sunday School, improvement in Sunday-School lessons, and a more complete training for Sunday-School teachers. He said that the present needs of the Sunday School include: More Time. The Schools now have but a half hour of actual teaching time per Sunday. "It is said that the Roman Catholic child receives two hundred hours per annum of religious instruction, and the Jewish child three hundred and thirty-five hours. The average child in public schools receives about eight hundred hours per annum of secular instruction. In the Church Schools he receives about twenty-six hours." The Schools must have Better Equipment, he said, and Trained Leadership and Adequate Finances, if they are to develop properly the future leaders of the Church. Mr. Palmer, in closing said: "The challenge of religious education to the Church today is that we shall put first things first; that we shall, like Our Lord, set the child in the midst and recognize that the chief task of the Church in each generation is the religious education of the next generation. We may have done our bit to 'help make the world safe for democracy,' but democracy itself will never be safe for the world until knowledge and character, intelligence and godliness, are the common possession of our citizenship. Then and only then will the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of Our God and of His Christ."

Friday night's public meeting was held in St. Paul's Church, the speakers being Mr. Alexander and Bishop Moreland of Sacramento. Bishop Moreland spoke on "The Value of a Boy," estimating it first in dollars, based on the cost of his clothes and food and education. "What return are you making for the money, for the love, and care invested in you," he demanded of the large group of boys present. "You are bound," he said, "to contribute service to your home, to make home the finest place on earth, to render affection, gratitude, helpfulness, to your parents." He continued that the boys of America are but half educated. The spiritual side is neglected. You must build character upon religion. You can't be a success in life if you neglect the soul. "Boys in America," the Bishop continued, "know less about God than any other subject. We know fellows who have finished High School and College, who think themselves educated, yet who don't know at this moment why they were born or for what they are destined. When the Bible wants to go to the fountain head of evil it doesn't name lying, drinking or stealing. These are only the sores on the outside. The disease is within. The Bible says, 'The wicked do not seek God, God is not in all their thoughts.'" He pleaded for discipline in the home, for the effort, continued and constant, to bring the boys and girls to God, closing with the appeal, "O be strong, be brave, be unselfish, and let Christ help you!"

The speaker at the Junior Convention on Thursday evening was the Rev. Dr. P. T. Edrop, of Boston. Dr. Edrop's subject was "The Wonderful Comrade," and he called attention to the universal interest in religion so apparent at this time. "Editors of newspapers," he said, "are coldly calculating men when it comes to matters of news policy. They are not giving over their front pages because they have become evangelists over night. They are giving over their front pages because their readers want knowledge of the consoling Gospel of God." Religion demands to be voiced. It must mean something when from a recent Anthology of American verse, a compilation is made showing that more poetry on religious themes is being printed at this time than ever in the history of American verse. The world, in a word, and this is the whole story, is yearning for religious truth and the expression of it.

"You boys," Dr. Edrop continued, "have come into a world of questioning. Do not delude yourselves into the belief that the experience of your generation in that respect is unique. It is right that you should question the basis of your mothers' and fathers' belief. It is right, for no one is really religious until he has battled out his own questionings, until his beliefs, transmitted by his parents, have become transmuted into his own." The challenge of Jesus Christ is not so much a challenge to a creed

MEETING OF THE HOUSE OF BISHOPS

THREE new Bishops of the Church were added to the long list of the Episcopate at the special meeting of the House of Bishops which met in New York October 8-9, preliminary to the first joint meeting of the House with the National Council of the Church. The new Bishops are the Rev. Eugene Cecil Seaman, rector of the Church of the Holy Comforter, Gadsden, Diocese of Alabama, who succeeds the late Rt. Rev. Edward Arthur Temple, D. D., as Diocesan of the Missionary District of North Texas; the Rev. Dr. Edmund Pendleton Dandridge, rector of Christ Church, Nashville, Diocese of Tennessee, who succeeds to Missionary Bishopric of Idaho through resignation of Bishop Touret, which was accepted at this meeting of the House; and the Rev. A. A. Gilman, who becomes Suffragan Bishop of the Missionary District of Hankow.

The new Suffragan Bishop of Hankow, who is President of Boone University, Wuchang, was elected in response to a request from Bishop Roots, that he be given a Suffragan to assist him in the discharge of the rapidly accumulating duties in the important District of Hankow. Bishop Gailor, President of the National Council, made the gratifying report to the House of Bishops that Bishop Roots had withdrawn his resignation, and resumed his duties as Diocesan at Hankow. Through the election of President Gilman as Suffragan, Bishop Roots will now be enabled to give a portion of his time to the work of the Chinese Christian Council, in which the Bishop and the entire Church are deeply interested.

Because of the complicated situation in Mexico, action on the vacancy in the Bishopric of Mexico was deferred until the next General Convention, in consequence of a report submitted by Bishop Kinsolving, of Texas, from a committee appointed at the Dallas meeting of the House to enquire into the Mexican situation. The House by resolution requested Bishop Capers of West Texas to continue his administration of the Missionary District of Texas, and the Council is requested to designate two representatives to visit Mexico, enquire fully into the situation there, and report at the next General Convention. It was also decided by the House to defer action on the vacancy in the Missionary District of Nevada, which will be administered temporarily by the Bishop of Utah. The resignation, on account of ill health, of the Rt. Rev. Frank Du Moulin, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of Ohio, was accepted by the House.

This special meeting of the House of Bishops, which lasted through October 8 and the morning of October 9, was one of the most important, successful and largely attended special meetings ever held by the House. It began on the morning of October 8 with the service of the Holy Communion in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, at which following a procession of the ninety-nine members of the House in attendance, the Presiding Bishop officiated, assisted by the Bishop of New York. The Bishop of Virginia read the Epistle, and the Bishop of Tennessee read the Gospel. An address of welcome was delivered by the Presiding Bishop, who also paused at the entrance to the Cathedral and delivered an invocation for the speedy completion of the imposing edifice. In connection with the service which followed memorial prayers were said for the nine members of the House of Bishops who have died since the last meeting.

With the service in the Cathedral at an end, the House went into session in Synod Hall in the Cathedral Close, where routine business in connection with Mexico and the election of bishops to fill existing vacancies occupied the time of the House for the remainder of the day. The entire House were the guests of Bishop Manning at luncheon. The morning of October 9 the House met in Calvary Church, adjoining the Church Missions House, and proceeded to the election of the Bishops named above. This was followed by luncheon with the National Council as the guests of Mr. Haley Fiske and Senator William J. Tully, in the Metropolitan Life Insurance Building, following which, after a brief session, the House adjourned to meet at the call of the Chair, and then proceeded into joint session with the National Council.

JOINT CONFERENCE OF THE BISHOPS AND NATIONAL COUNCIL

A JOINT Conference of the Bishops and the National Council, the first of its kind, was held in New York on October 9 and 10. The Bishops met with the Council at the invitation of the latter to talk over the National Program for the next triennium, which, under the Canon, the Council must prepare for submission to the General Convention meeting in New Orleans next October. The Council desired to have the advice of the Bishops and the benefit of their knowledge of local conditions and sentiment in determining the contents of the Program, the allocation of responsibility for the required support and the best means of promoting its support.

The Conference proved to be a pronounced success, not only in achieving the object for which it was called, but also in promoting a clearer understanding of national policies and of the relationship of the dioceses and the National Council. The meetings were of the nature of executive sessions and were characterized by a frank discussion of difficulties and problems. The discussions proved of such value that at the close of the session a resolution was adopted recognizing the inspiration gained by all and recommending the holding of similar Conferences in the future from time to time.

There were present one hundred and three of the Bishops and all of the National Council except three. The sessions were held in the Assembly Room of the main building of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company at the invitation of its President, Mr. Haley Fiske. On both days all who were in attendance were entertained at luncheon as the guests of Mr. Fiske and Senator William J. Tully, a member of the Council.

Bishop Burgess of Long Island was made Chairman of the Conference and the Secretary of the House of Bishops and the Secretary of the National Council were made Secretaries. A Committee on Despatch of Business was appointed, consisting of Bishop Reese of Georgia, Bishop Davies, Bishop Oldham, the Rev. Dr. Stires and Mr. James H. Pershing. A Committee on Findings was also appointed, consisting of Bishop Bratton, Bishop Freeman and the Rev. Dr. Milton.

The agenda prepared in advance for the Conference included a considerable number of questions and problems. As it was evident that all could not be given adequate attention in the limited time which the Bishops found themselves able to give to the Conference, the Committee on Despatch of Business was instructed to select a limited number of the most important problems for consideration and to prepare a time schedule. All speeches were limited to five minutes.

The first group of problems considered had to do with the building of the Program. The first topic discussed was the equitable distribution of funds to meet the needs of the dioceses and missionary districts. The consensus of opinion expressed was that the whole missionary Program should be considered in its entirety without making undue distinction between diocesan missions and work in missionary jurisdictions. There were repeated appeals for equity in the distribution of funds as the results of a more complete study of the field and a more accurate knowledge of the relative merits of the work done in the dioceses and districts. Definite recommendations were agreed upon which will be presented to the National Council at its December meeting. There was also discussion of the policy of making specific appropriations in the budget, such as to Church colleges and to the various organizations classed as cooperating agencies, in regard to all of which definite recommendations are to be made.

Another subject considered was possible economy in administration. This afforded an opportunity for constructive criticism, but there was evidenced a desire to lay less stress upon retrenchment in the administration of the Church's central agencies, except through wise economies, or upon the mounting cost of the Church's Mission, but rather to make more evident to the Church at large both the privilege and the opportunity of carrying out the Church's great missionary program, in fine, to fulfil the supreme command of Christ to preach the Gospel to every creature. On this subject of economy no recommendations were made. But it was resolved: "That the question of economies in administration be recommitted to the judgment and action of the National Council with the full confidence of the Bishops present at this Conference."

The question of how large a budget ought to be presented to the next General Convention was next considered and various recommendations in this regard will be laid before the National Council. This problem necessarily involved the matter of quotas apportioned to dioceses under the Canon and the response of the dioceses through the offerings. A ringing challenge to the Bishops was made by Bishop Darst, who said that this was not a time to scale the budgets down to the will of the dioceses, but to scale the giving up to the will of God. There was evidenced a desire to readjust quotas rather than to reduce the total and a disposition to feel that the real solution to the problem lay in arousing the Church to a deeper sense of responsibility for the Mission of the Church, which would necessarily express itself in providing a larger support.

Under the general subject of Priorities, various questions were proposed and considered, such as the size of the list of Priorities, whether quotas should be allotted on the Priorities and the Budget combined, or on the two separately, or on the budget only, whether there should be any Priorities at all and whether the advance work covered by the Priorities should not be provided for under some other name and by some other method. Here again definite recommendations were made. This discussion involved the whole problem of "Specials" and it became apparent that there was no disposition to revive the old system of "Specials," while at the same time it was very necessary to bring before the Church in some way enterprises of strategic importance and also desirable to facilitate an approach to the larger individual givers of the Church with the cooperation of the Bishops.

Among other problems given consideration were the following:

What is the best method of establishing a more equitable method of division of funds as between the dioceses and the General Church?

How can the Bishops most effectively lead the dioceses in the execution of the Program, in contacts with the parishes, parochial clergy and vestries, in contacts with leading laymen and in supervision of diocesan organizations?

How can the diocese best acknowledge its responsibility for its share of the Program?

What is the best policy with regard to parishes making no effort to comply with the Canon?

The Committee on Findings; in addition to reporting the various resolutions and recommendations, said, among other things:

"The discussions indicated an increased desire on the part of the Bishops to recognize the relation which the Diocese bears and the responsibility it assumes for the whole work of the Church. Only as this fact is recognized and adhered to is there any assurance of financing both the missionary enterprises of the Dioceses and the wider missionary enterprises of the whole Church.

"It is clearly demonstrable that the Church at large has vastly increased the efficiency of its enterprises, diocesan and general, through what has been commonly known as the Nation-Wide Campaign. The increase of receipts for Diocesan enterprises bears a distinct relation to the increase of interest and support accorded the general work of the Church. Notwithstanding the fact that the income for general work has declined in part during the present triennium the results are so immeasurably greater than those under the old system that the present plan of operation should be widely commended and encouraged.

"It was evident from the discussions that this fact was generally recognized by Diocesan and Missionary Bishops and it was felt that there should go forth to the whole Church at this time an expression of confidence, and an appeal for a more intelligent and deepened interest in the Church's Program. It is widely recognized that there is an increased demand for a fresh accent upon the national solidarity of this Church, a national consciousness, else the work of the Church must be seriously embarrassed and hindered and ultimately fail of its high purpose."

The final question asked was this:

What kind of a general or Church-wide effort of a more intensive character should be made in order to increase the missionary and evangelistic spirit of the Church?

During the various debates of the sessions many suggestions, based upon experience, were made as to ways, both educational and inspirational, of awakening interest and deepening the sense of responsibility. In addition to these Bishop Darst proposed a plan for a Church-wide effort to revive the spiritual life of the Church. The proposed project was in the nature of a crusade, led by the Bishops, assisted by outstanding priests and laymen of the Church, involving the holding of a series of meetings in hundreds of places in the Church in the early part of 1925, in which would be stressed the dominant notes of evangelism, religious education and social service. These meetings would be conducted simultaneously in many places and the whole project was to be concluded within a limited number of weeks. The belief was expressed that an intensive movement of this sort would have an uplifting and inspiring effect which would be permanent in the Church, and which, through the widespread publicity it would provoke, would have an influence upon the whole nation.

There being so little time to give the necessary careful study to such a proposal, a committee consisting of Bishop Darst, Bishop Brent and Bishop Slattery was asked to take the matter under consideration and report to the National Council at its December meeting.

On the subject of Stewardship the Conference took action by adopting the following resolution offered by Bishop Tyler:

Resolved, That in view of the splendid progress that is being made by the Kingdom of God on earth and the fine opportunity there is for this Church in these times to assist in conquering the kingdoms of this world for Our Lord and Christ, this Conference would earnestly request the people of the Church who are not already doing so, to consider proportionate giving from their incomes so that the Church shall have ample material means for carrying on its work and thus be freed from the paralyzing effect that the continual need for such means entails.

A telegram of greeting was received from the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, assembled in Convention at Albany, to which a cordial reply was sent.

The following resolution bearing on the situation in Japan, offered by Bishop Freeman, was adopted:

"Whereas, This joint Conference recognizes the urgent need of restoring the institutions of our Church in Japan, believing that in this way the Gospel of Christ and of good-will is most effectively proclaimed, therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Bishops assembled in New York for conference with the National Council, recognizing the need for prompt reconstruction of the Church in Japan, assure Bishop McKim by cable that we pledge our earnest effort to the Japan Reconstruction Committee in the hope that it will bring about the early completion of the Fund."

In reporting this resolution the Committee on Findings said: "The foregoing resolution envisions the Church's statesmanlike conception of its obligation to the devastated institutions and churches in Japan and the determination to lend at this critical time such aid as will confirm to the Japanese people our desire to exemplify the high purposes of our Christian faith. The Conference believes that the restoration of our Japanese work is a matter of urgent importance that should engage the unfailing support of every diocese of the Church and therefore requests that it shall be considered as an imperative claim during the first six months of the year 1925."

PRAYER.

It is plain that in Heaven prayer is made in behalf of God's people in the earth. The Scripture teaches this clearly with respect to Christ. That the angels remember us in their supplication is quite certain. And that the blessed themselves unite with Christ and the angels in prayer for the triumph of the Kingdom of God in the earth, can scarcely be taken in question. But we follow along this line as far as Scripture allows, it is self-evident, that neither the angels nor the blessed can join us in the prayer: "Give us this day our daily bread, forgive us our debts, and lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from the evil." The blessed may pray that they might be clothed upon, but their state is not one of need, misery, lack, and want. They are blessed and drink with full draughts from the fountain of bliss. And when we are permitted to look at life in the heavens, as in Revelation, we are told almost nothing else of angels, seraphim and cherubim, and of the blessed, saved that they worship. Holy, holy is the Lord of Hosts. The whole earth is full of His glory.—A. Kuyper.

THE NEED FOR ENTHUSIASM.

If the school-boy believes himself a dunce, he loses heart, his lessons become irksome, and there is great danger of his becoming the dunce he fears he is already. If a man takes up a business without much hope of succeeding, if he imagines he sees the bankruptcy court ahead, it is not unlikely he will see it indeed. How can he achieve any considerable success without enthusiasm? So in Church work; if we expect large success, we are much more likely to realize it than if there be no such expectation. Notice how this spirit of expectancy works: It stimulates prayer. It stimulates effort. It promotes cooperation. It promotes consistent Christian living.

Why should we not have success? Think of the material we have to operate upon—in the congregation, the Sunday School, the town. 2, Think of the power of the Gospel. 3, Think of the capabilities of the church. 4, Think of the experience of the past. Has not God granted success when the conditions have been fulfilled? Experience should work hope. He may be depended upon for the future.—H. M. Booth.

THE IMPORTANCE OF WORK AMONG COLLEGE STUDENTS.

Mr. Editor:

Those who work among college students can but rejoice in your able editorial of September 20, "A MISSION FIELD AT HOME." You have put the case strongly as to the supreme need of Church influence in modern educational life, and also have pointed out the total inadequacy of the Church's equipment for its all important task. As one of those who can speak from personal experience in the field, I would present the specific case of one of our oldest institutions.

William and Mary College, famed for its age, its traditions, and its classical atmosphere, is attracting attention by the rapidity of its growth. From an attendance a few years ago of two hundred students, it has now one thousand in the winter session, while nearly as many receive instruction in the summer school. There has been a corresponding increase in the size of the faculty. The college not only prepares a number of men to enter the Theological Seminary, but is especially known for its preparation of teachers, offering as it does unusual inducements in the form of state aid to those who pledge themselves to work for a while in the public schools. It is therefore making a specialty of training leaders, and through them its decided influence is to be felt in the educational policy of the state, and the character development of the next generation. Hence it is difficult to over-estimate the importance of proper spiritual influence at William and Mary College.

Along with this special importance just mentioned there is also special opportunity for the exertion of such influence. All students of William and Mary College while here are steeped in the peculiar atmosphere of this ancient institution, and fed upon its inspiring history and solemn memories. They can but be impressed with a church, whose early traditions while linked with those of the college, go back behind it, which was the place of worship of the great men whose names fill the pages of our colonial records, a church whose pew doors through the plates upon them bear witness to the worship of the most distinguished alumni of their venerable alma mater, a church which is rightly referred to by the late Bishop Randolph, himself an alumnus of the college, as "the noblest monument of religion in America." It is not strange that many gravitate to this sacred shrine, who have not before known the church or her ways, that here prejudices brought from remote mountain side or river valley are removed, that from here men and women with a new friendship for this old church of ours go forth as leaders of thought to our small hamlets and big cities.

But there is one dire need in the face of great opportunity. May the people of the Church awake to it, and double the work which is here being done for the youth of our land. Our parish house is utterly inadequate. It is a small brick structure, with lean-to addition, formerly servants' quarters for a nearby residence, sold at a small figure to the parish before the beginning of the present century by a late vestryman, Mr. R. T. Armistead. At that early time it was converted to its present use with little spent upon it. Here under uninspiring surroundings our Student Bible Class must be taught, our Service League for students must meet, and all of our work must center. There should be adequate places for assembly, suitable provision for committees, and especially large and attractive rooms for social gatherings. William and Mary is co-educational; nearly half of the students are young women, and among these much of our best work is done. The fact that we have both sexes gives unusual opportunity for social gatherings and contacts, and for the refining of these by the sacred influences of the church. A place for worship on Sundays, however inspiring, can never in itself be sufficient. There must be adequate provision for the six days of the week. We should have the best and most attractive quarters in town for recreation and work, for reading and for social life.

I would not have you think that Bruton is appealing for a parish house for selfish use. We can provide for our strictly parochial needs, but hesitate to spend five to ten thousand dollars on the present building, which sum would be largely lost if, soon after, reconstruction were begun on a scale adequate to student needs, which would require thirty to forty thousand dollars. Meanwhile our own young people are suffering loss, which cannot be made up to them, for they are young but once. Who will catch the vision of a great opportunity and come to our assistance? More and more people are realizing the importance of increasing the educational equipment of the college, and are giving of their names for this purpose. Let us in the name of the Master make similar provision for the increasing spiritual opportunity that is ours.

Here is a challenge to God's People.

E. RUFFIN JONES,
Rector of Bruton Parish Church.

A CORRECTION.

Mr. Editor:

The Rev. R. B. Drane, rector of St. Paul's, Edenton, always a zealous advocate of whatever historical distinction belongs to North Carolina, yet too accurate a historian to claim for the State anything which lacks sufficient proof, calls my attention to a loose statement in a recent news letter I sent to the Southern Churchman.

In my mention of the Virginia Dare celebration I spoke of her as the "first white child born and baptized in North America." As compared with the modest statement on the historical marker at Old Fort Raleigh, Roanoke Island, this statement is entirely too wide.

Dr. Drane writes: "Virginia Dare is affirmed to be the 'first child of English parents born in America,' and the inscription on the historical marker at Fort Raleigh closes with: 'These baptisms (of Manteo and Virginia Dare) are the first known celebrations of a Christian Sacrament in the territory of the thirteen original United States'."

BACK TO COLLEGE.

The month of October is the beginning of months to the men and women of our Canadian colleges. Back they come in their laudable search after knowledge and the mental equipment for the tasks of life. We say "mental" advisedly, since it is quite obvious that such is the primary objective of the higher institutions of learning and of those who patronize them. There is nothing wrong in this emphasis. These institutions exist because generations have found that there is everything right in such an isolation of one out of the many possibles in establishing the distinctive purpose of their existence. The Church, however, has a duty and a privilege made urgent and possible by reason of this very academic limitation. She is interested in the moral and spiritual equipment of these young people. She will be ready to inject into this special environment what she is commissioned to make available to men for the realization of life's ideal and the performance of life's tasks. The problem is not acute in our colleges and universities under definite Church supervision. In these the Church is patiently the mother of her family and explicitly assumes all the responsibilities and joys of such maternity. There is a problem, however, in the larger number of universities under secular control. Here the Church, while still maternal in her attitude, must be content to guide and advise from without and with full appreciation that those in whom she is interested have other loyalties which she must respect. What can the Church do in such a case?

We wonder if the congregations in our college towns and cities have adequately grasped the situation which is begging for recognition at their very doors. At first sight it seems as if the college student problem is a special problem to be met by special and somewhat exclusive machinery. In real life it is no such thing. The young men and the young women of our colleges are no more and no less than others, plain, normal newcomers to your parish, newcomers with a yearning for friendship, in many cases with a strong prejudice in favor of the Church, but fearful of a new clergyman and a strange congregation, in comparatively few cases with a bias against the offices of religion in their freshman year at any rate. The point is that when these young people come to churches in academic centres they come with a heart to be won and a soul to be saved, and, in spite of a native reticence which forbids the admission, positively anxious for the Church to take them in. To do this nothing more is required than the normal parish organization and personnel. Personal contact and friendship is the answer. Surround these newcomers with this genuine and unobtrusive influence and the results will be a surprise and a joy.

The practical suggestion is obvious. Let home clergy send to the clergy of these towns and cities the names and addresses of the college newcomers as they would a permanent departing parishioner. And let the clergy count such a notice a first call on their attention. The clergy at either end of the connection are the key men. Their activity established, Brotherhood, Bible Classes, open homes, and all the rest follow as a matter of course.—The Canadian Churchman.

OVERLOOKED OPPORTUNITIES.

In this issue of the Southern Churchman will be found a very interesting editorial entitled "Roof Talk," in which our beloved editor uses the old fable of the goat on the roof, giving advice to the wolf, plodding along the road as a basis for some very clever comment on the modern method of organizing movements directed by executive secretaries to cure all the ills of modern life.

There is a verse that sums up the whole situation very neatly and in only four lines, as follows:

"The toad beneath the harrow knows Exactly where each tooth pick goes.
The butterfly upon the road
Preaches contentment to the toad."

It is certainly much easier to float comfortably in the air and think about contentment and happiness than it is to go down to earth where the harrow teeth are crushing along, and must be avoided, and there to practice it.

So also it is a very much simpler thing to prepare a parish program along any line, social service, religious education, or anything else than it is to go to work and put that program into effective operation.

Nevertheless, we can but feel that an outline of "activities for Christian people" may be helpful by offering some suggestions that are worth consideration.

One reason that we feel more strongly on this subject than usual is by reason of some experience we have had within the past two weeks.

The writer has been doing some campaigning for social service outside of the office in a number of small towns and rural communities.

In one place he came to a thriving, prosperous looking town in which there were no less than six well-built churches, and five resident ministers. Upon inquiring he found that the county almshouse was situated about two miles from the town. An accommodating friend offered to drive him out there.

On arriving we found that there were thirteen inmates. The floors and walls of the place were fairly clean, but the bedding (one could not truthfully use the expression "bed-linen") was indescribably filthy. The inmates do their own cooking without supervision.

We have not space to consider each individual case, but shall mention three of the thirteen, as they present opportunities for the consideration of Christian people of a peculiarly striking character.

The first is a young man, probably twenty-five years old, who has an infirmity of the legs which prevents him from walking without help. He has lived all his life in that almshouse. By reason of his affliction he could not go to school, and no one has ever taken enough interest in him to try to teach him to read and write. His face has not the expression of a mental defective, and he said himself that he believed he could learn to read and write if some one "would take an interest to learn me." His arms and hands appear to have normal strength and dexterity so that there would be no reason why he could not do some kind of hand work, like basketing, or knitting or crocheting.

The second case that attracted special attention was a girl about twenty years old who is evidently far gone in consumption. She coughed almost incessantly, and had the two bright red spots on her cheeks, that show the last touches of that dread disease. There are in this same state two state sanitariums for the treatment of this malady, each one of which has provision for free treatment for those who cannot pay for it. There was no segregation for this girl. She cooks and eats with the other inmates, and sleeps in a little room with one small window, only one sash of which can be raised.

Another and the last case we shall refer to was that of a colored man, only a little past middle life, in full strength, whose sight is almost gone, compelled to sit with folded hands, day after day, though strong enough to do something if only he could be taught to do some of the numerous things that can be given to blind people for occupation.

The last comment that we have to make upon this tragic place, is, perhaps, the most striking of all, especially in its reflection upon the six churches, and the five resident ministers within two miles of it. The person in charge told us that no minister had visited it, and no religious service had been held there in the five years that she had been there. So far as receiving Christian ministration, hearing the Word of God, or being treated like fellow members of God's family, those thirteen people there in that supposedly Christian community might just as well be living in the midst of an African jungle, instead of within a twenty minutes' drive of churches and preachers.

We went from this almshouse to the county jail, and found it infinitely cleaner and more comfortable and that the bad people were taken better care of than the poor people.

We should not condemn too strongly, however, those clergymen and Church people who are permitting this heathen situation almost in their very midst. They are busy looking after the needs of their own congregations. They have to prepare two sermons a week and a program for the mid-week evening service. (We are glad to say in passing that none of these five men were Episcopallians.) They have the sick in their flocks to visit. They just hadn't thought of the almshouse. That is all. It isn't deliberate neglect, but simply an oversight.

That, however, illustrates the value of the suggested parish program that was published on this page last week.

Its purpose is not dictatorial, but suggestive. It offers an outline by which a clergyman, or a member of any church can "check up" and see whether the things that could be done by members of a congregation are being done.

For instance there are three suggestions on that list, that, if heeded, would remedy the conditions we write about.

The first is "visit the almshouse." The institution we have described is no exception to most such places. We went to another in the following week in quite another part of the state and found almost exactly the same conditions.

Other suggestions on that list are "teach illiterates," and "find occupation for the handicapped." There is the crippled young girl and the blind colored man waiting to be ministered to along these lines.

We cannot believe that these opportunities will be neglected if they are appreciated.

Meeting of the National Council

An important meeting of the National Council, with every member present except two, was held in New York, October 7 and 8, 1924. This meeting took on a special importance because of the arrangements made for a joint session with the House of Bishops, meeting at the same time and place, and also because this is the meeting at which the budgets for the ensuing year are adopted.

The Council adopted a budget of $4,400,000.

In the budgets was included an item of $4,000 to cover the salary of the Bishop Suffragan of Montana, provision having been made for his salary for the balance of the year 1924. The Bishop of Montana was present at the meeting and pointed out to the Council that in losing $70,000 of the Endowment Fund for the Episcopate the Diocese had suffered such a loss that it seemed impossible to carry on without some help.

The following statement signed by every member of the Executive Board of the Woman's Auxiliary was read:

"We, the members of the National Executive Board of the Woman's Auxiliary, are deeply concerned over the grave financial situation facing the National Council.

"We are even more alarmed by the probable cause of the situation than we are by the possible effect upon the Program of the Church. Believing that the apathy of many church members is due to failure to use the Power of Christ to meet the needs of the World today, and, conscious of our own lukewarmness, we have dedicated ourselves anew to our Saviour and will strive to give proof in our own lives, of our conviction that He is the only way of life.

"Further, we offer, with your approval, to try to awaken the women of the Church to such a conception of Christ that we may all become more effective instruments of His power in the accomplishment of His purpose for the World.

"Finally, we declare ourselves willing and ready to cooperate in any plans which the National Council may set before the Church to meet the immediate emergency."

November 8, 1924, marks the fiftieth anniversary of the consecration of Bishop Holly, first Bishop of Haiti. The President of the Council and the Secretary of the Department of Missions were authorized to arrange, if possible, for a representative of the National Council to attend the commemoration of this event, and a message of congratulation was sent to the Church people of Haiti.

The Rev. William E. Gardner, D. D., Executive Secretary of the Department of Religious Education, after twelve years of devoted service in the general work of the Church, announced his resignation in order to accept the rectorship of the Church of the Messiah, Boston.

Mr. Harper Sibley, in response to the invitation of the International Committee of the Y. M. C. A. was appointed representative of the National Council to meet with the Y. M. C. A. and other bodies for student work and boys' work, and the Department of Religious Education was designated as the Department with which this body should have its communication.

The Rev. Lester Bradner, Ph. D.,

the Rev. Paul Micou, and Miss Agnes Hall, all secretaries in the Department of Religious Education, presented their resignations; Dr. Bradner and Miss Hall on account of ill health, and Mr. Micou to accept a rectorship in Pennsylvania.

The Rev. J. A. Schaad, General Missioner of the Field Department, presented his resignation, which was accepted.

The Rev. A. R. Kinstry was elected as the representative of the Field Department on the National Student Council in place of the Rev. J. M. B. Gill, resigned.

The Commission on Preaching Missions felt that its name is not inclusive enough and asked that it be changed to the Commission on Evangelism. This request was granted by the National Council.

The Rev. J. I. B. Larned, of St. John's Church, Yonkers, was unanimously elected a General Secretary of the Field Department.

The following in reference to the Near East Relief was adopted by the Council:

"A group of representative Bishops, priests and laymen having met in conference with National Officers of the Near East Relief and desiring to secure through the National Council a closer relationship between that body and this Church, have elected the following committee to present the matter to this body:

The Bishop of Georgia, Chairman,
The Rev. Dr. George Craig Stewart,
Mr. Burton Mansfield."

The committee therefore submitted the following resolutions:

"Resolution I. That the National Council of the Church indorses (anew) the work of the Near East Relief and commends to all the clergy and laity of this Church the program of the Near East Relief, which includes a three-fold ministry to the bodies and minds and souls of these little children.

"Resolution II. That the President of this body be respectfully requested to appoint from this Council a committee to be known as the Near East Advisory Committee of the National Council with power to add to its membership, which committee shall serve as representatives of this body in all matters involving relief of our Christian brethren in the Near East."

Mr. Franklin reported on the Japan Reconstruction Fund that the Diocese of Pennsylvania is making a determined effort to raise $250,000, of which $35,000 is now on hand, the effort being made with practically no expense to the Japan Reconstruction Fund.

CHURCH SERVICE LEAGUE, FALL MEETING.

The autumn meeting of the Church Service League's National Commission, held on September 29 and 30, calls attention again to this serious effort on the part of Church workers interested in every aspect of parish work in the five fields to extend that work.

The general interest and scope of the League may be seen from the organizations represented: the Woman's Auxiliary, Church Periodical Club, Daughters of the King, Church Mission of Help, Guild of St. Barnabas for Nurses, Churchwomen's League for Pa-

He also reported that it had been decided to enter into an Interdenominational Campaign in New York for St. Luke's International Hospital, Tokyo. This campaign to culminate in December.

Mr. Franklin reported that the total receipts in cash and pledges on account of the Japan Reconstruction Fund amounted to $641,000.

The National Council took a recess on Wednesday afternoon, to meet again at the call of the Chair, the first meeting to be held in joint session with the House of Bishops on Thursday afternoon.

THE DEPARTMENT OF MISSIONS AND CHURCH EXTENSION.

October 6, 1924.

In the Department of Missions, which met on Monday before the Council meeting, out of the many who volunteered for service the Department was able to appoint sixteen new missionaries of whom eleven were women. Four missionaries went to the Domestic Field, three to Latin-America and nine to the foreign field, and four were also employed in the field.

The Committee on Literature for the Blind reported that the Committee had arranged to issue a special edition of one hundred hymns and in this they had the approval of the Church Pension Fund.

The resignations of Mr. John R. King as Treasurer of the Missionary District of Cuba, and Mr. Welton E. Johnson as Treasurer of the Missionary District of the Panama Canal Zone were received and the President was requested to thank these men for their services.

Bishop Demby was appointed as an additional member of the Committee on the National School for Training of Colored Women as Church Workers.

The Executive Secretary reported that the Department was in receipt of plans for residences to be built for two of the doctors of St. Luke's Hospital, Shanghai. Both of these houses have been given by relatives of these doctors and will not cost the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society a dollar. The Department expressed its appreciation to the donors of these two residences.

The death of Dr. Brandreth Symonds, Chief Medical Examiner of the Mutual Life Insurance Company, of New York, was announced. Dr. Symonds for years has been the Medical Advisor for the Department of Missions, giving his services generously and counting no amount of labor too much. The Department of Missions, speaking as well for its staff of missionaries throughout the world as for itself, recorded its gratitude for the life and work of Dr. Symonds.

triotic Service, Brotherhood of St. Andrew, Girls' Friendly Society. The Commission includes also certain members at large, who attended, together with members of the Field Department and several diocesan representatives of the Church Service League.

In connection with the budgets presented, the organizations made reports demonstrating the practical usefulness of the work of each. Any person familiar with any one of the organizations has only to imagine the effect of a great reduction in its work to appreciate something of the total value of all the parish, diocesan and national work carried on by these Church agencies. Much of the work is done by volunteers without pay.

People in the parishes generally are becoming more familiar and sympathetic with the Church Service League principles. Twelve summer schools included the League among the matters studied last summer. Diocesan annual meetings help to show its value in interesting communicants in Church work which is both definite and comprehensive. The principles of the League may be stated as:

A Parish Council thoroughly organized.

A Parish Program comprehensive in scope.

A division of responsibility among organizations and individuals for the purpose of carrying out the Parish Program.

A spirit of fellowship and sympathetic cooperation in the light of a common goal.

This may of course be adapted to small and large parishes, in city or country.

The National Commission is handicapped by lack of funds in getting in touch with the field and responding to requests, the present annual appropriation from the National Council being but $200. More field workers are needed. An effort to supply them is to be made by electing competent men and women throughout the parishes to serve as workers in the field without pay.

The work of the National Commission is going forward in connection with plans for next year's summer schools, and for General Convention in New Orleans. The secretary of the Commission is the Rev. A. R. McKinstry of the Field Department, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York. A committee of advice and information was appointed to cooperate with him between meetings of the commission.

Negroes Honor Friend of Race.

The Rev. Dr. C. B. Wilmer, retiring rector of St. Luke's Church, Atlanta, was paid many high tributes on his recent departure for another field of labor, but none, I dare say, more spontaneous and genuine than that accorded him on behalf of the sixty thousand colored residents of the city. On his last Sunday here several hundred Negroes, representative of all denominations, gathered at Big Bethel Church to participate in the presentation to Dr. Wilmer of a handsome loving cup, in appreciation of his long and effective service in behalf of justice and good will between the races.

In most cordial and appreciative terms the mind of the group was interpreted to Dr. Wilmer by Jesse O. Thomas, Secretary of the Urban League, Dean W. D. Alexander, of Morris Brown College, and President John Hope of Morehouse College. The cup was presented by Dr. E. P. Johnson, chairman of the colored section of the inter-racial committee, with which Dr. Wilmer, as chairman of the white section, has worked for many years in closest harmony for the betterment of race relations. Representing the contributions of more than a hundred individuals, the cup bears the inscription: "Presented by the colored people of Atlanta to Dr. C. B. Wilmer, pioneer in inter-racial good will. Love is his creed and his neighbor is all mankind."

In accepting the cup Dr. Wilmer reviewed the history of the inter-racial movement, in which he has been one of the moving spirits from the beginning, and expressed the confidence that friendly and helpful relations between the races will increasingly prevail. "I shall treasure this cup," he said, "not so much as a personal tribute, but as an evidence that colored people appreciate and respond to the spirit of good will and justice."

St. John's College, Greeley, Colorado.

St. John's College opened September 29 with a celebration of the Holy Communion by the Rev. Dr. Bonell, founder and Dean. Bishop Johnson preached the sermon.

During the summer extensive improvements were made in the material fabric. St. Hugh's Hall was completed adding four new rooms and a large commons, and the first of a series of faculty cottages were built.

The Rev. Charles Brown has been added to the faculty. A new course in Religious Education has been opened, in which the Christian Nurture Series will be thoroughly studied.

St. John's has an enrollment of over forty, the largest in its history; twelve states are represented. The dormitories are filled to capacity and several men are rooming in private homes.

The Provincial Commission on Social Service.

The Provincial Commission on Social Service met at the call of the Chairman in the Diocesan House, Baltimore, on Friday, October 3. There were present the Rt. Rev. George W. Davenport, D. D., and the Rev. Messrs. Trapnall, Humphries, Barnwell and Bigham; and the Rev. Frank Orr Johnson, attending as a substitute for Mr. James E. Brown.

The Rev. Romilly Humphries reported on the Toronto Conference. The following topics and speakers were suggested and adopted for the Social Service feature of the program of the Synod which meets on November 18.

Rural Work—The Rev. Fred D. Goodwin, Warsaw, Va.

The Boy Problem—Mr. Reinhold Rogers, Covington, Va.

Social Service in the Parish—The Rev. Samuel G. Dunseath, Newark, N. J.

Dr. Humphries was appointed a committee of one to prepare a report to be presented at the Synod.

Upon motion of Mr. Trapnall it was decided to ask the Synod for an appropriation of $300 to cover the expenses of members in attending two meetings each year.

Cathedral at Portland, Oregon, Burned.

According to a press dispatch, "St. Stephen's Pro-Cathedral and parish house, Portland, Oregon, was completely destroyed by fire Tuesday night, September 30. The loss, amounting to about $60,000, is only partially covered by insurance. The blaze was set by an incendiary, evidently some insane person. The fire started in the chancel of the Cathedral, spreading to the parish house."

Rt. Rev. W. C. Brown, D. D., Bishop.

The Piedmont Convocation.

The Piedmont Convocation held its one hundred and fourteenth semi-annual meeting in Emmanuel Church, Rapidan, Va., the Rev. W. L. S. Rommily, rector, October 6-8, 1924.

On the two evenings the Rev. Dr. Caley, of Philadelphia, gave his lectures on the Life of Christ, illustrated with stereopticon pictures to an audience filling the parish hall, and most appreciative. Dore's and Tissot's were largely used by him.

Tuesday morning the Holy Communion was celebrated by the Dean, the Rev. R. Allen Castleman, assisted by Dr. Caley. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Mr. Powlis of Clarendon, Va., on "Ye are the Salt of the Earth." The Rev. Arthur H. Mellen, General Secretary of the American Bible Society in Mexico, spoke on the Power of the Bible.

In the afternoon the Rt. Rev. Dr. Tucker, Professor in the Theological Seminary at Alexandria, administered the rite of confirmation for Bishop Brown, and later made an address on Some Principles of Missionary Work, as illustrated by the work in Japan.

Wednesday morning, the meditations of the "Quiet Hour" was conducted by the Rev. Mr. Craighill of Leesburg, Va., on the fourteenth chapter of St. John's Gospel. The Rev. Percy F. Hall, of Alexandria, gave an essay on "The Poetic Element on the Gospels," and the subject was discussed by the Rev. Messrs. Sadtler and Penniman. Miss Sallie Deane of Richmond spoke on "Stewardship."

The chief business of the Convocation was the "Program" for 1925. It was discussed and a Committee was appointed to provide a plan of action for the parishes and promote the presentation of the subject in the parishes. The Convocation expressed its great appreciation of the generous hospitality of rector and congregation, and adjourned after accepting an invitation for the spring meeting from the rector and congregation in Marshall, Va.

Besides those clergymen mentioned here, there were present the Rev. Messrs. Everett, Galt, Gibson, Hammond, Harari, Hinkel, Marshall, Morton and Tucker.

The Richmond Convocation.

The eighty-first semi-annual meeting of the Richmond Convocation was held in St. James' Church, Ashland, the Rev. Thomas L. Russell, rector, on Wednesday, October 8. The opening service of the convocation was a celebration of the Holy Communion by the Rev. T. L. Russell, Dean of the Convocation. The Convocation sermon was preached by the Rev. W. E. Cox, rector of the Church of the Holy Comforter, Richmond.

Immediately after the close of the service, the Convocation assembled in business session, and ordinary routine business was transacted. The Rev. W. W. Brander, rector of St. James-Northam Parish, was elected Dean for the ensuing year; the Rev. P. W. Reed, of Christ Church, Richmond, was elected Secretary, and the Rev. Thomas L. Rideout of Richmond, treasurer. St. John's Church, Columbia, was selected as the place of the Spring Meeting next year. After a bountiful luncheon served by the ladies of St. James Church, the Convocation reassembled for business. At the opening of the afternoon session of the Convocation there was held a brief memorial service in memory of the Rev. Angus Crawford, D. D., as a spontaneous expression of love for the former Dean of the Virginia Theological Seminary, under whom most of the members of the Convocation had studied.

One of the main features of the afternoon was the discussion of plans for the carrying on of the fall campaign for the Church's Program. Addresses were made by the Rev. William D. Smith, D. D., Chairman of the Diocesan Committee, and the Rev. J. F. Ribble, D. D., rector of St. Andrew's Church, Richmond. An essay was read by the Rev. B. D. Tucker, Jr., D. D., rector of St. Paul's Church, Richmond, on "An Approach to Unity."

After a dinner served by the ladies of St. James' Church, the evening service was featured by an address by the Rev. Elmer C. Pedrick, rector of St. Thomas' Church, Ginter Park, on the subject of the Young People's Service League.

Richmond Clericus.

The annual corporate celebration of the Holy Communion for the Richmond Clericus was held in St. Andrew's Church, Richmond, on October 6, the Rev. J. F. Ribble, D. D., the President of the Clericus, and the Rev. J. J. Gravatt, D. D., a former President, taking part in the service. A strong and most helpful address was read by the Rev. W. E. Cox, on "Tithing As The Base Line in Proportionate Giving." After the service the Clericus was entertained at luncheon by the ladies of St. Andrew's Church.

NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. W. T. Manning, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. S. Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan.
Rt. Rev. Herbert Shipman, D. D., Suffragan.

Cathedral Fund Campaign.

Announcement is made that for ten days beginning on January 18 a campaign will be on for $15,000,000 with which to complete the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. Through the efforts chiefly of Bishop Manning 3,000,000 in even figures are in sight, and work on the nave is to be started this coming summer. Hon. Franklin D. Roosevelt, who was candidate for vice-president of the United States four years ago, and prominent in the Democratic Convention in New York last July, is the leader in the campaign, but has assistants in Hon. Elihu Root, Hon. George W. Wickersham and others.

Religion in Public Schools.

In Larchmont, N. Y., the problem of religious instruction in the public schools has been worked out very successfully. The scheme adopted there is fully in accord with the laws of the State of New York, is perfectly free and fair to all religious bodies in the community, and could probably be inaugurated successfully in any like community in the land.

At present the instruction is given only in certain grades, but it could be extended to the other grades upon the same principle.

The plan is as follows: Upon a given day of each week the scholars of those grades to be instructed are dismissed forty-five minutes earlier than usual. The Episcopalians assemble in one room of the school building, the Presbyterians in another, Roman Catholics, Christian Scientists, etc., each in a room of their own, where they are instructed by teachers supplied from their respective religious bodies. Attendance is voluntary.

In Larchmont there are only two public schools, and so it has been possible for the pastors themselves to give the instruction, thus bringing about an important contact between the pastor and the children. The fact that the attendance is voluntary makes it necessary for the pastors to interest the children and not bore them, which is an excellent thing for the pastors as well as for the children. The parents and the teachers have both cooperated splendidly in encouraging the children to attend. In the class taught by the Rev. Francis J. H. Coffin, rector of St. John's Episcopal Church, there has been to date only one unexcused absence, every Episcopalian is on the roll and children of other families—Lutheran, Universalist, etc., who have voluntarily joined the class, increase its membership by 20 per cent.

The fact that the teaching is done in the school building, instead of in parish houses, churches, etc., is a very great help. The school atmosphere, desks, blackboards, etc., make the teaching much easier.

Mercer and Hadley in Larchmont.

St. John's Church, Larchmont, N. Y., the Rev. Francis J. H. Coffin, rector, is joining with the Larchmont Avenue Presbyterian Church in a very successful preaching condition, conducted by Messrs. Mercer and Hadley. These men have a quiet sincerity and simple strength, which is making a strong appeal to the people, and the Mission is doing a great deal to build up a spirit of community interest between the two congregations.

St. Mark's in the Bowery, the Rev. Dr. Guthrie, rector, has determined by act of its vestry to forego the rhythmic dances for one year. It was because these dances, given in the Church, that Bishop Manning cut off the parish from visitation.

Activities of St. Stephen's Parish.

The contract for building the Community House for St. Stephen's Church, Philadelphia, the Rev. Dr. Carl E. Grammer, rector, has been awarded to Myers and Son, and work has already been begun. The contractor has agreed to have the new building complete on May 1. No effort has been spared to make the building of such a character that it may be widely serviceable and all the supports have been erected of such strength that a fourth story can be added, if the needs of the parish or the development of the community work should require it. The building will be completed and furnished for about $100,000.

On October 1 the Rev. Frank M. Crouch came to St. Stephen's, as assistant. Mr. Crouch began his ministry with the Rev. Dr. Howard Melish, in Holy Trinity Church, Brooklyn, and was for some years the Executive Secretary of the Joint Commission on Social Service of the Protestant Episcopal Church. He will organize new activities in the Community House.

Mr. Edward Shippen Barnes, of New York, has become choirmaster and organist of St. Stephen's. Mr. Barnes is a graduate of Yale and student of music in Paris, and comes with the best endorsements. St. Stephen's has always enjoyed the distinction of possessing one of the best choirs in the city.

The Japan Fund.

The campaign to raise $250,000 as Pennsylvania's share in the $2,500,000 fund which is to be raised by the Church in the United States began with a dinner in the Ritz-Carlton Friday night, October 10. Lewis B. Franklin, of the National Council, was the principal speaker and Dr. R. B. Teusler, director of St. Luke's International Hospital, Tokyo, also made an address. Pledges amounting to $50,300 were announced at the first meeting and Drexel and Company will act as treasurer of the fund. Addresses in the interest of the campaign were made in the churches on Sunday by a large corps of visiting speakers, including several bishops and prominent laymen. The Rev. Charles W. Shreiner is the active chairman of the campaign. The Laywomen's Division is under the leadership of Mrs. Charles R. Pancoast, of Germantown, the Laymen's Division under William H. Jefferys, M. D., Superintendent of the City Mission, and the Clerical Division under the Rev. B. N. Bird, St. Asaph's, Bala. The team captains and members number one hundred and twenty-one, and the campaign will continue until October 20.

The Associated Vestries of the Diocese of Pennsylvania, an organization composed of vestrymen representing parishes of the Church in Philadelphia, Chester, Delaware, Montgomery, and Bucks Counties, held its fall meeting on Wednesday afternoon in Holy Trinity Parish House, Philadelphia. Following a brief business session there was an informal supper about 6:30, at which Roland S. Morris, former U. S. Ambassador to Japan, delivered an address on Japan.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D.

The Cathedral School For Girls.

The twenty-fifth year of the National Cathedral School for Girls in Washington began Wednesday, October 1, under circumstances that promise to round out a quarter century of effort with a record in American educational annals highly satisfactory to the Episcopal Church.

Every year since the school opened in the fall of 1900 all accommodations have been filled and applicants have been turned away. This year as many have been turned away as are in the school. Plans are now being formulated for building the club house of the Alumnae Association on Wisconsin Avenue between Woodley and Lowell Streets. Eventually it is planned to have all this block fringed with buildings and an interior quadrangle in the center facing toward the Cathedral grounds.

Although the school opened October 1 for registration of new pupils, the formal opening exercises took place Friday evening, October 3, when the school met for assembly in the gymnasium and an address by Bishop Freeman. After the address the students gathered in the Cathedral Close for the annual ceremony of raising the Stars and Stripes over the school.

The New Church at Chapel Hill.

Progress is being made on the handsome new church at Chapel Hill, the seat of the University of North Carolina, the Rev. A. S. Lawrence, rector. The building is under roof and will seat four hundred and fifty people. It is Gothic in architecture, with high ceiling and deep chancel and well-proportioned transepts. It is of stone and has a tower that gives it beauty and distinction. The building is a gift from Mr. William A. Erwin, of Durham, and is a memorial to his grandfather, the late William Rainey Holt, of the class of 1817, at the University. The architect is Mr. Upjohn, whose grandfather years ago planned the old church. This latter is held intact and is connected to the new building with a stone cloister. An up-to-date parish house is also being erected and when the whole building project is completed the Chapel of the Cross will be one of the most complete and one of the most commanding churches in the Southland.

Young People's Work: Arrangements are being made for a convention of representatives from the various Young People's Societies in the Diocese to be held in Greensboro some time in November. The young people's work has had great stimulus under the direction of the Rev. Charles B. Scovill, religious education secretary of the diocese.

The Rev. Lewis N. Taylor, who has done a splendid work in connection with his rectorship at Roanoke Rapids, has been called to Grace Church, Morganton, and now has the matter under consideration.

EAST CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., Bishop.

Church Work Among Colored People.

The colored churches in the Diocese of East Carolina are giving many signs of a renewed life. A new Mission has just been started at Hallock's Cross Roads, near Ayden, and several other points recently opened up are giving promise of permanency and growth. The Rev. E. S. Willett, field secretary for the Colored Convocation, is visiting all of the congregations. He has held preaching missions in a number of churches, and conducted conferences on the Church's Program in others.

Church Unity: At a service in St. James', Ayden, recently the whole community came together to worship and to extend a welcome to the Rev. George F. Cameron, the new rector of St. James'. The pastors of the local Methodist, Baptist, Christian, and Free Will Baptist Churches attended the service, and made addresses. They assured Mr. Cameron that they expected him to become a servant of the whole community as well as of his own Parish. The rector preached the sermon on this occasion, and special music was rendered by a choir recruited from all the churches.

St. Paul's, Edenton, in some ways one of the most outstanding parishes of East Carolina, has recently suffered heavily through the death of two of its communicants, mother and son, who died within ten days of each other. Mrs. Mary Shaw Wood was a representative of the best culture and charm of the women of the old South, and was a most active and useful member of St. Paul's. Her son, Dr. H. M. S. Cason, was one of the most beloved and useful physicians in North Carolina.

Missionaries On Furlough: Two of East Carolina's representatives in Alaska are at home on a furlough. The Rev. B. W. Gaither, who went to Alaska five years ago as a lay missionary, came back in deacon's orders. After making a visit to relatives in the State, he entered the Seminary in Virginia, at Alexandria, for a year's training. Miss Lottie Cotchett, who has been serving at St. John's in the Wilderness, Allakaket, is visiting relatives in Wilmington, N. C. In this connection it will be recalled that a third East Carolinian, the Rev. F. B. Drane, is now Archdeacon of the Yukon. Miss Florence Huband, also from Wilmington, has just arrived in Alaska after volunteering for service there.

Memorial to the Rev. Dr. Beckett.

Friends of the late Dr. George Beckett, who was for twenty-eight years rector of Columbia Institute, the oldest school for women in the American Church, will be glad to know that there is being built in Columbia (Tennessee) a cloister in his memory.

The cloisters will connect the parish church of St. Peter of which Dr. Beckett was rector for twenty-two years and the parish house, which is to be finished next month. They will be seventy feet long.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. R. E. L. Strider, D. D., Coadjutor.

The Wheeling Clericus reassembled at St. Matthew's Parish House, Wheeling, after the summer adjournment, enjoying the hospitality of the Rev. E. B. Andrews, rector of St. Matthew's. Dr. Jacob Brittingham, D. D., presided. There were a number of new members due to clerical changes in this part of the diocese.

St. Matthew's, Wheeling: A weekday school has been started at this church. The pupils leave the public school Wednesday afternoons and come to the church for instruction by the rector. There are about forty scholars who take advantage of this opportunity.

The Rev. E. B. Andrews is holding a series of special services in connection with the general organizations of the church, such as the Girls' Friendly, the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, the Woman's Auxiliary and others.

Meeting of Executive Council.

The Bishop and Executive Council had a full fall meeting in Bethlehem this week. The Bishop reported that all vacancies, but St. Barnabas, Reading, were filled.

The Field Department presented its objectives for the Diocese. At the conclusion of the report of the Chairman, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted: "That the Bishop and Executive Council heartily commend the Diocesan Unanimity papers presented by the Field Department; and they recommend and urge the clergy and laity of the Diocese to put into effective operation the provisions of the recommendations," which are:

(a) Parish Program Conferences in every parish and mission.

(b) Organization of the group system as a permanent asset of the parish.

(c) An intensive campaign on Christian Stewardship.

(d) The adoption of a practical educational program for all parishes and missions.

The second resolution says "That the individual members of the Council be assigned to the Group Chairmen in their neighborhood to assist said chairmen to put into operation the four objectives of the Field Department as outlined in the Unanimity Papers."

Altar Cross and Vases.

On Sunday, October 5, 1924, in St. Stephen's Church, Wilkes-Barre, there was dedicated to the glory of God and the service of His Church an exceedingly beautiful Altar Cross, and a handsome set of four vases, the gift of Mr. W. Carlton Sterling and Miss Leila Sterling. The cross bears the inscription: "To the glory of God and in memory of Emma Elder Sterling, 1849-1919, and her son, Knight Sterling, 1877-1899." The two large vases are inscribed: "In memory of Emma Elder Sterling." The two small vases are inscribed: "In memory of Knight Sterling."

Work of the Department of Religious Education.

Special attention is being called by the Department of Religious Education of the Diocese to the National Accredited Teachers' Association. There are several teachers in the various Church Schools who have sufficient credits for membership, and others will be able to obtain them through parochial or inter-parochial teacher training classes which the Department proposes to promote. All of the Church Schools have received their mite boxes for the Bishop Tuttle Memorial Fund, and the Stewardship Contest for the junior and senior department is to be handled by the Department of Religious Education at the request of the Diocesan Field Department.

Death of Colored Deacon.

The Rev. G. R. Jackson, Deacon of St. Ignasius' Chapel, St. Simon's Island, Ga., died on Sunday afternoon, September 7, after a short illness. This faithful servant of the Lord served first as a teacher in the parochial school of the Island under the late Rev. A. G. P. Dodge, Jr. After serving for some years he decided to enter the ministry of the Church and entered the Theological School of King Hall, Washington, D. C., where he graduated in 1897 and was made Deacon. He taught again in the schools on the Island of St. Simon's, and became "rector's assistant for colored work," serving under the present rector, the Rev. D. Watson Winn. One of his white friends, who knew him well, said: "He was endowed with a stern sense of duty, and a high conception of personal responsibility and character, so that these things were recognized in him as characteristic, with the result that all who knew him best respected him accordingly."

The Church of the Atonement, Augusta, the Rev. Jackson H. Harris, rector, observed a Parish Reunion Day the last Sunday in September, by having a Corporate Celebration of the Holy Communion at the eleven o'clock service. The previous Friday a "Get-together" supper was held in the parish house, which was largely attended. During that week the Woman's Auxiliary had a Corporate Communion, at which time the United Thank Offering was presented. An interesting service was held at this church the first Sunday in October, when the members of Vigilant Lodge No. 2, Knights of Pythias, attended in a body and took part in the service.

St. Andrew's Church, Darien, sustained a great loss during the summer in the death of its senior warden, Mr. Thomas B. Marshall. He was a native of Scotland, and helped to build the little mission in which he rendered loyal service. At the completion of the building he was made senior warden and retained this office until his death. He was also superintendent of the Church School.

For The Church's Program.

The Church's Program will be presented to the clergy and representative laymen of the Diocese in a series of three Convocations as follows:

Birmingham, October 20 and 21.
Montgomery, October 22 and 23.
Mobile, October 24 and 25.

At each Convocation one phase of the Church's Program will be presented by the Bishop-Coadjutor, and another by the Rev. Charles Clingman, a volunteer Field Secretary of the National Council, who will demonstrate the group discussion of "My Father's Business." The Rev. John Gass of Parkersburg, West Virginia, another volunteer Field Secretary, will discuss "How the Parish Can Put It Across." The Rev. E. C. Seaman, Executive Secretary of the Diocese and Diocesan Treasurer of the Nation Wide Campaign Fund, will present facts and figures relating to Diocesan and National Council Budgets.

Bishop McDowell and his family moved in to the newly acquired Episcopal Residence in Birmingham on October 1, and on the afternoon of October 9 entertained with a house-warming.

ATLANTA.

Rt. Rev. H. J. Mikell, D. D., Bishop.

Parish Organized in Atlanta.

A new parish, which has grown from forty to seventy communicants in one month, has been formed in Atlanta, named by the Bishop the "Church of Our Saviour."

The proposed permanent location of the new parish is in the Virginia-Highland section, a rapidly-growing part of the city, where a church is badly needed. Until a new building can be erected the congregation is worshipping in the old Druid Hills Presbyterian Church.

The Rev. G. W. Gasque has accepted the rectorship, and is conducting two services every Sunday and a Wednesday evening service, all of which are unusually well attended.

The first service was held Sunday morning, September 7, and since that date a Sunday School, a Woman's Guild, an Auxiliary, and a Vested Choir have been formed.

The parish now has three licensed lay readers. One is Superintendent of the Sunday School, another the teacher of the adult Bible class, and the third the teacher of the Sunday-School class for Churchmen at the Atlanta Federal Penitentiary (Mr. A. H. Thomas), where recently he prepared two men for baptism and five men for confirmation.

The Rev. Cyril E. Bentley, Executive Secretary of the Diocese, began this work more than a year ago, and it is under his direction that the work has been carried on so effectively.

The new parish publishes a monthly paper of eight thousand words, named "Our Saviour's Messenger." The first issue contained two thousand copies.

PITTSBURGH.

Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., Bishop.

Sunday-School Rally.

On Sunday afternoon, October 5, a grand District Church School Rally for the schools of the Monongahela Valley was held at St. Paul's Church, Monongahela. The schools taking part were those at Clairton, Charleroi, Donora, Monessen and Monongahela. The schools carried banners, and the children wore badges of various colors, and marched into the church, where places had been reserved for them. The rest of the church edifice being filled to overflowing by the adults of the different congregations. The attendance exceeded three hundred and fifty persons, and the gathering was one of the most successful of its kind ever held in the Diocese. Familiar hymns were sung heartily, and the service was shortened Evening Prayer. There were three addresses, the first by the Rev. F. C. Lauderburn, of Trinity Church, Pittsburgh; the second by Miss Charlotte E. Forsyth, Diocesan Superintendent of Religious Education; and the third, Miss Margaret Monteiro, of Anking, China. At the close of the meeting Miss Forsyth distributed souvenir rally cards, which enumerated ten points of excellence to be attained by the pupils.

The Whitehead Club.

This club is composed of students in Pittsburgh attending the University of Pittsburgh and the Carnegie Technical School, who belong to the Episcopal Church. On Sunday evening, October 5, at the parish house of the Church of the Ascension, Pittsburgh, the Club gave a supper as a welcome to the new students at these institutions who are members of that Communion. It was well attended. Four Corporate Communion have been arranged for during the year, in October, December, February and May, two each at the Church of the Ascension and the Church of the Redeemer, which are parishes nearest to the University and School of Technology.

Interdenominational Noon-day Services.

Noon-day Interdenominational Gospel services are to be held each Wednesday from October 8, 1924, to February 18, 1925; in Trinity Church, Pittsburgh, from 12:30 to 1:00, up to November 26, and from that date to the finish of the series at the First Lutheran Church. Churches sharing in these services are the United Presbyterian, the Methodist Episcopal, the German Evangelical Protestant, the Episcopal, the Lutheran, the Baptist, the Christian, the Presbyterian. Those who will make addresses as representing the Episcopal Church, are the Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., the Rev. Dr. Kammerer, rector of Trinity Church, and the Rev. Dr. Budlong, of the Church of the Ascension.

KENTUCKY.

Rt. Rev. C. E. Woodcock, D. D., Bishop.

Meeting of Woman's Auxiliary.

The semi-annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary was held in the auditorium of the Cathedral Parish House, on Friday, October 10.

Miss Winston, Diocesan President, having but just returned from the National Board in New York, brought an eloquent message of hope, and appeal, but also of solicitude, reflecting the mind of the National Council then in session with the House of Bishops, gravely considering the state of the Church respecting its resources for the spread of the Kingdom. Even the most optimistic must view with deep anxiety the gravity of present day conditions, the evident luke-warmness of interest in the great cause, and the imperative need of a widespread awakening if the Church is in any degree to measure up to its obligations and responsibility. As usual, the central topic of the semi-annual meeting stressed the progress of the Woman's Triennial Thank Offering in general, its present, past, and future, as effecting Kentucky's record, in particular. General reports were also heard and a note of encouragement sounded when Calvary Parish announced every pledge in Auxiliary work fully paid to date.

A very pleasing and effective pageant was presented, written by Mrs. H. L. Maury, Diocesan Educational Secretary, artistically impersonating Prayer, Faith and Money, hopefully entering a much expanded model of the "Little Blue Box," joyfully to emerge as Deaconess, Nurse, and Teacher, hastening forth to waiting fields at home and abroad.

Almighty God, Who calledst Luke the Physician, whose praise is in the Gospel, to be an Evangelist and Physician of the soul; may it please Thee that, by the wholesome medicines of the doctrine delivered by him, all the diseases of our souls may be healed; through the merits of Thy Son, Jesus Christ Our Lord. An Old-Fashioned Garden.

Helen Bayley Davis.

Morning-glories, lady's-slippers, every sort of hue, Trembling in the summer breezes,
drenched with early dew;

What is shyly peeping out
Gazing timidly about?
Violets, in purple gowns,
Johnny-jump-ups, too, the clowns!
Mignonette and heliotrope, breathing in the air
Perfume, straight from Arcady, fragrance everywhere!

Pansies, lovely velvet things, thoughtful little faces,
Stately Prince's-feather there, with its airs and graces;

Gaudy, careless marigolds
Dresses creased in many folds;
Bleeding-hearts: a lover gay,
Jilted them, alas, they say!
In the corner by the lilacs there's a smell of mint,
Butterflies, God's roving flowers, in the sunshine glint.

Borders of the pungent box-tree guard my flowers, rare;
Courtly lords and powdered ladies must have wandered there.
Bluebirds, robins, bobolinks,
Homely sparrows, saucy minx,
Love this garden gay of mine,
Love my phlox and columbine,
Preen their many-colored jackets, flaunt their gorgeous frocks,
In this quaint, old-fashioned garden, with its hedge of box.

STUDIES IN THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

The Great Intercession.

The Rev. Louis Tucker, D. D.

In the Great Discourse Our Lord speaks much of prayer. Now He prays; and the first prayer is for glorification; mutual glorification. The popular idea of "Glorifying" is connected with speaking, speaking largely, boasting. We glorify each other by praise, largely untrue. But there is a glorifying which needs no speech. When a general gives one of his staff command of a forlorn hope he "glorifies" him as fit to do the work. If the officer succeed, or even if he bravely fail and die, he glorifies his general by proving the choice good.

That "The hour is come" may mean merely that Our Lord had determined to move on with His plans. Our Lord in His passion was not the sport of circumstance. He was in control. He could have stopped the whole tragedy at any minute. Things happened to Him because He allowed them. He could have reversed events, confounded His prosecutors, taken control of Jerusalem, made Himself Emperor of Rome and then Dictator of the world and founded on an earthly basis that kingdom which He is still toiling to found on a heavenly one. He had power over all flesh.

More particularly, His power was to give eternal life to those whom God had given Him. Man receives from God a life temporal which, because of sin, is slowly dying out. If, at any time before he is too far gone, man admit that death-in-sin, Christ can give him a new life which is not dying but eternal. We shall triumph over evil by the simple process of outliving evil and look down, half-pitying, on sin as some hale old men now look down on the graves of their oppressors. The deadliest thing in this world is a lie, either spoken or lived. Reward of Christ-like living is Eternal Life.

Our Lord, in direct accord with the profoundest philosophy of all ages, bases eternal life on knowledge of God; but, with philosophy profounder, couples it with knowledge of Himself. As Logos Christ created the universe and is thus the nexus between create and uncreate. Knowledge of God is impossible except through Him.

He went on to a cherished glimpse behind the veil, giving new information surpassing parallel. We are told, quite casually, of a time before the world was (And, by implication, before the universe was) while Our Lord dwelt in glory with the Father. The nature of that glory, since God is love, was fathomless happiness in love. After Time began, after the Universe was created, yet before the world was made (Space and Time mutually measure each other, and so began together) we can cast back and recover knowledge enough to be of use. That knowledge is of a group, a society, a monarchy, a universe, of intelligent beings, wise, strong, happy, deathless and busy, each with his own work; and of this ordered universe the Monarch is the Logos, the Word. From that high throne He came for us into this world; yet not for us alone. They lacked there something

He brought back from us; the knowledge of what sin will do, the certainty that it will try to murder God; the knowledge of what Love will endure, the certainty that it will die for the beloved. Without these certainties evil was possible in even that society, for angels fell. With them we think that all God's universe is clinched and settled on foundation of righteousness eternal. That Christ is the rock, the root, the sure and firm foundation, means more than we small earth-blind souls yet know. It has a universe-significance, and reaches beyond time to the eternal. And to that glory, voluntarily laid down for us, though not for us alone, He was to return. "Post hoc exilium, ibo."

The Name referred to is not the ineffable name of God, but a much deeper thing; in fact, the whole superstition concerning the Ineffable name, as that Solomon controlled demons by it and much like dream-stuff, is a symbolic shadow of that deeper thing. We who give names in infancy, without regard to character, do not grasp the thought; though even we give nicknames. The name of a spiritual entity is the setting forth of that entity. "Jehovah," for instance, means "I AM"; or, more fully, "The Self-existent First Cause." To manifest the Name of God to eleven men was not to impart to them some combination of syllables, but to make them understand something of the real nature of God.

That the eleven were God's men and that the Father gave them to the Son out of the world does not, as Olshausen makes plain, imply that some men belong to God and others not. Some are more obedient than others; some are in rebellion and not obedient at all; but all belong to God. The parable of the Lost Didrachma illustrates.

The rest of the speech is limpidly clear, or turbid past comprehension, according as one understands the psychology of faith. In either case comment is superfluous. The statement that Our Lord "came forth from" God, quoted as it is by Emanationists, does not necessarily mean emanation. A courier may "come forth from" a general without "emanating from him."

Our Lord speaks of Himself as no more in the world when He was; as far as suffering goes, on the eve of fuller immersion in the affairs of the world than ever before; so full, in fact, as to revolutionize them. Perhaps being "In the world" meant, to Him, submission to the authority of the Prince of this world. Up to this time He was under the law in many ways, of which the simplest and most superficial were the laws of food and sleep. But now His last meal was eaten. He had no more need of sleep. Never any more would His eyes close until Joseph of Arimathea, or Nicodemus, the some time coward grown very brave at last, should close them. For the thousand things which make the sum-total of mortality He had now no need. As for death, He was planning to destroy death, braving that dread in its own stronghold and giving it the mortal wound which shall kill it, so that His living servants shall serve Him long after death is dead. The eleven were still in these things. They had need of food and sleep and many like matters; but He had let these go.

The Master speaks of the Father as Holy, in connection with the idea of spiritual unity among the eleven. God alone is holy. No human beings do more than distantly approach the pure and awful whiteness of that tremendous absence of all stain. Yet, if there be noticeable approximation, however distant, men far apart as the very poles in other things are filled with a respect for each other genuine, a brotherhood most winning, a glorious and, to others, incomprehensible companionship. Who has not seen, even in the ranks of some narrow communion, a face clear-cut as a cameo, an eye of level lightning, and known the owner, however intellectually mistaken, one of that great brotherhood which shall stand before the throne? We dread holiness, we deny holiness, we fear holiness, and, truly, among men there is no absolute holiness. Yet when we meet an even partial holiness every clean heart cleaves to it.

These are facts; great and peaceful and calm as the eternal hills. More, they are touched with joy, as the eternal hills are touched with light at dawn. Also, there are deeps in them which we have not sounded; most joyful deeps. Therefore it is no accident that Our Master next said that we might have His joy fulfilled in ourselves.

The Christ, as well as His message, is a Word of God. The Lord Jesus had given His message and Himself. The eleven and those they stand for are not of the world; yet, if that which overthrows is power, if that which survives is life, if that which gives strength from within its a constituent, then the eleven and their followers proved more in the world than is anything else. The Jewish government antagonized them and is gone; the Roman Empire attacked them and perished. Men taught by the eleven lead the world today. Out of the classical world grew the fruitful world-chaos of the dark ages; and the coherent principle which made growth possible was work of the eleven. From the dark ages emerged mediaeval feudalism, crude and evil, but instinct with life; and the life came through these eleven. From the mediaeval bulb blossomed modern Christendom, and the vitality which unfolded and developed came through these eleven. They were unworldly, but they remade the world. They, or the followers they trained, took the world to pieces and remade it, cleaned, revised and extended, as a man may rebuild a house. In very truth the Father did not take them out of the world.

The Blotted Record.

It was supper time in a Methodist minister's home a fortnight ago. In the course of our conversation at the supper table, I was reminding myself and telling two ministers present what I had heard from the lips of one of my pastors a few days before. This pastor was calling on a prominent physician in his community who was ill. As the pastor led the conversation with the sick man, naturally the primary matter of the physician's relation to Christ was talked. The doctor did not demur. He spoke with evident interest and concern but finally said to the pastor, "Pastor, you have been here four years. Why have you not talked to me about Christ when I was well?" As I heard this pastor relate this experience in the presence of a sympathetic circle and tell us how this just rebuke had chided and condemned him, I could recall many instances where men whom I had known could have stabbed me with a similar question that would have caused me to stand speechless. Wondering whether it was not altogether too tragically true of too many of us, I was voicing my lament to my two brother ministers. I desperately desire to talk to sick men—dying men—about Jesus Christ. I do not want any man to go into the "outer darkness," banished from the face and friendship of Jesus Christ because of my neglect. But there is one sort of man who haunts me more vividly than the sick man, and he is the strong, sturdy, successful man who looks as if he could laugh death in the face because he is so full of abounding health. "What about these men," I asked of my brother ministers, "these men who walk our streets unafraid of disease; these men who are our neighbors; some of them our personal friends? Their children are in our Sunday Schools; their wives are members of our churches," I urged, "some of them have invited us to their homes to share their hospitality; others have contributed to our material support; others have known us in varied ways in social and community life. Suppose they should tell the truth about us; what would they say?"

It was then time for one of the other ministers to speak. He related with trembling tones and moist eyes an experience in a previous pastorate. He was speaking of an ideal family circle. The mother belonged to the church and adorned the Gospel of Christ. The children were a charm and a joy. The father was prominent in the city and a large owner in many of the most outstanding community enterprises. The city honored him with its confidence and admiration. He was a regular attendant at church on Sunday mornings and often was at worship Sunday evenings. But one thing was lacking. He was not personally, definitely and openly committed to Jesus Christ, so as to be an active partner in Christ's enterprises in that city. One evening the pastor was a guest at dinner in the comfortable home of the banker. After the bounteous meal was finished and informal conversation prevailed, the pastor looked directly into the face of the banker and said, "Mr. M—, for a long time I have intended asking you in a friendly but easy way if you were not ready to surrender your splendid life to the dominion of Jesus Christ and place at Christ's disposal the energies of your whole soul." "For a moment," said the pastor, "there was a tense silence about that table and then the banker spoke. Said he in substance: 'Pastor, you have been our preacher for three years. You have been in our home often. Whenever you have been here and gone, I was always disappointed, because you never opened the door of the Kingdom and invited me in. Of course,' continued the banker, 'I will give my life to Christ and do it now.' We were all mellowed by this recital of another tale of how many a minister and many a layman looks backward into the faces of men who have never come to Christ because we have never opened the door and invited them in. We have done it publicly; so had the pastor of the banker. He had publicly pleaded with men in that congregation for three years to yield themselves to God. The banker had heard these appeals, but had never acted. It required the personal plea face to face, eye to eye, heart to heart.—Bishop Henderson, in Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

THE PARABLES OF SAFED THE SAGE.

The Parable of the Taxi Meter.

Once upon a time there was a man who said, All my life I have either walked or ridden on the Street Cars, and it is time for a Change. And he ordered a Taxi, and climbed in. And he looked out at other men, scrambling for a place to enter the street cars, or standing within and holding to the straps, and he felt like Croesus.

But after a time he ceased to watch his less fortunate Neighbors, and looked at the Meter, and, behold, it was working steadily at its job, and every now and then it jumped another Dime.

And he began to figure how much it was going to cost him to get home.

And as he noted the intervals at which it jumped, and considered the distance from his home, he was almost constrained to get out and walk the last four blocks lest the Meter should jump two or three times before he pulled up at his own Curb.

Now I also have walked to save carfare, and have counted myself rich when I had a nickel that I thought I could spare for the trolley-cars, in the days when a car-ride cost a nickel. And I also sometimes ride in a Taxi. For, while I am far from Rich as the world doth esteem wealth, Money is the cheapest thing I have.

And this is the way I feel about it. I can afford to walk, and I can afford to ride on the Trolley, and I can afford a Taxi if there is sufficient reason for it, but I cannot afford to die of Nervous Excitation watching the Meter. I will either walk and save it altogether, or ride on the Street Car at such price as they who run those cars ring up, or ride in a Taxi and pay like a man. But I will not ride and worry.

And the same I hold concerning Life. I am a Passenger on this here old Taxi that is racing through History, and I see no very decent and very desirable way of getting out until I reach the Destination, and I do not want to get out.

Wherefore I and Keturah we sit in this old Taxicab of life, and we know that just as much of the road belongeth unto us as it doth to any man who payeth an hundred times our Income Tax. And we are going with the Race, that is to say the Human Race, and getting our money's worth out of the Ride.

And thus do I speak unto Keturah, There is no couple that hath a Mileage to equal ours that hath had more or happier Experiences, and those Experiences keep right on. And I know not how long this old Machine will run, nor with what it may yet collide. And I am well aware that our Chauffeur, Old Time, is working hard at the Meter and registering an increasing account against us. But no watching of the Meter shall prevent our enjoying the ride.—Selected.

The Influence of the Missionary.

The modern missionary is often a man—and more often a woman—of affairs. The idea that he is likely to be a narrow and somewhat foolish fanatic has vanished. The great missionary organizations are of international importance. Their leaders are consulted by statesmen, and their advice is not without influence on public policy. The sympathy of missionaries with native races and their knowledge of where the shoe pinches are of obvious value to officials. Their criticisms are sometimes resented, but they can seldom be ignored. They have expert knowledge and only one axe to grind. While they wish to spread the Christian faith, they are free both from political and from financial motives. Then, too, they have the ear of the religious communions which they serve; and, though we hear much of the weakness of institutional Christianity, the influence of the churches in matters of political morality shows no signs of lessening.—London Times.

For the Young Folks

My River.

My river winds across the fields
 With many a haunting curve;
 It cannot see around the bend,
 It knows not where its travels end
 Beyond the little hills that serve
 As barriers to its view.
 And yet it ever craves the new;
 With hungers strange its waves are rife;
 —And so it is with life.

My river looks up from its bed
 Upon a roof of leaves;
 The trees low-arch along its bank,
 And cast their shadows rank on rank,
 And all the shimmering foliage weaves
 A tapestry of light.
 But o'er the green the sky shines bright;
 It pierces through like some sharp knife;
 —And so it is with life.

My river flows through quiet lands
 Where peace and beauty brood;
 It laves the humble nodding reeds;
 It waters kine on fertile meads;
 It feeds the listening poet's mood.
 But finally the hour
 Of service comes; in helpful power
 It seeks the humming city's strife;
 —And so it is with life.

Mary Beatrice Visits China.

Mary Beatrice's father was a silk merchant, and because some of the most beautiful silks in the world come from China, he made many trips to that country, and bought yards and yards of the shimmering goods. One day he decided to take Mary Beatrice and her mother with him, so they bid their friends good-bye, and sailed away across the Pacific Ocean to China.

The very first thing that Mary Beatrice noticed when she got off the boat was the narrowness of the streets. Now China is a very old country, and its streets were laid out years and years ago, when wide streets were quite unknown. But though they are narrow, Chinese streets are not dark like our narrow streets, because all the houses are only one-story high.

There is an idea among the Chinese that there are evil spirits about, always ready to do harm. Of course this is a horrid idea, and not true, but the Chinese believe that these spirits can reach them if they are near the earth, and they would like to have their houses built high. Only the rich could afford to build high houses and since it wouldn't be fair to the poor people to leave them to the evil spirits, all houses are built low. The churches and pagodas are made high, so that no evil spirit will ever venture near them!

Mr. Hayes, Mary Beatrice's father, wanted to see his Chinese agent so he took Mary Beatrice, and her mother with him to Lee Chang's house. Lee Chang had been Mr. Hayes' agent for many years, and they had become very good friends.

In order to reach the inside rooms they had to turn many corners, because the Chinese believe that evil spirits can travel only in a straight line.

The windows were made of paper, and the doors were wide open. There were many beautiful screens and rugs everywhere; pictures hung on the walls.

Lee Chang's little boy and girl looked very queer to Mary Beatrice when she first saw them, but of course she was too polite to stare. They were dressed just alike in silk trousers, silk coats, and queer shoes with white soles. The boy's head was shaved, all but a small part on top, and the piece that hung down was braided into a "queue." Many little Chinese boys were proud of their queues, but they are not worn as much as they used to be before the Chinese Revolution.

The little girl wore her hair combed high like her mother's but unlike her mother's, her feet were unbound. That is another thing that the new government did; the girl children no longer have bound feet.

The little girl was named Ah Foo, and she and Mary Beatrice became friends at once, although neither understood one word that the other said. Ah Foo took Mary Beatrice to see her garden, and looked on with a pleased smile while the little American girl admired it. Of course it was very different from any garden that Mary Beatrice had ever seen before. It was laid in many patterns with beautiful trees and flowers. In the center was a little pool filled with goldfish. And such goldfish! Mary Beatrice had goldfish of her own, but these were unlike any that she had ever seen. Their tails were very large, and they had lumps over their eyes that made them look hideous.

Lee, who had been named for his father, took Mary Beatrice to see his kites. In China, only the little boys and men are allowed to fly kites; little girls cannot play with them. Mary Beatrice couldn't understand this, but she found the kites worth looking at. There were all sizes, and shapes; one was a bird, another was shaped like a fish, and still another looked like an enormous butterfly.

Lee had lanterns, too. All the Chinese love their lanterns, which are made of paper, and shaped like flowers, animals, and balls. Nearly everything in China is made of paper, and there is an old Chinese saying that "paper is made of everything."

On the first full moon of the year they celebrate The Feast of the Lanterns, there are processions, and fireworks, just like our Fourth of July, and lanterns everywhere.

At last supper time came. Mary Beatrice thought the table set very queerly. First there were candied fruits, and nuts cut in small pieces, for the Chinese eat everything with chopsticks. The chopsticks are two little ivory sticks held between the thumb, and first two fingers. Then came the rice—the people in China eat rice as we do potatoes—and last of all, tea. Mary Beatrice had never had tea without sugar, cream, or lemon in it, but her new friends drank their tea plain.

Naturally Mary Beatrice was interested in schools. She wanted to know if the Chinese schools were at all like her wonderful school in America. She also learned that many Chinese do not think a girl needs an education. Ah Foo's father thought his daughter did, so a teacher came to the house every day. Mary Beatrice was surprised when she heard that little girls are not always welcome in China, particularly among the poor, who often throw their girl babies into the river.

It was fun to watch Ah Foo study. Instead of having an alphabet to learn there were thousands of characters, each having a different meaning, and in order to read and write she must learn most of them. She began to read at the right of the sheet, instead of the left, and read up instead of across as Mary Beatrice did. When it came for her writing lesson, she used a brush, and had a cake of ink, instead of a bottle of ink. When Ah Foo recited her lessons she stood with her back to her teacher, as that is the polite way to do, and the Chinese never forget to be polite. When she had finished her lessons for the day, Ah Foo thanked her teacher. Mary Beatrice thought this very strange, indeed, for it had never occurred to her to thank her teacher for helping her.

Ah Foo's brother went to school with the other boys. He was up at dawn, and studied until ten o'clock, and then came home for breakfast and went back again and studied until five o'clock. There were no vacations except on special occasions. Lee studied the books of Confucius, a great Chinese philosopher, and had hard problems in arithmetic to work out, but he didn't mind it at all for he was fond of study. Lee's school was very noisy; all the boys studied out loud so that the teacher would know that they were doing their lessons.

Lee and Ah Foo had a great many pets, they had grasshoppers, crickets, goldfish, and dogs. When they took Mary Beatrice fishing they took their tame cormorant, leashed to a rope. He would dive into the water, and catch fish for them.

When they needed their shoes repaired a man came to the house to do it. Mary Beatrice had heard her grandmother tell about the old cobbler that came to her house when she was a child to make shoes for the whole family and fix any old ones that needed his attention, so this did not seem wholly strange to her. But when she found that they must ride in a covered chair, carried by two men every time they went on the street, she thought it very queer.

Mary Beatrice was much interested in everything she saw in China, and she grew very fond of her new friends, but when the time came to return to her own country, she was glad there were not so many strange customs in America.—Christian Observer.

The Three Little Alligators.

Once upon a time there were three little alligators and a big daddy alligator. They lived in a place called Florida.

Now one day the three little alligators were playing all alone on the sunny sandy beach. Along came a little colored boy with a basket. The little colored boy's name was Rastus. As soon as he saw the three little alligators he caught them and put them in his basket. The basket had a cover, so that the three little alligators could not get out, although they tried as hard as they could.

Rastus rested quite often, and as he had not done so for an hour, he decided to lie down and take a nap. But just then the old daddy alligator came swimming along to find the little baby alligators. He walked right up close to Rastus, and not knowing what to say, he just coughed a little.

Rastus turned his head, saw the old daddy alligator, and then he ran as fast as he could to his mother.

The old daddy alligator saw the basket and decided to take it home as a present to Mrs. Alligator. But just then a funny thing happened. You see there were holes in the bottom of the basket, and the feet of the little alligators came right through. As they walked the basket moved right along up the sandy beach.

"Gracious!" said the old daddy alligator. "Never before did I see a basket walk. What do you s'pose makes it?"

He followed the basket, which walked along up the beach rather slowly. He decided to take the basket home right away, so he put it on his rough scaly back and swam home.

"See what I have brought you," he said to Mrs. Alligator. "Here is a queer basket that walks right along." And when he put it on the floor it did walk right along.

"Well! well!" said Mrs. Alligator, "how queer! Let us open the basket and see what is inside." They carefully opened the basket and out jumped the three little alligators.—Selected.

"When Old Friends Meet Again."

Clarence A. Neff, Jr., aged 12 years.

There is a land so far away,
Where old friends meet again,
Where the sun shines brightly all the day,
And there is never rain.
And in this land so far away,
True happiness doth reign,
'Tis but the land of peace and bliss,
When old friends meet again.

This land is bright with flowers
That blossom all the year,
There roses grow in bowers,
For no one sheds a tear,
For in that land so far away,
There is no toil nor pain,
It is a land of peace and bliss,
Where old friends meet again.

Ah, many friends have gone there,
And you will go there too,
The sun shines brightly all the day
And the sky is always blue,
And when it's time to go there
Walk down the shady lane
Into the land of peace and bliss,
Where old friends meet again.

A Young Hero.

One afternoon, almost a century and a half ago, three lads were idling along a country lane in Ireland.

"Come on, let's go swimming," said one.

"Oh, yes," chimed in the second, tossing his cap into the air. "Come on, Arthur. You haven't any objections, have you?"

The lad called Arthur, a blue-eyed, freckled-faced fellow with a shock of brown hair that half covered his high forehead, hesitated briefly before he answered.

"No, I haven't any objections, and I think a swim would do us all good, but we promised old man Goodhue that we would hoe his garden for him, and should keep our word."

"Oh, come on, don't be a ninny, Arthur. As if you, an earl's son, would hoe a poor man's garden."

"But we promised," replied Arthur, "and besides, he is an old soldier, and I mean to be a soldier, too, and a soldier must always do his duty."

"Oh, pshaw; as if it was your duty to care for a old man's garden. I am going to the river."

"And I am going to keep my word. I can have my swim afterwards."

"Well, I wish you joy in your task," shouted the others, as they kept on their course to the swimming hole, where the boys of Dublin School were used to take their weekly swim.

The boy called Arthur turned in at the rustic gate of a poor cottage, where an old man with a crutch and a wooden leg greeted him.

"Well, you have not forgotten the old soldier. Some boys would."

"I could not forget a man who lost his leg at Culloden," Arthur answered.

The old man gazed at the proud face and grave eyes of the boy, and something that he saw there made him say, "My lad, you will be a great man some day."

The boy's face flushed. Praise from an old soldier was very pleasant.

"But I want to be a great soldier, like Marlborough."

"Well, if you are a soldier you will be great, too. Determination, hard work and faithfulness to duty will help any one to succeed."

With these encouraging words lingering in his ear the boy stripped off his coat and vest and went to work. It was toil he was unaccustomed to, and before an hour's time his hands were sore. But he worked on with a brave spirit till the task was done.

* * *

That very afternoon that same young student, Arthur, as he was returning from his belated swim in the river, showed himself a hero of another kind.

A carriage, driven by a coachman in livery, was dashing along one of the streets of Dublin. Suddenly the leading horse took fright. In the driver's attempt to hold in the frantic steeds, one of the reins snapped, and the coachman sat dazed and helpless in his seat.

A glimpse of a young girl's face, pale with terror, and that of a middle-aged gentleman, evidently her father, and the frightened, tearing horses and the heavy coach lurching dangerously from side to side, was enough to set young Arthur's feet a-flying.

Darting swiftly across the street the lad rushed out in front of the galloping horses. A leap like that of a blood hound and he had the frightened animals by the bridle.

He was lifted from his feet, but he clung like grim death. He could not be shaken off. Dragged forcibly along, he did not relinquish his grasp, and at last succeeded in checking their mad pace.

In a few minutes more they came to a halt, and as the coachman and out-riders sprang to the ground, the coach door opened and the gray-haired gentleman and the girl alighted. The gentleman said in surprise:

"Why, if this is not my friend, Lord Morington's son! You have saved our lives and proved yourself a hero. I am Lord Longford, and this is my daughter, Catherine Pakenham."

"Young man, I predict great things for you. England will not hold your fame," and as he marked the lad's flashing eyes he placed his hands upon the boy's head as if pronouncing a benediction, "and dying, you will sleep with England's great men."

These words all came true, for young Arthur became the great Duke of Wellington, field marshal, conqueror of Napoleon and peer of the realm, who was accorded honors beyond those given to any other of England's heroes.

Great victories were to be his, great honors and moments of supreme exaltation, but never in a life that was destined to touch the summit of earthly glory did he show greater manhood than in keeping his word with Master Goodhue, nor did he ever perform a braver deed than when he saved the life of his future wife at the risk of his own.—Ex.

Fall-Time.

A red leaf came a-floating down,
As I ran by to school.
It joined another leaf of brown,
A-sailing in the pool.

A chestnut clattered down, ker-pop!
I picked it up, you see.
I saw a ripe, red apple drop
From off a neighbor's tree.

Some sister seeds, without a sound,
Hopped out to take the air,
And in the orchard grass I found
A juicy russet pear.

Then all at once I laughed right out—
It came to me so clear.

That's why we call these days, no doubt,
The fall-time of the year!

Dream-Fairy.

One evening, just as the sun was saying "Good-night," the beautiful moon came riding through the sky.

Dream-Fairy, who lives in the moon, stepped into her airship made of a fleecy, misty white cloud, and started to the earth.

By and by, she came to the home of Little Papoose. He was swimming in his little birchwood and deerskin cradle under a pine tree. Little Papoose saw Dream-Fairy in her beautiful white airship, and said, "Dream-Fairy, where are you going in your beautiful white airship?" And Dream-Fairy whispered, "I am going to the Land of Dreams, where birds sing at night, where butterflies can talk, where babies ride ponies and chase the wild deer."

Then Little Papoose said, "Please, Dream-Fairy, take me with you in your beautiful white airship. I want to hear the birds sing at night and the butterflies talk, and ride a pony, and chase the wild deer."

Dream-Fairy smiled a sweet smile, and said, "You may go with me, Little Papoose, if you will shut your eyes." So Little Papoose shut his eyes. Then Dream-Fairy lifted Little Papoose up, and up into her airship, and on and on they sailed while Dream-Fairy sang a song of the wind.

By and by they came to the home of Little Brown Boy. He was playing in the sand by the sea. Little Brown Boy saw Dream-Fairy in her beautiful white airship, and said, "Dream-Fairy, where are you going in your beautiful white airship?" And Dream-Fairy whispered, "I am going to the Land of Dreams, where tigers are kittens, and crocodiles have no teeth, and little boys ride on the elephant's trunk."

Then Little Brown Boy said, "Please, Dream-Fairy, take me with you in your beautiful white airship. I want to play with a tiger kitten, and a crocodile without teeth, and ride on the elephant's trunk."

Dream-Fairy smiled a sweet smile and said, "You may go with me, Little Brown Boy, if you will shut your eyes. So Little Brown Boy shut his eyes. Then Dream-Fairy lifted Little Brown Boy up and up into her airship, and on and on they sailed while Dream-Fairy sang a song of the wind.

By and by they came to the home of Little Blue Eyes. She was standing by a window playing with her doll. Little Blue Eyes saw Dream-Fairy in Twins At The Zoo.

There is a mother bear at our National Zoo who is just as careful to teach her children to do what is right as she would be if they were living in the wilderness and had to find their own honey with never a loaf of bread.

This mother bear at the Zoo has a new pair of twins. When they were big enough to receive callers the children of Washington were invited to visit the baby bears.

That is how it came about that a little girl named Maud and a little boy named Nelson were taken to the Zoo on a Sunday afternoon to see mother bear and her family.

That day the children were allowed to give peanuts to the bears, and Maud and Nelson tossed theirs between the bars and watched the other children do the same thing.

Now it happened that one baby bear was selfish and the other was generous and polite. One would reach out his little paw and rake in all the peanuts that he could get for himself. The other little bear took only the peanuts that rolled so close to him that his brother couldn't reach them.

The children laughed at the selfish bear, but they liked the other one better. For a few minutes mother bear watched without doing anything, but it was soon plain to the children that she loved the selfish, greedy little bear just as much as she loved the polite, dainty little fellow; but she couldn't let him be spoiled.

When she thought the right time had come mother bear cuffed the selfish baby hard. He didn't cry when he was cuffed, but when mother bear kept passing the peanuts over to his brother he stood on his hind legs, dropped his front paws and cried "Uh-uh-uh!"—like that. You should hear little Maud tell how the baby bear cried.

As long as Maud and Nelson were allowed to stay at the Zoo that afternoon they saw that performance over and over until they had to leave; their mother said, "Come." As they walked away, they looked over their shoulders, and the old mother bear winked at them. It may be that she was glad to notice that when the mother of a boy and girl said, "Come," they went, even if they did go away crying softly, for fun, "Uh-uh-uh, we don't want to go!"—Youth's Companion.

"On September 30th there was held in London, England, a celebration of the 50th anniversary of the founding of the Leper Mission. The Most Rev. Dr. D'Arcy Lord Primate of all Ireland, president of the Mission, was present; also Mr. W. C. Bailey, honored founder of the work. It is expected that missionaries from all the principal fields where the Mission is operating will be among the speakers."

In this time 95 asylums in 13 different countries have been established where 11,000 lepers are being cared for—also 30 homes for 500 untainted children, who when separated from their parents, generally do not develop the disease.

The whole world is aroused to the danger of leprosy. Work is extending to South America and Africa. France also established a Committee of Help for Lepers last year and work is being undertaken in Society Islands and in Madagascar.

What wonders God hath wrought in 50 years! The blessed season of Christmas is approaching. Please remember the lepers in your Christmas giving. They are very grateful and so are we.

EVELYN P. MERIWETHER, President and Treasurer, Richmond Branch-Leper Mission, 2346 West Grace Street, Richmond, Virginia.

WOODHOUSE: Entered into life eternal, at Christ Church Hospital, West Philadelphia, Pa., on Monday, September 13, 1924, MISS ELIZABETH T. S. WOODHOUSE, formerly of Princess Anne county, Virginia.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

Consecrated Service is the keynote of the Church's call to its newly assembled forces throughout the diocese, and the response is distinctly encouraging. The Louisville Church Normal School is conducting a ten-week session in various lines of study, assembling weekly at St. Paul's Church, while Conferences, and study classes mark progress in other parishes. Church attendance campaigns are in progress, blazing the trail, it is hoped, for the great Every Member Canvass approaching.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Paul Due, formerly of Darlington, S. C., has taken charge of the work in Winchester and Cynthiana, Ky.

The Rev. J. R. Mallett, rector of St. John's, Wilmington, N. C., leaves the first of November to become associate dean of Trinity Cathedral, Cleveland, Ohio. His resignation was accepted with great regret by the church in Wilmington. He has served as an examining chaplain of the Diocese for the past year.

The Rev. Robert N. Perry, formerly of Columbia, S. C., is the new Vicar of the Church of the Good Shepherd (colored), Thomasville, Ga.

The Rev. G. F. Weida, formerly of Kenyon College, is now professor of chemistry in Centre College, Danville, Ky., and also has charge of the churches at Richmond and Mt. Sterling, Ky.

The Rev. C. W. Nauman, the assistant, has been placed in charge of Ascension Parish, New York City, and it is stated that no rector may be chosen for some time.

The Rev. W. P. Stanley has taken hold with a determination to win at St. Andrew's Church, Lexington, Ky., the Negro Mission; and already good things are being accomplished.

The Rev. Wythe Leigh Kinsolving, Presbyter of the Diocese of New York, conducted a mission for the Rev. W. S. Shacklett at Columbia, Virginia, from Thursday, October 2, until Sunday, October 7. Congregations and general interest were remarkable and full of encouragement.

In the Chapel of the General Seminary, at Evensong on October 9, Dean Fosbroke conferred, in the name of the Seminary, the degree of Doctor of Sacred Theology upon the Rt. Rev. Dr. Herbert Shipman, Suffragan Bishop of New York; the Rt. Rev. Dr. Frederick B. Howden, Missionary Bishop of New as to an experience. You believe there was such a person. You know that His story has wrought a wonderful change in the course of human affairs. You are members of the Junior Brotherhood of St. Andrew, and as such, have no hesitation at all in accepting the articles of the Christian faith as contained in the Apostles' Creed. And yet, perhaps, you have never experienced any sense of comradeship with Him. Therefore I say the real challenge of Christianity, of Jesus Christ, is not so much a challenge to a Creed as to an experience.

ANNUAL CONVENTION OF THE BROTHERHOOD OF ST. ANDREW.

"There is only one way to know Jesus. The entrance to that knowledge is through an open portal of knowledge about Him. Some have defined Jesus as the very essence of God. Some have called Him the portrait of an invisible God. Read the Gospels for a working description, and then having fixed that description firmly in our minds, set out to seek the One Who answers to it."

The Friday morning speaker at the Senior session was Mr. G. Warfield Hobbs, Editorial Secretary of the National Council of the Church, and Editor of The Spirit of Missions and The Church at Work, whose subject was, "Printer's Ink and Evangelism." Mr. Hobbs urged widespread use of the printed word as a practical and available means of spreading the Gospel to the man who cannot be reached otherwise, also appealed to the audience to read and support the press of our Church. "The condition of ignorance of our Church," he said, "can only be described by the word 'abysmal.' Our people do not read our publications. Of all periodicals, the circulations of religious periodicals are the saddest. Let us realize the power of the printed word and use it as a ready tool of our business, the business of bringing men to a knowledge of Christ."

In the afternoon group conference, Bishop Lloyd urged the clergy to develop and use the lay power of the Church. "The Brotherhood of St. Andrew," he said, "has been a potent influence in helping the Church to learn this, and how to do it. The Brotherhood must go forward with strength in this day of transition when men are bewildered not knowing their right hand from their left, while all things seem to be shaken. But its progress now as from the beginning depends as it should on the guidance and inspiration of the clergy."

On Saturday the convention considered the next place of meeting, referring invitations to the National Council for decision. The new Council was elected, and the session was then opened to the Juniors, Alan Rose, Nashville, Tenn., Junior Chairman, presiding for the remainder of the session. The subject was "The Parish Need for a Junior Chapter from Different Viewpoints," the first being that of a Junior, discussed by Harry R. Young, Harvard student from Swampscott, Mass., from the viewpoint of a Senior, by Mr. Stephen F. Bayne, twenty years a Brotherhood man, and District Superintendent of Schools of New York City, and from the viewpoint of a rector, by the Rev. Charles D. Broughton, rector of the Church of the Ascension, Buffalo.

Saturday evening a Service of Preparation for the great Annual Corporate Communion of the Brotherhood was conducted by the Rev. H. P. Almon Abbott, D. D., of Baltimore.

On Sunday morning the Corporate Communion was held at All Saints' Cathedral, Bishop Nelson being the celebrant, with Bishops Oldham, Coadjutor of Albany, Guerry of South Carolina and Brewster of Maine, with Dean Carver and Canon Roney of the Cathedral, assisting. A memorial service for the late Robert Hallowell Gardiner, former President of the Brotherhood was conducted by Bishop Brewster.

At eleven o'clock services, pulpits in the various churches of Albany and surrounding cities were filled by Brotherhood speakers.

The Sunday afternoon mass meeting took place at the Cathedral, with Bishops Nelson, Oldham, Guerry, and Bennett, and many of the clergy of the diocese in the processional. The Rev. Hastings H. Hart, D. D., of the Russell Sage Foundation, New York, spoke of the opportunity of Christians for work among prisoners, and the Rt. Rev. Granville G. Bennett, D. D., Bishop of Duluth, preached, calling Brotherhood men to practical appreciation of their obligation as their brothers' keeper.

Sunday evening the speaker was Bishop Guerry of South Carolina, the text being, "I Can Do All Things Through Christ," and who closed by asking the Brotherhood men to join with him, kneeling, in repeating the words of consecration, "We here offer and present ourselves, our souls and bodies, to be a reasonable, holy and living sacrifice unto Thee."

The memorial roll of the Brotherhood was held, and a short informal closing service, with five-minute impressions of the convention from various speakers.

Mexico, and the Rt. Rev. Dr. Robert H. Mize, Missionary Bishop of Salina.

The Rev. Clarence Stuart McClellan, Jr., formerly rector at Canton, N. C. (Diocese of Western North Carolina), has accepted the call to the rectorship of old Calvary Church, Fletcher, N. C., adjoining Asheville, in the same Diocese. The rector and his family will occupy Calvary Rectory after October 24.

The Rev. T. D. Harari, of St. Paul's Church, Hamilton, Va., has returned after six months' absence in the Near East and Europe.

The Rev. and Mrs. G. H. Harris, of Versailles, Ky., spent the month of September in Springfield, Mass.

The Rev. Henry Scott Miller, who has served as curate for the past two years of Trinity Parish, New York, has been appointed vicar of Epiphany Chapel, Epiphany Parish, Washington, D. C., and has already entered upon his duties there.

Mr. Miller is a graduate of Earlham College and the General Theological Seminary, New York.

After serving four months at Trinity Cathedral, Cleveland, Ohio, the Rev. Dr. Alfred W. Arundel has returned to New York City and may be addressed at 145 West Twelfth Street.

The Rev. Robert G. Boville, founder of the World Association Daily Vacation Bible Schools, addressed the students of the National Cathedral School for Girls, Washington, on Sunday evening, October 12.

ORDINATIONS.

On September 21, the Sunday after Ember Week, being also the Festival of St. Matthew, the Bishop of Haiti ordained the Rev. Etienne Victor Louis Gilles to the priesthood, at Saint-Marc, Haiti. The Preface to the Ordinal was publicly read by the Rev. Edouard C. Jones, and the Bishop preached the sermon. The candidate was presented by the Venerable Albert R. Liwyd. There were also present and joining in the laying-on of hands: the Rev. Leon Jones and the Rev. Elie Octave Najac. A large congregation was present and showed the deepest interest in the service, possibly the first of the kind to take place in this city. The Rev. Mr. Gilles will continue his ministrations at Saint-Marc.

On September 29, in Calvary Church, Bridgeport, Conn., the Rev. William MacDougal Hay was advanced to the priesthood by the Rt. Rev. Chauncey B. Brewster, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese.

The candidate was presented by the Rev. Kenneth Mackenzie. The Rev. J. A. Racioppi sang the litany, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. H. S. Whitehead.

Mr. Hay will continue in charge of Calvary Church, where he ministered as deacon.

The man who recognizes new duties above those he has been taught to observe, who sees, beyond the circle of conventional obligation, the dim forms of new claimants on his heart and service, is a moral innovator, an enlarger of human life. How many such have still to arise!—Cotter Morrison.

To each man is given a marble to carve for the wall;
A stone that is needed to heighten the beauty of all;
And only his soul has the magic to give it a grace;
And only his hands have the cunning to put it in place.
—Edwin Markham.

Alas! for thou must learn,
Thou guileless one! rough is the holy hand;
Runs not the Word of Truth through every land,
A sword to sever, and a fire to burn?

If blessed Paul had stay'd
In cot or learned shade,
With the priest's white attire,
And the Saints' tuneful choir,
Men had not gnash'd their teeth, nor risen to slay
But thou hadst been a heathen in thy day.

HOW LONG TO THE END---Dan. 12:6

Does the Chronological Prophecy in Daniel 12 point to the very year of our Lord's Return?

When the difference in the lengths of the four periods in this chapter (which were given as an answer to the above question) is regarded as occurring at their beginnings, instead of at their endings, they are found to have a common end, because they culminate in a single year, the present one.

Is not this the answer requested and the opening of God's long-closed time-lock, the unsealing promised to "the wise" in "the time of the end"?

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

The man who controls himself may hope to reform other men.

"A clouded face Strikes harder than an angry blow."

Guard well thy thoughts, for thoughts are heard in heaven.—G. Herbert.

We do not take up the Cross at all unless we take it up daily.

"This is a lost world to be saved, and not simply an ignorant world to be educated."—Capen.

"Our commission is not to bring the world to Christ, but Christ to the world.—A. J. Gordon.

Give what you have to some one; it may be better than you dare to think.—Longfellow.

"The kingdom of God is waiting for the hard-earned leisure of the business man."

"A jewel is a jewel still,
Though lying in the dust,
And sand is sand though up to heaven
'Tis by the tempest thrust."

It is more needful to be able to suffer long and be kind, than it is to preach with the tongue of an angel.—Ex.

Speakest thou for God? Speak well;
Nor slight the mission of the King;
Spare no eloquence to tell

The vital message which you bring.

The house of my soul is I confess, too narrow for Thee; do Thou enlarge it that Thou mayest enter it; it is ruinous, but do Thou repair it.—St. Augustine.

"Be what thou seemest; live thy creed;
Hold up to earth the torch divine;
Be what thou prayest to be made;
Let the great Master's steps be thine.

Tempests may blow upon the earth, and kingdoms may rise and fall, and wars may clash and desolate the earth; but there remaineth a rest upon which shall come no storm, which shall not be upset by revolution, or changed except from glory unto glory—H. W. Beecher.

"PRAY FOR ME"

The New Testament is no more a revelation of psychology than the Old Testament is a revelation of science. It is true, however, that the New Testament writers, every one of whom entered into the life of the world in a sense that none up to that time had ever entered, did derive from this experimental knowledge of life certain facts in regard to man's nature that had never been recorded in the teachings of any philosophy. The experience of the race has confirmed the accuracy of the knowledge gained. A single sentence from the prayer of St. Paul in his letter to the Thessalonians sums up the Pauline psychology. This sentence has been accepted as the basis of Christian theology, and it is hardly too much to say that upon its truth rests the validity of every reasoned argument for man's kinship to God: "I pray God that your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blamelessly at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Modern history may be said to commence in the year when men discovered that the sea was not a barrier, but an imperishable highway. Mankind began its conquest of the infinite at Pentecost. It was then that the new world of spirit was discovered. Not until this discovery could such words as St. Paul uses have been intelligible to any one. Popular language in the gospel and even from the lips of Christ divides man into two parts, visible and invisible, "body and soul." We can almost trace the efforts of St. Paul to appropriate the meaning of his experience. At first he departs from the old formula and speaks of "body and spirit," and finally arrives at the full and scientific expression of man's nature, "body, soul and spirit." Body constitutes the whole physical structure. It is the organ of all sense perceptions and is the seat of those instincts and appetites which are necessary for its growth and continued existence. The soul includes the intellect, the affections and the wills. The spirit includes those aptitudes by which we appropriate God. These aptitudes function in prayer, contemplation and praise which is the spiritual manifestation of the appreciation of deity.

The soul has as its instruments the organs of sense. With the results of the sense perceptions acquired, either by instinctive or directed impulses, the soul constructs its world of ideas and values. Through the complicated tissue of the brain are established preference tracks worn by the feet of hurrying thought and eager desires. The soul, that trinity of energies which are distinguished among themselves as will, affections and intelligence, has within itself an ordered precedence of dignity. The emblem of authority is worn by the will. It has power to direct desire and concentrate intelligence; but it is first only in the logical sense, for instincts are forever summoning desire, and all the senses are bringing offerings to the intelligence and demanding a name and place for their gifts.

The body may be said to exist for the nervous system which alone registers sensation. It is this system which constitutes the instrument with which the soul builds its world of conceptions. The soul cannot create, it can only build. If the unity of its trinity be preserved, the soul acquires a true judgment of values, and desires to possess these values, and the will translates this desire into action towards attainment.

If instinct be allowed to drive instead of point, habits are formed in the service of these instincts, and judgment of values become confused and disturbed, and the affections become attached to the false values so presented, and the will sets in motion the physical and mental energies that tend to the acquiring that which the judgment values and the affections crave. It is often said that there is nothing good but a good will, for it is the will that creates the action, but a will separated from an intelligence capable of judging values and affections that seek an object, is an unmeaning thing. The soul works with the body as its instrument. It is tied to the material, and strive as it may, it cannot build other than concepts of the material. Just as the soul has the body for its instrument, and builds therewith the soul-man, so the spirit has this soul-man as the instrument with which to work. In so far as the judgments of value be true, the affections directed towards worthy ends and the will working true, then the spirit has a perfect instrument. This is what St. Paul calls a glorified body—the tempered instrument for the spirit. Such a body is not bound by the laws of time and space. A spirit equipped with a good will, true judgment and right affections is equipped to share the life of God. Prayer is the binding of the spirit of man with God. When a man prays "God bless my son," this prayer includes the petition, "Make me a blessing to my son," or it is mockery. If this son be present the effort to share the best within the father's being, after acquiring that best by communion with God, is made through the medium of interpretative speech and touch. The spirit uses the soul with its ready-to-hand media of communication, voice and touch. If the son be absent, separated by space so that neither voice nor touch can reach, then the spirit is forced to use the soul alone as its medium.

If the intelligence be true, the affections clean, the will trained, then the spirit can enfold the absent one and be as truly the medium of divine blessing as if it were joined by voice and touch. That which stays the blessing is man's failure to keep his intelligence honest, his desires clean and his will trained. Just so far as he succeeds in cleansing his own soul, does the prayer become effectual.

TRUE GENEROSITY

By Bernard Gruenstein

THESE are generous impulses at some time or other in every human soul. There are sublime moments in our lives when unselfishness is at the peak. But, alas, only too often these are predicated on something other than that which we really have or really are or really can do. The doctor would perhaps describe them as psychopathic, wholly detached from the facts of our lives. Illusions of generosity are far from rare.

Who in a moment of make-believe munificence has not said to himself, "Ah, me, if I but had the wealth of a Rockefeller or a Henry Ford, what would I not give away to alleviate suffering, or prevent disease, or facilitate scientific research for the good of humanity, or found scholarships, or memorialize colleges and universities, or build hospitals and libraries, or perchance complete some majestic cathedral like that of St. John the Divine in New York?"

In such grandiose spells of liberality, how we would build public schools for America's immigrant children, like Julius Rosenwald has so nobly done for the pickaninnies of the Southland, if only we had the riches of Rosenwald! How we would rear a chain of humanitarian hospitals from coast to coast, modernly equipped and manned by famous doctors, if only we had the fortune of Henry Ford! How we would destroy both cancer and tuberculosis in a day, if only we had the resources of the Rockefeller Foundation! Aye, and how we would build greater Harvards and greater Yales for the deserving youth of the land, if only we had the wealth Andrew Carnegie piled up and gave away to escape the odium of dying rich.

And so we go on building these air-castles of philanthropy, all premised on the one thing we have not—money by the million. However much such vagaries do credit to the better side of our natures, still they are fatuous vagaries. The pity of it is we may go on living in such vacuous air pockets of the mind without doing one practical thing to make a poor fellow, who is all but down and out, hopeful and happy once more in the mournful struggle of life.

Consider the story of Peter, the fisherman. He was a rude, simple workingman eking out his miserable living in the early morning hours before an Oriental sunrise, spreading his home-made net to catch fish for the Galilean market. One day he heard from the lips of his own brother, Andrew, the inspiring story of the Messiah, Who had no place where to lay His head, though He had come to restore the spiritual glories of ancient Israel. Peter impetuously laid down his net at the bidding of Jesus to become a fisher of men. Once he wavered—in the shadow of the tragic cross. But he survived the sifting of his soul and steadied himself—after dark Golgotha, after that first bright Easter morning with the angels around the empty tomb, after that glorious ascension of Him Who was Peter's blessed Lord.

In the story from the third chapter of the Book of the Acts of the Apostles, we discover this same Peter still performing the pious duties of a Jew (a ben-Torah or son of the law), some years after his conversion to Christianity. Evidently Peter's Christianity did not interfere with his Judaism. Though an original Christian, he was still a Jew. We find him going into Solomon's temple to pray about 9 o'clock in the morning. Before going into the temple with John, he chances to see the familiar spectacle of a cripple at one of the gates of the royal shrine, a gate described in some detail by Josephus, as excelling the other gates in size and splendor. Corinthian brass, esteemed by the ancients as more beautiful than gold, covered the massive, folding doors, the lintel and the huge side-posts. In all, the gate presented so beautiful an appearance to worshipper and tourist alike that the very name of Beautiful is fastened to it in sacred history.

Come we now to the beautiful act of Peter at the gate called Beautiful, just before he and John go in to wrap themselves in prayer shawls and pray the old prayers of his fathers in that Jewish temple on the heights of Jerusalem. That act is in keeping with the noble architecture of the gate, for it is as beautiful a piece of humanity as one might wish to read anywhere in or out of the sacred Scriptures. What a preparation for his prayers—a beautiful act of mercy. May it not be often that our own prayers seem so empty simply because no deed of mercy has preceded them. How cold prayers must be when not warmed up with the spirit of practical charity.

In the story about Peter at the Gate Beautiful, a poor, crippled and desolate human being is made happy under touching circumstances. Like crippled men have always done from time immemorial, this particular and nameless cripple looks up to Peter with that wistful look of the friendless and helpless beggar handicapped permanently by his disabilities. Expecting a coin from Peter, the cripple begs with the gesture of an outstretched hand, but Peter fastens his eyes upon him, profoundly moved by the pitiful spectacle.

Poor cripple! Poor Peter! One thinks he needs alms: the other knows he hasn't got it. What an embarrassing moment that would have been to us had we been there in Peter's sandals by the Gate Beautiful. Peter has no money. For the life of me I cannot understand why he wanted to go into that magnificent cathedral of the Hebrew faith without a shekel in his pocket, without a cent to his name, when everything about the place suggested money. The beggar was there for money. The gate where the beggar sat represented in itself a princely fortune. The great temple was a monument to silver and gold. Money poured like water at every service. Money-changers were there to change the coin of the Roman realm to the sacred money of the temple. We can recall how shocked our Lord was when He saw the heartlessness of these temple grafters. Even the poorest of the poor must buy and bring a pigeon for the sacrifice. Yet Peter went there without silver or gold. How strange, you think. But, ah, he had something richer than these tinsel symbols of earthly possessions. He had what money could never buy nor do. He had spiritual resources, not temporal.

The crippled man expected money, but Peter, we are told, "fastening his eyes upon him with John, said, Look on us, and he (the cripple) gave heed to them, expecting to receive something of them. Then Peter said, Silver and gold have I none, but such as I have give I thee."

You know the rest of the apostolic story, how Peter took that miserable cripple by the hand and bade him rise and walk in the omnipotent name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth. Literally, Peter gave the man such a lift as made him walk and work for the rest of his life, praising God. Peter had no silver or gold to give; gave the cripple just what he had, but that was enough to turn the miracle.

I love to picture Peter in my mind's eye through the little intimate personal touches that run through this story like a golden thread. Peter had no money. We might add that he had no college education. He had no social position. He had no political pull. He had mighty little of what we today think so essential to success in life, but, oh, Peter had a great faith. He had a great love. He had a great sympathy. He had a great heart, a great spirit, a great courage. He had great earnestness of nature, great simplicity of soul, a great desire to do what he could to make the other fellow happy and useful. He had a connection with the power of God, and by prayer he could turn on the switch, so to speak, and, behold, a cripple could walk and work.

Such were his spiritual resources. With them he could move mountains and stir the seas. With them he could bring light and love into desolate hearts. With them he could demonstrate the power of God the Father, show his co-religionists of the Jewish faith the way, the truth and the life of God the Son, and reveal the guidance and the workings of God the Holy Ghost. Peter was as practical as he was liberal with the use of this strange, miraculous force that straightened palsied limbs and hands, that gave sight to the blind, hearing to the deaf and riches of happiness to the poorest and most hopeless. There was no air-castle building programs with Peter: no theorizing about the cause and cure of poverty and disease. To him a cripple was a human being to be helped: not a case to be studied and classified by some welfare agency along the most scientific and efficient lines of the times.

I love to think of Peter as not sighing away his life in useless lamentations that he was not a millionaire like Abraham, a cattle king like Jacob, a powerful politician like Joseph, a born leader like Moses, a commanding general like Joshua, a dynastic founder like David, an imperial personage like Solomon, a wise premier like Daniel, a soul-stirring preacher like Amos, or a great national reformer like Jeremiah. He was not somebody else. He was himself just plain, poor Peter: simple and vacillating Peter; praying and believing Peter; loving and lovable Peter: stern and sanguine, fine and fearful, frail yet forceful, unlettered, unlearned, yet so intensely practical, full of the Holy Ghost and common sense. Such is Peter. The years cannot dim his figure. Time will never obliterate his memory.

When Peter saw the crippled man at the Gate Beautiful he believed the best thing he could do for him was to put him back on his feet. He didn't have a fortune, but he had a faith. He didn't have gold, but he had God. He didn't have silver, but he had sympathy. He didn't have learning, but he had love. He didn't have position, but he had the power of prayer. He didn't have science, but he had salvation. He didn't have education, but he had efficiency. He did the thing that should have been done, at the right time and the right place, giving what he had, doing what he could, lifting how he was able, inspiring the crippled man with something of his own sublime courage and conviction.

Had Peter been like some of us, he would have pitied that poor cripple and let it go at that. Or he would have telephoned some social agency to investigate the case, or maybe roundly scolded the world for permitting poverty and disease and crime to disgrace the pages of civilization. But Peter, thank God, was not like some of us. He did what he could and put that cripple back on his feet, restoring him to the ranks of useful men.

How sorry we are for the cripples of society, the cripples of industry, the cripples of public service, the cripples of education, but we go on day after day minding our own business or dreaming perchance of what we would do for them if we had this or that, which unfortunately is not ours to control or bestow. Maybe I hear you say you would heal the sick and raise the cripples if you had the miraculous power of Peter. There it is again—sighing for what you have not. Do we think to give what we really have of genuine sympathy, of practical help in a common sense way, of our pious prayers, of effective optimism, of faith, of hope, of charity? We may not be able to heal the sick like Peter did, but we can visit the sick, and Jesus said that visiting the sick was visiting Him. Oh, it's the doing what we can that will bring sunshine into this old world of ours. We will never get anywhere wishing we had this or that. No sad heart will be consoled that way. No friendless soul will be cheered that way. No needy child of God will be supplied that way. If we have no silver and no gold, we can give what we have, we can be what we are, we can do what we can, we can love, we can pray, we can sympathize, we can work, we can grasp the friendless hand. We can do all these things even if we haven't a cent to our name.

I am nearing the end. The cripple at the Gate Beautiful is a picture of the need around us at all times, if we have but the eyes of faith and the heart of sympathy that Peter had. Think of the babies in every community that need fresh milk and cannot get it because of poverty. Think of the neglected boys and girls that need the friendly hand of some big brother or some big sister. Think of the students at our universities that need help by way of work we may offer them, or the encouraging letters we can write them, if we have nothing of money to give them. Think of the sick who need our cheery presence at their bedside, perhaps a few flowers to brighten up the dingy ward where they lie. Think of the widows who need comfort, the orphans who need love, the outcasts who need friendship, the convicts who need friendliness, the down and out who need the uplifting hand. Think of all the pain and the sorrow, of all the sin and the shame, of all the discouragement and the desolation, of all the despair and the hopelessness in the world, and then think of ourselves with our health and our strength, with our faith and our courage, with our brains and our ordinary human affection, with our religion and our charity. Don't tell me there is no opportunity to practice what we preach, to do the things there are for us to do, to say the right word at the right time, to hear the hard luck story and be moved to compassion by what we hear. Across the threshold of every church and cathedral, of every synagogue and temple, of every mosque and shrine, lies a whole world of human need. Shall we go in to pray and then come out with blind souls and hard hearts and deaf ears and palsied hands while the cripple sits or stands at the Ugly Gate of Human Need.

Let us take stock of our charities, take an inventory of our benevolences. We who have silver and gold, are we giving of that where it will do the most good, reach the direst need in the shortest time, or are we giving recklessly, thoughtlessly, even absurdly? How about those of us who have neither silver nor gold; are we giving what we have, as Peter gave that nameless cripple at the Gate Beautiful? Giving is an art, one of the finest arts we know anything about. It is mercy in action and mercy is twice blessed, blessing him who gives as well as him who takes, as Shakespeare has so nobly put it in "The Merchant of Venice."

I do not plead for greater generosity in purse so much as I plead for more giving of ourselves, of love, our sympathy, our comfort, our personal interest and visitation. Even if we have no money we can give of our courage to those afraid, of our strength to those enfeebled, of our youth to those aged, of our health to those diseased, of our prayers to those downfallen. I plead for a keener recognition of human need, a diviner sympathy for human distress, a truer friendliness for human loneliness, a tenderer compassion for human frailty, a broader toleration for human infirmity. I plead for the kind of faith that Peter had, the kind of charity that Peter dispensed, though he had neither silver nor gold, the kind of practical benevolence that Peter bestowed. Thus shall we brighten the darker corners of life. Thus shall we put more sweetness into life, more kindness into the world. Thus shall we do our Christian part, even as we pray, towards the coming of that everlasting Kingdom of God on this terra-queous globe and hasten the coming of Christ the King. Thus can we truly say as Peter said, "Silver and gold have I none, but such as I have I give thee."

REAPERS FOR THE HARVEST

By the Reverend W. S. Claiborne

A STUDY of statistics concerning the Church is a most depressing thing. To be sure, according to the report of 1923, we had one hundred and six ordinations to the priesthood, an increase of thirty-seven over 1922. A hundred and six new clergy seems to be quite a group, until we compare this with the number of clergy in the United States today, and note the small percentage. Then make allowance for those who have passed away, or have been retired from active duty. Then consider the enormous amount of new work that presents itself each year. We are, in view of these facts, standing still, if not going back. In 1923 the number of candidates for Holy Orders was only fourteen more than 1922, and the increase in postulants only forty-six over the previous year. This is not the showing of a live organization.

There is much talk about lowering the standard of the clergy. An eminent ecclesiastic recently remarked that "that's impossible!" Our seminaries and clergy are being attacked, and we are terribly afraid of unknown things happening if we hasten a little in doing the work of the Master. There seems to be some difficulty in interesting young men in the ministry. Various reasons have been given for this, such as salary, lack of a real man's work, and lack of religious feeling in the young men.

To take up the first "reason" last—the trouble with the young men is not lack of religious feeling, but sheer ignorance. Thousands of young men—tens of thousands—are entirely uninstructed in even the rudiments of any belief, Catholic, Protestant or Jewish. Yet most of these men have a rather pathetic curiosity and longing, and many of them would, taught and enlightened, provide substantial material for the ministry. The term "young man" in this connection includes thousands of lads who ought to be confirmed—boys from twelve to eighteen. The general education of the American citizen is good, and his opportunities to earn a living are better than ever before. Life is made soft for millions—yet what profiteth it a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul? Who is going to bring these untaught men into the Church? We haven't enough clergy to take care of well-organized work, much less enough to go into the extremely difficult and delicate task of drawing toward the light those who know it not at all.

The matter of salary never interests a man who has a real call to serve. Service comes first. Then, there is the objection that the Church does not offer a man a man's job. Of course, well-organized work in a well-to-do city parish, with its social life and formalities, its apparent ease and luxury, is not going to appeal to any except the dilettante at one extreme, and the frail but conscientious scholar at the other. But there are thousands of communities where only a real man—a man who knows the worst as well as the best of the world—can do anything at all. In these communities there are obstacles to overcome, building, spiritual and material, to instigate, foster and complete. There is so much to be done that a man can spend his lifetime, and do all in his power, and leave his successor just as much to do.

Rightly presented, this work will draw men to the service of Christ, exactly as the call to arms in 1917 brought out the flower of our manhood. They will answer, in the same spirit, and for much the same reason—to fight for what is right, and to make the world better.

That all this is not being done is no fault of the theological seminaries, or any other institutions having to do with the education of men for the ministry. They can only take those who come to them, train them, and examine them as to the amount of learning absorbed. They can, and do, unmercifully flunk those who don't come up to standard. This is as it should be.

The canons provide that no man may be ordained until he has been examined by the bishops and examining chaplains, no matter from what institution he graduates. This puts it squarely up to the bishops and Examining Board.

This is as it ought to be.

But a man may go to a seminary and fail, and in six months be ordained. With this loophole (or proper privilege, as we may choose to regard it) given the bishops and examining chaplains who are privileged to decide a man fit, even though he has failed in his seminary examinations, how can we blame the seminaries for the condition of the ministry?

The scarcity of able clergy is not due to a lack of men who want to enter the ministry, but to a lack of religious leadership. No interest is ever aroused without it, nor any improvement accomplished without sincere and constant work, and if we expect to get forward, and do even a little portion of that which needs to be done, we must see that leadership is developed. Conferences, which should be consultation as to work to be done, on the basis of successful work already accomplished, turn too often into conventions of pessimists. Banking and religion are two different things. They don't mix. They never did mix. They never will mix. Business leads us inevitably into war—the Church into peace. It is the place of business to inquire what the Church wants done, and then, to the best of its ability, to help. It is not the place of business to dictate the spiritual policy of the leaders of the faith. As a matter of fact, this cannot be done; efforts in that direction result in the loss of soul. There is a daring and courage far above that of the world. This courage, called moral and spiritual, should lead. It need not even ask "business" what is best to be done. All it need say is, "Follow me!" This spirit has been noticeably lacking of late, for "organization" has become a fetch, and the individual who feels the urge to do something has his enthusiasm crushed by advice to "organize," plan a "campaign," and so forth. The real leader should be supported by "business methods," etc., but not dictated to by the rank and file. This applies to every field of life, including finance.

This idea of "doing things in a big way" is particularly repugnant to the people in country districts, where individual worth is still more thought of than "organization." High-sounding phrases, show, and flourish, and especially patronage, are looked on with well-justified suspicion. The parson's everyday actions are watched with great interest. People count the baptisms, confirmations, marriages, and check up on the progress of the redeemed in the country; in short, they measure a man solely by his works, and that is why the ministry is a real man's work. Choose such men as our Lord selected, and it is safe to say that the evils that are undermining our country would be half gone in fifty years. Neglect to do this, and they will increase to such an extent that historians a hundred years hence will class America with ancient Rome, dead from its own inward rottenness.

There is no such thing as rest in the service of our Lord. People are born every day, and the world goes on. The only way to do is to keep up with the population, and with the increasing material progress of the world—and to keep ahead of both. Material prosperity is of no value whatever without spiritual leadership—Germany recently demonstrated that, when she considered government to be God, and set out to take all the world for her own. Growth is not a matter of organization, but a matter of the highest development of which each individual is capable. Machinery can be handled in the mass—but each human being is an individual problem, subject to the basic laws of God, but really subject to nothing else, for all else changes. Were it not so, there would be no progress of any kind.

Getting Up Momentum

If the rector might impress upon every one some single thought concerning our practical life together, it would be the thought that the whole-time servants of the parish welfare are really here to fulfil directions from the parish. Even the rector is not technically called to the formulation of policies. What he finds growing upon him daily is the lay character of the true Church. We do not want to professionalize the church, allowing the special servants to feel the church is theirs or that they are the essential church. Individual initiative on the part of the layman and laywoman is ex officio due from them as such. As has frequently been said to you, "The parish is the parishioners; the Church is the Church people." Just as a chain is no stronger than its weakest link, no parish is stronger than its average lay member. Even if the minister is the coach of a team, remember it is the team, not the coach, which does the actual playing. Corporate Christianity cannot be of exploited lay membership. The clergy are made for the lay membership; not the lay membership for the clergy.

The faith of the people is in the long run the criterion of belief. Theologians and dogmatists may delve into esoteric, abstruse questions, but the faith of the folk is really the determinant, and usually this ignores the hair-splitting of the abstract professionals and with blunt common sense creates a sound body of actual belief which is the mind of the Church.

The work of the Church is not merely that work so obviously to be labelled as such. It is not only services and religious education and organizational activities. It is that, but also it is much more. Everything a Christian does every day because of his working creed is a part of the work of the Church. The affectionate undertakings of responsibility, the unselfish investment of time, money or strength in good causes, the pain-bringing relationships of personal redemptiveness toward the needy or erring or sad, the heart-outreaching of prayer coupled with action to make good a bit more powerful within the range of one's simple, unostentatious influence—all this is the work of the Church, in most vital truth. The unofficial Christian deeds and emotions and resolutions of all the Christians working in a unity which is none the less real because the team mates are oftenest unknown and out of sight, all add up into the true work of the Church! So largely unofficial and lay! No matter how fine the organization's projects may be of definite projects done under the name of the group, the preponderant mass of Church work is Christian living! The Kingdom of Heaven is as the leaven of this widespread, permeative way of life, for the sake of life more abundant in others—"Christianity is Christ," surely enough; but Christianity is also Christhood made everyman's in Christ's name and strength. His gift is a work to do and a life to live and to give, following Him. His secret is an art of living which imparts God! Just as the clergyman or other specialist may not and does not desire to become the Church, so Christ does not desire to be the only Christ. He waits to be "the first born among many brethren." The prerogatives of the average Christian are straight from Him. There's no dodging the responsibility and blessing of it; passive beneficiaries are not in the plan of the Church. The Church must insist on the long pull and the strong pull and the pull all together. The layman or laywoman who does not recognize the duty of this team play of Christhood simply does not belong to the Church, no matter how intimately associated with churches. The yoke-fellows, wearing their half of that double yoke of which Christ wears His half, have come into the only membership God can recognize as valid.

Is it a dream impossible of realization that Christians should thus recognize their calling to the priesthood of all believers?—P. E. Osgood, in St. Mark's Outlook.

Ramambasoa

Ramambasoa is a queer name and one strangely unfamiliar. The name belongs to a native who lives in the far-away island of Madagascar. His people are known by the name of Malagasy. There is a Sunday-School Union on the Island of Madagascar and Ramambasoa is a bit of the fruit, matured and ripened, as the result of the teaching in a Protestant Mission Sunday School.

Ramambasoa was sent by the Inter-Missionary Sunday-School Union of Madagascar, to the West Hill Training School for Sunday-School workers, located near Birmingham, England, in order that he might study modern Sunday-School methods and take back the best of them to his own people. He is now the Sunday-School specialist for Madagascar. The situation in that far-away land is best revealed from his own pen which runs, as follows:

"When the first missionaries came to the island, it was verily the breaking of the day after a dark night. The ways of the sorcerer, polygamy, idol worship, adultery, all practiced openly throughout the country, have now been checked and new ideas and aspirations formed in the dominant races who have received Christian teaching.

The good results seen among the children and rising generation, since the advent of the Gospel, is a marked feature in the life of the Malagasy.

In the far off days when the Malagasy Queen left her capital city of Tananarive for a journey and when she returned, the canons were fired and the people knew through the sound of the cannon, honor was being given to the Queen—now the new day has come. The Christian Malagasy, children and adults, are giving glory to the King of Kings and Lord of Lords in their life and conduct and their praises to the Saviour, Jesus Christ are heard through many parts of the Island. To Him be the honor and glory for all time."—World Wide Sunday School News.

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

The Rev. R. Cary Montague, Editor.

IS THE CHURCH HELPING OR HINDERING?

It is almost universally admitted that the clergy of the country, as a rule, represent a good type of citizenship. Of course there are the exceptions, occasionally very sad exceptions, who commit fearful crimes, but, generally speaking, the family of a minister is exceptionally fortunate both in environment and heredity.

According to an investigator out of the first fifty-one names in the Hall of Fame, ten of them are those whose fathers were ministers. The same authority asserts that in "Who's Who" one out of every twelve of all the persons therein is found to be a minister's child.

These facts are, of course, as true of the clergy of other churches as of our own. In the presidential campaign of 1916 both of the candidates (Woodrow Wilson and Charles E. Hughes) were sons of preachers, Mr. Wilson's father being a Presbyterian clergyman, and Mr. Hughes' a Baptist.

All this goes to show that it would be a good thing for clergymen to bring up large families. Yet the economic situation in the Church is such as to discourage this very thing. The salaries of our clergy are not such as to "make both ends meet" in the average parish.

Last year the writer wrote the Bishop in behalf of a clerical friend who had five children, and was feeling the impossibility of feeding and clothing them on the salary he was then receiving. The Bishop replied that he regretted to say that he had nothing to offer that would support a man with five children.

At this moment we know a man who had to leave a large parish where he was doing a fine work, because the salary simply would not support his family of three children, and we know of another similar case where a move is inevitable for the support of a family of this size.

Of course it is much easier to call attention to these conditions, and to point out the difficulties, than it is to solve the problem, and it is still more difficult to put into operation solutions that might seem possible.

However, at the present time it is certainly true that the condition in the Church is such as to discourage the production of more than one or two children in the rectories, and surely there ought to be some way in which such a situation can be improved, not only for the sake of the Church, but for the good of the country, for one of its biggest problems today is what is sometimes called the "differential birth rate," or the fact that the inferior types of citizens are reproducing very much more rapidly than are our better classes.

In a group of clergy not long ago one of them remarked in reference to the growth of the Church: "Of course we all know that we have to depend on proselyting to keep up our numbers. No Episcopal congregation reproduces itself."

What, then, shall we do about it?

Two plans offer themselves. The first is so to consolidate small parishes that two or three or even four churches can offer a clergyman a salary which will enable him to support a family of four or five children, at least in decency.

This plan is much more feasible today than it ever has been by reason of good roads and automobile transportation. A man today can serve four churches in a radius of forty miles far more efficiently than he could two churches within six or seven miles of each other ten or twenty years ago.

Another thing that should be done with such churches as receive help from the Diocese is to recognize the fact that there is a difference between a "married man" and a married man with five children.

Nearly all our dioceses have a minimum salary for single men and married men. But there is no distinction between the married men. The salary is the same for the man who has no one to look out for but himself and wife, and for one who has a wife and five children, although in such a case the family budget is far larger than the difference between a single man and a man and his wife.

If the Church would recognize this situation, and make an allowance of $100 or $150 per year for each child, it would be doing something to encourage an increase in population of the most valuable type, to the country at large, instead of deliberately discouraging this increase, as is the case at present.

Another thing that is worth considering in this connection is a system of promotion for the clergy. As it is at present, if a young man, say just out of the seminary, goes to a small mission field, no matter how well he may work, and how faithful he may be, the chances are that his only hope of getting a call to a larger field, with a better salary, will be through such an opportunity coming to him from another Diocese.

So long as he is willing to stay where he is first put and to work there, the powers that be will leave him there.

It is all very well for people to talk in a superior way about a clergyman not considering money, but it might as well be recognized that a clergyman's children wear out as many pairs of shoes in a year as do other children, and that a minister's wife enjoys a new hat now and then as much as do other ladies in the same station of life, or in every station of life for that matter.

No man ever goes into the ministry to make money, but a clergyman has as much right to a decent living as has any one else, and no man can do his best work when he is continually harrassed by the thought of how he will meet his month's grocery bill.

Shall the Church continue to conduct its affairs in such a way as to limit population of the best type?

BREAD UPON THE WATER.

"The Diocesan Record (Atlanta) has this to say about Mr. Thomas' work at the prison: 'During the summer Mr. A. H. Thomas, our faithful representative, has taught his growing Bible class with good results and taken a strong part in the religious life both within the walls and at the honor farm. We just couldn't do this work without Mr. Thomas; and the Diocese owes him a debt of gratitude for his untiring labor which can never be expressed in mere words of thanks.'"

We take the foregoing item from the news of the Diocese of Atlanta because it is seldom that this sort of work receives much public recognition.

It is a real problem to decide how much is accomplished through religious work in prisons.

Occasionally, however, one gets quite unexpected returns, that encourage the belief that there are greater results than are evident on the surface.

One day the writer was stopped by a colored man, who said: "You don't know me. But I want to tell you that I heard you preach a sermon three years ago that I have been trying to live by ever since, and I have been getting on fine!"

Sermons that are remembered and lived by for three years are somewhat unusual, so we inquired where it was that our friend had heard that sermon.

The reply was startlingly straightforward, for he said without hesitation: "It was in the State penitentiary I heard you preach that sermon, and I made up my mind I was going to live by it. I have been out now for two years, and have been getting on all right."

To an inquiry as to the cause of his stay at that State institution, he said, "I was in there for bigamy," and then he added with an evident note of pride in his voice, "I had three wives in this town at one time."

We added to the memory of the three-year-old sermon a word of caution against getting mixed up with the ladies to that extent in the future, and parted with the hope that this attentive listener would continue to "get along fine." One never knows how far words spoken in behalf of the Master in such places go, but we do know that He gave us a solemn warning not to neglect this class of God's children.

A STATEMENT FROM THE NATIONAL COUNCIL

The Father's business demands both vision and valor. It also demands commonsense.

Economies in administration are necessary and must be vigorously enforced, but they must not impair efficiency. If they do, they are not economies, but waste.

Expansion of our work must go on if the Church is to live, but the measure of our receipts must be the measure of our expansion. Cords can be lengthened only as stakes are strengthened. The Father's business must be solvent. Its credit must be first class. (Imagination is necessary, but the winged flights of imagination must be balanced and guided by sound judgment.)

The National Council has scrutinized the budget of every department of the Church's work, and has pared the items of administrative expense down to the quick; every requisition for funds from every field has been examined and re-examined before it has been admitted. At the meeting of the last Council drastic reductions in the budget netted a saving of $36,000. This is in addition to savings of more than $100,000 made during the past year. We are now sailing as close to the wind as safety permits. No further economies on the budget can be recommended.

The next step is clear. We must increase our receipts or offer a retreat. If we go forward it must be on a guarantee of the present, not on a guess at the future. The Church of 1925 must make possible the Program of 1925.

The past is already helping the present. Legacies and gifts from people now dead have created a reserve fund of $708,000, from which we may borrow to meet emergencies. It has all been borrowed. The National Council, when it took up its work on January 1, 1920, inherited from the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society a deficit of $478,652.48. This was the result of the operations of several years in which income was less than expenditures which had suddenly risen as a result of war conditions. To this deficit was added the original expense of promoting the Nation-Wide Campaign amounting to $341,583.48, making a total deficit of $920,246.23. During the past four years that deficit has been reduced only $13,134.14.

The Church of the present is not pulling its own load. Even with the legacies from the past it is barely holding its own.

It must be clear to all, therefore, that a vigorous, determined effort must be made in 1925.

First, to raise every cent of the budget, which is $4,400,000. This will enable us to pay back a large part of the reserve deposit accounts.

Second, to change the priorities (which represent the work we ought to do if we had the money) from numbered items in a printed program into realized advances for the Kingdom of God.

Church people have the money. The total giving of our people for Church objects of every sort shows a great yearly increase. But the general work of the Church is not receiving one-tenth of that increase.

The Parishes Have Benefited from the Nation-Wide Campaign.

Within two years after it began the total annual salaries paid to clergy had increased more than $2,400,000. This increase alone is nearly as much as the total amount of offerings received last year by the National Council.

The Dioceses Have Benefited from the Nation-Wide Campaign.

The total combined income of dioceses for their own missionary work has leaped from $700,000 in 1918 to over $2,500,000. For the first time in the history of the Church the combined income from offerings for Diocesan missions is greater than the total offerings for general missions. Add together the increase in clergy salaries and the increase in income for the Diocesan missions, and the result is four times the increase in offerings for the national and international work of the church.

Are we losing our perspective? Are we in danger of sacrificing the whole to the parts? Are we threatened again with the peril of parochialism and diocesanism? Are we unthinkingly committing ourselves to a policy that will in the long run defeat the one aim of the Church to "go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature?" Is the command of the Master to be "His witnesses in Jerusalem and Judea and Samaria and to the uttermost parts of the earth" losing its power in our Church program?

We do not believe it. We have consulted with the successors of the Apostles, the Bishops of the Church of God in their several jurisdictions. They have with one accord called us to go forward. They have assured us of their ardent leadership in realizing the Church's Program for 1925. The women of the Church, through the Woman's Auxiliary, have pledged themselves to even greater sacrificial labors for the Church's Program. We now call upon all the clergy and all the laity in their several dioceses and missionary jurisdictions and under the leadership of the Bishops to join with us in making the final year of the triennium, the year 1925, one worthy of the great traditions of our Church. Sixteen hundred years ago the Council of Nicea was held. The best way to celebrate that event is to demonstrate the vitality of our faith by the abundance of our works.

TEAM WORK.

Mr. Editor:

Walter Camp, the athletic authority, says that no man under forty should play golf. This, because it is an individual game. Under forty a man should develop his co-operative faculties, Mr. Camp says, by learning team work in games like baseball and football, in which the coach very seldom praises, but ever stands over the candidate repeating, "Do it faster, do it harder" (and worse). Thus the youth learns to work with others, subordinating self. In no other way can the big jobs be done in business, politics or Church.

Mr. Camp gives us here a striking parable of Church life. Fifteen years ago all parishes and dioceses were frankly individualistic. They were "golf players." And they thought—we all thought—we were pretty good. We took up a collection or two annually for missions, and exclaimed with pride, "We gave $100!" Came the Nation-Wide Campaign, followed by the Church's Program. The coaches stood over us repeating, "Faster, harder." They called for team-work. They pointed to big definite tasks, and told us in detail how to go at them. They are still doing it. They call for group meetings, four-minute speakers, literature delivered by hand, and all the rest. For a while it was a novelty. But the cry of "Faster, harder" ("larger quotas") grew wearisome. And what was the reaction? How are the players on our teams reacting today? All over the Church rectors are "talking back to the coaches." "Who are you," they cry, "who presume to teach us the game? We know how to play it. We can manage our parishes in our own way." All over the Church vestrymen are saying, "These people of the Council can't tell us. We know what our people can do. We won't take orders from any one. We refuse to accept quotas suggested." And the official coaches are staggered! Imagine Walter Johnson talking back to Stanley Harris, manager of the Washington nine, like that! Is it not the truth that we are perhaps good "golf players," but have everything to learn about team work. Is it not also true that our task is too big to be accomplished in any other way than by honest to goodness team work? Hear an inspired "coach." "Stand fast in one spirit, with one mind striving together." "Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others" (Phil. 1:27; 2:4).

RUSSIAN CHILDREN AT THE CHURCH OF THE HOLY TRINITY, PARIS.

Mr Editor:

I enclose a photograph of thirty-eight little Russians taken in our deanery garden the day before they began their new year's schooling at Fontainebleau, Melun and other school centres near Paris.

Some months ago our Junior Guild, composed of sixty young American women and girls, issued an appeal through the Church papers at home for these children of the exiled Russians of France. The plan followed closely that of the fatherless children of France during the war, viz., a gift by a generous-hearted person or group of $125, to cover the proper schooling, board and clothing of a child for one year.

This appeal, together with the Guild's own Amateur Dramatics Benefit, has assured the care of forty-five children, all selected by the Guild's exceptionally efficient and devoted Russian directress (Madame de Enden) from hard-working families, who, dispossessed of all they had by the Bolsheviks, are bravely beginning their new life in a strange land. (We wish we had funds for twice as many more.)

Madame de Enden, herself seated on the right of Mrs. Beekman, the Guild's president, with Miss Evans, the chairman of the Guild's Russian Committee, on her left, is the first cousin of Dr. Botken, physician to the Czar and his family, who was killed while imprisoned with them.

The Guild, through her, will be in constant touch with all the children. Regular religious instruction has and will be given them by one of the clergy of the Russian Orthodox Church, and during holiday times by a Russian priest in Holy Trinity's Parish House. This is in marked contrast to assistance given here by the Roman Catholic Church, which immediately seeks to compel these Russian children to leave the Church of their parents.

Cards with photographs and full data have been sent to those who have responded to this appeal, but the Junior Guild wishes to express through the Southern Churchman its public thanks to all who have helped and to the Southern Churchman itself for the generous use of its columns.

ANSWERED PRAYER.

Mr. Editor:

A group of two or three pupils in the Woman's Bible Class of St. James' Church, Richmond, Va., decided to hold together this summer, and by prayer and works would have something to report to the others in way of results when the others returned to the city.

One evening while visiting one of this group she said she had a neighbor who was ill with cancer, and she was praying for her, and asked us to help. This mother was praying for the return of her wayward son before her death. No one knew where he was, so we prayed and prayed, on Friday we went to 11 o'clock Communion, asked prayers, also on Sundays, that her request would be granted (if it was His will). The patient became weaker and weaker, until the physician said she could live but a few days. The rector came and advised her to think about her own soul, and the world to which she was going, but she still prayed on to be spared until her boy would "come home." When we were almost ready to give up praying, one day her boy came in, saying he felt as if he just had to come back. Oh! such joy to know that God had allowed her boy not only to return to her, but was doing well and she could die happy. "The prayers of His children avail much, if we do as He commands us to do." Pray without ceasing.

FOR SOCIAL SERVICE WORKERS.

Mr. Editor:

Will you kindly give space in your paper to the following notice?

The Twentieth Sunday after Trinity, November 2, is the Sunday on which the parishes are asked to give consideration to the subject of social service. Probably few people realize the very large number of the communicants of the Episcopal Church who are social workers in secular organizations. This Sunday has been useful in giving these social workers a recognition from the Church. Many of them are doing a distinctively religious work in their secular activities, and they need the consideration of the Church. In the last two years it has been found particularly useful to ask the social workers who are members of the parish to make a Corporate Communion, and in many places it has been arranged to serve breakfast afterwards. In this way in parishes throughout this whole country groups of social workers have been brought together and have appreciated their association as communicants of the Church. It has also made it possible for the rector to come in personal contact with those who are doing social work. In a number of our cities organizations of social workers have grown out of this Corporate Communion. In Chicago they have two quiet days a year and meet occasionally at a supper, when they discuss some subject related to social service and the Church.

The Sunday fits in with the program looking toward the Every-Member Canvass. It is hoped that the rectors in their sermons will give attention to the subject of social service.

The President of the Council has put forth the following Collect, which it is hoped will be used at the celebration of the Holy Communion on that day:

PRAYER FOR SOCIAL SERVICE WORKERS

For Twentieth Sunday after Trinity.

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, Who has taught us by Thy dear Son to love Thee and to love our neighbor as ourselves, send Thy blessing, we beseech Thee, upon all those who are giving themselves to the service of their fellowmen, and sustain them in all their work—striving with the consciousness of Thy Presence and approval—until at last by Thy mighty power, over this troubled world, the dawn breaks and the shadows forever flee away. Through Jesus Christ our Lord, to Whom with Thee and the Holy Ghost be all honor and glory, world without end. Amen.

The Great Commission

SCHOOL OF METHODS, EASTERN OREGON.

Charlotte L. Brown.

"We are here to do the things others tell us can't be done," is one of the slogans of Eastern Oregon.

You would agree that "others," if not prevaricators, must at least be mistaken, in that it is going to be done, if you had been at the School of Methods, held under the leadership of Bishop Remington at the Ascension School Camp, Cove, Oregon, on September 25 to 28.

Eastern Oregon is truly a wonderful demonstration of God's marvelous handiwork, and Ascension School Camp is situated in one of the loveliest corners of her domain, nestled in the little valley of Cove at the foot of the Cornucopia range of mountains.

One could not but wonder if some of the trees along the Old Oregon Trail—now one of the finest roads in the country—did not feel that history was repeating itself in pioneer grit, when they saw Bishop Remington's car go by up the zig-zag trail over the Blue Mountains on its way from Pendleton to attend the Conference.

A "covered wagon," yes, and within it, the Bishop, his wife, his secretary, and the latest missionary in the Eastern Oregon field, and the Bishop's dog, Duffey—said human and animal freight so packed in with tent rolls, bedding, suit cases, cooking utensils, stereopticon and many other necessities of a summer camp, too numerous to mention, that it was hard to tell where dog began and bedding roll ended. That was a beautiful ride, and one felt it was a rare privilege to be called to the Master's service in such a majestic part of His world.

And, if the trees along the road felt the pioneer days had returned, what must the trees around Ascension School Camp have felt, when they saw the Bishop and his clergy, khaki clad, working like beavers putting up tent platforms, tents and acting as "jacks-of-all-trades"?

It was the splendid spirit prevailing throughout the camp, every one willing to do his or her part in making it one happy family, and all bent on finding out the work to be done and the best way to carry on that work, that made the conference such a success, help and inspiration to all.

There were present at the School Bishop Remington, eight of his nine clergy and a goodly number of laity.

And what a challenge to every member of the group assembled was the wonderful opportunity that the Task of the Church in this great field presented to them, as the Program for the coming year was unfolded by the Bishop and the Executive Council and the different departments of the Council.

And last, but far from least, as it was the outstanding feature of the School, was the inspiring demonstration by the Rev. Middleton S. Barnwell of how "Our Father's Business" was to be carried on. Mr. Barnwell is one of the Executive Field Secretaries of the National Council, and the way he entered into the life and fellowship of the Camp endeared him to all, and made his message come close to every one individually.

Task is a grim, hard-sounding word, but the happy optimistic spirit with which this small regiment of Christian Soldiers is tackling the opportunity that lies before them in presenting the message of the Master and His Church to this new country, gives a new meaning to the word. Another one of their slogans is "Expect great things of God: Dare great things for God—and, get off my coat tails, I'm on my way."

There were meetings of the Executive Council and the various departments of the Council.

The Department of Religious Education has plans for intensive work during the coming year in the Church Schools, Young People's work, plans for further development and extension of next year's summer school, and co-operating with all lines of endeavor for installing Week-Day Religious Education in the District.

The Department of Missions and Church Extension is making wide-spread surveys of the field, particularly the rural communities, pushing extension work in every direction as fast as possible with the limited number of clergy to cover such an extensive field.

The Department of Publicity reported the venture in starting a District Paper, The Oregon Trail Churchman, as highly satisfactory. The paper has proved itself to be not only a useful organ of publicity, but a real necessity in uniting the work all over the District.

The Department of Finance held a meeting and acted on many important matters.

It can be said with emphasis that the report of the Field Department is the one which the earnest, interested Churchman looks forward to, with a hopeful, expectant heart, to see if the progress reported along all other lines is demonstrated in Christian Stewardship. It was, therefore, a fine climax to all the other reports when the splendid increase in gifts for "others" as well as "ourselves" was reported.

The last evening Bishop Remington gave a very interesting stereopticon lecture on Eastern Oregon, showing many of the beauty spots of the state, the churches and chapels and various and sundry sidelights on the progress of the work of the Church in the District. One clergyman was so interested and absorbed in what was being presented he knocked over the little stove in his efforts to see more. (Fortunately the fire had gone out.) However, not even the fall of the stove and several elbows of stove-pipe stopped the enthusiasm of the audience in the Bishop's lecture.

The Holy Communion was celebrated each morning at 7:30 in the Church of the Ascension, at Cove.

Not "the end of a perfect day," but the climax to the three days of inspiration was the service on the last morning before we broke camp. At the close of the service, after singing the hymn, "Ye Christian Heralds Go Proclaim," Bishop Remington asked that his clergy and lay workers come to the altar rail for the laying on of hands and supplication for power from on High to start out on the year's mission. All the clergy first joined in laying their hands on their Bishop's head, while Archdeacon Goldie offered the supplication; after which all came forward for the Bishop's blessing.

Yes, it is with this Power from on High that it "can be done."

Church Intelligence

Mission Property Destroyed by Typhoon.

In a cable received on October 9 Bishop Mosher informs the Department of Missions that a destructive typhoon swept over Sagada, in the mountain province of the Philippine Islands, and destroyed mission property valued at $7,500. No particulars are given. It seems certain, however, that the recently completed stone church and the technical high school building have withstood the storm successfully. Doubtless the chief loss is in some of the older and less substantial buildings erected in the early days of the mission. The storm seems to have been specially severe in the Fidelisan Valley, where the mission saw-mill is located. The mill superintendent lost all personal belongings.

The Provincial Synod of Washington.

The eighth Synod of the Province of Washington will be held in the city of Charleston, in the Diocese of West Virginia, on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, November 18, 19 and 20, 1924.

The opening service will be held in St. John's Church on Tuesday at 10 A. M. The President of the Synod will be the celebrant and the Bishop of Washington will be the preacher.

The Porter Military Academy.

The Porter Military Academy, Charleston, S. C., opened its fall session on September 23 with everything indicating an unusually prosperous year. The recently elected rector, the Rev. Gordon M. Reese, was present at the opening, and remained for several days establishing personal contacts with the students, members of the faculty, and trustees. After completing his work in connection with the Bishop Tuttle Memorial Fund, Mr. Reese is expected to return to Charleston and take permanent charge of the school about November 1. In the meantime the academy will continue under the direction of the Rev. S. Cary Beckwith, as acting rector. The enrollment is somewhat in excess of that of last year, and a number of additional registrations are expected.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. W. C. Brown, D. D., Bishop.

A Successful Sunday School Institute.

An interesting and successful Sunday School Institute was held in Christ Church, Alexandria, October 12 to 14. Preparatory to the Institute, Roll Call Sunday was observed the Sunday previous. A unique feature was the calling of the roll alphabetically. When the "Able A's" were called all whose surname began with the letter "A" arose and were counted, one of them reciting Exodus 18:21: "Moreover thou shalt provide out of all people able men, such as fear God," etc. The Believing, Busy B's responded with Mark 9:23 and Proverbs 22:29, and so on through the alphabet.

On Sunday, October 12, Miss Sallie C. Deane addressed the Primary Department. This was followed by a special sermon by the Rev. Wallace E. Rollins, of the Theological Seminary, whose theme was "The Teaching Junction of the Church." Dr. Rollins emphasized the importance of teaching and the place it held in the early Church, teachers being classed with apostles and prophets, while those holding administrative offices in the Church were placed low in the scale. At the evening service Miss Deane spoke on "How the Church Can Help the Sunday School and the Sunday School Help the Church," and earnestly and vividly presented this topic.

On Monday afternoon Dr. Llewellyn N. Caley, rector of St. Martin's Church, Philadelphia, spoke on "The Importance of the Home Department to the Church and of the Church to the Home Department." This was a most interesting conference, which was attended by representatives from the various home departments in Alexandria, and was followed by a social meeting, at which afternoon tea was served by the ladies of the Parish Aid. Miss Deane addressed the night session on "The Primary Department," and was followed by Dr. Caley's illustrated lecture on "Jesus Christ, the Great Teacher."

The meeting on Tuesday afternoon was in the interest of parents and teachers. This was addressed by the Rev. G. Otis Mead, rector of Christ Church, Roanoke, and Mrs. John Loman, of Philadelphia, both of whom gave most interesting and instructive talks. The night session was addressed by Mrs. Loman, who gave most helpful and practical suggestions to teachers; Mr. Mead, who gripped the attention of his hearers by his forcible and vivid presentation of the value of the Adult Bible Class to every congregation, and Dr. Caley, whose subject was "Jesus Christ, the Great Sacrifice."

The meetings were all well attended and much interest manifested, but the most noticeable thing to those in charge of the Institute was the intense spirituality which pervaded all of the sessions, and the hope was expressed that this was but the first of a series of such institutes.

The Valley Convocation.

The one hundred and forty-third semi-annual meeting of the Valley Convocation opened in Calvary Church, Front Royal, on Tuesday night, October 7. Evening Prayer was read by the dean, the Rev. Walter Williams, and the Rev. Clayton Torrence. The sermon, on "Characteristics of Christian Service," was preached by the Rev. Dennis Whitte.

On Wednesday morning Holy Communion was celebrated by the dean and rector, and the Convocation sermon preached by the Rev. John F. Coleman on "The Divine Standard of Christian Service—Faithfulness."

The Rev. Cary Montague conducted a conference on Social Service, outlined the spiritual basis, and discussed practical methods for each parish.

Luncheon was served at the rectory, and upon reassembling the Rev. J. M. B. Gill spoke on the Church's Program.

The roll-call showed a hundred per cent clerical attendance and three lay delegates—Mr. Prince, of Luray; Dr. C. O. Dearthmont, of White Post, and Dr. Creasy, of Front Royal.

The Rev. R. B. Nelson, of Christ Church, Winchester, was elected dean to succeed the Rev. Walter Williams, and the Rev. Messrs. John F. Coleman and Clayton Torrence were re-elected secretary and treasurer respectively.

Action taken in recess appropriating $25 for the salary of a Junior Auxiliary Secretary was confirmed and a similar amount voted for the ensuing year if required.

The regular order of business was then dispensed with and a communication from the Diocesan Appropriation Committee asking for Convocational aid in securing full payment of the budget quotas was read and discussed at length.

The dean appointed a standing committee of three, Messrs. Nelson, Chambers and Dr. C. O. Dearthmont, to consider and report upon the best methods by which the several congregations can further the objects of the Church's Program.

The speaker at the missionary service was the Rev. J. M. B. Gill, of St. Paul's, Petersburg, formerly a missionary in China, who gave a most inspiring account of practical results achieved in his former field, as encouragement to continued faithful efforts on the part of the Church at home.

Invitations for the spring meeting were received from Winchester and Yancey, and that of the latter place accepted.

After a resolution of thanks to the good people of Front Royal and the singing of "Blest Be the Tie That Binds," the Convocation closed with prayer and the benediction by Archdeacon Neve.

Thursday, October 9, was Woman's Auxiliary Day. After the celebration of Holy Communion Mrs. Leathers welcomed the delegates to Front Royal, and Mrs. E. G. Smith responded.

There were present eleven delegates from the Woman's Auxiliary, nine from the Juniors, four from the Little Helpers, and eighty-five visitors, being a large increase in attendance. The reports showed much life and activity, though only five branches had yet attained the standard.

After luncheon a delightful talk was given by Mrs. Davidson, of Richmond, on educational work among the Juniors. Mrs. Gardner followed with a most interesting account of St. Hilda's School, Wuchany. Archdeacon Neve made a strong appeal for help in increasing the salaries of the women workers in the mountains. This subject found the chief interest of the conference conducted by Miss Louisa Davis, and the offering, amounting to $31.81, was voted to this cause.

Meetings of the Juniors were held throughout the day in the rectory, conducted by Mrs. Robert Barton, of Winchester.

Memorials.

A handsome credence table and four silver collection plates were recently presented to Grace and Holy Trinity Church, Richmond, by Mrs. Gustavia A. Senff, of New York, in memory of her sister, Mrs. Lillian R. McVeigh, and of her niece, Lotchen McVeigh. Mrs. McVeigh was an active member of Holy Trinity Church and for many years a member of the choir. Her daughter, also a member of the church, died in her early youth.

Two additional silver collection plates have also been given as a memorial to Mr. and Mrs. William H. Stratton by their daughters, Mrs. C. A. Rose and Miss Nora Stratton.

The New Church Offices.

The new Diocesan centre at 1329 K Street has been taken possession of by the Church offices of the Diocese, the Church Publicity Committee and the Bishop, and will be used in the future as the centre of the administrative work of the Diocese and a meeting place for Diocesan organizations.

The building was formerly the rectory of Epiphany Church, and was occupied by Bishop Freeman as his official residence while he was rector of that parish. A new rectory has been procured by Epiphany Church, and by arrangement with the vestry this building has been turned over for Diocesan uses. The lower floor will be fitted up for use as a club where clergy and laity may meet together for social intercourse. The second floor will be given over to offices, and it is proposed to furnish rooms on the third floor for the accommodation overnight of visiting clergymen. Some of the organizations to be accommodated in these offices are, besides the Bishop's office, the Committee on the Church's Program, the Diocesan Board of Religious Education, the Committee on the Phillips Foundation, the Central Register, the Church Militant and the Laymen's Service Association. The club rooms were opened on Tuesday, October 21, when the Bishop entertained the clericus of Washington at luncheon.

Death of the Rev. J. H. Nelms, D. D.

Funeral services for the Rev. J. Henning Nelms, D. D., who died at his home in Woodside on October 17, were held in Bethlehem Chapel, Washington Cathedral, on Monday evening, October 20, at 8 P. M. The service was conducted by the Bishop of the Diocese, who was assisted by the Rev. Dr. Ernest Smith, of St. Thomas' Church, and others of the clergy. Honorary pall-bearers were the Rev. Drs. C. T. Warren, Herbert Scott Smith, Alan S. Hawkesworth, William S. Bishop, George F. Dudley, H. Allen Griffith, R. J. Ripley, all of the Diocese of Washington, and the Rev. Clarence H. Reese, rector of St. Matthew's Church, Philadelphia, of which Dr. Nelms was formerly rector. Memorial services were held in Grace Church, Woodside, Md., of which Dr. Nelms was rector, on Sunday afternoon, October 19, when Dr. Ernest Smith officiated. The remains were left in state in Grace Church from noon October 19 to 6 o'clock October 20.

Dr. Nelms was formerly rector in Washington of Ascension Parish, and later, after recovery from a long illness, became rector of the churches at Woodside and Silver Spring, Md. His work in these rural churches was constructive and broad, and he leaves behind him a devoted congregation of people and an active and well organized parish.

Organists Meet at Epiphany.

The District of Columbia Chapter of the American Guild of Organists entertained the Chesapeake Chapter of the Guild from Baltimore, at dinner in Epiphany Parish Hall on Wednesday, October 15. About sixty organists in all were present and the guests of honor were Mr. Frank Sealy, warden of the general order of the American Guild of Organists; Dr. Carl Engel, chief of the Music Division of the Congressional Library, and Dr. Ze B. T. Phillips, new rector of Epiphany Church and former organist and choir director. Every member present was requested at roll call to rise and give the name of the church where he or she played, and this proved an interesting and unique way of introduction. Addresses were made by the special guests of honor and Mr. Ender, dean of the Chesapeake Chapter and organist and choirmaster of St. Paul's Church, Baltimore. The closing address of the evening, by Dr. Phillips, was inspiring and helpful, and gave those who heard him a fresh impetus for greater efficiency and a higher standard in the music of church services.

After the dinner the organists went into Epiphany Church, where three members of the Washington Chapter gave a short organ recital.

The local chapters of the Guild throughout the country have meetings from time to time, but it was regarded as unique in the annals of the Guild for chapters from different cities to come together, and Mr. Sealy, the warden, commended very highly such an innovation. The object of the Guild, according to an excerpt from its constitution, is "to raise the standard of efficiency of organists by examinations in organ playing, in the theory of music and in general musical knowledge and to grant certificates of fellowship and associatship to members of the Guild who pass such examinations."

The Washington Chapter is planning a study course in connection with the examination, and also hopes to arrange during the season several special services, when combined choirs will render the music.

Archdeaconry of Southern Maryland.

The regular fall meeting of the Archdeaconry of Southern Maryland was held October 15 at Leonardtown, when the Bishop of Washington was present. This archdeaconry meets twice a year for the discussion of problems common to the parishes of Southern Maryland. Some of the questions discussed were work among the colored people, practical social service in rural communities, and regular attendance of children upon some form of school or class for religious instruction.

Healing Mission.

The Society of the Nazarene, the declared object of which is to restore the "gift of healing," as practiced in the early Church, conducted a Healing Mission for the week ending October 18 in the Church of St. John the Baptist, Germantown. The Rev. Dr. A. J. Gayner Banks, director of the society, conducted the Healing Mission at services which were held each day at 10 A. M. and 8 P. M.

According to the rector, the Rev. Francis M. Wetherill, the mission resulted in more than fifty persons being helped who suffered from bodily or mental infirmities. Some were helped of insomnia and nervous disorders.

As a result of the mission, a guild of the Nazarene has been formed at the church, which will meet Wednesday nights under the leadership of the rector. Preparation will be made at the evening service of the Sunday night before.

The Japan Reconstruction Fund.

St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo, one of the institutions wiped out by the earthquake, announced on Friday, October 17, its pledge of $1,000 toward the $250,000 being raised by the Diocese of Pennsylvania for reconstruction work in Japan. Under the inspiration of this announcement, read by Bishop Garland, the team workers brought the total subscriptions at their luncheon in the Ritz-Carlton to $125,000.

The intensive campaign will end Monday night, and every rector in the Diocese was urged by Bishop Garland Friday to be present at Monday night's dinner to report.

The Church of St. John the Evangelist, Philadelphia, pledged $100 for the church, and a like sum for the Sunday school. "This leaves us happy but broke," was the message that accompanied the gift.

Consecration of the Rev. F. A. Juhan.

The Presiding Bishop, Rt. Rev. Ethelbert Talbot, D. D., has fixed Tuesday, November 25, as the date for the consecration of the Rev. Frank A. Juhan as Bishop of the Diocese. The service will be held in St. John's Church, Jacksonville.

The Rev. Menard Doswell held his first service as rector of St. John's Church, Jacksonville, on Sunday, October 19. A packed church welcomed the new rector, who made a most favorable impression upon all present. St. John's is one of the great parishes of the South.

St. Mark's Church, Ortega, a suburb of Jacksonville, is making rapid strides under the Rev. D. B. Leatherbury. A valuable location has been secured on the Drive, and the church and rectory moved there.

Children's Week in Petersburg.

All of the churches in Petersburg, Va., are now aroused to an intense interest in Religious Education. The week of October 5 to 12 was observed throughout the city as "Children's Week," during which there were two topics emphasized, namely, "The Value of Religious Education in the Life of the Child" and "The Power of Home Environment in the Formation of Character." The observance of "Children's Week" was part of the program of a "follow-up" plan of the Evangelistic Campaign held for two weeks last spring in twenty-five churches of the city, and was under the auspices of the Ministerial Union.

"Children's Week" was ushered in by a mass meeting held on the afternoon of October 5 in Central Park. The program there consisted of a pageant given by members of the Church schools, and depicting the all inclusive nature of the school of the present day by acts presented by the departments of the modern Church school. This was followed by an address on "The Atmosphere of the Home." It is estimated that there were about three thousand persons present. During the rest of the week each church carried out a program of its own.

The following program was observed in Grace Church. On the morning of October 5 there was a "family service." Parents and children were urged to attend this service and to sit together. All confirmed parents and children were urged to attend Holy Communion together. This "family service" was well attended. During the week the subjects of Religious Education of the child and the special influence of the home were brought before all the gatherings in such way that every "age group" was reached: the women on Monday, boys from twelve to sixteen years on Tuesday (a supper meeting), a parent-teacher meeting on Wednesday, girls from twelve to sixteen years old on Friday, and a "primary party," including the kindergarten, on Saturday. On Sunday night, the 12th, there was held in the church a "young people's service," the service being sung by the Junior and Senior Choirs combined.

This is the first year that all of the churches have observed "Children's Week," and the churches are so well pleased with the results that most likely it will be an annual event.

The Petersburg Normal School for Church School Teachers.

The present day emphasis on Religious Education has revealed the fact that the greatest need of the Church is the trained Church school teacher—the teacher who knows what to teach, how to teach, and whom he is teaching. This realization has brought about a demand for schools in which willing teachers can get teacher training. One of the methods of teacher training is the municipal "normal school." Such a school was held in Petersburg last fall in Grace Church, under the auspices of the Petersburg Church School Institute. It proved such a help to the teachers of the city and vicinity that a second session is being held this fall. They are very fortunate in having the newly finished and splendidly equipped parish house of St. Paul's Church for the session this year. The plan is a very simple one and can be carried out in almost any city. Of course, not many subjects can be taught in one session, but by taking a different subject each year the essential subjects can be presented.

The school meets each Friday night from 5 to 9 o'clock for five successive weeks. Each night the following program is observed:

5 to 6 P. M.—Lecture on "The Prayer Book," by the Rev. F. G. Ribble, D. D., Professor in the Bishop Payne Divinity School.

6 P. M.—Supper, served at small price, paid for by the schools having pupils present.

7 to 8 P. M.—Lecture on "The Prayer Book," by Dr. Ribble.

8 to 9 P. M.—Coaching classes in the Christian Nurture Series, by Mrs. Walter Ruan, Miss Helen McCaleb, Mrs. Russell Perkinson, Miss Nellie Leigh Steward, the Rev. E. R. Carter, D. D., and the Rev. J. C. Wagner, E. R. C.

Christ Church, Norfolk.

The Sixteenth Sunday after Trinity marked the sixteenth anniversary of the choir of Christ Church, Norfolk. Professor Miller, its beloved organist and choirmaster, has been with them thirty-five years. In that period, but once only has he failed to be at his post.

The trouble was a lame foot and he was not able to use the pedal; truly a remarkable record.

The present choir numbers sixty-five, and some who were small boys in the beginning, now, as men, give their voices. One of these is also now a violinist and accompanies the organ in the evening service.

Beautiful and appropriate music was rendered at the 11 o'clock service, and the afternoon service was choral.

The sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. Wallace E. Rollins, of the Virginia Theological Seminary.

There was a banquet for the Choir Association, which number a hundred and twenty-five members, on Wednesday evening, October 8. The Church school has reopened with renewed interest and earnestness.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Southern Virginia will be held in Christ Church, October 28, 29 and 30.

St. John's Church, Hampton, notes with gratitude the many forward steps that have been taken in the parish since their rector, Rev. C. E. McAllister, came to them two years ago. The property of the church has been improved, the attendance at the services has increased, the income of the parish is half again what it was two years ago, and the number of communicants is nearly 200 more than it was in September, 1922.

Old St. Paul's Church, Norfolk, the Rev. H. H. Covington, D. D., rector, is making extensive repairs. The parish house has been painted inside and out and an additional room has been added to the tower of the church.

New Church Building for Emmanuel, Covington.

At a recent meeting of the Building Committee of Emmanuel Church, Covington, the Rev. Robert A. Brayshaw, rector, it was decided to ask for bids for the building of the new church at once. The architect was also instructed to ask for bids on the parish house, leaving for decision later the question as to whether or not the church would undertake the building of a parish house, at this time.

The construction of a handsome church has been under consideration by the congregation of Emmanuel Church for several months, but the plans were slightly delayed. The Building Committee now hopes to proceed with construction work as soon as preliminary details can be arranged.

NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. W. T. Manning, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. S. Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan.
Rt. Rev. Herbert Shipman, D. D., Suffragan.

The Cathedral of St. John the Divine.

Bishop William T. Manning announced Sunday night, October 19, that by order of the Board of Trustees of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, the architects, Cram & Ferguson, have asked bids from four firms for the construction of the nave of the Cathedral.

The foundations of the great nave are already laid. Ground was broken for it on May 8, 1916, by the Rt. Rev. David Hummell Greer, late Bishop of New York, but the war halted construction. Work on the Cathedral was resumed last May when the baptistry, a beautiful unit on the north side to cost $250,000, was begun with a special service conducted by Bishop Manning.

The nave, which may be considered the long arm of the cross that the Cathedral forms, will constitute the great body of the Cathedral and will immensely increase the seating capacity, which is now constantly overtaxed. It will be two hundred and twenty-five feet long, with an exterior width of one hundred and thirty-two feet and an interior width of one hundred and twelve feet. The height of the middle aisle (interior) will be one hundred and thirty feet, and the ridge of the nave roof will be one hundred and seventy-five feet above the ground. The central aisle is to be fifty-six feet wide.

Bids are being asked for the nave only, excluding the great west front, which with its twin towers is considered a separate unit. The fabric committee recently estimated the cost of the nave at $5,376,330. The completion of the entire Cathedral is expected to cost $15,000,000, or nearly $10,000,000 additional.

The bids will be received within about two months.

In making the announcement, Bishop Manning said:

"Since the movement to go forward with the building there have been from four to five thousand visitors at the Cathedral each week at the services and at other times.

"A visitors' book has been installed, in which many of those who come inscribe their names. This record shows that the visitors come from every State in the Union and from other lands, and that fully three-fourths of those who come are not members of the Episcopal Church. Approximately 25 per cent are members of the Episcopal Church, 64 per cent belong to other churches, and 11 per cent put themselves down as belonging to no church.

"This record gives striking evidence of the wide spiritual appeal which this great building makes and of its opportunity to minister to people of every sort. Great as its importance is from the standpoint of architecture and education, the all-important thing is its immense practical religious influence and its unequalled spiritual opportunity as a house of prayer for all people."

The material to be used in the nave is the same as that employed in the choir—Peekskill golden granite, faced inside with buff Indiana limestone.

The architectural style of the Cathedral is to be Thirteenth Century French Gothic. In a study of the plans for the nave drawn by Ralph Adams Cram, Alfred D. F. Hamlin, Professor of Architecture at Columbia University, says: "Nothing comparable to this superb design has ever been conceived or executed in America, and the cathedrals of Europe may fairly be challenged to surpass or even to equal it."

Professor Hamlin adds that the dimensions of the proposed nave "put it into the same class, as to size, with the colossal nave of the Duomo at Florence, but its five aisles (made necessary by the piers of the crossing already in place) and its nine bays—four double bays and one western bay—produce an effect of scale and richness immensely superior to the Italian example."

Instructions directing the architects, whose offices are in Boston, to ask the bids were drafted by the fabric committee of the Board of Trustees. This committee, which will consider the bids and report to the trustees, consists of the Rev. Ernest M. Stires, chairman; the Rev. Howard C. Robbins, the Rev. Caleb R. Stetson, the Rev. E. Clowes Chorley, Professor William H. Burr, James R. Roosevelt and the Rev.

Robert Ellis Jones, secretary. The Rev. H. Adye Prichard, acting dean of the Cathedral, is also a member.

Work Among Italians.

The community work at the Church of San Salvatore, the chapel maintained by the Episcopal City Mission Society for the Italian neighborhood on Broome Street, is just entering upon its fall program.

The schedule under the direction of the rector, the Rev. Henry Chiera, will include sewing classes for the girls of the neighborhood, and daily kindergarten with an enrollment of sixty-five children. This work is being conducted by two women instructors from the City Mission staff.

Gymnasium classes, including basketball for the boys and young men, have been well under way now for several weeks with plans for the season's schedule of inter-neighborhood contests.

The opening party and dance for the fall will be a feature of this month's program for the entire community.

The personal work of the Rev. Mr. Chiera's assistants, Miss Celeste McJilton and Miss Emmelina Trapani, among the families of the neighborhood will continue this year to bring the sympathetic ministration which the church has always brought through the City Mission Society workers to the foreign-born families of the community and their children.

The work at San Salvatore under Rev. Mr. Chiera has become in the past three years one of the outstanding pieces of mission work in the city among the foreign born.

The church itself, one of the loveliest chapels in the city, is well known to older parishioners. Work in this community was begun over fifty years ago under the sponsorship of the Italian Mission Committee under Bishop Potter, services being conducted in various temporary chapels in Bleecker and Mulberry Streets.

In 1900, however, the present structure was built at 359 Broome Street. It was designed by the late Stanford White and was the gift of Miss Katherine Lorillard Wolfe and parishioners of Grace Church and other uptown groups. The work of San Salvatore has been under the direct administration of the Episcopal City Mission Society since 1888.

The afternoon Sunday-school classes for the young Italians were opened last week for the fall season, and Mr. Chiera reports a splendid attendance.

Bequests.

By the will of Mrs. William E. Thorn, formerly of Cohoes, N. Y., St. Stephen's College has received $8,000 for its general endowment fund. Mrs. Thorn died last May. The City Mission Society of the Church of New York, the All-Night Mission on the Bowery, the Abigail Free Kindergarten in New York and the Institution for the Blind in Albany, have received similar amounts.

Dean Howard C. Robbins, of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York City, is compelled under the doctor's orders to take complete rest, and will therefore be absent from his duties for some time. During the period of the dean's absence the Rev. H. Adye Prichard, M. A. (Oxon.), rector of St. Mark's Church, Mt. Kisco, N. Y., and honorary canon of the Cathedral, has been appointed to take charge as acting dean. All communications intended for the dean's office should therefore be addressed to the acting dean.

District Convention of Woman's Auxiliary.

On October 16 the Guilford District Convention, Woman's Auxiliary, met in St. Thomas' Church, Reidsville, with about seventy-five delegates present. Mrs. Dorian Blair, of Greensboro, president, presided at the sessions. Bishop Edwin A. Penick and Rev. J. H. Burke, a former rector of St. Thomas', celebrated Holy Communion, and Mrs. Holmes, Mrs. Whitehead, Mrs. Way, Dr. Opie and others made addresses bearing on various phases of Auxiliary work.

A resolution was passed endorsing the proposed international conference on narcotics, and also one endorsing the State's welfare work and pledging the Auxiliary to cooperate with the various welfare superintendents in the district. A motion was also unanimously carried in which the community of Spray and Leaksville were thanked for the recent interest shown in concrete form in the church's building program now going on under the leadership of the Rev. W. J. Gordon. The entire community figured in a canvass for funds for the new church now under construction at Spray, all the churches joining in the movement of their own motion.

At midday a luncheon was served and a pleasant social hour was enjoyed by all the delegates and visitors.

Death of the Rev. Albert Martin.

The Rev. Albert Martin, rector of Trinity Church, Yazoo City, Miss., died early Wednesday morning, October 1. Mr. Martin declined to take a vacation this summer, taking mission work in the Diocese instead. He concluded a mission in Terry the latter part of August and had been ill ever since. He was one of the most faithful and well-beloved priests of the Diocese, as was evidenced by the large number of brother clergymen who came to the funeral service. Thursday morning the Holy Communion was celebrated by the Rev. W. E. Dakin, assisted by the Rev. E. Lucien Malone. The Burial Office was said by Bishop Bratton, assisted by Bishop Green, and the Rev. Messrs. R. E. Grubb, H. W. Wells and E. Lucien Malone. Seventeen of the clergy were vested in the procession, together with the Protestant clergy of the city and the priest of the Roman Church. The burial took place Thursday afternoon at 4 o'clock from Trinity Church.

Mr. Martin is survived by his widow, who at the time of his death was lying in the City Hospital just recovering from a severe operation.

Mr. Martin was born in Virginia fifty-four years ago. He was a graduate of the University of the South. He began his ministry in Louisiana, having been ordained to the diaconate in 1894 and the priesthood in 1895 by Bishop Sessums. He came to Mississippi in 1896, just twenty-eight years ago to the very day, taking charge of Trinity Church, Yazoo City.

He held many positions of trust in the Church. For years he has represented the Diocese in the General Convention. At the time of his death he was Secretary of the Diocese, a member and the secretary of the Standing Committee, a member of the Executive Committee, and editor and manager of The Church News, the official organ of the Diocese.

Rt. Rev. W. G. McDowell, D. D., Coadjutor.

The Rev. Richard Wilkinson, D. D., rector of St. John's Church, Montgomery, was honored by his parish at a special service held on September 28. During the six years that he has been the rector of St. John's, a total of six hundred and four new members have come into the church, two hundred and forty-six of them by confirmation.

A reception was given in the Church of the Advent, Birmingham, on Friday evening, October 10, to which all the parishioners were invited to welcome the Rev. and Mrs. Clingman, the new rector and his wife.

ATLANTA.

Rt. Rev. H. J. Mikell, D. D., Bishop.

For the Every-Member Canvass.

Rather than have a national speaker and a few large conferences in preparation for the Every-Member Canvass this fall, the Diocese of Atlanta plans to have a conference in each and every parish and mission. The parishes will be visited by the Bishop and the missions by the Executive Secretary. In this way it is believed attendance will be greater than in the large conferences and a greater interest in the Church's mission will be manifest as a result of this effort than has been the case in past years.

Vacancies in the Diocese.

There are many vacancies in the Diocese at the present time, due to the removal of clergy during the summer and early fall. The Rev. C. B. Wilmer, D. D., rector of St. Luke's, Atlanta, has removed to Sewanee, where he has taken the Chair of Theology in the University of the South. The Rev. H. A. Willey, rector of St. George's Church, Griffin, has gone as a missionary to the Hawaiian Islands. The Rev. J. F. McCloud, rector of St. James' Church, Macon, has become assistant at Christ Church, Nashville, Tenn. The Rev. E. N. McKinley, priest in charge of the Church of the Mediator, Washington, and the Redeemer, Greensboro, has removed to Northfield, Vt. The Rev. R. R. Claiborne, rector of St. James', Marietta, has become rector of Christ Church, Concord, Ark. These churches are still vacant and the loss of these clergy is keenly felt.

The new St. Paul's Church, Atlanta, has recently been completed at a cost of $30,000, and is a fine edifice—probably the finest church ministering to colored people in the South. It is located in a thriving colored community and its future is very bright indeed.

The Church of the Epiphany, Atlanta, has held outdoor services this past summer that have been largely attended. It has also established a dramatic club which has produced many successful plays.

The new Appleton Church Home, erected last year, is now in full operation, and the orphans housed there have far better living conditions than they experienced in the old home. The new home is situated on a delightful site just outside the corporate limits of Macon, is built on the cottage plan, and cost $60,000.

The Diocese now has a full time field worker for religious education in the person of Miss Katherine Smith. In the few months she has been in office the Church schools have benefited greatly and the Christian Nurture Series has been given new impetus and had wider use.

Much Interest Shown in Bishops' Visitations.

In the visitation of all the parish and mission churches of the Diocese, one hundred and forty-eight in number, by the Bishops in the month of October, one-third have been visited without a break in the schedule. It has been very encouraging, with very good congregations present to welcome the visitors and receive the greeting and exhortation in the name of the Diocese. One of the Bishops has been present at each visitation and two or three of the canons. The service with the fifteen-minute instruction, closing with a special litany of intercessions for the Church, the Diocese and the parish, occupies a little more than a half hour. The clergy of the eight or nine parishes visited on one day, with representatives of the parish and Diocese, are invited to spend the whole day in the pilgrimage, and on some days as many as twelve or fourteen cars have been in the procession passing from church to church. Much interest has been shown by the people and the place of the Diocese and the National Church and the larger duty have been presented to many people. While the hours of service in many cases are inconvenient for a Diocese made up largely of commuters, the attendance and interest have been very gratifying.

The new parish house at Christ Church, Ridgewood, the Rev. Edwin S. Carson, rector, is approaching completion. It will be connected by a cloister with the church and will cost about $100,000.

New additions to St. James' Church, South Pasadena, including a new massive tower and memorial chimes, were dedicated by the rector, the Rev. C. Rankin Barnes, on Sunday afternoon, October 5. The tower is sixty-seven feet high and twenty-three feet square, built of native granite. With the other additions, a clergy and a working sacristy, new choir room and rector's study are provided. The chimes are a memorial to Mrs. Florence Dobbins Lowe, the mother of Mrs. Barnes. They will be rung for fifteen minutes Sunday morning and evening and on special occasions. The day also marked the sixth anniversary of the rector.

Trinity Church, Redlands, the Rev. Edwin Selden Lane, rector, is making the experiment of broadcasting its Sunday morning service through the courtesy of Mr. Brooke Sawyer, one of the members of the parish, who holds a license for an experimental station. If

The Great Intercession.

II.

The Rev. Louis Tucker, D. D.

Men have their grudge against translators; since Our Lord is continually and consistently misrepresented, in all one side of His sayings, by the translation of "Evil." Our Lord habitually used the article "The" evil—that is, the Evil One. This is true even of the Lord's Prayer; and its mistranslation everywhere seems recoil from mediaeval Satan-superstitions. Grotesque and false as these mediaeval superstitions were, however, they are hardly so grotesque as our modern pretense that there is no devil at all.
You cannot construct coherent explanation of this world and leave out Satan. Christ did not try. Modern philosophies attribute the whole to God and hence deny that evil is really evil.

Our Lord made no such effort. He said evil things were really evil and the devil caused them. The devil is a servant of God's, gone wrong, and shall be punished and overthrown and his work overruled for good to those who love God, so that, in the long last, it will help the universe at large; but he is wrong, not right, and bad, not good. Evil is really evil; and God, though He permit, does not endorse nor approve nor ignore it. From this Evil One Christ prays that His men may be preserved.

No man can attain coherent knowledge of Christianity who ignores the spiritual universe. Christianity, taken at its face value, is a consistent system, interlocking with the satisfying completeness of a living organism. But Christianity starts with certain facts concerning the spiritual universe. Most Christians try to construct for themselves coherent systems of Christianity with some of the great facts left out.
They fail. The character of Christ is consistent within itself (His divinity once admitted), and Christian Ethics finds its final sanction in the character of Christ; therefore, the Christian who sees and knows his Lord has an example and a rule of conduct, whatever else bewilder him. But, outside of affection and of ethics, Christianity, if any of the great revealed facts of the spiritual universe be omitted, is a chaos of contradictions.

For instance: it is a revealed fact that God is not conditioned by time, but exists in some mode unknown to us and independent of time and space.
Arius omitted this, delved into Christian doctrine, found contradictions and inconsistencies there which are omitted when you add the fact he left out, and so developed the Arian heresy. St.
Augustine omitted this, and originated that doctrine of Election, which was worked out by Mahomet into "Kismet" and by Calvin into the dogma of Predestination. Granted the premises, all three are right; that is, if God really be conditioned by terms of time when Calvinism is the truest form of Christianity and Mahometanism (which is, intellectually, a developed combination of Predestination and Arianism), is still nearer truth. All are wrong, because they left out an essential element; and they left it out because they did not feel its force.

To those who, with the Book as guide, put in all elements, whether they feel their force or not, Christianity works out into a perfect coherence; but one essential element is that history and present condition of the spiritual universe constantly alluded to by Our Lord and omitted by most Christians.

"What is truth? God's word is truth.
But truth is not coldly crystalline.
It is personal. Christ, the Word of God, is truth; and Christ is more personal than any one else. There is a personal element in truth and it can be infused into persons. Our Lord speaks elsewhere of "men of the truth"; which means more, far more, than merely truthful men. An adding machine may be truthful, until a cog break. It could never be "Of the truth."
Throbbing with this same thought is the phrase "Sanctify them in the truth."

Our Lord says that there is a real analogy between His mission from God and that of the Apostles from Him.
Therefore there is a real indwelling of the Logos independent both of the Eucharist and of the Holy Spirit; for at this time the sending which could be spoken of as past must be one which preceded both. There is living, breathing, throbbing love involved.

That Our Lord should sanctify Himself for the eleven is puzzling. Because of His indwelling in the eleven
His sanctification would include theirs; but gilding gold or painting lilies seems necessary work compared with sanctifying Jesus Christ. Yet "Sanctify" not only means to purify or make holy, but also to set apart. The first is eminently inapplicable to Our Lord. The second is preeminently true. He was devoting Himself to that use of which every previous sacrifice set apart and offered to God was but figure and type.

Before the great schism there were heresies; even in the age of St. John one cloaked itself under the name of Deacon Nicholas, the proselyte of Antioch. The prayer for unity was, therefore, never answered upon earth, unless in the first few years of Christianity before it became well known; and world-belief means public knowledge of world-wide unity. The same reason excludes the secret spiritual unity of true and faithful believers, and the unity of the Church waiting in the world to come. We wish to speak reverently, but must speak clearly. It is for evidential reasons in this world, as well as for reasons spiritual that Our Lord wishes Christian Unity. The world, the scoffing, careless, irreligious and yet homesick and heart-hungry world, must know that God has sent Our Lord. Unity world-wide, heartfelt, genuine and conspicuous would alone satisfy the world of the divine origin of Christianity. Even in ante-nicene times unity was partial. There were conspicuous heresies. Therefore the purpose of the unity was never attained. Our Lord's great prayer is not yet granted.

Six hundred years ago Christianity in Western Europe was a unit and, so far as the common people realized, a world-unit. It was not really so; but as the common people did not know this, the effect on the masses was about the same as if it had been so. Western Europe accepted that unity as proof positive of the divinity of Christ. It was an universal obsession, and that in the face of abuses so enormous, of perversions so stupendous, of un-Christian things done by so-called Christians so great and so evil, that millions of thoughtful men since have denied the very name of Christianity to that mass of weltering corruption. If so bad a thing, by sheer mass-weight of union, could so impress the world, what would a true world-union of real Christ-following Christians do? Some day the answer shall be given; and Christ shall reign from sea to sea and from the river to the world's end; not to the end of the poor, pitiful, pathetic little Hebrew world, but to the real world's end, which is everywhere.

The other purpose of the unity is that they "May be one in Us."

Our Master's prayer shall be granted.
The Holy Trinity are One everywhere.
We think Christendom needs to be everywhere, before it can be one. This interpretation grows far from fanciful in light of all Our Lord's sayings.
When the Gospel is preached in every nation for witness, when every man and woman has heard of baptism and the Lord's Supper and could have both, then reunion comes. It comes not by retracing intellectual differences, but by advancing along paths which converge, because they lead past the foot of a cross, an empty cross, through a garden where gazes an empty tomb, to a mountain-top whence One ascended to the Father. The reason men will reach that mountain-top soon, very soon, which in nineteen centuries they have never reached at all, is that they will hasten thither to meet One descending from the Father. The mountain-top will not be empty.

The Hidden Hand.

I would go forward, stumbling through the dark,
After my wayward will;
A hidden hand withholds me suddenly,
Firm, strong, and still.

I would go back to what I left behind—
The laughter and the night;
The hidden hand quick grips me, turns me round
Towards the light.

I feel the red wound in its beating palm;
And, though I cannot see,
I guess that somewhere that deep bitter scar
Was borne for me.

For me, or such another as myself,
Wounding, and pain, and loss.
So I go forward, all the way of Love,
Led by a cross.

—Lauchlan M. Watt.

"Please Tell My Mother."

All day long Demetrius had waited shyly around the office building of the Near East Relief Headquarters in Athens, hoping that somebody would see him and ask him to come in and eat some of the bean stew that he could smell, when he got close enough to the kitchen windows. It had been a long time since he had anything good to eat. Coming down on the ship from Salonica he had hidden away under some barrels so that the captain would not see him, and had only a scrap of bread now and then that a kind sailor had given him.

It had been cold and stormy on the sea, but anything was better than trying to stay on alone in Salonica in one of the wretched refugee camps after his mother died and there was no one who cared anything about him. He had not known exactly where he was going when he slipped off the boat at Piraeus, but a soldier had seen him and suggested that the Americans at the Old Palace in Athens might do something for him, since he was a little fellow. So Demetrius wearily trudged the long distance to Athens—and then he had been afraid to ask.

It was dark and past time to close the office when the Orphanage Director was asked by one of her workers, "How about this little boy that is outside? Will you see him tonight? He just came up the stairs."

Within half hour Mrs. Harris, who is in charge of the Old Palace, was taking care of little Demetrius. He had a big steaming bowl of the bean soup and all the bread he could eat, and then because it was too late to send him to the Zappeion Orphanage to be with the boys, he was given some blankets and put in charge of the night-watchman until the next morning, when he would become a regular enrolled member of the Near East Family.

When Demetrius was ready to curl up in the blankets on the floor near the charcoal burner in the lower hall, this is what the night-watchman heard him say, as he reverently folded his thin little hands and lifted his serious blue eyes, "O God, I thank you because tonight I have bread in my stomach and blankets to put around me. Please tell my mother."—Glee Hastings.

Shy Children.

By Angelo Patri.

If you have the sort of child who slams the door in the face of a visitor, realize now that he is shy and not wilfully naughty and treat him for shyness instead of disciplining him for rudeness.

"I'm sorry it happened," will be enough at the time. Then manage so that he will be present when a visitor is due. Take him with you and let him stand beside you as you open the door and welcome the visitor. He will tense his whole body and shrink behind you; but pay no attention to him except to see that he follows you into the room again and goes on with his books or his toys.

By and by ask him to bring you something that you would like to show the visitor. Take it from him and let him slip into the background again. Don't ask him to make any advances to the visitor and don't ask him to show off his accomplishments.

When the visitor rises to leave, take him with you to the door and let him hold the door-knob and watch the visitor down the steps. Then signal to him to close the door gently, which he will do gladly. Ignore the rush and clatter of his hurrying away. It is the reaction that is due—nothing more.

Train him this way until you see that his fear has vanished and that he can smile and open the door and chatter gaily to those who come. But keep silent upon the subject of his failing. Work at it and keep still about it.

Telling a child to be brave suggests a cause for fear. You did not gain courage from your elder's preaching, but from their sturdy endurance under stress. When they told you to have no fear, you probed beyond their words to something that spoke more clearly to your troubled mind. You felt for their spirit; and if it was steadfast and serene, you were reassured and the haunting fear was smothered. But if so much as a suggestion of doubt reached you, fear set in a hundred-fold.

If a child shrinks from going on an errand, send some cheerful child with him or go yourself until he gets the feel of the road and the people. His first dread over, send him alone with his dog for companionship or put something in his hand to steady him by its familiar contact; the hand carries a direct message to the mind.

If he is the sort of shy child who blusters and storms and then runs away, find out what it is he is afraid of and remove the cause. It may be that a bigger boy is bullying him, or that there is a fierce dog on the way to school, or that his teacher doesn't understand him.

If the shyness appears during adolescence, try to reason it out. Get the child to search for the thing that makes him fearful. Help him to bring it into his consciousness and discover that it is meaningless.

Speak gently and surely, and try to be the sort of person that a child loves to meet. You are all the people of all the world to a little child in your home, and from you he gathers courage or fear as you demonstrate it in your daily living.

Take the shy child to dancing-school.

The music and the rhythm and the formality help lift the repression from the mind of the timid one.

Keep your eyes off the child who is suffering from shyness. One's eye can be a terrifying force when directed toward a shrinking child.—Delineator.

Beauty.

Beauty in such tiny things,
A snowflake or a blade of grass;
We see them every day we live
And scarcely heed them as we pass.

Beauty in such mighty things,
A towering tree, a steadfast star;
And yet somehow we heed them not,
They are so great, so still, so far.

Beauty everywhere we go,
In children's eyes, in faces kind;
We see them not. I pray tonight,
'Dear God, make me less blind, less blind!'

What Happened to Jennie's Jack-o'-Lantern?

Though it was a full four days before Hallowe'en, Jennie King had scraped and cleaned the biggest pumpkin that she could roll in from her father's corn field; it was a matter of considerable pride with Jennie to live up to the reputation she had established for herself of having the biggest and funniest jack-o-lantern of any youngster in the River Bend community.

"I'll set a new record this year," chuckled Jennie to herself as she tiptoed to the corner of the barn whence she had hung the well-scraped pumpkin to dry. "I'll have a bigger and funnier one than ever."

In fact, it was all ready for cutting in of the face, and Jennie already had that outlined in her mind.

"What are you doing peeping in that door?" exclaimed the voice of Kittie Moore, Jennie's nearest neighbor.

Jennie swung the door to quickly and turned to face her friend.

"I know," declared Kittie, "you've got your jack-o-lantern already made and don't want anybody to see it."

"Maybe so," answered Jennie, "but I'm not saying so."

"All the same, I've guessed it," answered Kittie, "but I'm going to see it, any way, 'cause I want to cut mine after the style you use."

"I haven't cut mine yet," replied Jennie thoughtfully, "and—and—that isn't all—I'm not going to cut the face in mine until right the last minute."

Kittie said no more about the jack-o-lantern but the rest of the afternoon was a failure so far as happiness was concerned to the girls. Nevertheless, Kittie took her departure without so much as a glance at the object in the barn; and after she went away Jennie decided, just to make sure that nobody would catch a glimpse of her treasure, to hide it—so carrying the thinly scraped pumpkin to the hay-loft, she tied it carefully to one of the rafters, banked hay about it and went to the house perfectly satisfied that no one would see it, and not until late on the eve of hallowe'en did she go near it again herself, and to her astonishment, when she went to take it down she discovered it was exceedingly heavy—too heavy, in fact, for her to hold up with one hand and untie with the other at the same time; time and again she tried to do so but failed. Then finally she climbed up and peeped into the pumpkin. Instantly a little shriek of surprise escaped her lips, for one glance was enough to convince her she'd have to make another jack-o-lantern for herself because Mistress Bunny, the pet squirrel that lived in the King barn through the winter, had taken the unfinished article for a store-house for his winter supply of nuts, having filled it almost full—too full for any girl with any sort of heart to throw away—so Jennie had to make another one, and because it was made so hurriedly she lost her reputation for jack-o-lantern making—but she found something far better—she found that selfishness was destroying her otherwise lovely nature, and then and there she resolved to change her ways. And this year—well, let's hope she regained her reputation as a jack-o-lantern-maker, because she is helping her friends to make funny ones, too.—Presbyterian Banner.

Why Richard Won.

It was a warm, lazy summer morning, and the Enders family were out on the lawn under the old red oak, enjoying its lovely shade.

There were the twins, Roger and Richard, and their mother, with her mending-basket, and Grandfather Enders in his wheel-chair. Richard was sitting on the bench, deeply absorbed in a book, but Roger was rolling on the ground doing nothing except now and then pulling up a blade of grass or gazing at the butterflies over in the flower-garden.

So it was to Roger that Grandfather Enders said, "Would you mind getting me my reading-glasses? They are on the table in my room."

Roger did not stir. "I'm tired," he demurred.

Richard looked up from his story, smiled at grandfather, and said, "I know where they are, grampy. I'll get them for you."

But just then Roger, who had been so tired the minute before, flashed to his feet. "There's Uncle Craig, in his car!" he exclaimed in shrill delight, racing to the street.

Sure enough, there were Uncle Craig and Aunt Fanny, in their small car, which seemed overflowing with all kinds of rolled-up bundles and packages, and even suit-cases.

After the first greetings were over, and everybody seated under the old oak, Roger asked his uncle, "Why have you all that stuff in your car?"

"Most of that is our camping outfit. We are on our way to the Rocky Mountains in Colorado, taking our time as we go along, and stopping to sleep, or eat, or fish whenever we feel like it."

The twins listened wide-eyed and fascinated. They had never been away from the small town in which they lived, and a trip from Illinois to Colorado in an auto seemed a tremendous undertaking to them.

"Oh! oh! What fun!" they breathed. Uncle Craig nodded smilingly.

"I'll show you just the route we're taking," feeling in his pocket. "I guess I left my map on the porch-table with my cap," he said. "Will one of you boys get it for me?"

Roger, who was nearest to the porch, dropped into a chair. "You get it, Rich," he directed. Richard was just moving grandfather farther into the shade, but he called out cheerily, "Right away!"

For a moment his uncle watched

Richard hurrying toward the porch, then glanced curiously back to Roger.

At dinner Mr. Enders, who kept a hardware store in town, turned to Roger with the request, "I have a package of nails to go to Mr. Hopkins. Will you take it over after dinner?" Richard has taken packages so often for me."

Roger frowned a trifle. "Mr. Hopkins lives so far out," he grumbled. "There won't be time. I'm going swimming."

"I'll take it, father," offered Richard.

"Why, aren't you going swimming, too?" asked Uncle Craig, his eyes twinkling.

"Oh, yes, sure. But mother doesn't want us to go into the water for two hours after eating, so there's lots of time, and I can go over on my bike." Again Uncle Craig gave Richard a long, thoughtful look.

After dinner the family gathered on the cool east porch. The Twins and two of the neighbors' boys, all dressed in their swimming suits, were swinging violently and recklessly in the porch hammock.

Suddenly there were shrieks and screams of hilarity, and the boys lay on the floor, and one end of the swing was dragging down. The boys picked themselves up, laughing, none the worse for their spill.

Roger opened the screened porch door. "C'm'on, boys, let's go down to the river now. It's time for swimming, anyway."

Richard stood still, surprised. "You're not going to let this hammock stay this way, are you?" he asked.

"Why not?" Roger shot back. "We can't do anything with it. Dad's got to fix it!"

"Dad nothing!" scoffed Richard. "Can't you see that the chain just slipped out of the hook in the ceiling? All we have to do is to slip it in again!"

"Well, how are you going to get up there?"

"Step-ladder, of course. You help me carry the ladder, and hold it for me, to steady it, while I get up there and fix it."

Roger's eyes were on the other boys, now going out of the front gate. "Say, let Uncle Craig help you with the ladder. I'm going," and away he went, whistling blithely.

Meanwhile Uncle Craig had seen and heard all of this. Now he rose from his chair and said, "I'll carry the step-ladder for you, Richard, and you do the climbing up." So in a few minutes' time the chain was attached to the ceiling and the hammock again ready for use.

Later that afternoon, when the boys were back from swimming, and all the rest of them were there too, Uncle Craig sprang his big surprise.

"Aunt Fanny and I decided before we left home that it would be rather nice for us to have some company on this trip. As our car is so small, and so much space is taken up with our luggage, we have room for only one more person—for instance, a boy from this house."

"Oh, uncle! take me!" "I want to go, please!" "Oh, let me go!" came breathlessly from the excited boys.

"Well, you see, boys," continued Uncle Craig, "on a trip like this, which is not entirely ease and pleasure, but some work, too, not to mention flat tires and other auto troubles," amusingly, "we can't be bothered with any one who is lazy, or grumbles when he is asked to help a little, or who tries to get out of doing things he knows he ought to do."

He paused, and the twins sat forward, a questioning, expectant look in their eager faces.

"We want for a companion a boy who is willing, cheerful, and ready to take his share of the duties as well as the fun. And that boy is Richard."

The next morning, when the little car drove off with a happy, shining-faced youngster in it, Roger stamped his feet and cried angrily, "Why didn't he take me? Why is everybody so much nicer to Rich than to me? It isn't fair!" as he flung himself into the hammock.

His mother sat down beside him and gently tried to explain why Richard had won this glorious trip to the mountains.

She reminded him of the day before, of his unwillingness to get his uncle's map, or go on father's errand, or help fix the swing.

"You see, dear, Uncle Craig was watching you boys yesterday, and he came to the conclusion that Richard would be far more agreeable to take on a trip than you."

Roger stared moodily out into the yard. "Well, I would have done all those things Rich did if I had known that I would get a trip for it," he gulped disappointedly.

"But that's just it," protested his mother. "Richard didn't know it. But he gives his little services so willingly, without knowing or asking what he is going to receive, that every one likes him. Uncle Craig noticed this trait of Richard's, and that is why Richard won this nice trip to the mountains."—Junior World.

Mother's Lap.

Helen Bayley Davis.

I hope I'll never get too big
To sit on Mother's lap,
It's such a very pleasant place
To take a little nap.

All through the day I feel so large
And very strong—but then
As soon as it gets still an' dark
I feel quite small again.

An' so I climb in Mother's lap
An' cuddle up, all snug;
She rocks me gently in her arms
An' gives me such a hug!

It's awful hard to keep awake
I want to gape—and gape;
I hope I'll never get too big
To sit on Mother's lap.

Going to School in Panama.

From May to December, the boys and the girls in Panama often go to school in the rain, for it rains almost every day. Sometimes it pours in torrents. One day six inches of water fell in two hours, like one continuous sheet of spray.

Because it rains so hard and because it is so hot, the jungle grows up overnight, and the children in the country find it hard to keep open the paths to school. If they are neglected during vacation, no path is left through the thorny tangles, which swarm with beautiful birds and troublesome insects. The Canal Zone, however, has been cleared of all dangerous animals, so that there is no peril in the thickest jungle.

Now and then there are earthquakes in Panama, but they are small and do no harm. There never has been a severe earthquake shock; and no one seems to mind the little tremblings that happen occasionally. No pupil ever need stay home from school for fear of an earthquake.

The United States owns the Canal Zone, ten miles one way by fifty miles the other way, and gives all the children free schooling. There are more races represented in the Panama schools than there are in one place anywhere else in the world. Seventy or more different lands are represented in the population. A French child may sit next to an Arabian child, or an English boy may sit beside an Ecuadorian.

There is only one real difference between the children, and that is whether they belong to a "gold" or a "silver" family. The Government pays its high-class white employees in gold, and the rest are paid in silver. The "gold" children have the best of everything. The "silver" children, who mostly are Negro or Asiatic, do not seem to mind that, as they are content with what they have, for there is enough and to spare for every one in this rich, tropical country.

Schools are a rather new thing in Panama—that is, free schools with good teachers. In the old schools every child studied and recited out loud at once, so that the noise was like that of a sawmill in full blast. The American schools in Panama are like the schools at home, except for the queer mixture of pupils from all parts of the world. A bright boy or a bright girl has a good chance of reaching a Government position.

The children live in houses that are darkened to keep out the hot sun, and screened to keep out mosquitoes. There is a big courtyard or patio inside, and the rooms open out on this, and not on the street. A fountain often plays in the patio, and ferns, flowers, big broad-leaved bananas, and palms make it very pretty.

Every Panama child learns two things —that mosquitoes are hatched in standing water, and that they breed the germs of yellow fever. So no water ever stands stagnant in or around the house or yard, and kerosene is used so much to keep down the insects that very few flowers are seen in the towns. The jungle is full of gorgeous blossoms, and there are seventy-five kinds of orchids.

Every girl and every boy in Panama may have a parrot or a monkey or both, for the jungle is crowded with them, ready for the taking. The parrots are as gay-colored as the orchids, and the monkeys can do everything but talk. The Panama children usually have a small menagerie in the patio, and sometimes, like "Marys' little lamb," a pet monkey goes to school, and is turned out just as was Mary's lamb, for a monkey is the most mischievous pet in the world and can upset any schoolroom.—Queens Gardens.

Obituaries

CARMICHAEL: Died, September 3, at his old home in Fredericksburg, Virginia, RANDOLPH BRYAN CARMICHAEL, M. D., well known physician of Washington, D. C., son of the late Spotswood Wellford Carmichael, M. D., and Fanny Tucker Bryan his wife.

The strife is o'er, the battle done;
The victory of life is won;
The song of triumph has begun.
Alleluia!

MISS MARY STUART HAMILTON.

Passed into Life Eternal, at the home of her nephew, Henry Hamilton Seabrook, October 10, 1924, at Riverton, N. J., MARY STUART HAMILTON, second daughter of Colonel Paul Hamilton, of Beaufort, S. C., in the 81st year of her age. Interment St. Helena's church yard, Beaufort, S. C.,

"She whose one oblation
Was a life of love,
Knit in God's salvation
To the Blest above."

MRS. ESTHER DASHIELL BURKE.

Entered into eternal life, August 21, 1924, from her home in Alexandria, Va., ESTHER DASHIELL BURKE, wife of the late Julian Thompson Burke and daughter of the late Charles Sinclair Taylor and Harriet Fowle Taylor. She is survived by five children, Mrs. Louis S. Greene and Dr. John W. Burke, of Washington, D. C., C. S. Taylor Burke, and Julian T. Burke, of Alexandria, Va., and Mrs. Holland B. Juddkins, of Atlanta, Ga.

In the passing of Mrs. Burke a personal loss has been sustained by people of all kinds and conditions in this community, as her boundless sympathy and unfailing courtesy endeared her to all whose lives touched hers in any capacity.

For many years we have rejoiced in seeing her moving amongst the familiar scenes of Alexandria, a quiet, gentle figure, full of an unassuming dignity and a graciousness which shrank from hurting even the humblest of her fellow creatures.

Her entire lack of desire for social prominence and display, and her absolute devotion to her church and family set her apart in a material age. Unable and unwilling to assert herself in an aggressive way, this generous spirit found happiness in the simple things of life and in sharing with others her every blessing. The keynote of her character was struck in her highest ambition for her children, which was that they should "live justly, love mercy and walk humbly with their God."

We who knew her best feel that she regarded the traditions handed down to her as a sacred trust to be passed on untarnished and with gratitude and pride she accepted this obligation and kept faith with the ideals of her race.

The gap her going has left cannot be filled, for hers was a type rarely found in these unrestful times; but if the example of her pure life be followed they will be led to the place of her desire—home.

Convocation of Reading.

The fall meeting of the Convocation of Reading was held October 13 and 14 in St. Michael's Church, Birdsboro, the Rev. A. B. Vossler, rector.

Bishop Talbot gave a delightful account of his trip abroad.

Dr. W. A. R. Goodwin, of William and Mary College, Williamsburg, Va., addressed the Convocation on the importance of having a Parish Program Conference and the group system. In the evening of the first day he preached to a large congregation on Religious Education.

Dr. Sargent gave a most inspiring and illuminating address on Week-Day Religious Education.

Miss Zettan Gordon, the new field worker of Religious Education, spoke of her program for the coming year.

A resolution was passed congratulating the dean, the Very Rev. Howard W. Diller, rector of Trinity Church, Pottsville, on completing twenty-five years of successful service for the Church in the Diocese.

Resolutions were also passed expressing regret at the departure of the Rev. Harold I. Fair, from St. Mary's Church, Reading, to Fall River, Mass., and of the Rev. J. Arthur Glasier.

The Convocation tendered its sympathy to the Rev. Dr. George C. Foley in his recent accident.

Conferences For the N.-W. C.

The Rev. F. B. Bartlett, of St. Louis, conducted a conference for the clergy of the Blue Grass and Southeastern regions of the diocese, in Christ Church Cathedral Parish House, Lexington, on September 30 and October 1, in the interest of the Nation-Wide Campaign and the coming fall canvass.

On October 2 and 3 he held a similar conference for the clergy of the Ohio River Region, in Trinity Church Parish House, Covington.

Parish Meeting.

On the night of September 30 the Cathedral Parish held a parish meeting and dinner, when the Dean asked the meeting to do the following: Manifest a greater interest in the Sunday School, a larger attendance on the church services, to help him to present for the next confirmation a number equal to ten per cent of the membership of the parish, to put an addition to the parish house, which is greatly needed. The meeting passed resolutions heartily agreeing to do these things.

The Rev. Mr. Bartlett gave a very helpful address on the Parish Program and the group system.

An attendance campaign was held in the Cathedral Parish from October 4 to 9.

Presented With a Rectory.

Friends of the Rev. T. L. Settle, rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Lexington, have given to that church a rectory, attractive and commodious, situated in one of the new additions of Lexington.

This parish will soon begin its new church building, having about one-half of the amount necessary on hand.

St. Andrew's, Fort Thomas, and the Chautauqua.

So successful was the Rev. Wm. Dern of Fort Thomas in building up a community Chautauqua, under the Redpath Chautauqua, that this company secured Mr. Dern for five weeks in order that he might tell just how he did it. His time was spent in Northern Ohio.

Each church of Fort Thomas received nearly $300. The community spirit created was of great value.

Presented With a Ford: The friends of the Rev. Alex. Patterson, of Beattyville, presented him with a Ford car, the presentation taking place in front of the Courthouse of that place.

Mr. Patterson is the Apostle to the Mountaineers.

The new management of the Diocesan News consists of an Editorial Board with Dean Massie as chairman, Mr. H. K. Milward, both of Lexington, the Rev. J. H. Gibbons, of Frankfort and Miss Lila Bell of Georgetown.

Margaret Hall began its twenty-seventh session last month with an enrollment nearly doubled that of last session. Six states are represented, including New York and as far West as Oklahoma.

Patterson G. F. S. Farn: This farm with its roomy log house was the gift of the Rev. Alexander Patterson, of Beattyville, to the Girls' Friendly Society, of the Diocese of Lexington.

The house when completely furnished will accommodate thirty girls. The G. F. S. of Beattyville has furnished the living room.

It will also be used for a community centre.

The church buildings at Paris and Danville have been greatly improved and put in good repair.

Bishop Meade, of Virginia, consecrated the Church in Danville.

The Rev. J. H. Fielding is now in charge there.

All Saints' Church, Nicholasville, under the care of the Rev. G. H. Harris, of Versailles, has been very much improved. The opening service will soon be held.

T. H. G.

CONNECTICUT.

Rt. Rev. C. B. Brewster, D. D., Bishop.

Laying of Cornerstone of New Parish House.

Impressive services marked the laying of the cornerstone for the Woodford Memorial Parish House of Trinity Church, Seymour, in memory of a former rector, the Rev. W. A. Woodford. The services were held on Saturday afternoon, September 20, the Rt. Rev. C. B. Brewster, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese, officiating and making an appropriate address. Other speakers were the Rev. E. Foster Piper, pastor of the Methodist Church, and the only local pastor who held his pastorate during Mr. Woodford's life here; E. B. Treat, senior warden of St. Peter's Episcopal Church of Oxford, of which Mr. Woodford was also rector at the time of his death; J. B. Honey, senior warden of Trinity Church; Archdeacon George H. Buch, of Derby, Bishop Brewster, and the Rev. W. O. Roome, present rector, who read a list of the contents of the cornerstone.

We do Church and Memorial work only.

We give direct personal attention

We not only design the furnishings, but manufacture them in our own workshops.

We have facilities and experience acquired since 1877.

We employ skilled mechanics and use selected materials.

Consult us, if you wish a simple memorial; or if you wish to renovate or decorate the Church; or if you wish to completely equip it. In the latter case, the especial advantage of entrusting the work to us is obvious; it insures a harmony in design and proportion of all the furnishings. Incidentally, there is a material saving in cost.

Though we carry a large stock of Altar Brasses, Baptismal Fonts, etc., available for immediate delivery, all wood work, and most of the other productions are executed to special order only. Some of the smaller pieces can be made in a few weeks, but the larger commissions may take from four to six months and more to complete. It is not too early, therefore, to take under consideration memorials to be placed this coming Christmas, before Lent, and on Easter, Whitsunday, All Saints' Day, etc., of next year.

If, when making inquiry, you will give as detailed information as possible, relative to the article desired, the style of design preferred, size, material, color, and approximate limits of expenditure, it will enable us to promptly submit designs and suggestions exactly meeting your needs.

"With All The Company of Heaven"

If we to-day come halting to Thy board
And wait for steps that shall not sound again
Beside our own—Lift up our hearts, O Lord,
To Thee and our Beloved, past all pain.

They have endured; they rest; now, satisfied,
They bear Thy likeness; now with vision clear
They see Thee as Thou art, O Glorified!
Yet do they throng us, who with faith draw near.

Though all their robes be white, and ours earth-stained,
Yea, though their eyes be tearless, and we weep,
Here let the old communion be regained
In the Trisagion of the Feast we keep.

One song, one song shall rise where Thou dost sit!
One "Holy, Holy, Holy" from each lip;
Angels and saints and homing pilgrims, knit
In one communion and one fellowship.

O higher, higher, lift me ever higher
Above the envy that infests the earth,
And simple peace alone shall I desire
And rest as sweetly as a babe at birth!
Like as a poisoned ivy, fortune twines
Her soft embrace around the hearts of men;
The heart beats blithely in its warm confines
And sucks the poison from the gilded den,
But as a ray shot from the rising sun
Paints over midnight's brow a golden light,
The eye of man Hope's buried wrecks can shun
And view with radiant smile her promise bright.
O heart that beats beneath a tone of woe,
Break off your shackles, rise, and onward go!

THE ZR-3,

so it is reported, was protected by every known precaution from the tragic fate of the Roma and the Dixmude.

Disastrous experiences teach their lessons. Because men saw that estates, accumulated through years of labor, were dissipated quickly in inexperienced hands, trust companies were organized.

Many prudent men have named the Virginia Trust Company executor and trustee in their wills to safeguard their estates and thus assure their heirs a dependable income. Consultations are invited—confidential and no cost.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"God's power is my power up to the limit of my capacity of tapping it, that is knowledge; of appropriating it, that is faith; and using it, that is everyday living."

"Foreign missions are not only foreign missions, they are home missions, purifying the home life with that larger conception of charity, redeeming the home life with that worthier conception of Christ, which they teach and give."
—David H. Greer, D. D.

"My cloud of battle-dust may dim;
His veil of splendor curtain Him!
And in the midnight of my fear
I may not feel Him standing near
But as I lift my eyes above,—
His banner over me is Love."

Did you ever try to measure one day's actions by the standard of the New Testament? Cultivate the habit of bringing all that you do side by side with this light, as a scholar in some school of art will take his feeble copy and hold it side by side with the masterpiece and compare line for line, tint for tint.—A. Maclaren.

The New Testament is an intensely human book, and yet it is none the less but all the more divine. . . . The book is earthly clay fused with celestial fire, human flesh filled with divine Spirit. Its vessel is earthen; but its treasure is heavenly. The breath of God is blowing through this book; nothing else will explain it.—Dr. J. H. Snowden.

The Bible doctrine is not told that God's child will be recompensed in heaven for his losses on earth. It is that what on earth appears a loss has in heaven the aspect of a gain—just as night on one hemisphere makes morning on the other. The column of deaths here is a column of births yonder.—Dr. Floyd Tompkins.

Be diligent, after thy power, to do deeds of love. Think nothing too little, nothing too low, to do lovingly for the sake of God. Bear with infirmities, ungentle tempers, contradictions; visit, if thou mayest, the sick; relieve the poor; forego thyself and thine own ways for love; and He whom in them thou lovest, to whom in them thou ministerest, will own thy love, and will pour His own love into thee.
—E. B. Pusey.

Whither Thou sendest,
Whither Thou leadest,
Thither my journey.
Eastward or westward,
Northward or southward,
Dayward or nightward,
Joyward or woeward,
Homeward or starward,
So it be Thee-ward
Thither my journey.

What we need today is a joyful Church. It is this carrying a sad countenance, with so many wrinkles on our brows, that retards Christianity. Oh, may there come great joy upon believers everywhere, that we may shout for joy and rejoice in God day and night! Let us pray that the Lord may make us joyful, and when we have joy then we will have success.—D. L. Moody.

To be saved means to have your personality renewed and transformed through the personality of Jesus Christ dwelling in your heart by faith. Saving faith is nothing less than a personal bond between a sinner and his Saviour. And character becomes the test of faith when Christ's renewal and transformation of a human character bear witness that His relation with that soul is real.—T. H. Dailow.

The broken-hearted are those that have fought the battle of life, and have lost it; and every broken heart is a tender solicitude to the Lord Jesus if for no other reason than this—that it is unhappy. He would comfort "all that mourn"; for sin He gives pardon; for bereavement, sympathy; for loneliness, company; for persecution, comfort; for heartbreak, love; and the very scars He can make beautiful.—Selected.

Have you been to the sad and the lonely,

Whose burdens are heavy to bear?
Have you carried the name of Jesus,
And tenderly breathed it in prayer?
Have you told of the great salvation
He died on the Cross to secure?
Have you asked them to trust in the Saviour
Whose love shall forever endure?

GALVANIZING THE HOUSE OF BISHOPS

It has been an open secret from the beginning that the trouble with the Nation-Wide Campaign was due to the fact that there were some in the boat who were not pulling an oar. It has been equally an open secret that some who were not rowers, but passengers, were bishops. This may be lese majeste, but it is the simple statement of fact, nevertheless. That joint conference held in New York when the House of Bishops were invited by the National Council to a conference preparatory to the making of the Program, looks to an interested but unaccredited observer like a deliberate attempt to galvanize the Episcopate into action. If it were, we trust that the laudable effort was successful. We trust, however, that such a joint conference will never be held again.

We have studied the mind ecclesiastical for many years, and find in that study the key to the Old Testament which is largely taken up with reminding the priesthood and the world of the things the priesthood had forgotten. The ones who did the reminding were for the most part laymen. One daring young priest, who in many respects is the noblest figure in the Old Testament, did speak out in meeting, and never had a peaceful moment thereafter till he fell and died on the roadside. Jeremiah is at once the warning and the inspiration to the priest who prays never to forget what it is to be a man.

When a layman becomes a priest he straightway forgets many things. "Shades of the prison-house begin to close" upon the growing ecclesiastic, until it often happens that by the time he reaches the episcopate he passes into a state described by the poet quoted above as "entire forgetfulness."

St. Paul found it necessary to speak in athletic metaphor to the men of his day, because the athletic code was the only code of ethics that held the respect of the world. Men love to see a fight or an athletic contest because there they see men giving themselves to the uttermost. The player who deliberately throws a game is rare, even in professional circles. The player who takes the chance of making a startling but risky individual play rather than a safe assist, is the one who puts his team out of the running.

St. Paul's letters were every one of them addressed to men who called themselves Christians, and he says in effect in almost every one of them: "Be sports. Play the game according to the rules." So not facetiously, but from a heart burning with fierce interest in the Church's open challenge, we say to the House of Bishops, individually and collectively: "Be sports: Play the game. Never mind about the grand entry into the Stadium with elaborate ceremony and stately robes. All that gratifies our curiosity, but what we really want to see, is the game."

Cathedrals, diocesan programs, and endowments, all have their place, but all these are individual plays. What the Church has called for is mass formation. After centuries of trying to go around the line, we have found out that the play does not carry. If we are going to call ourselves a Church, or even dare to call ourselves The Church, let's be a Church, which means, if it mean anything, an organization vitalized into an organism. The episcopate simply means that the diocese is the unit. A number of isolated units do not suggest or imply unity. There are a great many people that think that U. S. means us, but it doesn't.

THE NOVEL

The defense of the salacious novel is that it conforms to canons of art. It is argued that no story has vogue unless it receives the approval of the public as a faithful portrayal of existing conditions. If it were this and no more, even the novels dealing with the ugly facts of human society would have distinct value. Our contention is that the psychology of the novel is false. This may be due to the traditions of the novel itself.

The novel came into existence in Italy at a time when that country felt first of all the nations of Europe the mighty surging of a new age. There was not a seat of government in that land of many principalities that was not built upon rapine and murder and maintained by assassination. In every life from the highest to the lowest there was contempt of law, and none in his heart recognized the bonds of law and society. A monstrous egoism was the rule. There was no restraint upon thoughts, feeling or behavior. When none could prove his title to his possessions, respect for anything or anybody disappeared. With the long imprisoned intellect suddenly set free, with passions left without even the suggestion of discipline, in the midst of a social and political world that was openly and shamelessly predatory, the individual loomed larger than ever before in history. As we look back at them one seems to be looking at life through a magnifying glass. There are giants of intellect and monsters of lust and murder, moving in the light of newly discovered beauty, and listening to songs whose music echoes still. Humor where there is any, might seem to have fashioned itself after the pattern of the table-talk of hell.

The element of society, which today constitutes the most precious and interesting feature of life, is wholly lacking in this picture. There are no boys and girls. The youths that are seen are only precocious reprobates. The girls do not appear at all, for they alone have been omitted from the list of the emancipated and are kept in seclusion till they emerge to be given in marriage to those who are in most cases utter strangers and frequently middle-aged and hardened by vice and dissipation. Whatever of romance could come into a woman's life came after her marriage, and the eternal triangle which forms so prominent a feature of the modern novel was a usual and inevitable phase of medieval domestic life in Italy. The sordid intrigues of such an existence form the theme of the first novels. The background is a state of society in which morality was a word which had no meaning.

Love, which is the theme of these early novels, is here seen in its most unlovely form. It is ever synonymous with predatory passion. Tragedy is bloody and ruthless, as a death in the jungle, and comedy knows no spring of clean laughter. The brook by the way is a muddy and defiled stream, and he who drinks thereof does not lift up his head.

The world has traveled far since those days. Predatory passion is known for what it is, a coward and a traitor. The lesson of the centuries is that children constitute not only the potential but actual assets of society, and that the love of boy and girl for one another is the most interesting phenomenon in nature. The problem novel is only the picture of a condition that represents and appeals to the lowest part of man's nature. The figures of such a drama are men and women who are either throw-backs to an earlier stage of social development, or are the social incompetents of the present.

The art that depicts the disordered strivings of these victims of their own disregard of discovered truth as the struggle for a larger freedom, has mistaken the fever of disease for the quickened pulse of healthy tissue at play.

THE CRUSADE TO END WAR--WHAT TO DO ABOUT IT

By Sidney L. Gullick

THE recurrence of Armistice Day again raises the question, "What is to be done in order to end war?" Mere denunciation of war will not end it. Descriptions of the horrors, costs, cruelty, injustices, sufferings, futility, and even of the sins of war, will not abolish it. As well expect denunciations to stop the various ravages of the periodic floods of some mighty river. Only great feats of engineering skill can control raging waters in flood time. Dikes strong and well placed must be built to keep them in their proper channel. This is a world of cause and effect. If we really want to end all war, and if we are sensible men and women, we will deal with the causes of war. As well expect a huge powder magazine to refuse to explode when the lighted fuse reaches the powder, as to suppose that wars can be stopped while the causes of war have been allowed to work freely.

Wars are not like floods, tornadoes and earthquakes, natural events over which men have no control. Wars spring from states of mind of peoples and nations. War-psychology brings war preparation and ultimately war. Great national injustices, wrongs, misunderstandings and misinformation, national arrogance, greed and selfishness, thoughtless or willful deeds of high officials, national policies of aggression and oppression, the general belief that "we" are always right, "they" are always wrong, "we" are a superior people and "they" inferior, and the popular assumption that really difficult disputes between peoples can and must be settled by appeals to brute force—these are the fundamental causes of war.

If war, therefore, is to be ended, in some way a new psychology must be instilled into the mental processes of millions of men in many nations. Whole peoples must learn to think peace and to will peace. When difficult disputes arise, nations must naturally assume that resort will be had to judicial processes or to arbitration. They must be ready to think that "we" may perhaps be wrong or at least partly wrong, and "they" right or partly right. There must develop among many nations the desire to be fair to each other.

Nations must also recognize that a new world has come upon us in which absolute independence, unlimited sovereignty and complete self-sufficiency are no longer possible; that instead of each nation living only for itself, the lives and interests of all are so intertwined that they must live for each other; that only by mutual help can each reach its own best and highest aims. National desire for international cooperation in all kinds of endeavor must take the place of fierce rivalry and mutually destructive competition. Entire nations must discover that even in such questions as national security and honor, international justice and economic opportunity, the nations can more surely achieve their legitimate ambitions when they cooperate than when they seek these ends independently, by their own right arms.

The real question, therefore, in the program for the abolition of war, is how this new peace-psychology can be created and made powerful to each nation. To be very concrete, how can it be created here in America? Evidently it is a stupendous task. Nothing less than a crusading spirit can furnish the enthusiasm to put the program through. But the crusader must be directed by sanity, and they must work together. And there must be wise leaders, great engineers in human undertakings, creative minds producing constructive measures of many kinds, all looking to the ultimate goal—the complete outlawry of war as a legitimate and accepted method for settling disputes between nations.

In this short article we wish to ask merely this: What can I do about it? What can a single individual man or woman with no official position in national life or even in a community, do really to help in the campaign to end war? This is the practical question which millions of earnest citizens are asking themselves.

The first thing is of course to get some suggestive book or pamphlet and inform yourself. Find out what constructive proposals have been made for ending war. What for instance is meant by the outlawry of war? What is the World Court of Justice and how is it working? How about the League of Nations? What is it doing? What are some of the disputes that make disarmament difficult? Just what is the dispute between America and Japan? Is there some way of meeting the just demands of both nations? Get acquainted with the constructive proposals—the great dikes in process of building for controlling the raging floods of human passions and national ambitions. Familiarize yourself with the machinery and the levers for turning the causes that easily lead to conflict into efforts for the common good. Learn the facts regarding plans for outlawing war, for building up real international courts of justice, for securing cooperation between nations in matters of national safety, justice and honor.

When you know the facts, then you can talk about them. Talk to your friends and neighbors; help to get them interested and informed. This is the way to help create public opinion.

But there are also other ways in which you can aid. Talk to your pastor. Tell him how much interested you are in the question and that you want to help. Suggest how important it is for your church as a church to take its part in the drive to end war. Ask him to preach about it. Tell him that in your belief the Church is not doing its full work in proclaiming the Gospel and in establishing the Kingdom of God, unless it puts itself on record and seeks to teach all its members on the question of war and peace. You might suggest that the Church as a Church ought to adopt a peace plank as a part of its working creed and a peace program as a part of its regular work; that, as a Church, it should make a regular contribution in support of the anti-war crusade. You do not need to say this all at once of course. As suitable opportunity offered you might also suggest the hope that all the churches of the city might get together and work together in the educational campaign; that at least once or twice each year great public meetings might be held on this subject, when outstanding national speakers might be secured. Let your pastor know your personal thought on such matters as these.

Urge him to start study classes in the Sunday School. The various adult groups of men and women can give time to the study of these questions. Suggest the formation of a Church Committee on International Goodwill, to help him in this part of the church work. This Committee might well include an officer or two of the church, two or three leading members of the congregation—both men and women, and some young people from the Sunday School and the young people's societies.

The Church Committee may be asked to be responsible for finding the best books on the problem of outlawing war and establishing a world-peace system. It may see that these books are placed in the Sunday-School library and are so advertised to all church members as to be widely read.

This Church Committee may also urge the public library to have a shelf of these books easily accessible to readers. It may arrange for pageants and concerts and lectures dealing with these questions. It may promote the formation of similar committees in neighboring churches. When several churches have such committees they may join in holding big public rallies on world questions once or twice a year. This committee will be the connecting link between the local church and the national agencies of the churches for carrying on the crusade to substitute law for war.

The point I wish to make absolutely clear is this. One wide-awake, consecrated, intelligent, resourceful individual in each church can accomplish wonders if he has faith and will really do what he can along the lines suggested above.

THAT YE MAY KNOW HIM

By the Reverend Phillips E. Osgood

In St. Mark's Outlook.

MODERN knowledge of the basic facts of religion has advanced far beyond that of our childhood days. It is not too much to say that the Bible has been re-discovered and re-hallowed in our life-time. A tremendous transformation has taken place in the reasoned faith of many students, and for its vital betterment. More of us should share this vitalizing process.

A recent book by James Harvey Robinson deals with the unquestionable thesis that science has in our day created many new values and brought to realization many a potential blessing; but that far too much of the result of scientific labor is still confined within laboratory walls. He claims that the major task of this generation is the popularization of these scientific findings, that the rank and file of the people may take advantage of the marvels awaiting their appropriation and application.

The identical plea should be made in the even more important realm of Christian faith. The results of research are all re-assuring and re-vitalizing. They are potentially powerful. They bring faith to grips with the realities of life. The believer should be re-created by this clear-cut, now scientifically-established, constructive belief made ready for him. Yet the average Christian is unaware of this mobilization of demonstrated facts in his favor; he is carrying his faith on the Sunday School basis of his youthful days, despite the fact that the theological world "do move." His language of thought is still too unreal; he has not translated his mental processes on religion into contemporary definiteness, he still has the lurking fear of sentimentality if he gives himself over to traditional religion. How needless!

One would expect that Christians could in modern language "give a reason for the faith that is in them." But the amazing, staggering truth is that too many of us do not know exactly what we believe nor accurately why we believe it! The life, point of view, claims and significance of Jesus of Nazareth are not the solid basis for a clean-cut philosophy and practice.

Jesus taught a definite philosophy. It was not traditional in His own day, nor entirely the traditional interpretation of it now. He was the discoverer and revealer of a power hitherto undiscovered, just as definite as electricity. Only on a higher level of life. His followers verified that power. His death actually, demonstrably, did for them what He claimed it would do; and what He asserts it can do for us. He committed His followers to a definite policy and vision. The Apostolic Church "carried on" the revealed power of its Master. The Presence of the Lord was its strength in ways history now acknowledges. The Church has a definite "platform" in His name. Do we know all this?

Could You Take an Examination on Even the Main Outlines?

Many of us count ourselves indeed out of touch with modernity unless we are alertly informed of current events. More of us are anxious to read "the latest book" than are anxious to keep abreast of the recent developments of the most important thing in life—Christian faith. Even expertness in bridge whist is sometimes put ahead of expertness in religious fact! Many of us are more up-to-date about moving picture personnel or the football schedule or the theatrical world or political details than we are on Christian facts. To put it with the utmost brutality, it is a safe wager that some of us are better acquainted with Andy Gump or with Walt and Skeezix than we are with the details of the life of Paul or even of Jesus Himself. Ask yourself which you know the better.

There's bluntness for you, good friend!

There Are Extenuations.

Yes, if the mediaevalized figure of a magic Christ is the only one possible for us, there are extenuations. But a factual, miraculous, proveable, demonstrated Christ with His feet firmly set on the rocks of vindicated Reality is proffered to us nowadays. We are potentially nearer the actual Jesus and His Apostles than any generation since the Apostolic Church. The reason for the amazing degree of listlessness here and there about the New Testament is that this generation has little satisfaction in any doctrine carried over without relationship with other fields of scientific, cultural development since the Reformation. The trouble is not with non-progressive religion, but with non-progressive religionists, wherever found. The re-discovered Master interests, satisfies and builds the faith of every person eager for Reality. The study of Apostolic Church gives the evidence such a person wishes as proving his own birthright and accrediting if he casts in his lot with the Son of Man. When the re-discovered Jesus is more widely known He will be again, but in greater might than ever before, the Master of life.

Nothing Personal.

The rector does not want to be misunderstood as claiming any personal ability beyond the ordinary in this matter. He is not asking nor desiring any personal halo of infallibility. He makes no assertion that he has in any way made any original contributions to the Cause. He does, however, recognize that the modern clergyman has been admitted behind the doors of the laboratory of scientific scholarship and that it is his bounden duty to do his bit in the dissemination and popularization of such amazingly re-establishing vindications as, but for the average clergyman, are too likely to remain the mental property of the theological few. He would be false to his trust if he did not summon his people to give ear to the findings of the great students of this age, who have re-validated Christianity and made it mighty for the needs of this new day. Like John the Baptizer, any clergyman will humbly insist, "I am a Voice" for the reverent, constructive, testing, discovering thinkers who have arrived at Fact and provide the Holy Fact for this purveying.

Nothing is more important to the modern man or woman than modern Bible study. The responsibility of modern ambassadorship for Christ is upon us. How shall we fit ourselves? These Bible Classes are not the only nor probably the best, means. But, unless we prefer and find and apply ourselves, steadily and conscientiously, by some other method, they are convenient, they are provided, and they are one chance to get what we need. Shall we so utilize them? Together?

Incidentally, pray for the man who has the responsibility and privilege of conducting them. He needs it, God knows!

DR. ANGUS CRAWFORD

By the Reverend Arthur B. Kinsolving, D. D.

OUR little life is so soon "rounded in a sleep," the air closes so soon behind the arrow, and the sea behind the keel that cleaves it, that those who enter into the labors of other men do well to stop and offer tribute to men who have notably served Our Lord Christ and His Church. With quiet dignity and submission Dr. Angus Crawford fell asleep on the eighth of September in the little home from which he might see the cupola of the beloved Seminary which he had served as Dean for eighteen years. Few men have hewed more steadfastly to the line of a high purpose. The whole modern reestablishment of the Seminary, which had been unspeakably impoverished by the desolations of the War Between the States, dates from his coming. Dr. Crawford was first a thorough scholar, one of the best Hebrew students who came under the teaching of William R. Harper. He was a Master of Arts of the University of Toronto, a graduate of the Philadelphia Divinity School, studied at Yale, and for a time at Berlin. He was very thoroughly trained in natural science before he made his specialty the Semitic languages, and always enjoyed an advantage from knowing both science and theology. Deliberate in reaching conclusions, he generally knew his ground, and could give a pretty sound reason for the faith that was in him.

The writer left a year too soon to be one of his pupils, but he vividly remembers the great impulse he gave to the study of Hebrew. It came just in time to equip men the better for an intelligent part in the controversies concerning higher criticism, from which such a harvest has been reaped. And the figure of Dr. Crawford, reading from his Hebrew Bible at Morning Prayers in his home, and from his Greek New Testament at evening, reminds one of a quiet afternoon in Salisbury Cathedral, when in the presence of some Greek ecclesiastics, the then Bishop of Salisbury went to the lectern and turned the Second Lesson into modern Greek. Dr. Crawford had much wisdom in dealing with the various problems with which students for holy orders are wont to grapple, and was the mentor of many a neophyte during his early parochial experience. He and Mrs. Crawford, his gracious wife, offered a hospitality at "The Wilderness" which will ever be cherished by the hundreds who enjoyed it.

But the Dean was as gifted and useful as a man of affairs as he was as a scholar and a teacher. On the fine grounds of the Seminary Hill, with their glorious oaks and mellow memories, he found a group of buildings in sad need of enlargement and renewal. It is not invidious to say that, in a material way, up to the time of his retirement, no one except Bishop Meade had done as much for the Seminary as he. The list of generous benefactors whom he directly interested in this Theological School is too long to recite, but some names may not be omitted. A lasting debt of gratitude is due him for bringing these persons in generous touch with the institution: Mr. Samuel K. Wilson of New Jersey, Mr. H. H. Houston and his son, Mr. S. F. Houston of Philadelphia, Mr. Alexander Brown and Mr. E. H. Williams of Philadelphia, Mrs. H. A. Beale and Mrs. F. H. Wyeth of the same city, Mr. George A. Reinicker of Baltimore, and Mr. John Black, who became, under Dr. Crawford's gentle and persuasive influence, the largest benefactor in the first century of the Seminary's life.

Dr. Crawford also established the "class plan," which did much to knit and strengthen the bond between graduate students and their alma mater. For thirty-three years this godly and well-learned man walked before his students with an eye single to his Master's glory, beautifying the gardens and temples of God on earth, and witnessing ever to man's higher life and hope. In his home, his lecture-room, in his diocese, and in the General Convention he bore himself with such dignity and steadfast purpose that he has left behind a group of friends who will always think of him with gratitude and affection. His erect and soldierly figure, his well-chiseled, purposeful face will be missed by many when the sons of the Seminary gather on "The Hill," but he has woven his influence into the life of a noble institution and made it stronger for all the years to come.

BISHOP JOHNSON IN THE VESTRY

Vestrymen

IT IS with much hesitation and no little searchings of heart that I presume to address an editorial to these pillars of the Church.

I have known many of you intimately for thirty years and individually you are the finest group of men that I know anywhere.

If you could be made to take your job seriously the Church could afford to have inadequate bishops and inefficient rectors, for you occupy the same position in the Church Militant that non-commissioned officers occupy in the regular army; with this difference, that a non-commissioned officer has come up through a period of training into a position of responsibility, whereas in the Church Militant I am afraid that most vestrymen just happen to be vestrymen without any special training in the duties of their office.

In the regular army it doesn't make so much difference about colonels and captains if the sergeants are onto their job, but how can men be effective sergeants if they have never learned?

What is a vestryman?

First: He is the man selected to represent the parish in a business way. He is the man who is to provide ways and means for the parish to function. He should bring into the vestry meeting the same kind of a vision that he has in the street. There he has usually a big vision and a commanding position. Too often he comes into the vestry meeting with a small vision and a capacity for passing the buck. (I do not have to explain this simile to most vestrymen.) I believe it was Will Rogers who made this comment on American life: "First there was the passing of the buffalo; then the passing of the antelope; and now the passing of the buck." I always thought that Will Rogers had a keen insight into American life.

Second: He is, or should be, the confidential adviser of the rector.

I know rectors who do not consult their vestries; who incur bills and adopt radical changes without taking the vestry into their confidence. I am sure God loves these rectors, but I am equally sure that He does not admire them.

But one of the conditions that a rector has the right to expect is that if the vestry is to be consulted they should have some knowledge of matters in which he is vitally interested.

How can vestrymen have knowledge, having never learned? Many of them are absurdly ignorant about what is going on in the Church. I would like to ask a group of vestrymen:

Who is the Presiding Bishop of the Church?

What is the National Council?

What great hospital is the Church conducting in the Orient?

What great college that the Church is backing holds an enviable position in the Orient?

What remarkable work is being done by the Church in the Philippines?

What is the Church doing in Brazil, Cuba, Porto Rico, Alaska, Honolulu?

Really you could not be an effective member of Congress if you knew nothing about the foreign relations of our country.

If the rector is to confide in his vestry he has a right to expect that the vestry should be interested enough to know the setting in which the parish is working.

Third: A vestryman represents the whole Church to the parish.

A bishop is not consecrated Bishop of New York but of the Church.

A priest is not ordained rector of Trinity Church, but in the Church of God.

A vestryman is not merely a cog in the machinery of the parish, but an official of the Episcopal Church in the United States of America.

What of it? Do you know what the present national debt of the Church is and do you have any relation to it?

You cannot run a prosperous parish in a bankrupt whole.

I take off my hat to the power that resides in a vestry that is informed, intelligent, interested and industrious; but a vestry which is the reverse of all this is a drag and not a dynamo in the progress of the Church.

How can vestries become informed?

Chiefly through reading.

There is a Spirit of Missions published at 281 Fourth Avenue, New York, which tells what the Church is doing. It will cost you $1.00 a year. You ought to read it. It is the best missionary publication in the United States.

There are four Church weeklies:

The Churchman, New York City, $4.00 a year.

The Living Church, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, $4.00 a year.

The Southern Churchman, Richmond, Virginia, $3.00 a year.

The Witness, Chicago, $2.00 a year.

Perhaps none of them are much.

How can they be?

We have a million communicants in the United States and less than forty thousand take a Church paper. Of course it is the old question of the hen and the egg. Which should come first? A newspaper of high order or a reading constituency?

Speaking as an editor I would reply that you can't produce much until you have a constituency that wants something.

We have the most generally intelligent and the most specifically ignorant constituency of any ecclesiastical body in the United States; and for this reason we are not using the latent power which lies hidden in uninformed men of great natural capacity.

BOOK REVIEWS

THE NEW DECALOGUE OF SCIENCE. By Albert Edward Wiggam. The Bobs-Merrill Company, Indianapolis, Ind. Pp. 288.

This volume is quite unique both in matter and style. The author has prepared it in the form of letters to "His Excellency in the Executive Mansion."

The first five chapters are warnings as to the necessity for certain changes in the present outlook on life. These warnings are addressed to the scientists as well as to those in political authority. The author's style is unusual and interesting. He takes a purely scientific view of the universe, and believes that the only hope for our present civilization is through the application of the scientific method and approach to every political, social and economic problem. After the five warnings comes a chapter entitled "The New Mount Sinai—The Laboratory," which is introductory to what he terms the New Decalogue of Science, which he sets forth under the following headings: "The Duty of Eugenics, of Scientific Research, of Socialization of Science, of Measuring Men, of Humanizing Industry, of Preferential Reproduction, of Trusting Intelligence, of Art, of Internationalism, of Philosophical Reconstruction." The author presents a tremendous amount of information, which other scientists say is correct, and is certainly offered in a style that makes exceedingly interesting reading. We do not in the least agree with his conclusions, but believe the book may accomplish a good deal by presenting a new viewpoint to both scientists and practical men of affairs.

CHURCH AND COMMUNITY RECREATION. By Albert Ben Wegener. Macmillan Company, New York. Pp. 248.

This is a really valuable book for clergymen or community leaders who are interested in the great problem of wholesome recreation. It is interestingly written, beginning with a history of recreation, reaching back to earliest historical times, and coming down to practical programs for community gatherings, both in town and country. The author has been lecturing on this subject for a number of years, and does not deal in theory, having been an active Y. M. C. A. Director for a great while. Not only does he give a great many definite programs and practical suggestions, but he refers to books on every phase of this subject, giving author and publisher, so that through this volume a whole library on recreation could be procured. We most heartily commend this book to all persons who are interested in this important subject.

THE PEEP-SHOW MAN. By Padraic Colum. Macmillan Company, New York. $1.00.

SING-SONG AND OTHER POEMS FOR CHILDREN. By Christina Rossetti. Macmillan. $1.00.

A BABY'S LIFE OF JESUS CHRIST. By Mary F. Rolt. Macmillan. $1.00.

These three volumes from the "Little Library," make one wish to be six years old again, for just an hour or two of a winter afternoon. They must look so enticing to six-year-old eyes! As it is we can only advise the Southern Churchman's family of children to acquire the Little Library as fast as they can. Begin with "A Baby's Life of Jesus Christ," in which the Sweet Story of Old is told so simply that the most restless small mind will be captured when Mother reads it aloud. Every little Poet will want "Sing-Song," to put on his own book-shelf beside his "Child's Garden of Verses." Not the beloved Stevenson himself possesses more truly than Christina Rossetti the faculty of seeing through a child's eyes. The Peep-Show Man, a collection of three stories by one of a brilliant coterie of modern Irish writers, can be more fully appreciated by an older child—even so old a child as the reviewer. From the somewhat wearisome level of most books published for children these stand out, by virtue in part of their charming dress and illustrations, but especially because they are real masterpieces, by which not only the child's fancy is amused, but his imagination stimulated and his taste for the best in literature cultivated.

M. L. G.

SEWARD'S FOLLY. By Edison Marshall. Published by Little, Brown and Company, Boston, Mass. Pp. 312. Price $2.00.

The story is all absorbing and one reads the book with breathless interest.

The life in Alaska is vividly told, and the social life is almost royal in its elegance and formality. The officers appear to be well-bred gentlemen, but they prove to be corrupt and mercenary, and any one who opposes them, disappears mysteriously and is transported to the Siberian desert.

There seemed no law or order. The light thrown on the negotiations for the Alaskan territory is very illuminating and whether historical or not, it makes a fascinating story.

Our hero, supposedly a gentleman with generations of cultured ancestors, is a snob in every sense of the word, feeling himself superior to the universe. He is not a fair representative of the South, although he is supposed to be. He had not the insight to recognize a thoroughbred in a rough environment, but the heroine's bravery and courage finally makes him realize his superficiality and her superiority. She is a splendid type of the new woman.

M. H. M.

NOW I KNOW. By John Archibald MacCallum. The Macmillan Company, New York. Pp. 164.

This author deals briefly with subjects that have heretofore been considered from a doctrinal viewpoint, but his method is not that of the setter-forth of doctrines. He arrives at his conclusions through his own experiences about God, Christ, the Holy Spirit, Man, Sin, the Incarnation, the Atonement, etc., and recognizes that religion of today must be approached on this basis. The day of compelling people to belief by merely falling back upon ancient authority Mr. MacCallum believes to be past. In his preface he frankly tells us that:

"Whether we like it or not, the day of external authority is gone in the religion of the educated man. Never again will a reference to Genesis be accepted as proof that the earth is flat. When the leaders of the Church fall back upon authority and attempt to tell men today what they must believe they are making a fatal mistake. If the men of tomorrow are to be saved to Christianity, Christianity must be made acceptable to them in the open market of ideas. I believe that this can be done, but only if Christianity is presented as a vitalizing experience rather than as a series of propositions which must be accepted without question."

Each topic is handled briefly, and with a freshness that makes it very readable, although dealing with deep subjects.

P RAYER THAT PREVAILS. Compiled and Composed by Marshall Dawson. The MacMillan Company. Pp. 162.

The subtitle of this book explains quite fully the contents, "A Psychological Approach to the Practice of Personal and Public Prayer, with Examples." There is very little original composition by the author, but his approach to the subject of prayer is exceedingly interesting, and certainly modern. Thus on his first page he tells us that:

"Psychology and biology have swept out clear of the rubbish of half-knowledge and uncovered the instinctive foundations of prayer. Gifted philosophers like James and Bergson have traced the pulse beats in the arteries of our health and mind-power into the depths of the instinctive and subconscious nature.

"This discovery is no less important, to mental, moral, and religious hygiene, than was the discovery of the circulation of the blood, to the theory and practice of medicine. It has not, indeed, changed religious revelation; but it has established religious exercise and therapeutics upon the basis of a science."

Later he makes the assertion that "Statesmen pray to-day. The heart's desire of discerning folk is that they shall pray more, not less. If cynical groups sneer at the statesman who prays, the verdict of science and humanity is against the one who sneers and for the one who prays." It is refreshing to find an author who approaches prayer with such a modern view, and yet with so much confidence. After some twenty-five pages of this kind of introduction we find a compilation of prayers for every occasion beginning with "Family Religion," and including thanksgivings for the cold of winter, the awakening life of spring, the summer's rains, and autumn's glowing colors. Sports are not forgotten, and a prayer is given to be used "Before the football game." The practice of meditation is not neglected and suggested Bible readings, and excellent verses are selected for this important part of the prayer life. Altogether we commend this volume most heartily to those seeking an addition to their list of devotional books.

THREE REASONS FOR THE SPREAD OF CRIME

A MAN who seems to know what he is talking about, for he is president of one of the oldest crime insurance companies in the country, tells us that more money was stolen, or seized by bandits, last year than is required to run the government. He puts the figure at three billion dollars. What is more alarming still is his assertion that fully seventy-five per cent of this filching has been done by youths under twenty-five years of age, many of them in their teens. A college president tells us that where formerly no locks or keys were needed to protect property from being stolen, now articles disappear even in spite of locked doors, so callous has the conscience of not a few young men, ambitious for a higher education, become. This is not news, for who does not know the serious collapse of the moral sense that has taken place within recent years, especially since the outbreak of the recent war?

How are we to explain this appalling epidemic of crime? The reasons for it are not far to seek. Among those that have been named again and again, and that are now being named by this insurance president, are three outstanding ones.

First, the tremendous increase of luxurious living among the people taken as a whole. A friend tells us he entered a fine department store just to catch a glimpse of how things looked inside. A saleslady politely asked him whether she could show him anything he specially wanted. His reply was that all he wanted was to see an up-to-date store, and then remarked: "I see that more than half the things you sell people do not actually need." "Yes," was the reply, "luxuries are more in demand than necessities." This accords with what another man of intelligence had to say while standing at a show window where goods at fancy prices were being displayed. He remarked that he could not find among them a single article which supplied an actual need. Drink, with a fondness for luxurious and extravagant living, is the disease from which the youth of our land are suffering. Money is needed for that mode of living, and ever more money, and as conscience no longer speaks, get it any way you can. That explains much.

Second, the failure to punish crime with swift and sure penalties. This is given as a second reason, and who doubts that it has much to do with the spread of crime? Many jurists and lawyers are beginning to realize it. We have grown far away from Lincoln's conception of a lawyer's duty when called to defend a criminal suspect. He defended his client up to the point only where he became convinced of his guilt, and then turned him over to suffer the penalty he deserved. That mode of procedure would be considered a novelty today, though it must be said that there are many lawyers who have no taste for defending criminals. The practice of long-drawn-out court trials where all sorts of technicalities and tricks are resorted to to defeat justice has become scandalous. Need we wonder that the popular faith in legal procedure has been rudely shaken? The edge has been taken off the sense of righteousness, and justice has ceased to be stern. The spirit of lawlessness is abroad as an inevitable result. Add to this popular maudlin sentiment which shouts condemnation in one breath and then shed tears of pity in another and the failure of justice becomes clear.

Third, the weakening of religious and moral restraints is named as another reason. It is the main reason. We have too many pagan parents in our homes, and too many critics of the Church and religion in editorial and professional chairs. It is easier to paint a good thing black than to help to rid it of stains with which the wickedness and frailty of man have soiled it. If some critics of the Bible who do not know the A. B. C. of the Christian religion would quit picking out of it detached statements that have little or nothing to do with the essentials of the Christian faith, statements which they hold up to ridicule because they do not like them, and would pay some attention to the vital questions that are bound up with the Person of Christ and His work and mission here upon earth, the religion of Christ would not be the discarded thing it is in millions of American homes. It is about time to ask the man and the woman who seldom see the inside of a church to what extent they are directly responsible for the crime and lawlessness that exist. To let the Church and religion severely alone is only second in culpability to criticizing them. It helps to undermine the moral and religious structure on which character and conscience must rest more than the blatant ribaldry of skeptics and unbelievers. No more effective contribution to crime and immorality can be made than is made by multitudes of people who neither rob nor steal nor practice immorality than to sit in homes on Sunday, or run away in automobiles and let the preachers and their bands of faithful workers attack unaided the problem of training up the youth in the fear of the Lord. We need to get back to some old but discarded ideas of training up children in the way they should go, and many parent need an awakening. Unless there is an awakening of parental responsibility for the Christian training of children, there will come a kind of awakening to the Church and the nation that will be far from welcome.—The Lutheran.

And for the dead of Death; to Thee
I trust it; for indeed I know that he Through his life's appointed days
Has stood not idle in the market place,
He dies not, no! there is no death for him,
No death, but only change,

Beyond this earthly range.
New life, new work, with servant seraphim.
O Lord of Service! Lord of Life!
Grant me that guerdon in the other life,
New service there—that with my latest breath,
Be my one prayer, O living Lord of Death.

PROGRESS TOWARD WORLD PEACE.

One of the many advantages that accrue from such international days as the Sunday nearest July 28 and Armistice Day is that such occasions offer the opportunity of climbing up above our own little world of national affairs, and looking out upon the broad expanse of international relationships.

It is not often that such an outlook will show such tremendous strides toward a warless world, as have been taken in the past three months.

The drafting and adoption of the arbitration protocol by the League of Nations in September marks one of the greatest strides toward world peace that has ever occurred. As the New York Times impressively states it in an editorial entitled "A Turning Point":

"On the first day of September, 1924, it was the accepted doctrine that any country had a right to go to war for the attainment of its own purposes, and that this right could not be challenged without an unfriendly act upon the part of another Power. On October 1, one month later, the accepted principle is that an aggressor State is an outlaw among nations; that other States may proceed to the chastisement of the aggressor or take steps to prevent the menace of aggression from becoming real, without themselves becoming parties to a conflict. In other words, the old boundaries of neutrality and belligerency no longer exist, and for the first time in human history international affairs are placed upon a moral basis."

Those of us who are sufficiently familiar with United States History will remember the great amount of negotiation that it took to arrange an arbitration treaty between the United States and England, and that after all the efforts of Secretary Alney it failed of ratification in the United States Senate. Again nearly a quarter of a century later it was the ambition of William J. Bryan in his brief administration of the State Department to negotiate arbitration treaties with a great many different nations, but the World War prevented the consummation of his plans. His negotiations were carried on with more than a score of nations.

We refer to these events because they show that arbitration has been an object of American diplomacy for many years, and now that forty-seven of the leading nations of the world have entered into this protocol, which is an outgrowth of the League of Nations, it will offer this country the opportunity of participating in it, even though we may not go into the League itself.

The provisions of the protocol are as follows:

"Differences between nations are to be conciliated by the Council of the League, if practicable, or are to be submitted to judicial arbitration in the manner prescribed by the Covenant of the League. If this cannot be done, arbitration must be initiated if either party to the controversy asks it, and where the other party delays, the Council of the League can settle the details of the method of arbitration to be followed. The findings reached in this manner would be binding on both parties.

Should this channel be closed by the refusal of either to ask for arbitration, the Council of the League must again consider the issue. Signatories promise to accept any verdict the Council may hand down by unanimous vote in these circumstances. If the verdict is accepted by one of the powers, it cannot thereafter be called into question.

When it fails of unanimity, the Council must name a committee of arbitrators. These are to be the court of last resort, except when one of the clashing powers demurs on the ground that the issue is domestic and not international. Then the arbitrators must ask the opinion of the World Court and if advised by tribunal that the demurrer is well-founded, the arbitrators must so report.

In sum, the terms of the protocol interpreted along with those of the covenant are intended to cover every possible political cause of conflict between nations, except where the World Court decides that an issue is domestic and the other party to the quarrel refuses, despite the ruling, to refrain from war. Even in this extreme case, the Council of the League would not be powerless.

During all the stages of arbitration, the signatories agree they will not mobilize in any way for war. Where the charge is brought that mobilization is in progress, the League of Nations can investigate and, if it finds evidence to justify the charge, can call on the offending power to halt preparations for war. Failure to comply with such a call from the League is to be construed as a breach of the covenant and of the protocol, and can be punished as the League may decide.

A power that violates the agreement in specified ways, or fails to submit to arbitration, is to be decreed the aggressor and is to be subjected to sanctions that must be outlined in more detail."

There were present at the Geneva Assembly of the League of Nations thirteen Foreign Ministers, and more than a hundred Cabinet Members who took part in drawing up this plan, so that it comes from the heads and hearts of practical statesmen and is the most notable advance towards peace.

ROOF TALK OR COMMON SENSE.

In the list of suggested activities for Christian people published on this page three weeks ago there was one that no doubt many a good Church-goer labeled as "roof talk" if indeed it was given any attention at all.

That item was this, "Secure Annual Medical Examination for Your Church Cradle Roll." Unfortunately very few of our Sunday Schools are sufficiently well organized to have a "cradle roll." Even when there is one we do not often think of the infants in the congregation of the average Episcopal Church as being so neglected as to require an annual examination to guard against malnutrition or anything of that sort.

The writer, who is an enthusiast for every kind of social service, was a little skeptical of the value of such a suggestion, but the prime mover in the preparation of this list is a member of the staff of the State Board of Health, and she was very insistent upon this feature of the program.

Within a week after the preparation and publication of the suggested parish program an editorial appeared in a daily paper which would seem fully to justify the value of an annual physical examination for children of all classes. This editorial is as follows:

"In one of the orphanages of the city, all the children and all the attendants on the day school were weighed and measured. The youngsters under institutional care were found to be well-nourished in almost every instance and were up to the average for their age and height. In the whole school, only sixteen per cent of the pupils were as much as seven per cent or more underweight.

The nurses thereupon went to one of the best private schools in the city and subjected to the same tests a considerable number of children between the ages of seven and fourteen. To their amazement, the investigators discovered that fifty-three per cent of the students examined were seven per cent or more underweight according to the standard averages.

Negligible undernourishment in an orphanage, more than half the children undernourished in a school that draws its patronage from persons somewhat above the financial level of the community—the contrast is enough to make one ponder.

Certainly, the children in the private school did not suffer from an unusual degree of organic disease. That possible explanation of the figures may be eliminated. The question then is, How much of the undernourishment of the children of prosperous families is due to excessive fatigue and how much to bad dietary habits?"

The ideal situation would be to have the whole population given a physical examination once a year. At present, if this were suggested eighty per cent of the people would immediately jump to the conclusion that they had some fatal disease or such a thing would not be thought of.

Now if the Church could begin to educate its infants to the idea of an annual examination it would be taking a long step in preventive medicine.

The Gospel of good health was an important part of Our Saviour's teaching and it should be the part of His Church to do all in its power to promote it.

The Great Commission

FROM BISHOP ROWE.

Bishop Rowe in writing from Point Hope, Alaska, on September 1, says:

"After all I managed to reach Point Hope on the small 'Bureau of Education, Boxer'. Now the question is how and when to get away from here. Already two steamers, near Point Barrow, have been crushed, and lost by the ice. The 'Boxer' is, if still safe, marooned by the ice field. A small boat has just made this mission with some members of one of the lost ships. We are housing them. They fill the house. This has been the worst season in the recollection of the oldest inhabitants. I have been here now four Sundays. I never saw the weather so bad as it has been on this visit. Every day it has fierce wind from the North, and so cold! I could not keep warm, was laid up some days with a croupy cold. Am better, but have a bad cough.

"The Thomas family is well. Everything is in good shape here. The natives killed sixteen whales—a 'big killing'—and have plenty of food. Tony is well—also his wife and two children. His work is excellent. Mr. Thomas finds the tractor of great service. No sickness. I confirmed a class of twenty-two."

THE SITUATION IN CHINA.

Bishop Graves, writing on September 24, says:

"The situation here is not very different from what it was last week. Everybody at the out-stations is well and at work. At St. Andrew's, Wusih, St. Luke's, Shanghai, and at the Church Hospital at Zangzok, our doctors are doing a great deal of work for wounded soldiers. When the Chinese soldiers are wounded the Chinese authorities seem to wash their hands of them. At Soochow there are more than a thousand wounded in the hospitals. Mr. Cox and Mr. Borrmann and some other foreigners meet the trains and put the men on stretchers to be taken to the Hospital. They say that the Chinese at the station will not handle these wounded men or the bodies of those who have died, and the foreigners have to do it themselves, and yet people will tell you that the Chinese have a good enough religion of their own."

A MEMORIAL TO MISS BULL.

Under the leadership of Bishop Naide of Osaka the Church people of the city are making gifts to a fund in memory of Miss Leila Bull, who died at her post in Osaka last March. Miss Bull had served for thirty-six years in Japan and was one of the best known American residents of that great commercial metropolis. Her service to the city was recognized by the municipality some years ago through the gift of a pass on all the trolley lines of the city.

Her Japanese friends hope to raise not less than $2,500, to be used for: a small stone to mark her grave; a small book telling briefly the story of her service in Japan; a fund, the interest upon which will be used for the training of Bible women.

While their object is especially to give the Japanese Church people of Osaka an opportunity to express their affection for Miss Bull and their gratitude for her work, they will gladly receive any gifts that American Church people may desire to make. Such gifts can be sent through the Department of Missions for forwarding to Bishop Naide. The committee in charge of the fund has already secured $750.

Church Intelligence

A Theological Seminary in Haiti.

With the opening of a theological seminary on the festival of St. Michael and All Angels a distinct advance has been made in the work of the Church in Haiti. For many years, difficulty has been experienced in the training of candidates for the ministry, not alone because of lack of instructors, but also because of the absence of Anglican theological works in French. The candidates were also under the necessity of working at some secular occupation while pursuing their studies. More than twenty years ago, the Rev. Dr. Pierre E. Jones attempted, single-handed, to supply the need and he gave the name of Bishop Burgess, of Maine, to his enterprise. More recently, as commissary for the several Bishops in charge, the Rev. A. R. Llwyd has labored to impart sufficient instruction along the line of canonical requirement.

This year Bishop Carson has leased a house, organized a faculty of four, including himself, and received five young men as the nucleus of a bona fide seminary. A number of applications were refused. These men will live in community and according to rule; already they have entered upon their studies with enthusiasm and zeal. Their names are: Derice A'bellard, Thomas Brea, Felix Dorleans, Emmanuel Heraux and Paul Holly. It is interesting to note that a brother of the last-named, both grandsons of Bishop Holly, has entered the Philadelphia Divinity School, as a candidate from the Holy Apostles' Church, Philadelphia.

After the formal enrollment of the students, the rooms of the Seminary were blessed by Archdeacon Llwyd who is Dean, and informal addresses were made by Colonel William N. McKelvy, Acting Brigade Commander of the U. S. Marine Corps, the Rev. Dr. Jones, the Rev. E. C. Jones, Archdeacon Llwyd and the Bishop.

Some Encouragement.

September 1, we were $40,000 behind in our collections over the same period last year. October 1, we are only $24,786 behind a year ago.

We have now passed the three-quarter line and are on the home stretch.

Remember that we had a surplus in 1923 of $45,714.39. It is now time to make our best efforts to beat the 1923 surplus.

We know that it can be done.

You know it can be done.

That makes it unanimous. Then let's do it.

Lewis B. Franklin.

Opening of the Theological School University of the South.

The Theological School of the University of the South began its scholastic year on September 18, with an appropriate service in All Saints' Chapel, at which all the members of the faculty were present and afterwards greeted the students with brief, inspiring, addresses. The school has an enrollment of twenty-six regular students of which twelve are new men. Among these are one Master of Arts, four Bachelors of Arts, and four from the Du Bose Memorial School with the fine training for which that school is justly celebrated.

The School had the pleasure of welcoming the Rev. Cary B. Wilmer, D. D., twenty-four years rector of Saint Luke's, Atlanta; who at the June meeting of the Board of Trustees was elected Professor of Theology, and who brings a treasure of sound and varied scholarship, of practical experience, and successful parish work.

An important change has been made in the schedule, introducing daily morning prayer in Saint Luke's Chapel and beginning the classes at eight-thirty. This does away with the eight o'clock and afternoon classes and allows Monday as a free day. Evening Prayer is said daily as usual at six o'clock, and the Holy Communion is celebrated at seven o'clock on Tuesday and Thursday mornings. At each Friday evening service a sermon is delivered by one of the upper classmen. Through the year the students assist in the reading of the service, each one for a week, receiving in his turn daily instruction in reading from the dean.

During the first term the school is fortunate in being able to offer, by Dr. Logan of the Du Bose Memorial School, a course of lectures on Religious Education, occurring twice a week. Special courses in English are given two afternoons a week to all students by Professor Long.

Two eloquent and inspiring lectures have been given to the whole school by the Rev. Loaring-Clark, one of the general missionaries of the Church. These lectures on the value and importance of preaching proved to be most helpful and instructive and would be a positive advantage for every theological school in the country.

A wedding of interest took place in All Saints' Chapel on the evening of Wednesday, September 17, when Miss Martha Washington Hunt and the Rev. William Shannon Stoney, an alumnus of the College and of the Theological School, were united in the bonds of holy matrimony. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Francis M. Osborne, Chaplain of the University.

Dr. Darius Weller Berky, Professor of Physics, died Wednesday morning, September 24, of acute peritonitis. The funeral services were conducted Thursday afternoon in All Saints' Chapel, after which the students and faculty accompanied the body to the railroad station, where it was sent to Palm, Pa., for interment. All Sewanee mourns the loss of a gentleman and a scholar who accomplished such notable scientific work in the desolate places of the world and who gave to the University eight years of devoted service indicative of his sterling character.

Dr. Dandridge Declines Bishopric of Idaho.

The Rev. Dr. E. P. Dandridge, of Christ Church, Nashville, Tenn., has decided to remain as rector of Christ Church, in preference to becoming Missionary Bishop of Idaho. His letter deciding to remain was hailed with great joy by his congregation, who rose to sing the doxology. His reasons for remaining in Nashville were weighty. His new work has just begun, and needs his continuing care. The Nashville daily press, and all classes of people as well as the members of the local parish rejoiced at his decision.

A Sunday-School Superintendent's Silver Anniversary.

In 1869 Mr. Edward S. Leadbeater was appointed Superintendent of Christ Church Sunday School, Alexandria, which position he occupied until his death in October, 1899, when he was succeeded by his son bearing the same name who has held this position to the present time. In commemoration of twenty-five years' faithful and efficient service Mr. Edward S. Leadbeater on October 26 was presented by the officers, teachers and scholars with a book entitled "A Silver Anniversary." This book told the story of a man's life in twenty-five chapters, each being a Bible text suitable to a period in his life. In addition there were twenty-five illustrations, one for each chapter, each illustration being a new one dollar silver certificate. Anniversary Sunday, as it was called, was a fitting climax to the institute recently held by this school, an account of which appeared in last week's Southern Churchman.

Field Department Organized and Working.

The work of preparation for the Every Member Canvass to be held this fall is well under way in this diocese. A new experiment that is being tried—and with the greatest confidence in its success—is the acceptance by the laymen of the chief responsibility for the conduct of this work of financing the missionary projects of the Church, both within and outside the diocese.

The principal direction of the work is in the hands of the Field Department of the Diocesan Executive Board; the members of the Department being Mr. W. D. Tyler, chairman, Mr. C. F. Cocke and the Rev. Messrs. Churchill J. Gibson and Carleton Barnwell.

The diocese has been divided into seven districts and Mr. Tyler has appointed District Chairmen for each.

As rapidly as possible these district chairmen are appointing laymen as vice-chairmen—one in each church—who will be responsible for the various phases of preparation for the canvass and the conduct of the canvass itself in their respective congregations.

The Diocesan Department of Publicity, of which the Rev. G. Otis Mead, of Roanoke, is chairman, will assist the Field Department in every way possible.

The James River Convocation.

The fourth annual meeting of the James River Convocation was held in St. Peter's Church, Altavista, the Rev. T. Carter Page, rector, October 13 and 14. The Bishop and thirteen clergy were present. The Rev. Thos. D. Lewis, D. D., of Amherst, preached the convocation sermon Monday night. The Bishop conducted the Quiet Hour service Tuesday morning. His subject was "Some Essentials for a Successful Ministry." After the Quiet Hour the Holy Communion was celebrated by the Dean of Convocation, the Rev. J. J. Gravatt, Jr., of Staunton. After some preliminary business Convocation went into a conference on the Church's Program. The leader was the Rev. Carleton Barnwell, of Lynchburg, Va. Quite a number of the members of Convocation took an active part in the conference, and it became very interesting and helpful. In the afternoon the Rev. Thomas M. Browne, of Lynchburg, read the essay on "The Christian Attitude Toward War," after which there was discussion of the subject by other members of Convocation. At the election of officers the Rev. T. Carter Page was elected Dean, the Rev. Frank Mezick, Secretary, and the Rev. J. R. Ellis, Treasurer. Convocation then adjourned to meet next in Bedford City.

The Bishop of Gloucester on Church Unity.

The Christian Unity Foundation, started fifteen years ago, and along almost the same lines as the official effort that is seeking the World Conference on Faith and Order, brings to this country Bishop Headlam of Gloucester, England, to further the cause of unity. The Bishop was heard on the subject in St. Bartholomew's and in the Brick Presbyterian Church, and later is to deliver a course at Harvard University on the Life of Christ. Bishop Headlam is the author of the Bampton lectures on "The Doctrine of the Church and Christian Reunion."

The Church of the Ascension, the Rev. M. L. Brown, rector, has had a faith healing season, with the Rev. Robert H. Bell as leader. Many times the church was crowded with people of ailments of diverse kinds. Some said they were benefited, others criticized. The rector expressed faith in the efficacy of the treatment.

Community Work in Halifax County.

The Church will be interested in the community work being done by the Rev. Edward W. Mellichampe, rector at Halifax, Virginia.

At Clarkton in Halifax County a community house has been erected on the grounds given by Mrs. Clark, who for many years has been working among the people of that locality alone as to lay help. Under her direction and beneficence St. Thomas' Church has been kept up and its influence fostered in every way. Two years ago when the work was put under the Rev. Mr. Mellichampe there were thirty-five communicants. Today there are fifty-six. Under the Mission just concluded by the undersigned there will be seventeen added, giving over seventy communicants belonging to and interested in this little church.

Mrs. Clark's dream of an enlarged work has now been realized. The Community House was opened last June, Mrs. Clark expending some $3,000 in money for the house and its complete furnishings. The necessary work of construction and the building of the foundation was done by the people of the community without reference to Church membership.

The house itself was bought ready made. It has six rooms and a bath, all on one floor, all most conveniently arranged.

Mrs. Clark has furnished every room with the furniture required to make it a model. The kitchen has all of the utensils required and a large modern stove with a hot water tank attached. In the dining room china, glassware and silver is complete.

As I have said, the people did all the work except skilled labor. An excavation twenty-six by thirty-six and six feet deep was required. This permitted a room under the entire house over eight feet high.

The walls of this foundation room are of concrete eight inches thick, mixed by the people themselves. The lumber used was cut by the people in the woods. They then secured the use of a saw-mill, built its fires themselves and cut the logs into the planks and sizes necessary, carrying it to the building and themselves doing the rest. The floor of this large room is of concrete. The room is lighted by six good-sized windows. A stage is being erected at one end, which will have two dressing rooms, thus there can be had meetings, social and entertaining, as well as a place for the meetings of the societies and Boy Scouts.

A Delco plant has been installed, which pumps water from a spring a hundred yards away, and also furnishes electric lights not only in the house, but also in the church.

The lighting plant was bought by the Young People's Society and the Ladies' Aid Society.

Mrs. Margaret Shearer is the worker in charge and already has stamped her consecrated character on the community for miles around, being beloved by all, and called upon for her services of advice, counsel and guidance without any reference to denominational ties.

Every Wednesday night there is a prayer service in the church, the average attendance upon which has been for several months one hundred and twenty-five. The Sunday-school enrollment is seventy-five, with an average attendance of sixty.

At the Mission just closed for eight consecutive days people came from the surrounding country regularly night after night from as far away as twenty and twenty-five miles. This indicates the value and extent of this great community service.

Mr. Mellichampe is establishing two other community centers nearer Halifax, his home. His work therefore is so large that he can give only two services a month to Clarkton, these on the second Sunday, when the building is filled to overflowing.

With St. John's Church at Halifax, these churches in the country and the necessary house-to-house visitation in all directions and with no denominational lines apparent in the calls, makes it difficult to conceive of a rector with more work and responsibility anywhere in the American Church.

Memorial Presented to Emmanuel Church, Kempsville.

On October 20 a beautiful bronze memorial tablet was presented by the Norfolk Assembly of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew to Emmanuel Church, Kempsville, in memory of the Rev. R. J. Alfriend. The service was read by the Rev. J. Scott Meredith, Chaplain of the Local Assembly. The tablet was presented by Mr. Barton Myers, and received by the rector, the Rev. R. A. Goodwin. The address was made by the Rt. Rev. B. D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop of Southern Virginia.

The tablet reads as follows:

"In Memoriam Richard Jeffery Alfriend, 1860-1923, rector of this parish 1912-1923. This tablet erected by Norfolk Assembly, Brotherhood of St. Andrew, in affectionate remembrance of a fellow worker in the Cause of Christ."

Memorial Dedicated.

In St. Paul's Church, Petersburg, Va., the Rev. J. M. B. Gill, rector, on October 12, a beautiful Litany desk was dedicated as a memorial to the Rev. Robert F. Jackson, Jr., one of St. Paul's sons, who, in his short ministry of six years, won for himself an enviable place in the church. Mr. Jackson was the elder brother of the present vestryman, D. Hugh Jackson, and was an honor graduate of McCabe's School, Master of Arts of the University of Virginia, and a graduate of the Virginia Seminary in the Class of 1876. He was ordained by Bishop Whittle and served his diaconate in Wheeling, W. Va., and was afterwards rector of Christ Church, Richmond, Va., and St. Paul's, Macon, Ga. His scholarship, consecrated life and his zeal in the ministry all reflect honor upon this parish from which he went to the Master's work. Mr. Jackson died in Petersburg on June 16, 1882. It is both a joy and a privilege to have in St. Paul's this memorial to her son whose life added to the beauty and glory of the Church.

St. John's Church, Hampton: The rector, the Rev. C. E. McAllister, has recently organized in this parish the Knights of Sir Galahad. Over thirty boys have attended the meetings held thus far.

Sunday-School Institute.

The twenty-eighth annual convention of the Sunday-School Institute, held on Wednesday, October 22, was well attended and full of help and inspiration for all interested in Sunday-school work. Outstanding addresses of the day were those by the Rev. Henry Lubbeck, D. D., on the subject, "Religious Education—When to Begin"; Miss Mabel Lee Cooper on "The Three Great Arts of Teaching," and the Rev. Karl Block, D. D., on "The Future of the Youth Movement in the Episcopal Church." Dr. Block addressed the mass meeting held Wednesday evening in Epiphany Church and stirred his hearers with his virile and earnest appeal for the young people of the church.

Morning and afternoon business sessions were held and in connection with the institute there was an exhibit showing methods, materials, programs and literature of the young people's organizations in the Church, together with the work of the local young people's societies. This exhibit was under the direction of the Rev. E. Pinkney Wroth, assisted by a committee from the Young People's Society of the Diocese. The officers of the Sunday-School Institute are as follows: President, the Rt. Rev. Jas. E. Freeman, D. D., Executive Officer, the Rev. W. L. DeVries, D. D.; Secretary, Commander C. T. Jewell; Treasurer, Mr. Wm. C. Beck.

Death of Prominent Layman.

The Diocese of Washington suffered a severe loss in the passing of Mr. J. Holdsworth Gordon, on Tuesday, October 21, after a very short illness. Mr. Gordon was a vestryman of Christ Church, Georgetown, having held this position for many years. Likewise, he has represented Christ Church as lay delegate to the Diocesan Convention for a long period of time. At the time of his death, he was a member of the Standing Committee of the Diocese of Washington, and always when his health would permit, served on important committees and boards of the Church in Washington.

Funeral services were held in Christ Church, Georgetown, conducted by the rector, the Rev. James H. W. Blake, and assisted by the Bishop of Washington and the Rev. G. T. Dudley, D. D., Chairman of the Standing Committee.

The preacher at the afternoon service of the Washington Cathedral was the Rev. Z. B. T. Phillips, rector of Epiphany Church. This was the first appearance of Dr. Phillips in the Cathedral pulpit since he has made his residence in Washington, and there was a large number present to hear him. The service was broadcast by radio.

250,000 Japan Fund Assured.

Assurances that the $250,000 goal for the reconstruction of churches, hospitals and schools in Japan, by the Diocese of Pennsylvania, was in sight was given Monday night by Bishop Garland at the victory dinner of the campaign.

The final report which was given in the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, was approximately $13,000 less than was needed to round out the quarter million mark that had been set. But reports were not made by at least a score of the wealthier parishes of the diocese. Collections for the fund will not be taken by them until next Sunday. On the basis of the task the smaller parishes have done, Bishop Garland said, there was no question but that the sum would be reached and pledged the efforts of the Executive Committee.

Bishop H. St. George Tucker, the speaker, declared the raising of the sum would give inspiration to the Church throughout America to rehabilitate its work in Japan and start that nation once more forward for the Christian conversion of the Orient.

The Diocesan Institute.

That the financial needs of the Church would be met promptly and the deficits eliminated was declared October 22 by the Rev. P. J. Steinmetz, Jr., rector of St. Paul's Church, Ogontz, at the closing meeting of the Diocesan Institute in St. James' Parish House.

Colonel W. B. Barba presided at the business meeting. The Rev. R. Bland Mitchell, Executive Secretary of the Field Department of the National Council of the Church, spoke on "Stewardship" and explained the financial condition of that body.

Various phases of parish work were discussed at the afternoon session, when the Rev. Louis C. Washburn, rector of Old Christ Church, presided.

Week-Day School of Religion.

Under the auspices of the Council of Churches of Lansdowne, Delaware County, the Interdenominational Week-Day School of Religion, conducted as an experiment last fall, reopened October 21 with increased enrollment and with two additional grades added to the course of instruction.

Decision to reopen the school followed a survey of the operation and results of last fall's experimental effort. Mrs. Hadwin Fischer, Lansdowne, who has had considerable experience in week-day religious teaching and in community training schools, will be Supervisor. The Abingdon series of lessons designed especially for week-day religious teaching is being used.

Last fall the teaching was limited to the fourth, fifth and sixth grades. With the reopening of the school, the third and the seventh grades are being added. Last fall the week-day school was held in the Lansdowne Avenue Friends' Meeting House. This fall the chapel of the First Presbyterian Church will be used also.

The Rev. Charles F. Duke, rector of the Church of St. John the Evangelist, Lansdowne, and chairman of the Department of Religious Education of the Diocese, is chairman of the committee of the Lansdowne Council of Churches in charge of the week-day school.

Other members of the committee are the Rev. Milton C. Westphal, Mrs. W. Ross Smith, Mrs. W. W. Haviland, Professor George B. Mark, the Rev. Charles Peters and Mrs. W. T. Coopef. The Council of Churches comprises the First Presbyterian Church, the Lansdowne Methodist Church, St. John's Protestant Episcopal Church, the Lansdowne Baptist Church, the Owen Avenue Friends' Meeting and the Lansdowne Avenue Friends' Meeting.

Germantown Convocation.

The fall meeting of the Convocation of Germantown was held at the Church of the Incarnation, Morrisville, Friday, October 24. There was a celebration of the Holy Communion at 11:15 A. M., with sermon by the Rev. Sydney Goodman, rector of Emmanuel Church, Holmesburg. Lunch was served at 12:30 in the Morrisville Community Hall, and the business meeting held at two o'clock. At this meeting the Rev. Allan R. Van Meter, rector of Calvary Church, Germantown, was elected dean and reports were made of the fourteen mission stations of the convocation, twelve of them in Bucks County.

The Church of St. Jude and the Nativity, Philadelphia, the Rev. J. C. Crossau, rector, celebrated its eightieth anniversary with special services Sunday, October 26. The Rt. Rev. Ethelbert Talbot, Presiding Bishop of the Church, was the special preacher at the Festival Service at 8 P. M. Bishop Garland preached the anniversary sermon at the morning service and administered the rite of Confirmation. In the afternoon at a special Church School service, the Rev. L. W. Caley, rector of St. Martin's, Oak Lane, formerly rector of St. Jude and the Nativity, was the speaker.

The Diocesan Council in Residence in the Parish House.

The Diocesan Council which met in St. Andrew's, Jackson, October 21-23, marked a new era in diocesan councils in relation to its work, its order of business and its social life.

The clergy and a number of lay delegates were entertained in residence in the parish house. Bishop Bratton came from the Episcopal residence in the city and was also in residence in the parish house.

The twenty-six class rooms were converted into bed rooms for the clergy, the gymnasium equipped with writing tables, etc., into a social center, where the clergy enjoyed a freedom and fellowship that greatly promoted the social side of the diocesan life.

The order of business for this Council provided a short service on the night of the twenty-first. The addresses emphasized the Young People's Work. The next morning there was an early celebration of Holy Communion, after which the Council breakfasted at the parish house. The Council then organized, and, going straight through its work, was ready for adjournment by ten the next morning, Thursday. The interest in this program centered in the fact that laymen attended the Council of the Church, and, by traveling a little at night, only lost one day from business.

The social feature of the occasion was the dinner given the Council Wednesday night by the Vestry of St. Andrew's Church.

St. Andrew's Parish, Jackson.

With the opening of the fall activities, St. Andrew's Parish has added a new department to its work in its Week Day Kindergarten. When the beautiful parish house was completed a year ago, Dr. Capers announced as his goal for St. Andrew's, a seven-day a week Church. The Kindergarten is the first step. The rector is deeply interested in the promotion of the Gary plan of week-day religious instruction for the pupils in the city schools. When this is realized, St. Andrew's is ideally located to take care of all the children of the church and those of friends who are interested in the church.

In the Educational Department of the Mississippi State Fair (Jackson, Miss.), which has just closed, the Church School exhibit of St. Andrew's Parish was awarded both first and second prizes.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. W. L. Gravatt, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. R. E. L. Strider, D. D., Coadjutor.

Celebration of the Twenty-fifth Anniversary of Bishop Gravatt.

The three Convocations of the Diocese met in joint session together with lay representatives, men and women from the various parishes and missions of the diocese, to do honor to the Rt. Rev. W. L. Gravatt, on the twenty-fifth anniversary of his consecration to the Episcopate. The meetings were held in Christ Church, Clarksburg, where twenty-five years ago Bishop Gravatt was elected Bishop-Coadjutor of the Diocese of West Virginia, Bishop Peterkin at that time being the honored and esteemed Bishop of the Diocese.

The occasion began with a reception in the parish house of Christ Church Wednesday evening, October 15, honoring Bishop and Mrs. Gravatt and Bishop and Mrs. Strider. In the receiving line were the Rev. J. T. Carter, rector of Christ Church, Clarksburg, and Mrs. Carter; Bishop W. L. Gravatt and Mrs. Gravatt, Bishop-Coadjutor R. E. L. Strider and Mrs. Strider.

On Thursday morning, October 16, there was a Corporate Holy Communion for the Diocese, at which the celebrant was Bishop Gravatt, assisted by Bishop Strider. The sermon was preached by Bishop Gravatt. Then followed a luncheon in the parish house to all the visitors and guests of Christ Church. In the afternoon the three Convocations of the Diocese met separately.

In the evening in the assembly room of the new parish house of Christ Church began the anniversary banquet as the culmination of the day, at which a diocese showed its appreciation and affection for the faithful labors during a quarter century of a true Bishop in the household of God. There were assembled about two hundred representatives of the various portions of the Diocese. Bishop Strider, in a felicitous manner, acted as toastmaster. The speeches of Bishop Talbot, the Rev. R. W. Trapnell of Wilmington, Del., and Mr. Randolph Bias, of Williamson, were replete with eloquence and humor, greatly enjoyed by those who heard them. Mr. Peterkin then in the name of the clergy and laity of the Diocese presented a silver service as the loving gift of the Diocese to their Bishop. Bishop Gravatt feelingly accepted the symbol of affection and loyalty from his people and the great occasion ended which will long dwell with those so fortunate to participate.

Convocation Elections: The following were elected officers of Convocation for the ensuing year:

Kanawha Convocation, the Rev. W. P. Chrisman of Williamson, dean; the Rev. George C. Cleavland, Cloyer Lick, secretary-treasurer.

Eastern Convocation, the Rev. J. L.

Hady of Shepherdstown, dean; the Rev. R. A. Brown of Keyser, secretary, and the Rev. John L. Oldham of Martinsburg, treasurer.

Northwestern Convocation, the Rev. E. N. MacConomy of Moondsville, dean; the Rev. C. G. Cogley of Wellsburg, secretary and the Rev. O. C. Fox of Parkersburg, treasurer.

Young People's Convention.

November 7 and 8 have been designated as the dates of the big convention of young people of the Diocese to be held in Trinity Parish House, Greensboro, the Rev. I. Harding Hughes, rector. An effort to get at least three hundred boys and girls out for this convention is being made all over the diocese and an attractive program has been arranged by Bishop Penick and the Rev. Charles Scovil.

The cornerstone for the new St. Luke's Church, Spray, was recently laid and the structure is taking form rapidly. Polished granite is the material of which the building is being made, and it will be a handsome church, a fitting memorial to the consecrated efforts of the rector, the Rev. W. J. Gordon, his wife and sister and friends. A singular fact in this connection is that the entire community, without regard to denominational lines, and of their own motion, took part in a recent canvass, subscribing generously towards the new church.

Thompson Orphanage: On Thanksgiving Day special offerings will be taken all over the diocese for the Thompson Orphanage, in Charlotte, which now is in the midst of a big building and expansion campaign.

Improvements on the Parish House of St. Martin's, Charlotte, the Rev. J. L. Jackson, rector, have been made in order to take care of the expanding Sunday School of the Parish, which, under Mr. Jackson, has made phenomenal strides.

Church Activities Throughout the Diocese.

Growth and activity in many directions are shown in the news that comes in from the diocese. Adoption of the district plan and the sending of two flying squadrons to eight centers for conferences has created something of a stir and is causing active preparation on the part of the chairmen of the districts in enlisting interest among the members of the Church in attendance upon the conferences. The Rev. J. A. Schaad, rector of St. Paul's Church, Augusta, will head one squadron and the Rev. A. R. McKinstry, corresponding secretary of the National Field Department, will head the other. The lay members of the squadron are Mr. M. G. Ridgely, of Augusta; Mr. George W. Urquhart and Miss Edith D. Johnston, of Savannah, and Mrs. H. D. Reed, of Waycross. The tour of the squadrons will begin November 6.

Christ Church (the Rev. David Cady Wright, rector), Savannah, has put in the Group System ready for immediate use; has completed the organization of the Church School by the initiation of a new junior high school department; has set a goal of an enrollment of seven hundred for all departments, including two adult Bible classes; has completely reorganized its parochial mission, the House of Prayer, with organizations for old and young, in addition to the regular school on Sunday afternoon; and the parish has a "superintendent of religious education."

St. John's Church (the Rev. W. A. Jonnard, rector), Savannah, has organized a second Bible Class to meet on a week-day, in addition to the Sunday class; and is fitting up a kindergarten room in the tower for the use of smaller children, the work donated by a member of the parish, naming the room for his little girl. The regular Bible class for men meets Sunday morning at the Y. M. C. A., and the Men's Club is paying for the printing of the weekly leaflets with the notices, musical program and the services.

St. Michael and All Angels' Church (the Rev. J. D. Miller, rector), Savannah, has begun work on the addition to the Church School, which will have two rooms, and has installed Grade 1 of the Christian Nurture Series, which marks the installation of this series of lessons.

St. Paul's Church (the Rev. J. A. Schaad, rector), Augusta, with the coming of its new rector, is pulling into line in all directions, after having been without a rector for seven months. Mr. Schaad has already made a community contact, and has made an address in the Boy Scout Campaign and for other local interests. Soon after his arrival there was held at St. Paul's Church a meeting of the Interdenominational Evangelistic Club of Augusta and members of similar clubs of two neighboring South Carolina towns. Before the devotional meeting the St. Paul's laymen entertained with a supper. Mr. Schaad made a notable address before the National Evangelistic Club at Columbus, Ga., on November 18, before an audience of over three hundred.

St. John's Church (the Rev. H. Scott-Smith, rector), Bainbridge, at its annual rally day found on roll call one hundred per cent present, besides a number of new pupils.

St. John's Church (the Rev. James B. Lawrence, Vicar), Moultrie, is nearing completion. The roof is on the building and services are held regularly.

Convocations.

The Convocation of East Tennessee, which met October 15 at Harriman (the Rev. W. C. Whittaker, D. D., Dean), was not only a success, but chronicled much progress in the district. Simultaneously the convocation of West Tennessee met in Memphis. Bishop Maxon and the Rev. John D. Wing, D. D., Diocesan Chairman, arranged for Dr. Clingman, of Birmingham, to stir up the parishes on the N.-W. C. through a series of conferences of two days each in Knoxville, Chattanooga, Nashville, and Memphis.

The Rev. R. E. Campbell, O. H. C., brother of the Rev. Bernard Campbell, rector of St. Paul's Church, Franklin, spent a month in the hospital in Nashville. On recovery he conducted a quiet day at Franklin, and preached at Sewanee, Christ and Advent Churches, Nashville, St. Peter's, Columbia, and at other points, rousing much interest in the great work of the Church. He returns to Africa January 1, 1925.

Immanuel Church, New Castle.

The two hundred and thirty-fifth anniversary of the founding of Immanuel Church, Newcastle, the Rev. Jos. H. Earp, rector, will be celebrated on Sunday, November 2.

Immanuel Parish was founded in 1689.

The land upon which the church stands was originally part of the Market Square. The churchyard was the site of an old fort built in 1672. It is said to have been the spot upon which William Penn performed his first public act in America.

The title to the land was formally conveyed to the parish in 1772 when the General Assembly gave it for the use of the members of the Church of England.

The brick wall surrounding the church yard was built in 1791.

The church building was begun in 1704 and finished in 1706. Originally it was a simple oblong structure, thirty feet wide and fifty feet long. The chancel was in the east end of the building, whose position on the lot is due to seeking to secure its facing east and west, according to ancient custom. The tower, steeple and transepts were added in 1820, and the remodeled church was consecrated by Bishop White, of Pennsylvania, assisted by Bishop Kemp, of Maryland, on Tuesday, October 29, 1822. The structure has undergone several other changes since.

In the church yard lie the remains of many distinguished men of affairs, statesmen, jurists, clergy. Among these are to be found the names of George Read, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, and others prominent in Colonial history and in the history of Delaware, such as John Curtis, Speaker of the Assembly, Judge of the Court, whose epitaph was written by Benjamin Franklin in 1755; also Mary McKean, wife of Thomas McKean, another signer of the Declaration of Independence.

Gunning Bedford, Governor of Delaware, who died September 30, 1807.

Kensley Johns, Chief Justice and Chancellor of Delaware.

James Booth, Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas.

Thomas Stockton, Governor of Delaware, 1844.

John Johns, Bishop of Virginia, 1862-1876.

Woman's Auxiliary: A meeting of the Diocesan Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary was held on Thursday, October 16, in Christ Church, Christiana, the Rev. Frederick T. Ashton, rector. After a Corporate Communion, at which the Bishop of the Diocese was celebrant, luncheon was served in the parish house.

The Clerical Brotherhood also met in Christ Church, following the meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary, sixteen being in attendance. The Rev. Thomas Getz Hill made an address on Christian Education, after which officers for the year were elected.

Work has been begun on the belfry and steeple of Trinity Church, Wilmington, a memorial gift to the parish. When completed a set of chimes will be installed.

The interior of St. Andrew's Church, Wilmington, has been newly decorated, new electric lighting fixtures have been installed, and the New Hymnal has been introduced.

BETHLEHEM.

Rt. Rev. Ethelbert Talbot, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. F. W. Sterrett, D. D., Coadjutor.

Consecration of St. Mary's Church, Reading.

On Sunday morning, October 19, the Presiding Bishop consecrated St. Mary's Church. Twenty years ago a few members of Christ Church, who had moved in the vicinity of the church began to hold Sunday-school meetings for their own children. Soon it became evident that parents of the children of the denominations wished their children to have religious instruction. The use of the public school house was acquired and soon there was a growing school which needed a permanent home.

Christ Church, under the leadership of the sainted Dr. Orrick, erected a small building for church and school purposes in 1905. The Rev. Charles K. Tompson was the first curate. In June, 1908, the Rev. Harvey P. Walter came and stayed for eight years. Under his administration the small chapel was enlarged, a parish house built and a rectory secured and the mission became an independent parish.

The present rector, the Rev. Harold I. Fair, had the property put in fine shape and worked to have the church consecrated on the twentieth anniversary of the beginning of Sunday-school services. The feast of consecration lasted for three days. Sunday morning the Bishop was assisted by the Archdeacon of the Diocese and the present rector. In the evening the Archdeacon and first rector preached to a large congregation.

On Monday evening, October 20, there was a mass meeting at which the Ven. Benjamin F. Thompson, of Dover, Del., the Rt. Rev. Frank W. Sterrett, Coadjutor of the Diocese, and the Rev. Glen B. Walter spoke. Mr. Walter is a son of the Archdeacon and the first Sunday-school lad of the parish to enter the ministry, though there is one other studying for Orders at this time. The Rev. A. B. Vossler of St. Michael's, Birdsboro, was also present and brought greetings and felicitations from the neighboring parish.

On Tuesday evening there was a social festival. Greetings from the old members and from the ministers of the neighborhood churches, as well as splendid entertainment of songs and plays, made a most pleasant evening pass all too quickly. The vestry furnished the refreshments. The offerings were to pay for the repairs made to the rectory and amounted to over $2,500.

When the Sunday School was started, twenty years ago, the land on which the church now stands was a corn field. Now for blocks beyond there are rows

O Almighty God, Who hast knit together Thine elect in one communion and fellowship, in the mystical body of Thy Son Jesus Christ Our Lord: Grant us grace so to follow Thy blessed saints in all virtuous and godly living that we may come to those unspeakable joys which Thou hast prepared for those who unfeignedly love Thee; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

Collect for the Twentieth Sunday After Trinity.

O Almighty and most merciful God, of Thy bountiful goodness keep us, we beseech Thee, from all things that may hurt us; that we, being ready both in body and soul may cheerfully accomplish those things which Thou commandest; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

They Softly Walk.

They are not gone who pass
Beyond the clasp of hand,
Out from the strong embrace;
They are but come so close
We need not grope with hands,
Nor look to see, nor try
To catch the sound of feet.
They have put off their shoes
To softly walk by day
Within our thought, to tread
At night our dream-led paths
Of sleep.

They are not lost who find
The sunset gate, the goal
Of all the weary years,
Not lost are they who reach
The summit of their climb,
The peak above the clouds
And storms. They are not lost
Who find the light of sun
And stars and God.

They are not dead who live
In hearts they leave behind,
In those whom they have blessed
They live a life again,
And shall live through the years
Eternal life, and grow
Each day more beautiful,
As time declares their good,
Forgets the rest, and proves
Their immortality.

STUDIES IN THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

The Great Intercession.

III.

The Rev. Louis Tucker, D. D.

Christendom of today has almost finished, for the third time, the task of preaching Jesus for a witness to the known world; but this time the known world is the whole world. We shall not know the day or hour; but, with a certainty as great as that of any Centurion who knew that Titus was ready to reduce Jerusalem, we proclaim Our Lord at hand.

The "Them" of whom Our Lord next speaks is no longer the eleven, but seems those who "Believe on him through their word." Even with this expansion, the petition presents a view of Christianity so strange, so bizarre, differing by the whole width of theology from our own, that, did not other sayings of Our Lord endorse it and did not St. Paul in his great letters enthusiastically advance it, we would hesitate so much as to mention it here. The popular view is that Our Lord intended to make all men Christians and that the non-Christians are His failures, or ours, and with the exception of a negligible percentage saved and classified as the "just heathen," are all lost. Our Lord implies that His primary purpose is to bring about a union among his followers, a union stupendous, a union unthinkable in its interpenetrating completeness, a union bearing a real analogy to that of the Triune God; and that His ultimate purpose is to use this union as a public proof to mankind of His own divine mission and of God's love. The necessary implications are more disintegrating than dynamite. Perhaps the most important is that the world-wide knowledge of this union among that vast majority of mankind not included in it will help them forward on the road to everlasting life. The proportion of "just heathen" is enormously larger than we think, or there is a preaching of the Good News in the intermediate life; (as there certainly was once, St. Peter being the informant and Christ the preacher) or else—the ideas of primitive Christianity concerning the two resurrections and the salvation of the Saints and of the Sheep of God are true; and it is our own eschatology which is anarchistic, our own belief which is bizarre. If so, let us come home again; home to Him whom primitive Christians loved to draw as the Good Shepherd carrying in his arms a kid of the goats.

Christ plans a Christ-race. His first work is to smelt from the world and hammer on the anvil of adversity a new kind of man. Only after this is made will he use it as the sickle to reap the world. He does not now plan to convert the heathen. He never did plan to do it now. All that He wants now is that the Good News be preached everywhere "for a witness." After that is done He can make the work thorough and convert the seventy races. He does not now plan to transmute the world and make God's will done here as it is in heaven. He never did plan to do it now. Only when His instrument is complete and He has had the pick of every nation will He make any nation really Christian. He does the first thing first and not the second till the first is done, and we must give Him a Christian Church in every community under heaven before He can give us the heaven-on-earth of a really Christian community anywhere. As for the innumerable multitude of heathen outside the Church and in it, who are perishing and have perished while we linger and lag along, He has provided for them. What that provision is we may discover when He says: "Inasmuch as ye have done it to the least of these my brethren . . . enter ye into the joy of your Lord."

Most stress missions for the sake of the heathen. Really, the greatest value of missions lies in the reflex on Christendom. "The crimes of Picadilly are the virtues of Cathay," because the crimes of Cathay are such that the wrath of God cometh for them upon the children of disobedience. But great as the benefit of Christianity to the heathen is, the benefit of world-wide Christianity to Christendom will be greater. We dare not dream. The wrapt visions of the prophets have few hearers now. But, if we dared to dream, all that Isaiah sang, all that Ezekiel uttered would be too poor to tell of what we can see. Some saturated solutions will not crystallize until you drop a thread into the test-tube. Christianity is such an uncrystallized solution and the thread it needs is world-missions.

Our Lord's thought had left earth now and passed to Paradise or beyond. The tremendous complexity and extent of the spiritual world shows since Our Lord held it worth while to use one of the last petitions of His great Prayer to insure that His servants be with Him. There is, then, preponderance of chances that, left to themselves, they would have been happy in some lesser mansion of the Father's House.

The sturdy republicanism of America, displeased with monarchs, recoils from the quiet assumption of monarchy Our Lord makes. Yet, our objection is to humanity, not monarchy. If the monarch be greatest genius of his time, quite competent to cope with all conditions, amply and self-evidently surpassing all his subjects both in energy and brains, then he ought to rule. If he grow old and prejudiced and incompetent, and leave his power to some younger and feebler incompetent, then monarchy is a mistake. We are republicans because we despair of providing ourselves with a ruler who is both competent and immortal. But, given the perfect and immortal ruler, Monarchy, Autocracy, Despotism, is so self-evidently the best form of government that, in places of stress like armies and battleships we are driven to adopt it now.

God is absolute monarch of the Spiritual world. The Second Person of the Holy Trinity occupies the throne and does so with perfection of fitness far beyond expression; for, acting as agent of the Father, He made the world He governs. He is therefore amply able to meet any emergency and handle any difficult in it; and, since He furnishes the energy with which it is run, He can rule it.

Preventing Bad Habits In Children.

A child is not a small edition of an adult—not an adult in miniature. The contrast between the infant and the adult is not as striking as that of the tadpole and the frog or the caterpillar and the butterfly, but the differences are almost as great. Imagine a baby projected to the size of a man and you would have a monstrosity whose head was one-fourth the size of its body, with arms and legs out of all proportion. The internal organs would show even greater contrast. The brain and nervous system especially are in an undeveloped or rudimentary condition, and this is one of the reasons why the greatest care and caution must be taken in dealing with young children. The brain absorbs every impression; an oft-repeated act or thought leaves its imprint in the brain and becomes a habit, and the oftener it is repeated the harder it is to overcome. Habits are formed very early in life, but the bad ones seem to come much easier than the good ones. The best way to prevent a bad habit is never to allow it to commence, and this means careful training and the formation of only good habits. Young children learn largely by imitation, very little by admonition. Home example and home environment exert the greatest influence. A child brought up under a wrong and evil environment is hopelessly handicapped and will seldom fit into the world. The old saying "Like father, like son," places responsibility upon heredity, while the factor of environment is of greater importance. "As the father lives, so lives the son" is more to the point. The attitude of an intelligent parent is "Not as I say, but as I do." The responsibility is upon the parents. If a child is allowed to have his own way, to dictate to the entire household and become a spoiled child, he will grow up without restraint, without respect for parents, persons or authority and without any sense of appreciation of law, justice or order.—Delineator.

Night.

Ruth Marie Wickers.

The sun sinks golden, purple in the west
The hills and plains in solemn stillness lay,
As o'er the earth the wings—
The wings of night are spread.

The silver stars come forth in radiance bright,
The twinkling attendants of the magic moon,
And out come all the fairies—
The fairies from field and forest.

The Pipes of Pan in liquid music sweet Sound forth the joy of all the woodland folk,
And everywhere they dance—
They dance to the notes of Pan.

Thus while we mortals sleep in unconcern
We miss the silvery sweetness of a starlit night,
And foolishly fail to hear—
To hear the magic notes.

And whether it be the melodious Pipes of Pan,
Or whether it be the divine, holy voice of God,
There's something we've missed in the night—
In the night, that's lost in the day.

The Words of Jesus Concerning Himself.

Here we tread on holy ground. We here stand at an open door and look into a new world where with "holden eyes" we see and know only in part. Infinity and mystery stare us in the face, and with Augustine we realize that we are children, endeavoring to pour the infinite into our finite minds. And yet God has in Christ provided us with a wonderful lens, that, we through Christ's very humanity may catch a glimpse of His divinity. There are many in our day, both teachers and preachers, who see little or nothing that lies beyond the lens of Christ's humanity. To them He is only a great Teacher and Way-shower—the greatest, noblest and wisest of a line of founders of religions. He is classified with them, and allowed the distinction of differing from them greatly in degree, but only partly in kind. They have much to say in praise of Him; they quote many of His words that bear upon the social and ethical problems of the day; they make the Sermon on the Mount the Magna Charta of His religion. But they have little to say about the words of Jesus which bear testimony to His unique and transcendent character as the Son of God; or if they do refer to them at all, it is to rob them of their meaning.

No one can read what Jesus says concerning Himself, the claims He puts forth concerning Himself, without realizing at once that He places Himself on an equality with God. While He insists on His being known as the Son of Man (for this title occurs about eighty times in the Gospels), as embodying in Himself the human race whom He came to redeem, He leaves no one in doubt as to His pre-existence from all eternity in the Bosom of the Father and as completely identified with Him. "Before Abraham was I am." "I and my Father are One." "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." Such are His words, and He at once thus lifts Himself far above the sphere in which He shines forth in Scripture as the Son of Man. He is the "Fullness of the Godhead bodily." Imagine Confucius, Buddha, Zoroaster, Mohammed, or so great and good a man as Paul, making a claim like that! How preposterous and blasphemous it would sound! Why does it not so sound as coming from the Son of Man? Why does it not shock men as they read His words in the Gospels? We might say briefly, that His life and character and deeds as there pictured make it impossible to assume either that He was self-deceived, or an imposter. No one but an enemy to all vital religion would today venture to make such an assumption. The days of Strauss and Renan have passed, never to return.

Now let us listen to at least a few things He has said concerning Himself. To Nicodemus how absolutely mysterious and strange the words of Jesus must have sounded when He disclosed His mission by saying: "God so loved the world that He gave His Only-Begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life!" No less so those other words: "As Moses lifted up the Serpent in the Wilderness, so must the Son of Man be lifted up." How bewildered the Disciples must have been to hear Him say: "And I if I be lifted up will draw all men unto me"—never was prophecy in process of being more grandly fulfilled. To those who would find the way to God, He says: "I am the Way," "I am the Door"; "No one cometh unto the Father but by Me." To those who are seeking after eternal truth, He says, "I am the Truth." To those who crave eternal life, He says: "I am the Life"; "I am the Resurrection and the Life; he that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." To those burdened with sin, He says: "Thy sins be forgiven thee." Need we wonder that Pharisees should exclaim: "Who can forgive sins but God only?" So be it; for here was God clothed in human flesh. To souls athirst for the living God, He says: "He that drinketh of earthly water shall thirst again; but he that drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst." To those bereft of peace and bending underneath life's burdens, He says: "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest"; "Take my yoke upon you and learn of me; for my yoke is easy and my burden is light"; "Not as the world giveth give I unto you; let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." He even dares to distribute abodes of rest in Heaven to those who count themselves as weary and footsore pilgrims here; for He says: "Let not your heart be troubled; ye believed in God, believe also in me. In my Father's House are many mansions"; "I go to prepare a place for you"; "In the world ye shall find tribulation; but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world."

Here is One who claims to hold the keys of life and destiny in His hands; who locks and unlocks the gates of death, and who stands guard at the door of Heaven to admit those found worthy and to exclude those found not worthy. He assumes the right to say to the former: "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world," and to the latter: "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels." Claims such as these are astounding. Falling from the lips of any other known benefactor of mankind in history, they would shock and repel any man of sane mind. Coming from the mouth of Jesus, who as the Son of Man took in His loving embrace all mankind as His very kith and kin, who sought to bring humanity under the wings of His redemptive protection, why do they not shock us? Why are they but the natural outflow of the very Heart and Mind of God?

Any one whose soul cries out with earnest longing, "O that I knew where I might find Him" will have his quest rewarded when he reads the Gospels and sees before him the picture of Him who made Himself known as the Son of Man. Knowing Him that far—as He stands revealed before us in His wondrous ministry of love and mercy, in His life and character as the only Being who dared to make the challenge, "Which of you convinceth me of sin?" as "the Chief among ten thousand and the One altogether lovely"—it is easy to know Him much farther, and to exclaim with the disillusioned Centurion at the Cross, "Truly this was the Son of God."—Lutheran.

But Do You Vote?

You say your taxes are too high,
But do you vote?
About extravagances you sigh,
But do you vote?
How long, you wail, must we endure
This state of things which keeps us poor?
How long? I do not know, I'm sure;
But do you vote?

The lights are bad, the streets a mess;
But do you vote?
Your indignation you express,
But do you vote?
You say the bosses rule the show,
That graft is reaching high and low,
And doubtless all you say is so.
But—do you vote?

You growl at rotten politics,
But do you vote?
You howl at bosses and their tricks,
But do you vote?
You say, O Decent Citizen,
(We've heard you, time and time again)
"We want things run by business men!"
But—do you vote?

Unless you do (I wonder, do you?)
You've got just what is coming to you!—

For the Young Folks

The Accepted Offering.

Lord, what offerings shall we bring,
At Thine altars when we bow?
Grateful loving hearts, the spring
Whence the kind affections flow.

Willing hands to lead the blind,
Bind the wounded, feed the poor;
Love embracing all our kind
Charity, with liberal store.

Teach us, O Thou heavenly King,
Thus to show our grateful mind;
Thus the accepted offering bring,
Love to Thee and all mankind.

Letitia Learns So She May Help.

"Granny Dean," said Letitia, "I can beat Arthur spelling."

"I am glad you are learning to spell," grandmother said.

"And I can beat little Clarence riding his tricycle."

"I didn't know you could ride a tricycle," said grandmother.

"I can beat Florence sweeping the porch, and I can beat Cecil dusting."

"I am glad you know how to sweep and dust."

"Now, grandmother, why don't you praise me for beating Arthur and Clarence and Florence and Cecil? Why don't you say I am the smartest little girl that ever lived?"

"Are you the smartest little girl that ever lived?" asked grandmother.

"Well, I don't know that I am," Letitia said, "but I think you ought to praise me and want me to beat them."

"I am not sure that I want you to beat them," said grandmother.

"Why, Granny Dean?" Letitia exclaimed. "I am your only grandchild and I thought you loved me and wanted me to do better than any one."

"I do love you, and I do want you to do well in everything. If you should beat every one in all the world at doing everything there is in the world to do, you would be unhappy, and it would be because you did it just to beat them."

"Then why do we bother about learning to do things?" asked Letitia.

"Suppose we talk about the things your mother has done today," grandmother suggested. "She got up early and cooked breakfast for all of us. Do you suppose she thought of Mrs. Hart across the street and tried to beat her cooking?"

"No," said Letitia.

"Then why did she cook such a good breakfast?"

"Because she loves all of us and knew we would be hungry," said Letitia.

"Yes, people must have good food if they are to be well and happy, and your mother cooked a good breakfast for her family. After breakfast she cleaned the house. Do you suppose she thought about Mrs. Webb and tried to beat her cleaning house?"

"No, grandma," said Letitia. "She knew the house ought to be clean and she cleaned it."

"Your mother wrote a letter to Uncle Robert, and in that letter were a lot of words. Do you guess she wrote those to prove she could beat Uncle Robert at spelling?"

"No, Granny Dean; she was trying to spell the words right so Uncle Robert would know what she was trying to tell him."

"You understand the real reason, I see."

"This afternoon your mother went to the club to read a paper. Did she spend hours studying and writing just so she could beat the other women who are to read papers?"

"No, no!" said Letitia. "Mother wants to help those women take better care of their babies. Her paper was about babies. I have the sweetest, dearest mother in the world."

"Do you want to be like her?" asked grandmother.

"I do."

"Then, dear, you see that to be like your mother you must learn how to do things well so that you may be a help and a blessing to others."

"I am to do things well so that I may help and bless others," said Letitia half to herself. "Oh, Granny Dean, I like that so much better than beating folks. When I was trying to beat folks I could not feel real friendly toward them, but in trying to help them I'm sure I can love them."—Our Little Ones.

Frank's Banded Robin.

All through the beautiful summer days Frank had been watching the birds. There was one robin reibrest that he called his own, because he had fed it and it had become very tame. In the spring the robin had built a nest under the roof of the porch, and Frank could look into it from the window. First he saw the light blue eggs and then the funny-looking baby birds, and he watched the mother feed them. Now it was almost time for the birds to fly south for the winter, and Frank knew that he should miss them greatly. He was especially sorry to have his robin go and leave him.

Just at this time Frank's Uncle George came to the house bringing with him a wire trap nearly a yard long.

"What is that for?" asked Frank.

"I use it to catch birds so that I can band them," answered his uncle.

"Band them? What does that mean?"

"I am employed by the United States government to care for birds and to learn all that I can about them. My farm is a 'bird sanctuary'," answered Uncle George. "No birds can be killed on my farm. I have built places where the birds can bathe and can have water to drink. I put out food for them and do everything I can to make their home a pleasant one; I also study their habits. Birds are valuable help to farmers and to people who have gardens. We ought to have more song birds to destroy the insect pests that eat the crops."

"Then, too," continued Frank's uncle, "the government wishes to know more about the habits of the birds—where they spend the winter and whether they return to the same place in the north the next spring. So on the birds I catch I put a tiny band with a number."

"O uncle, do you mean that you can catch my robin and band him so that we shall know where he went from here?"

"We can try," answered the uncle.

The trap was placed on the ground where Frank said he usually fed the robin. Uncle George made a little path of seeds leading to the trap and put some inside it, too. Then Frank and his uncle went into the house that the bird might not see them.

After supper the two looked at the trap, but found nothing inside. "I'm going to close the trap for the night," said Uncle George. "I do not wish any bird to be caught and have to stay in it all night. It would try to get out and might hurt itself."

Early the next morning Frank's uncle was out and again set the trap, and as Frank came downstairs before breakfast he met his uncle coming in. In his hand he held a small box made of netting.

"Come with me, Frank," he said, "and we will look at the trap." They found a robin fluttering round inside. Frank felt sure that it was his particular pet. Uncle George put the net box at one end of the trap where there was a door. He opened that, and then he gently coaxed the bird into the box. When it was safely inside Uncle George reached in his hand and took out the robin. Holding it securely round the neck he took from his pocket a tiny piece of curved metal on which was the number 69,804. Then he put this metal ring round the robin's leg and pinched it together with a pair of pliers.

"See, Frank, it slips up and down on the leg and cannot hurt the bird. Now when the robin flies south if some other bird-banding agent catches it in his trap he will look at the number and send word to Washington that he has found robin 69,804 and tell where he found him. At Washington they will write me about it, and I will tell you. Of course it may be that no one will catch this particular robin because there are a great many birds and only a few people banding them."

"Could I do it, Uncle George?"

"No. The government allows only those who know a great deal about birds to do this work."

Very often through the winter Frank and his mother talked about the robin. Sometimes they imagined him in Florida, sometimes in South Carolina.

When the birds returned in the spring one robin seemed so tame that Frank felt sure it must be his pet. Soon the bird began to build a nest in about the same place under the porch roof where the nest had been the summer before. It was not long before Uncle George came to the house again bringing his bird trap. They set it in the old place and baited with seeds as they had done before and put in pieces of twine and cotton for the nest. After a little they caught the robin and found the band 69,804 on his leg.

"O Uncle George!" exclaimed Frank, jumping up and down in excitement. "It is my robin. That's the very number you put on. Isn't it splendid? When do you suppose you will hear from Washington?"

Uncle George took a paper from his pocket on which was recorded the report of many birds banded. Among them they found robin 69,804 caught in Alabama on December 24 and again on February 18.

"Now I know just where my robin spent the winter," said Frank eagerly. "I'm going to read all I can find about Alabama so that I shall know just what kind of a place it is and how it looks down there. You can learn a lot about birds by banding, can't you?"

"Say, Uncle George," continued Frank, "with airplanes and radio and bird banding, we shall soon know everything there is to know, shan't we?"

But in response to that question Uncle George only shook his head and laughed.—Youth's Companion.

Good-Children Street.

There's a dear little home in Good-children Street—

My heart turneth fondly today
Where tinkle of tongues and patter of feet

Make sweetest of music at play;
Where the sunshine of love illumines each face
And warms every heart in that old-fashioned place.

For dear little children go romping about
With dollies and tin tops and drums,
And, my! how they frolic and scamper and shout

Till bedtime too speedily comes!
Oh, days they are golden and days they are fleet

With little folk living in Good-children Street.

See, here comes an army with guns painted red,

And swords, caps and plumes of all sorts;

The captain rides gaily and proudly ahead
On a stick-horse that prances and snorts!

Oh, legions of soldiers you're certain to meet—

Nice make-believe soldiers—in Good-children Street.

'Tis so the dear children go romping about

With dollies and banners and drums,
And I venture to say they are sadly put out

When an end to their jubilee comes;
Oh, days they are golden and days they are fleet

With little folk living in Good-children Street.

But when falleth night over river and town,

Those little folk vanish from sight,
And an angel all white from the sky cometh down

And guardeth the babes through the night,
And singeth her lullabys tender and sweet

To the dear little people in Good-children Street.

Through elsewhere the world be o'er burdened with care,

Though poverty fall to my lot,
Though toil and vexation be always my share,

What care I—they trouble me not!
This thought maketh life ever joyous and sweet:

There's a dear little home in Good-children Street.

On A Rainy Day.

"Oh, dear, it is storming and there is not a thing to do," said Roland, looking out of the window at the pouring rain.

"Not a thing to do," echoed Helen, as she sat in the rocking chair by the table.

"Not a thing to do," echoed the twins Edna and Marguerite, as they sat side by side on the living room couch.

"Not a thing to do," laughed mother, who came into the room just then with baby in her arms. "I wish you could change places with me, then, and do some of the things I have to do. But where are your games, and books, and dolls, and—"

"They are all so old," said Roland. "If it was near Christmas and they were new it would be different, but we are tired of them all. I wish I had something new to play with."

Mother laughed again. "I am busy," she said, "so I can't help you, but if I were you, if I could not get what I wanted I would want what I have and make the best of it," and she left them alone together.

The children sat in silence for a minute. Then Helen spoke: "I am going to finish my apron this very minute. I did not want to work on it because I did not have any pretty material. But I am going to finish it now, and then when I do get something pretty I will know how to make a better one." She hurried upstairs for her work-box and was soon busily sewing.

"I guess I will make some puzzle pictures," said Roland, as he watched her. "I had some to cut out, but I didn't like them very well. However, no girl is going to get ahead of me," and soon they heard his jig-saw going merrily, and, would you believe it, yes, he was actually whistling!

Edna released her hold on Marguerite. "I know what I am going to do this very minute, Marguerite Basser," she said. "I am going to practice that piece I hate and have had for my lesson for three weeks," and away she ran to practice.

Marguerite sat on the sofa alone. She watched Helen at work, and listened to Roland and Edna, all the time thinking busily. At last she rose and went upstairs where her mother was at work.

"Mother, dear," she whispered, "please tell me what I can do. Roland is making puzzles, Helen is finishing her apron, Edna is practicing and I don't know of anything to do."

Mother laughed and whispered something. Marguerite's face lighted and she slipped away and was soon busily at work in the hall closet.

After a while Helen finished her apron, and, looking for something to do, came out in the hall. "What are you doing, Marguerite?" she asked.

"Cleaning up," said Marguerite gaily. "Looking over our games and putting them in order. Mother said she thought a cyclone had been through the closet when she looked in yesterday."

Helen had started in to help. "Why," she said, "I had forgotten all about this crokinole game. Let's set it up in the hall when we get through and play a while."

"All right," said Marguerite, "I am almost through; only one shelf, and that won't take us long."

Soon they were busy throwing the rings, and Roland, his puzzles finished, found them there. He watched them a minute, then began to rummage in the closet. "Oh, Roland, don't mix it all up," said Marguerite. "I worked so hard and I want mother to see it tidy."

"I won't," said Roland. "I was only hunting. Why, here is the checker board I had last Christmas. I had forgotten all about it. I haven't played for weeks. I guess I will get Edna for a game," and taking it in his hands he started for the room where Edna was practicing.

Their game finished, Helen and Marguerite looked around for something to do.

"I know," said Helen. "Mother said she was so busy that she hadn't dusted downstairs yet. Let's do it for her. You take the dining room and I will take the sitting room. We will see who gets through first."

Before they knew it the luncheon bell rang, and they began to tell their experiences of the morning.

"I know what I am going to do this afternoon," said Roland. "I am going to look in the hall closet. I had a fine game of checkers and I shouldn't wonder if there were other games we haven't played for a long time."

Sure enough, the children found a game of "Flags" they had long ago put away and forgotten, and after that mother came and played "Authors" with them.

Then she brought down an old paste-board box, so old it was falling apart and had been sewed with thread. She opened it and took out such funny-looking old cards. On the cover it said, "Peter, Parley's Trip to New York."

"I found this today," she said. "I had it when I was a little girl no older than the twins. There were not so many games in those days and we were glad to play it over and over. I thought perhaps you would like to try it now."

The children were delighted and shouted with laughter over the quaint, old game.

"What is this I hear?" said a voice in the hall. And how they jumped!

"Why, it's father," they cried. "Father and six o'clock, and we didn't know it was four!"

Father laughed and drew out a package from his pocket.

"I thought you would find the day very long," he said, "and be wishing there was something to do, so I stopped in the store and bought a game for us all to play this evening; but I see I wasted my sympathy."—Zion's Herald.

The Good Bad Wind.

"Mother, does God make the wind blow?" came to the ears of a very busy mother.

"Why, of course, dear—why do you ask?" the mother asked curiously.

"Well, if he does, then I don't like him. It makes a big noise at night and scares me. And it blew down my playhouse and knocked over daddy's nice corn."

Mother bit off her thread and laid down her work. She was tempted to let the question go as she had many another, but her conscience troubled her a bit. What queer, unanswerable questions Jimmy-boy asked. She wondered if he would always keep it up.

"Jimmy-boy, listen! When God made everything He said His creation was good, and just because we cannot see as He does we do not always understand. You know the other day you cried because the rain kept you inside, but where would the grass and flowers be if it did not rain? And now you think the wind is bad. Well, Jimmy-boy, even the wind does its part. Of course it did blow very hard and daddy's corn went down, but it will come up again, and the wind cleared the air for us. And another thing you can remember. The wind turns the wind-mills and the cows can get a drink; it sends the boats along, and does a lot of good things we never see. Of course when it blows so hard the houses go over and people get hurt sometimes, it is hard to see that it is good; but, Jimmy-boy, mother hopes you will always believe what God made is good, and that more good than bad comes to us. We forget the good things and talk of the bad things many times. And remember, too, little son, that God is good. He is love, and He will make everything right."

Jimmy-boy kept his bright eyes fastened on mother's face, and she looked down into eyes of understanding. Pretty soon he went out to play again, and mother took up her work with a different feeling in her heart. "How glad

I am I took time to explain," she said to herself; "he will not forget, I am sure."

The incident had been forgotten when a few weeks later she sat sewing by the open window. Through the window came the fragrance of the rose and honeysuckle, and to her ears came the hum of little voices. They drew nearer and her eyes filled with thankful tears as she heard Jimmy-boy say to his little playmate, "You mustn't say you hate the hot sun. God made it so mother's roses would bloom. And she said God is good and God is love."—Richmond Christian Advocate.

The Antics Of An Ant Hill.

Probably the most wonderful little people in all nature are the ants. The bees are also wonderful, but I think the ants are still more interesting. It takes a great deal of study, however, to understand the ants, and to know all their ways.

My first close acquaintance with a large colony of ants was not pleasant. I was a small boy at the time and had gone to the pasture to pick raspberries. My mother had promised me a quarter of a dollar if I filled my pail, so I was very intent on the berry picking. This being the case, I was not looking out for any ant-hills.

I am sure that a city of human beings would not like to have a great giant, miles tall, come walking upon the very top of their city. Neither did the ants.

I was trying to reach some tempting berries which were very large and brightly colored. There was a friendly little hillock that would help me to reach them, so I stepped upon it. It was the front gate of the ant's citadel. I suppose I broke down the gate and perhaps crushed in the entrance of the central chamber. Anyhow, several hundred ant soldiers rushed out to punish me. The ants really do have soldiers, trained and every efficient. They certainly were efficient on my legs. A score or two began stinging and biting me. With a howl of pain I fled for the brook, which luckily was nearby. Here I thrust my legs into a pool and drowned all the attacking army. When I went back for my berry pail, I found that several regiments of ants were drawn up about the gate of their citadel ready to defend it. But I had had enough, so I meekly took my berry pail to another clump of bushes.

Not only do the ants have soldiers which war upon other ants and bring back captives of which they make slaves, just as the Romans used to do in olden times, but they also have worker ants which do all the work. They build the underground tunnels, bring the food, feed the young and do all sorts of menial work. And speaking of food, I must not forget to tell you of two very strange things about the ants' food. We all know that the ants' underground tunnels and granaries are all well supplied when the winter comes, but I do not think that many of you know that certain ants are bakers and that they make bread.

They gather a certain seed which is their favorite food. Then the slaves grind it up fine by chewing it. Finally it is kneaded into dough and formed into small cakes and placed in the sun to bake. When it is sufficiently baked it is put away in the underground storehouse for use in the winter. Other seeds are also stored away without baking them. But some of these seeds would sprout and that would spoil them for food were not the ants wise enough to prevent the seeds from sprouting. This they do in two ways. The first is to bite off the germ so that the seed cannot sprout. Or they will put a strong acid into the germ and that kills it. Thus the seed is kept nicely until they are ready to eat it.

Not only do the ants have soldiers and slaves, but they also have guests in their large underground houses. These are certain small crickets which they invite into their tunnels. They feed the crickets, wait upon them, and give them the best that they have. They also sometimes invite small beetles to come and live with them. These guests they likewise treat with great dignity. Perhaps the principal reason why the ants love to entertain the beetle is that he gives off a pleasant perfume which they enjoy. So when the ant tunnel gets musty, and does not smell sweet, one of the ants will go up to Mr. Beetle and gently stroke his head, and he will at once take out the stopper of his scent bottle and the chamber is filled with the sweet perfume.

Still another very strange thing is the fact that the ants are herdsmen and that they keep cows. Or at least they keep little creatures which give them a sort of milk. These are the green flies known as aphids.

The ants will catch these little flies and herd them in one of their ant pastures. Whenever the ant wants some milk, he will tickle the fly, and it at once gives up a sweet, sticky milk of which the ant is very fond. In the autumn the ants will drive large droves of these cows into their underground stables, where they will keep them all winter long. I have never heard of their making butter or cheese, but they certainly use the milk, and it is an important part of their winter diet.

It is the red ants which make slaves of the black ants. The red ants are more warlike, so they get the best of the black ants.

A red queen will go into a black ant colony. Here she will live in her cradle and lay a great many eggs. These will, of course, all hatch red ants. She will make the black ants take care of her eggs, and also feed the young red ants until there are a lot of red ants in the black ant-hill. Then the red ants will take charge and make slaves of all the black ants. They will send the black ant army away on the war path, and it will come back with scores of black ant prisoners, which will all be added to the slaves and workers of the red ant-hill. Thus this hill, which was originally a black ant-hill, will, in time, become a red ant-hill or nest, and the black ants will all disappear.

With their armies and soldiers and slaves, their cows and their select guests, their wonderful building skill and their diligence, I think that the ants are the most interesting little people in the world.—Selected.

Who Is This?

I know a child, and who she is
I'll tell you by and by.
When mother says, "Do this" or "that,"
She says, "What for?" and "Why?"
She'd be a better child by far
If she would say: "I'll try."

"There are four chapters of the Bible in which sin is not mentioned—two at the beginning and two at the end. The first two chapters tell of the creation of the earth; the last two speak of the creation of a new earth. After the creation, sin entered; with the re-creation, sin forever will be banished."

HARWOOD: Died, at Annapolis, Maryland, August 30, 1924, HESTER A. HARWOOD, aged seventy-five years; daughter of William and Hester Ann Harwood.

W. H. CARTER.

MR. W. H. CARTER was born in Caroline County, Va., on March 4, 1865, and died September 16, 1924. He was a merchant in Port Royal, Va., where he spent his whole life and was thoroughly identified with the community. His summons came suddenly and it could truly be said he "died in the harness," doubtless as he would have chosen.

To portray his character as it was is to emphasize the religious element which stood out most conspicuously in it, all who knew him recognized that the service of his God and Saviour came first with him and everything that hindered such service was to be given up to it. Even in religion there is individuality and he possessed the art of making friends. He had no tastes for the animosities of people but he was so influenced by charity that he surrounded himself with friends; he was a follower of Christ who made friends even of "publicans and sinners." When Mr. Carter passed away there was general grief, the lowest and the highest felt personal loss, and the community will miss this public spirited citizen. His church has lost a true son.

As a friend I recall these lovely traits of his life without further comment, feeling deeply that a life like this needs no word of mine; it speaks louder than anything that may be said of it; life is more than language. Others will feel the call and fill up the broken ranks.

IN MEMORIAM.

MRS. CHAMPE BROCKENBROUGH THORNTON.

Passed peacefully into the rest of Paradise, Sunday morning, August 31, 1924, in her native city of Washington, LAURA STETTINIUS THORNTON, the relict of Champe Brockenbrough Thornton, Jr., of Port Royal, Va., a brave Confederate soldier, a Christian gentleman. For Mrs. Thornton there was no sadness of farewell. "At peace with God" and dear ones near. He gathered about her the robes of Immortality. And, we believe, because we have His word, that in "the twinkling of an eye," she met her "Pilot face to face." Gathering a radiance, too, from "those angel faces smile, which she loved long since and lost awhile." Richly endowed with a soul and mind of fragrant purity—a spirituality bloomed—as from a treasured garden of rarest lilies, nurtured throughout her 88 well-lived years, by unflinching faith, in her Saviour. Mrs. Thornton's life was a ministry of love and loyalty to her family and friends—a benefactor to the poor—a benediction to all, in her gentle, Christian courtesy. These marked her as a worthy representative of a long and honored lineage. Laura Stettinius was the eldest daughter of William Stettinius and Rosina Grammer, a prominent citizen of Washington and Petersburg, Va. Her grandfather, Samuel Stettinius in moving to Washington made the fourteenth family in forming the nucleus of our National Capital. He, like her mother's parents, G. C. Grammer, Esq., and Eliza Doyme, were actively interested in moulding the religious influence in the infancy of the city. Today the old home of Mr. Grammer's stands as "a beaconlight" to the homeless and destitute women adrift and stranded in Washington (at corner of John Marshall and C Street, N. W.). Mrs. Thornton was honorary President and loved its Christian service work for better womanhood as tenderly as she did the work for the National Cathedral, in her prayerful desire to see its completion.

Mrs. Thornton possessed a highly cultured mind—a veritable treasure-trove of beautiful thought. The reverent affection with which her memory is cherished is an eloquent tribute to the rare attractiveness of her life. "Follow me, as I followed Christ" is the heritage she has left those who loved her.

"Make her to be numbered with Thy Saints in glory Everlasting."

and rows of houses. If the right man comes to this parish, it soon ought to be the largest in the city of Reading.

There was only one thing to mar the gladness of the occasion, the rector had handed in his resignation to take effect November 1. He is going to Fall River, Mass. While there were many congratulations for the rector and his work, there were also many expressions of regret from his Bishops, fellow-clergy and members of his parish.

HARRISBURG.

Rt. Rev. J. H. Darlington, D. D., Bishop.

Work Among the Students at Pennsylvania State College.

The wonderful weather of October 1 made it possible for St. Andrew's Church to carry out successfully its plan to demonstrate the value of its work among students of the Pennsylvania State College.

Fifteen automobiles in procession startled the college community into wondering "what new educational or industrial group is this which is inspecting the college today?" It was in fact the women of the Williamsport Archdeaconry in the Diocese of Harrisburg, eagerly seeking to understand the material background within which the spiritual activities of the Church may work for the guidance and up-building of our youth. After their tour over the campus and through the town they were better able to appreciate the appeals which the Rev. Edward M. Frear, rector of the local parish, and the Rev. Charles Everett McCoy, rector of Trinity Parish, Williamsport, made in behalf of a far-sighted building program. They saw the college, with its thousands of students, giving the Church a great challenge and an opportunity; they saw the local mission with its one little room, doing heroic service; and they came to the inevitable conclusion that if the Church could provide adequate buildings, the work would repay the Church many times over when the students return from State College to their homes throughout the State of Pennsylvania, with their religious interests deepened and strengthened, instead of having them dulled and dissipated during their college days. Equipment is essential. The women were keen to recognize that. They went home enthusiastic for the work. Now the rector says that he would like to take the Churchmen of Pennsylvania around in this way, and show them the opportunities awaiting development.

On October 20 the Most Rev. Ethelbert Talbot, D. D., Presiding Bishop of the Church, called together at St. Andrew's, State College, the Interdiocesan Building Committee to consider plans and a program for a new church building.

The College opened auspiciously on September 24, with about 2,450 students in attendance. A larger number of students have expressed their desire to worship at St. Andrew's, instead of the College Chapel, than ever before in the history of our mission at State College. It is a fine looking lot of young men and women that fills the church to capacity every Sunday morning.

On Friday evening, October 17, St. Andrew's Brotherhood, assisted by St. Margaret's Guild, gave the Annual Parish Party to welcome the new students. The Phi Kappa Psi fraternity kindly loaned its house for the occasion.

PITTSBURGH.

Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., Bishop.

Meeting of Young People's League.

On Tuesday evening, October 21, at Trinity House, the Young People's League of the Diocese held its autumnal meeting. About eighty-five were present, representing twenty parishes and missions. Supper was served, followed by a business meeting. Secretaries were chosen as follows: Recording Secretary, Miss Annie Marsh, of St. Stephen's Church, Wilkinsburg, and Corresponding Secretary, Miss Sarah Morris, of Trinity Church, Monessen. Bishop Mann made an address, and presented several objectives for work during the season of 1924-5. The two that were adopted were the maintenance once more of two scholarships for the Summer Conference of Church Workers at Conneaut Lake in July; and the other a farewell service in behalf of the Rev. Albert Northrop Roberts, who leaves the Diocese shortly to take up work in Brazil. Mr. Roberts is a great favorite with the young people, and has been associated in work with them for the two years last past, at the Conneaut Lake Conference. The service will be held Sunday afternoon, November 16, at Trinity Church, Pittsburgh, when the speaker will be Mr. Lewis B. Franklin, Treasurer of the National Council.

The handsome new organ, just completed at the Church of the Ascension, Pittsburgh, was dedicated on Wednesday evening, October 22, by the Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., LL. D., with a short service of benediction. The service was followed by a Recital played by Dr. Charles Heinroth, organist of Carnegie Music Hall of Pittsburgh. The organist of the church, Mr. D. R. Philippi, Dean A. G. O., gave the first Sunday evening Recital on October 26. Mr. T. Tertius Noble, of St. Thomas' Church, New York, gave a Recital on October 29.

ERIE.

Rt. Rev. Jno. C. Ward, D. D., Bishop.

Successful Praching Mission.

A Preaching Mission was conducted in Christ Church, Oil City, the Rev. George Carleton Wadsworth, rector, by the Rev. W. J. Loaring Clark, D. D., Head Missioner of the National Council, New York City, October 12 to 19, inclusive. In addition to the Mission, Dr. Clark addressed five conferences of the clergy of the Diocese of Erie, meeting in Christ Church October 14, 15 and 16. He was also guest and principal speaker at the noon-day luncheons of the Kiwanis and Lions Clubs. In all, Dr. Clark delivered twenty-six addresses. The Mission was a great success, the meetings being largely attended, and Christ Church Parish was greatly strengthened by Dr. Clark's efforts, and Christ's Kingdom extended in this locality. No offerings were received during the Mission until the final night, when a most generous response was made.

The Rev. William H. Moore, D. D., of Pittsburgh, Kansas, has accepted an appointment as priest-in-charge of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Pittsburgh, Pa., until May 1, and has already entered upon work in his new field of labor.

The Rev. Thos. F. Opie, D. D., has declined the call extended him in September to a position on the staff of Epiphany Church, Washington, and will remain at his post as rector of the Church of the Holy Comforter, Burlington, N. C.

At a recent meeting of the Council of Advice of the missionary district of Cuba, the Very Rev. Harry Beal, dean of Holy Trinity Cathedral, Havana, was elected president and Mr. William L. Platt, Prado 105, Havana, was elected secretary.

ORDINATIONS.

On St. Luke's Day, October 18, at St. Thomas' Church, Canonsburg, the Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., LL. D., advanced to the priesthood the Rev. Rodney S. Brace, incumbent at Canonsburg. The candidate was presented by the Rev. Homer A. Flint, Ph. D., Executive Secretary of the Diocese, and the sermon was preached by Bishop Mann. More than twenty of the diocesan clergy were present, and united with the Bishop in the imposition of hands. A large congregation was present. At the close of the service luncheon was served to the visiting clergy and others by the ladies of the congregation.

DEATHS.

The Rev. Henry Chamberlaine, a retired minister of the Diocese of New York, and the founder and first rector of St. Matthew's Church, West Eighty-fourth Street, near Central Park, died at Summit, N. J., October 4, after a long illness, aged seventy years.

The Rev. Robert A. Edwards, D. D., rector of the Church of the Holy Innocents, Tacony, Pa., died at his home on October 18, after a month's illness. He was eighty-three, and was born in Lancastershire, England, and attended the Philadelphia Divinity School. He first was installed as rector of Grace Church, Mt. Airy, and later as rector of St. Matthias Church, Philadelphia. He is survived by his widow and three sons, one of whom, the Rev. W. Y. Edwards, is rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Germantown. The burial service was held at the church Wednesday morning and Bishop Garland officiated, assisted by Dean Taitt of Chester. A large number of the clergy of the diocese were present.

A great educator once said of children, "The best way for a child to learn to fear God is to see and hear a real Christian." So the best way to get strong faith is to come in contact with people that have faith, and live by it. The world has not too many of them. Faith is contagious, just like doubt and fear. One good thing the Church does: it brings us into contact with faith, and holds up faith as a shining ideal.—C. E. World.

THE ZR-3,

so it is reported, was protected by every known precaution from the tragic fate of the Roma and the Dixmude.

Disastrous experiences teach their lessons. Because men saw that estates, accumulated through years of labor, were dissipated quickly in inexperienced hands, trust companies were organized.

Many prudent men have named the Virginia Trust Company executor and trustee in their wills to safeguard their estates and thus assure their heirs a dependable income. Consultations are invited—confidential and no cost.

Daily Bible Readings

When the National Council was requested in 1921 to publish daily Bible readings no one supposed that their use would total a quarter of a million within three years. For each year since a Kalendar of Daily Bible Readings has been issued, and the combined distribution of these three issues has exceeded that figure.

The Kalendar for 1925, beginning with Advent 1924, is now ready. It is a 32-page booklet, illustrated.

The readings from the Bible for the first six months follow subjects suggested by the Collects in the Prayer Book, those beautiful prayers which give the Christian a life motive each week. During the remaining months, the readings are from the Books of Prophecy, the Poetical Writings, The Acts, and the General Epistles. The year closes with passages selected from the Book of Revelation.

The price of the Kalendar is 5c. or $3.50 per hundred in lots of one hundred or more.

FRACTIONAL LOYALTY

In this age of myriad social and religious activities, all of which require for their operation an ever-increasing income, an entirely new science has been created. Gradually the various methods are being reduced to a system almost as exact as a formula in chemistry. We can recall the days of its meagre beginnings, when the sandwich-man encased in boards, ornamented with flaming details of the progress of the scourge of the tropics, stood on the street-corner and shouted: "Contributions for the yellow-fever sufferers of the South." This is a far cry to tag-days, campaigns, and the methods of the present time. The art of extracting money from people presumably unwilling to contribute, has become a business in itself. There are certain well-known specialists in this business whose fees would bring a smile of satisfaction to a consulting corporation lawyer. There are firms whose sole business is to organize campaigns and to provide experts in the art of soliciting. The business is provided with every known mechanical device, from the mite box, which cannot be opened save by a master key, to posters decorated with the fierce looking individual who points his accusing finger at you and produces that guilty feeling which can only be relieved by attaching your name to a subscription list. An "expert" newly come to town, looks you up in Bradstreet; decides what you are "good for," and then the elaborate mechanism of this art of extracting is set in motion, and the money is forthcoming. So advanced is this business in efficiency that the experts are able to foretell with some degree of accuracy what the campaign will net. There are certain phrases grown familiar to our ears: "Give until it hurts," and that other one which is driving some to madness and others to lying: "Do you tithe?" We feel confident that there are many who will sympathize with us when we declare that being tagged fills us with a feeling of hostility to all mankind, and spoils a whole day, and the visit from an "expert" touches some atavistic nerve, and we realize our kinship to some head-hunting ancestor who earned merit and reputation by adorning his mud-hut with the grinning skulls of those slain in the noble chase. We realize the futility of the effort, but it will ease the mind to register a protest against the whole mechanical process of extracting money. St. Paul tells us that generosity is the evidence in the soul of God's approving presence. The enforced tribute upon our means levied by these mechanical devices is rapidly making men callous to every actual need of their fellows, and there is a growing resentment towards the methods by which this tribute is enforced.

We have no desire to add another conjuring phrase, but we would like to point out that the phrase "Give until it hurts" is infinitely below the Christian standard, which is "Give until it stops hurting." When we have arrived at this stage we have just learned the first lesson in loyalty and found out the only value in money. Money, like every other form of property, has an ethical, which we take to be equivalent to Christian, basis for its ownership by us, only in so far as it furnishes a means of self-extension. This self-extension is a very different thing from self-expression. So long as money or other property is justified as a means of self-expression; it is but a mechanical device, a thing neither good nor bad, and as such can have no spiritual value. Considered as a means of self-extension, man expands to the limit of his opportunities, and all that he has, is just as truly the measure of his personality, as the skin constitutes the outer boundary of his body. Enforced tribute from a man who calls himself a Christian is like prescribing blood-letting for an inert fat man. What the man needs is exercise not phlebotomy. The rich man, or the poor man, who gives until it hurts, has only convinced himself by such a method that he is not a Christian. When the abundant life of true loyalty floods his veins, his money becomes in reality a part of himself and its use in the service of mankind, not a hurt, but the play of a resistless energy whose reflex is what Christ calls the blessedness of living. In the light of this truth the question as to whether a man tithes is like pulling back the eyelids of a sick man to see whether he is conscious or holding a mirror before his face to test whether he still breathes. The reasonable service of a Christian is a thorough-going loyalty that knows no fractional expression limited by the first touch of pain, nor does it recognize a decimal discipleship.

WANTED---A HERO

What the world needs today is a healthy ideal of manhood. The old idols of the mind have one by one lost their hold upon the imagination. The warrior type is a broken image. The change began to show itself before the great war. In our youth the soldier reigned supreme. We remember our first attempt at oratory as a youth. We had chosen Caesar as a theme, and we can recall even now the zest with which we proclaimed the number of men slain in the Gallic wars; and how we treasured a picture of Caesar with the laurel wreath about his brows. During our college days a large engraving of Napoleon adorned the walls of our study. In every home the man in uniform dominated from his gilded frame the imagination, and set the standard of values. An ancestor without his sword required an explanation. Some years before the great war Caesar went into the waste basket, and Napoleon was relegated to the attic, where he still resides in the hope that there will come a day when a picture will be found that will fit into the frame.

Whatever else the war did, this is certainly true: it put the professional soldier on the defensive. His bluster is gone, and his chestiness which used to inspire awe, now only suggests to the observer that he may be suffering from some physical deformity. When the warrior was dethroned the new ruler of the imagination was the Captain of Industry. He did not make a good picture, but his name was on every tongue. Glory was a forgotten word, and success contained the magic syllables. The cult of success for a time came near to being the universal religion. Mark Twain was among the first to raise his voice in protest. By the change of a single word in a familiar phrase he shook the throne of the Tyrant. "Born of rich but honest parents" was more than a jest; it was the summons to revolution. The ruler of men's thoughts for the last quarter of a century is now like the professional soldier on the defensive. Here and there can be found men who count it an honor that men have paid them for service rendered in the coin of personal devotion and not in cash. Meanwhile the youth of our land is voicing its unbelief in a noisy allegiance to baseball and football heroes. The rapid advance in methods of transportation and the new science of advertising have turned the whole world into one big market-place. Whether we like the idea or not the one problem of life is how to establish a wholesome community spirit. There is no such thing as Foreign Missions. The time is coming when there will be no such thing as a Foreign Policy. The Church, like the State, has only one mission and is gradually learning that the only creative force in the world is found in sharing. This means the ends of sectarianism, religious and national.

SOUL SLAVERY

By the Reverend W. S. Bliss

President, The White Cross.

NOW comes the great outstanding opium event of the century. The nations of the world, through the League of Nations' Opium Committee, by unanimous vote, adopted this drastic proposition and their action was ratified by the League. Some nations did indeed propose conditions and reservations which, if allowed, would be in danger of nullifying and destroying the proposition, but a conference of all nations was summoned, and this is to meet in November, and to it the entire subject is to be committed. Thus for the first time in history a World Assembly is convoked, clothed with authority, whereby it may, if it will, inaugurate measures for uprooting every opium poppy and every cocaine shrub that grows, except as needed in medicine and science. But let no one think the fight is won. We have indeed the opportunity of a century, but it is an opportunity only. When that World Congress assembles it will be beset by apologists and advocates of opium from every quarter. Gentlemen representing the wretched street corner dope peddlers will be there, possibly in the guise of philanthropy. Representatives of the great opium and morphine combines will be there with their hands on springs of influence, invisible but well-nigh all-powerful. Officials speaking for governments solicitous for their revenues will be there. There will be detailed to us how their various governments "need the money." And remember that there will be fifty to sixty millions of revenue at stake, for which some other sources of supply must be found.

This Congress thus handicapped but clothed with authority whereby it may, if it will, put into effect this rigid limitation that the world demands, but yet not actually directed so to do—what legitimate and proper means can be employed to bring its action into conformity with world needs? A Congress, a parliament, the very flower and fruit of democratic principles, is established for the express purpose of giving effect to the will of its constituency. This coming Congress has the world for its constituency, and it cheerfully accords to the world the privilege of petition. It has been agreed that there shall be set apart a day for the reception of petitions. The world must be there at the doors of the Congress at the appointed time, petitions in hand. There must be an outpouring expression of the public opinion which we know to exist, a voicing of the universal conscience, such as shall envelop, submerge and overwhelm opposition and bring conviction home to every member of the Congress.

As a contribution toward this end there have been prepared forms of petition designed to go from the people of the American Continent to the International Opium Congress direct, and these petitions will be submitted to the Committee of this convention and their adoption solicited, from the convention, from its individual members, and from the constituent organizations of the convention, and from all persons of voting age as far as it is possible to secure them. It is desired that these and similar petitions shall carry the signature of thousands of religious and welfare organizations of every name—churches, societies, clubs, fraternal orders, and of individuals to a number not less than millions. We are told that an expression of public conviction such as this will carry an influence well-nigh irresistible.

Like expressions will come from other countries. The strong, fine conscience of Great Britain has already spoken and will be heard again. China is making ready her appeal. India, Malaya, Siam, will appear, petitions in hand. No power on earth can be compared with public opinion and that is the time when it needs to be used as never before.

The question will be asked, why is it that this whole opium traffic, a stench in the world's nostrils, execrated universally, repudiated and outlawed even by governments, to which it yields a revenue, why is it that this iniquity has not long ago been swept from the earth? There is an answer. It is found in the enormous, the well-nigh unlimited financial power with which the traffic has clothed itself. Until a few years ago the United States derived a revenue of millions from opium duties, while certain great chemical companies realized, without doubt, many fold more. Last month, the seventh of May, in the British Parliament the Duchess of Atholl asked the Secretary of State what revenue was derived from opium. The reply was that in 1922-23 the revenue was 6,410,000 pounds sterling. In November, 1923, Hon. Arthur Ponsonby asked in Parliament details of the proportion of the revenues received from sales of opium, and returns from eleven colonies were presented, showing that an average of 27.6 per cent of all revenues came from opium, Singapore leading with 45.5 per cent and Hongkong with 22.4 per cent. A considerable part of this revenue is remitted by the various colonies as a direct contribution to the home government. The expenditures of the colony of Singapore for all purposes in 1918 were $15,966,145, while the opium revenue for that year was $15,706,741, an amount almost equalling the total expenditures of the colony.

You Sons of England, in the old dark days of African slavery, it was your proud and your well-deserved boast that slavery ceased when its victim's foot touched British soil. In those days when slavers raided the villages of Africa and carried the wretches whom they captured into slavery in a country vaunting itself the home of the free, it was you who sent your swift-winged avenging cruisers and swept the traffic from the seven seas. For the sole sake of revenue, and there is no shadow of excuse otherwise, England cannot, England will not, in this day keep silence in the fact of a slavery so cruel, so relentless, that it binds many nations and unnumbered millions of people in a slavery compared with which African slavery was mild and humane. And it is a traffic which may any day stretch out its polluting hand to snatch new victims from your own fireside.

I said a few minutes ago that the two nations having a bad preeminence of responsibility were our own two peoples of Britain and America. If we two are united no power on earth can stand against us. And united we must be. In the old days of Great Britain's misunderstanding with China at one time the British ships were trying to force the passage of the impregnable Peiho forts and they were suffering under the fire of the well-protected Chinese gunners. There was a small American contingent present, supposed to be for observation purposes only, but the American commander, seeing their plight, threw his non-combatant orders to the winds and steamed in to join the fray, shouting as he went those words that have given us a splendid Anglo-American slogan, "Blood is thicker than water!"

On the walls of your great Admiralty halls in London there hang great historic sea pictures recording the glories of the British Navy for a thousand years. A few weeks ago there was added to that noble galaxy a new painting commemorating the juncture formed in 1916, when the American squadron joined the British off the coast of England, a symbol of two great nations henceforth one and indivisible in purpose and sympathy. Today it is time once more for hands across the sea. Let word go forth that Canada and the United States have set their hearts on the extirpation of the plants that have blighted the world for a century, and that we will sanction no compromise. The preposterous contention is being advanced that while the smoking of opium is pernicious, yet to eat it is legitimate; that it is an innocent act to swallow it whole, but if you blow it off in smoke you are a sinner. This must mean that if it is legitimate to eat opium in India it is legitimate to smoke it in China, and equally legitimate to jab it in the arm in the form of morphine, American fashion.

Let us have done with unworthy quibbling. Let us recognize the well-known fact that it is difficult in these days for governments to make their budgets balance, and there is a prodigious revenue accruing from opium and, hate it as we will, it is hard to get along without it. But let us recognize also that the world will no longer stand for revenues coined from slavery and blood and let us call on the wasters of finance to discover other sources from which to fill treasuries.

Neither let us be afraid of that other bugaboo, so long and so solemnly dangled before our eyes, that the attempt to take opium away from the people of India would be fraught with certain dire but ill-defined consequences. We have seen how much that ancient scarecrow amounted to in China, and, thanks to age-old religious sentiments in India, opium addiction was never half so prevalent there as in China. If old smokers were thrown into ecstasies of delight when separated from their dope in China, opium eaters in India will not object, nor will morphine jammers in America.

In sober truth, the day is upon us, it has been generations in coming, when by a determined, a united, effort we may rid the world of the deadliest and most menacing of its physical evils. No one country can save itself. It is the whole world or none. If China and India are left out they will keep on poisoning the rest of us. It is the whole world or none. And in view of the coming great International Opium Congress it is now or never, at least it is now or not for generations.

THE ASSYRIAN CHURCH

Memorandum presented to the Protestant Episcopal Church of America through the Presiding Bishop and Council, by the Most Rev. Mar Timotheus, Metropolitan of India, Regent and Representative of His Holiness Mar Shimun, Catholicos Patriarch of the East:

Allow me to present to you a short memorandum on the Assyrian Church and also call your attention to the hope which our leaders entertain for the restored well-being of their Church in the East, as well as the Assyrian Church in general.

I need hardly go into detail as to the ancient Assyrian Race and Church by referring to their activities during the early centuries; but I may briefly add as well a little of our early history as is necessitated by the scope of this memorandum. Let me, therefore, say a few words about our Race:

As is evidently known, the dwellers of the land of Mesopotamia were variously termed, in the Old Testament times, the Children of Aram, hence the land was called Aram-Nah-reen, or Radan Aram, and their language Aramaic. Syrians or Assyrians and consequent upon these appellations, the country was often called Assyria. When the Assyro-Babylonian Empire was overthrown by the Maedo-Persians, the edicts of the King of Persia who was also referred to as the King of Assyria and of Babylon were published and interpreted in the Aramaic language which, in the Authorized Version, is translated as the "Syrian tongue," or Syriac, and as a matter of fact, the Paradise or the Garden of Eden itself was originally located in the land of Aram-Nah-reen.

We also know that Abraham was from the Ur of the Chaldees, consequently a Chaldean; but he is called a "Syrian," which fact brings to light that the terms "Aramaen," "Syrian," "Assyrian," "Chaldean," and "Babylonian," were all used synonymously.

The mission of the Prophet Jonah was to our ancient forefathers in Nineveh, and in commemoration of their heart-rent repentance. I may add here, that it is still a practice in our Church to observe a rigorous fast for three days, with ardent fervency and prayer—a fast which even our devil-worshipping neighbors, the "Yazeedes," observe by virtue of their tracing a common ancestry with us! This fast is the Fast of Rogation of the Ninevites. During Christian times our Metropolitan of the Province of Nineveh (modern Mosul) was addressed as the Metropolitan of Athoor (Ashoor).

The Aramaic language was in use not only all over Mesopotamia, but in the north of Palestine and other places. During the Captivity of Babylon, the Jews gave up their Hebrew language and took for themselves the Aramaic language; and hence the latter became the language of the Hebrews in Palestine. Also, and naturally therefore, this was the language which Our Lord spoke and in which the Sacrament of the Holy Eucharist was first instituted, and I am glad to say, that this is the very language which we still use in our Liturgical services.

Having said so far about our race and language let me now proceed to say a few words about our Church:

The history of the Church of the East commences at the very beginning of the first century itself in the Parthian Empire. The exodus of the Magi—the wise men from the East—to worship the Infant Christ in the manger, according to the prophecy of Zoradost and the advent and preaching of the Apostles Saints Thomas, Thadeus and Mari in the Persian Empire and the East in general, are both items of special interest in this connection. From its very inception till today the Church has been entirely autocephalous and flourished admirably well during the first centuries; this happy feature would have been quite unimpeded but for the Moslem persecutions of later days which cast the leaden extinguisher on her brilliant career. Yet it should be borne in mind that She was one of the great bulwarks of the Church of Christ against Paganism in the early centuries and against aggressions of Islam in the later. I would remind you that our people laid down their lives in the defense of the Christian Faith at the most Eastern frontier of the Christian world during the first six centuries of Christianity; we have sealed the Faith in Christ with the blood of untold martyrs whose names will appear in the Book of Life, although thousands of them are unknown to the world by name. Yes! Full many a gem of purest ray serene, the dark unfathomed caves of ocean bear.

From the sixth century or even earlier, to the fourteenth century at least, our Church had a powerful branch in China, in Peking, the capital itself, one of whose missionaries even made his way to Western Europe while others began to enforce as early as the second century, the ancient Church of St. Thomas in India, now confined only to the pepper Coast of Malabar.

These efforts of the Church could never have been accomplished without the shedding of the life-blood of its members so that at this day, this one-numerous and very energetic Church, being crumpled by persecutions and hardships of every description counts more or less 70,000 souls only.

I do not think I am overstating facts in recalling to you what She has endured, and for this reason, I believe that any student of history will grant that she has a claim upon the Christian world whose boundaries she has strengthened by centuries of missionary labor as well as by the defence of the truth in the heathen and Moslem surroundings, among which she has remained for centuries true to the faith.

For the last few decades our Church has been fortunate in receiving the active help of the mission of the Archbishop of Canterbury. Much has been done by this mission for the welfare of our people along educational lines and we shall always be grateful for this timely assistance. Unfortunately conditions following upon the war—in which we cast our lot with the Allies, regardless of consequences—have made it impossible, for various reasons, for that mission to resume its work among our people. Members of the Episcopal Church of America also gave generous aid for many years.

I need hardly say what a serious blow the withdrawal of this aid was to me. My people are scattered, the majority on the point of starvation, in the Caucasus, being at the same time without proper spiritual leaders; others now in the hot plains of Mesopotamia are a prey to malaria and other diseases caused by extreme heat and other difficulties, that gradually but surely tend to our final extinction. For, as you remember, the Mountain-Assyrians cannot but suffer considerably, having been heretofore accustomed to living for the larger portion of the year in a cool climate; our brethren Assyrians, now gathering in Persia also suffer terrible hardships and misery, while the few thousands who have found a refuge and asylum in this land of toleration and liberty are not anyway better financially, and a good many, whose conditions are not clear, are scattered in countries like France and Greece.

I have, therefore, turned toward the Church in America in the hope that I might find among the American Episcopalians the active Christian sympathy and help which is so intimately connected with the American people. Moreover, it was a matter of no little pleasure and consolation for me to learn from the Rev. Dr. W. C. Emhardt of the American Episcopal Church, that my beloved brother in Christ, His Grace, the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, is perfectly willing that the Church in America should continue their support of the work among Assyrians and formulate a policy of its own.

Undoubtedly, the emergency is great; every moment counts against our people physically as well as spiritually; they are left without adequate spiritual leaders, a prey of physical hunger and all which it implies; they are rapidly becoming extinguished as a people and a Church. About 40,000, that is, more than a clear half of the remaining Assyrians, have been driven by the terrible course of the recent World War into the Caucasus and other parts of Russia, destitute of everything. From ten to twenty thousand are in various parts of Mesopotamia, helpless aliens among unfriendly races, with perilous climatic adversity to add to their inexpressible misery.

Therefore, I appeal to the American Episcopal Church.

A LAYMAN'S RELIGION

By the Very Reverend W. R. Inge, D. D.

THE APOSTLES were all laymen; of the priests, theological professors and Rabbis, not one was chosen; we have only the shadowy figure of Nicodemus in the outer circle of discipleship. Some of the priests and lawyers may have been "saints"; but Christ preferred to make up the Twelve from other quarters—from fishermen, revenue officers, revolutionists—a motley company in good truth!

What had they in common? Apart from their devotion to Our Lord's Person, what were their aptitudes for discipleship? It is partly a guess to say that each of them had a natural qualification for one of the beatitudes. But one thing they had in common—obedience to a clear call. The love of Christ reached and touched their wills—it "constrained" them as it constrained St. Paul; they left all and followed where it called them. Their characters exhibit no frigid consistency—no hard polished surface; but they were capable of receiving a deep and permanent impression which shaped their lives from that day forward. Like all strong characters, they acted at once on their new conviction, and never looked back. It was not they who chose Christ, but Christ Who chose them. They loved Him because He first loved them. They laid at His feet what had before been the real interests of their lives—secular business of various kinds. Nothing more unlike the hothouse plants of cloistered sanctity can be imagined.

Christ still calls men and women of the world, who have neither the power nor the desire to acquire the saintly type of character, to be His fellow-laborers. If we say that religion does not interest us, that it is "not in our line," of course we shall not be on the look-out for it. But depend upon it, Christ does call us. He has work for all of us to do—work for each of us, which will remain undone if we do not do it—work of very various kinds, adapted to our several capacities. Few, if any, of us are called to "forsake all," in the literal sense; but there is not one of us who is not called to some real work for God. There is not one of us who is not commanded to take up his cross and follow Christ. It is not a question of saintliness, but of loyal personal service, to be rendered in the world, though not for the world. It is not a thing that we can take or leave as we choose. It does not rest with us to decide whether we will choose Christ; we have not chosen Christ, but He has chosen us. By placing us in a Christian country, with opportunities of influencing others, He has chosen us. Wilful rejection of the call must needs mean eternal loss, and there is no loss so great as to have missed the one chance of following in Christ's steps, and being enrolled among His disciples and fellow-workers. Most earnestly I entreat you not to think that the Gospel has no message for you, no claim upon you, no sacrifice to demand from you, no reward beyond all price to bestow upon you, because, it may be, you have not the temperament of the saint or mystic, and do no think or talk in the religious dialect. Christianity began as a layman's religion; its Founder was put to death by priests because He founded a layman's religion, and it will never take its proper place in the life of this country until the English laity understand that the main part of the work must be done by them, and that it does not rest with them to choose whether they will take it, they are called and chosen by Christ to do it.

A few words, in conclusion, to the young people in this congregation. A man's or woman's character for life is generally decided by what he or she makes of it between fifteen and twenty-five. Now is the time for you to put on the whole armour of God, to stand up for the right in your daily lives—for honor and kindness and purity, for all things that are true and noble and of good report. And I do not think anything will help you more than the thought of that Divine and gracious Figure beckoning to you as He did to His first disciples by the Lake of Genesareth, and calling you in two simple words, which, when you have once heard them, can never be as if they had not been spoken—"Follow Me."

MOBILIZING FOR PEACE

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America suggests that the Churches use the Anniversary of the Armistice, November 11, as their Mobilization Day.

The war-system of the nations is the outstanding evil of present-day civilization. It is the most ominous anti-Christian phase of modern life. The nations are constructing more and more effective devices for wholesale destruction. Should another world war overtake us, helpless men, women and children by the million, in cities great and small, would be suffocated, poisoned, burned to death.

The followers of Christ throughout our land should now concentrate on the stupendous and imperative task of outlawing war and banishing it from the world. The Churches, as Churches, should grapple with this monstrous foe. Let them denounce the colossal wrongs and evils of war, and point out the violation of every moral principle and ideal by the methods of war. Let them call the peoples to repentance for their long acquiescence in the war-system of the nations. Let them cultivate the right mind and the right will, which alone can make permanent peace a reality.

The root causes of war— injustice, wrong, selfishness, greed, sinister economic policies, misunderstandings, misinformation, ill-will, race hatreds—must be denounced and conquered. A determined will to work for the common good of the whole family of God must be zealously cultivated. A new conviction must prevail that every legitimate end that nations seek can be better secured by other means than by huge preparations for war and by war; that moral forces acting through effective international co-operation can give to the nations security, freedom and justice.

The Churches do not fail to recognize and honor the noble spirit of soldiers in every land who through sense of duty give themselves in patriotic self-sacrifice. But they can honor their heroic dead in no better way than by condemning and ending war. The great offensive to end war cannot succeed, however, merely by picturing the horrors, the evils and the sins of war, or by describing the glories of universal peace. To succeed, the Churches must grapple with the task in ways that are practical, concrete, systematic, constructive. They must get to work promptly, unitedly, energetically.

This is a task for the Churches of all the nations; for world peace can come only by the common action of all the nations. But the Churches of America have a unique opportunity and responsibility—to influence our nation to take the lead in outlawing war and to inspire our government to take its appropriate part in the councils of the nations for the establishment of a new international order.

Should not the Churches, affirming that their loyalty to Christ transcends all lower loyalties and determined to apply the principles and the spirit of Christ to every national and international problem, stand on their own feet, do their own thinking, adopt their own policies, and assert their independent right to deal with the greatest moral evil of this generation? Let them refuse unequivocally to support pagan international policies or acquiesce in colossal and provocative preparations for super-pagan wars. Let them declare that, for nations no less than for individuals, the wages of sin is death and that evil is to be overcome with good.

The time has surely come for the Churches, as Churches, local as well as national, to organize and mobilize for constructive programs in the crusade to establish world peace. Pastors should steadily hold these matters before their congregations. Women's organizations, young people's societies, Sunday Schools and groups of every kind should give themselves with utmost zeal to this crusade. All our Churches should become centers of accurate information on the bearing of Christian principles on international problems, centers of constructive programs for international righteousness and organized goodwill, centers of courageous antagonism to the war-spirit and the war-system, placing loyalty to Christ and His Will above local prejudice, class jealousy, race hatred, partisan politics and narrow nationalism.

This call is an appeal for practical action. Not they who say, "Lord, Lord" shall be saved, but they who DO the Will of the Heavenly Father.

The substitute of law, conciliation and arbitration for war in the settlement of international disputes is a matter of moral principle. But it is also vitally important that this principle be embodied in national legislative action.

Christian citizens have the right and the duty to inquire of those who represent them concerning their ideas and purposes regarding the outlawry of war, the substitution of law for war, and the embodiment in appropriate legislation of the ethical principles of the Kingdom of God in the relations of nations.

The war-system of the nations will be overthrown and a peace system established only when millions of men and women take vital interest in these questions, place them above party politics, and express their convictions in their votes.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letter to the Editor" will appear in our columns except over the signature of the writer.

THE BROTHERHOOD OF ST. ANDREW.

Mr. Editor:

How shall we overcome the indifference and neglect of young men with regard to their attendance on Church services? It is not our Church alone, but all Protestant Churches are suffering from the same neglect.

That it is the duty of parents and ministers to bring this about is admitted. But they largely fail to accomplish it.

There is no organization of men or boys so effective to make other men and boys attend Church services as is the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. The Church greatly needs this organization, and much good is coming to the Church from its work and effort.

It is so important to have young men attend the services of the Church that we should earnestly encourage the building up of an agency which seems the best adapted to bring this about.

ST. PAUL'S NORMAL AND INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.

Mr. Editor:

There is a reason and it is possible that some one reading this may be able to explain.

At Lawrenceville, which is the county seat of Brunswick County, Virginia, there has been located for thirty-six years the St. Paul's Normal and Industrial School. It is the largest colored school of the Church and it is exceeded in size only by Tuskegee and Hampton. Still there are Churchmen and Churchwomen who have heard of Tuskegee and Hampton and have aided them financially, but know little or nothing of St. Paul's.

For nearly two score years the Ven. James S. Russell, D. D., has labored industrially for St. Paul's and last year more than six hundred young men and women were being educated.

Here is a child of the Church, with which the members thereof should become better acquainted.

The writer personally visited St. Paul's last spring and was very much gratified with the conditions he found. In these days of high cost of living it is a pleasure to find the management of a school or any business where they are receiving one hundred per cent or more for every dollar they pay out. This was the impression I brought away with me after a two days' inspection of the School.

Some who read this may be traveling through Virginia on their way South this winter and may I suggest that they arrange to stop at Lawrenceville for a visit to St. Paul's.

A school of this character is doing more for the colored race than words can express. It should be better known and more liberally supported in the future than in the past.

UNITY.

Great is the craving after unity,—so great, so deep, so universal. That we know it is a part of God's first purpose for humanity, and never can die out till it has found its satisfaction. But it is too great and deep ever to find its final satisfaction in identity of organization. You cannot make the unit to be a unit by the external unity of one hard shell. If the fruit which you try to enclose is alive, it will burst your shell to pieces as it grows. If it be dead, your shell will soon hold only a dry and rattling remnant, to which it can give no life. No, the real unity of Christendom is not to be found at last in identity of organization, nor in identity of dogma. Both of those have been dreamed of, and have failed. But in the unity of spiritual consecration to a common Lord.—Phillips Brooks.

POLICE COURT PSYCHOLOGY.

In the city of Norfolk, Va., there is an official who should have his duplicate in every large city throughout the country. His title is that of "Public Defender," and his duties are to give the necessary legal assistance to persons charged with crime who have no money to employ a lawyer of their own.

This work has been done in the past by an attorney appointed by the judge, but this method is never very satisfactory, as the court almost always selects some young lawyer who has had but slight experience, or if another man is selected is apt to give the case but little attention.

Since 1915 various states and cities made provision providing for the appointment of a "Public Defender."

In an interesting address on the duties of his office, and the incidents connected therewith the holder of the position in the City of Norfolk emphasizes the partiality which police officers are apt to show for the State in giving their evidence.

He said it was a most difficult thing to get a policeman to give any favorable testimony for the criminal or even to tell of any extenuating circumstances connected with the occurrence that lead to the arrest.

Of course one reason for this is found in the psychological situation that exists.

In the average case in a city police court the official making the arrest is the chief witness for the prosecution. In his own mind he has passed on the case and decided that the situation justified him in making the arrest and he feels that having taken that step it behooves him to justify himself by securing a conviction as well. Consequently he assumes the attitude of prosecutor instead of an impartial witness. This situation leads to the condition, when the arresting official becomes not only a prosecutor, but a persecutor.

In saying this we do not mean to cast any aspersions on the personnel of the average police force. They are only human and simply display those human characteristics which are found in all classes of men who have a natural tendency to maintain themselves in a position of mental attitude, once that situation is assumed. It is just as true of the clergy as of the policemen. That is one of the unfortunate features of a religious controversy that once men take sides on a subject they are apt to say and do things that they otherwise would not do to maintain themselves in the attitude they have assumed.

It takes a very broadminded man, who is big enough to change his mind, especially under pressure.

This very fact, however, makes the office of "Public Defender" all the more necessary to secure justice to the offender.

It has been shown that seventy-five per cent of the cases that the Norfolk official has defended have been acquitted. Of course we have no evidence to show how many acquittals occur when there is no such official.

In considering these cases it is right that our sympathies should go out to the criminal offender, and it is our Christian duty to see that they get justice. On the other hand it is well to remember that the law favors the accused in at least two specific ways. In the first place every person is presumed to be innocent until proved to be guilty, thus placing "the burden of proof" on the state. In the second place the accused always has the right of appeal within a limited time, and the state can never appeal.

Besides this it is well to remember that a person is not usually penniless and friendless except through some fault of his own. Of course this is not always true, and circumstances may occasionally arise in which a kind-hearted, honest man will find himself accused of a crime in a strange place, and out of reach of anyone whom he knows to help him. This, however, is a very rare exception, and the great majority of people who are without friends, and without money, are in that condition, because they have not made any real effort to acquire either, but have been so thriftless financially, and so selfish socially that they are bankrupt in both respects.

We do not write this in a cynical mood, but as the result of long experience. No statement of Scripture is truer than that "As ye sow so shall ye reap."

AN UNENVIABLE POSITION.

"This country is suffering under an indictment which proclaims it the most lawless on earth. You will find that the United States must plead guilty to that indictment."

Such was the deliberate statement of a Judge of the Court of General Sessions of New York County at the recent induction ceremonies of a fellow Judge. It was not the stricture of the moralist, nor the snap judgment of the professional reformer. It was the well-considered opinion of a man steeped in the actualities of crime as they are unfolded in the greatest criminal court in the world, and yet a man tempered in his judgments by the training and practice of his profession.

"The most lawless nation on earth," Judge Talley charged. That means there is more crime committed in the United States in proportion to the population than in England or France or Italy or any other civilized country in the world. A more serious charge could hardly be brought against people. Does the evidence in the case sustain the indictment? If we are guilty, what is our defense—what explanation can be given?"

With these startling words a very interesting and terrible indictment is made in a recent newspaper article, and it is worth while for thinking people to pause and consider what produces such conditions. In England they have a custom that might well be followed in this country. When a bill is pending in Parliament involving a change in the criminal code a committee always confers with representatives of the police department of London and Scotland Yard and gets their view as to the practicability of enforcing such a law. If they report that, in their opinion, it will not be enforceable a bill is almost sure to lose. The framers of our Constitution no doubt had this same practical thought in mind when they provided a lengthy and cumbersome means for amending our Federal Constitution. They supposed that when a new proposition had been sufficiently discussed and promoted to secure first of all the approval of two-thirds of both houses of Congress, and later the ratification of three-fourths of the state legislatures, that it then would have acquired sufficient popular backing to make it enforceable.

From the fact that at least two of our Constitutional Amendments remain apparently unenforceable they would seem to have been mistaken. One reason for the lawless record of the United States may be that before passing new laws our legislators will not take into consideration the question of possible enforcement, and disregard for one law is apt to breed contempt for all.

The miscarriage of justice, and escape of criminals through numerous court continuances and appeals is another cause to which may be attributed this condition at least in part.

In recent years the system of probation and suspended sentences is also being attacked as a reason for disregard of law by criminals. There is no doubt that the suspended sentence is often misused, and sometimes by the best intentioned judges. It is a serious mistake simply to suspend a man's sentence without imposing upon him any sense of obligation either to some responsible individual or to some court official. This practice will undoubtedly bring the whole system of suspended sentence into disrepute and should be discouraged by those who hope for criminal reforms through this plan.

THE MEANING OF THE FEDERAL COUNCIL

WHEN JOHN WESLEY said to a Christian who belonged to another denomination than his own: "If thy heart be as my heart, give me thy hand," he was voicing unconsciously the purpose and spirit of the Federal Council of the Churches. Organized by twenty-nine evangelical denominations as a means of expressing their underlying unity in Christ and of joining hand-in-hand in common tasks, its primary aim is to secure the largest possible measure of fellowship and cooperation among the evangelical Churches.

Each of the denominations comprising the Council retains its full independence, but through the Council joins with the others in regular conference and in cooperative service. So far from weakening or ignoring any denomination, this cooperation means the reinforcing of each. Every part of the Church is stronger because of the strength of the Church as a whole.

The program and policies of the Council are determined by the official representatives whom the various denominations appoint to serve upon the Council. The Council, therefore, is not a voluntary or independent organization, but the Churches themselves coming together in a more effective solidarity.

The Council owes its existence to the fact that there is already a genuine spiritual unity among the Protestant Churches. Of this inner oneness the Council is simply the outward manifestation. The Council grows in strength just in proportion to the growth of the spirit of mutual understanding and consciousness of common purposes among the Churches.

More specifically, the aims of the Council, as defined in the Constitution, which each constituent denomination has ratified, are as follows:

"To express the fellowship and Catholic unity of the Christian Church.

"To bring the Christian bodies of America into united service for Christ and the world.

"To encourage devotional fellowship and mutual counsel concerning the spiritual life and religious activities of the Churches.

"To secure a larger combined influence for the Churches of Christ in all matters affecting the moral and social condition of the people, so as to promote the application of the law of Christ in every relation of human life."

In addition to serving as a national center for the cooperative work of the Churches, the Council assists local communities to develop effective cooperation in dealing with their own community problems. As a result, there are now nearly fifty local federations or councils of Churches. Each of these is a body wholly independent of the Federal Council, being responsible only to the Churches of the local community, but receiving inspiration from the Federal Council and through its learning from the experience of other communities in cooperative Christian work.

The Quadrennial Meeting of the Council, to be held in Atlanta, December 3-9, will review the development of the cooperative movement in the Churches during the last four years and outline its plan of work for the coming quadrennium. The program of the Council, as the discussions at the Atlanta meeting will show, is grounded in an emphasis upon personal religion and the spirit of evangelism. This spirit, as the Council conceives it, extends to all our social and international relations and seeks to Christianize every phase of the world's life. What the Churches can do to get rid of war, to secure international justice and peace, to develop brotherhood in industry, to promote fraternity among the races of the world, to win the final victory over the liquor traffic—these and other vital questions will concern the Churches as represented in the Council's assembly at Atlanta. To gain a clear vision that Christ is the Lord of us all and to think together about practical plans for more fully making Him Lord in every realm is the outstanding purpose of this meeting.

QUADRENNIAL MEETING OF FEDERAL COUNCIL ANNOUNCED.

A preliminary announcement of the program of the Quadrennial Meeting of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America to be held at Atlanta, Georgia, December 3-9, has been made by the special Committee on program of which Bishop James Cannon, Jr., of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is Chairman. The program indicates that the Quadrennial Meeting of the Council will be discussing some of the most urgent and important issues before the Protestant Churches of America.

The general theme of the meeting as a whole is "The Church in the World." Among the specific subjects which are to be considered are: "The Need of the World for the Church of Christ," "The Evangelistic Work of the Church," "The Educational Work of the Church," "The Church and the Community," "The Church and Race," "The Church and the Nations" and "The Cooperation of the Churches."

The evening meetings during the entire session will be devoted to a series of public meetings centering around the theme, "The Common Tasks of the Churches." The several subjects to be considered in this series are: "Training the Youth for Christ," "Winning Men to Christ," "Christianizing our Social Relations," "Christianizing our Race Relations," "Christianizing our International Relations" and "Winning the World to Christ."

Each Monday there will be a series of meetings of a devotional and inspirational character upon the theme "The Call to Personal Religion," emphasizing the great convictions and experiences which Christians of all denominations share. Included in this series are: "Faith in God," "Loyalty to Christ," "Prayer," "Personal Religion and Public Righteousness."

Among the speakers who are already announced are: Dr. Robert E. Speer, Secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions and President of the Federal Council; Governor William E. Sweet, of Colorado; Bishop William F. McDowell, of Washington; Bishop Francis J. McConnell, of Pittsburgh; Bishop Frederick F. Reese, of Georgia; Bishop Edwin D. Mouzon, of Nashville; Bishop Warren A. Candler, of Atlanta; the Rev. Rockwell H. Potter, of Hartford, Conn., Moderator of the National Council of Congregational Churches; Justice Florence E. Allen, of Columbus, Ohio; President E. Y. Mullins of the Baptist Theological Seminary at Louisville, Kentucky; the Rev. M. Ashby Jones, pastor of Ponce de Leon Baptist Church, Atlanta; President John Hope of Morehouse College; the Rev. James I. Vance, of the First Presbyterian Church of Nashville, Tenn.; the Rev. Henry H. Swets, of Louisville, Secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Education; Prof. William Adams Brown, of New York, and Bishop George C. Clement, of the A. M. E. Zion Church.

One of the most notable features of the gathering will be the presence of distinguished representatives of the Churches of foreign lands. These will include: the Rt. Hon. Sir Willoughby Dickinson, of London, former member of the British Parliament and leader of the World Alliance for International Friendship through the Churches; Professor Julius Richter, of the University of Berlin, a world authority on foreign missions; and Dr. Adolf Keller, of Zurich, Switzerland, one of the outstanding figures in European Protestantism. The National Christian Council of Japan will be represented by the Rev. A. Reischauer, of Tokio, the Foreign Missionary Movement will be interpreted by Dr. Samuel M. Zwemer, of Egypt and Arabia, the leading missionary to the Moslem World.

The several morning sessions will be devoted to a discussion of the policies and programs of the churches in their cooperative work. These discussions will center chiefly around the report of the Committee on Policy for the next Quadrennium which includes one representative named by each of the twenty-eight constituent denominations.

The President of the Council to succeed Dr. Speer and the other officers for the next Quadrennium will be elected on Thursday morning, December 4.

O Master, who with kindly face,
At noon walked in the market place,
We crave a brother's smile and song
When mingling in the human throng.

Could calm the sea with gentle power,
Grant us the skill to aid the bark
Of those who drift in storm and dark.

CONDITIONS IN CHINA.

An Interesting Letter From Bishop Graves.

Bishop Graves writing on September 17 about conditions in and near Shanghai following the outbreak of hostilities between the Chekiang and Kiangsu forces, says:

"I have had a letter from our old deacon at Quinsan. He stuck it out there and came to no grievous harm, though he had rather an unpleasant time of it with the soldiers. I heard that the chapel was burned, but this turned out not to be so. The American Consul-General was very helpful in communicating with the authorities at Nanking and Shanghai to obtain protection for the property at Quinsan.

"A good many soldiers are brought into St. Luke's, which is doing a portion of the Red Cross work for the Chinese. Most of them are possessed of gold bracelets, money, etc., which, of course, means that they have been looting. I hear the same from all quarters. So long as they advance they do not harass the people so much, but the minute they are defeated they loot whatever town or houses they pass. That is why Shanghai has taken such vigorous measures to prevent the inrush of defeated soldiers from either side. I do not know whether I told you that there is a guard of several hundred British sailors in the park opposite St. John's. They guard the roads which cross the railroad at the Jessfield Ferry and Brennan Road crossing. They have barbed wire fences, which they can throw across the road to close it and they examine everybody who comes into the Settlement so that no soldiers can get in on that side. Of course the French and Americans are doing the same thing elsewhere.

"What the people are afraid of is not so much the actual firing as the looting of the soldiery. Gangs of ruffians who always exist in large numbers have banded together everywhere and are looting what the soldiers spare.

"Kiading is in the centre of fighting, but our old deacon remains at his post there. Taitsang is also in the line, but I have no news from there. The two Catechists at Tsingpoo and Dzoong-koo have come to me. One brought his family and returned; the other wants to get his family to a safer place.

"I am forming a committee today to take up the question of handling the refugees for our Christians. They have come in in considerable numbers—St. Peter's Compound is crowded; All Saints' Church has had to take people in and let them cook in the vestry room. They are naturally in a state of panic and these are not the people who have had the worst of it. The unfortunates who were not able to get away are having a bitter experience.

"I shall probably have to spend some money in the care of our Chinese Christians. One cannot rent houses in Shanghai, every inch of space seems to be demanded and there is, of course, tremendous profiteering in rents. I am thinking of mat sheds on some vacant lot and perhaps the new St. Luke's property.

"The Shanghai Chinese who are benevolently disposed are doing what they can for civilians. There is a society, mainly Buddhist I think, at least the leader of it is a very benevolent gentleman of my acquaintance, who is an ardent Buddhist, and they are doing their work under a purple flag with a white cross, a somewhat curious symbol for Buddhists. The Chinese Red Cross in Shanghai is doing good work; in some other places I hear that it is much abused. Men don the uniform who have no right to it.

"News from all the out-stations where there are foreigners is the same—that things are fairly quiet, that wounded drift in where there is a hospital, and that the missionaries are not molested. Here in Shanghai we carry on pretty much as usual."

Notes From China Stations.

Letters written from September 5 to September 13, from Soochow, Wusih, Changshu and Nanking, tell of much excitement in the air but no real danger and little or no inconvenience. The hospitals are caring for a certain number of wounded soldiers. The mission compounds are making provision to shelter Christian refugees.

Writing from Changshu early in September the Rev. H. S. Smith says: "Everything here is quiet and things going on as usual. . . . The Christians have had small white badges made stamped with a cross and characters signifying that they are Christians, these to be worn only in case of the worst. I did not much approve of it, but they seemed to set great store by it, so I did not say much. I must say, however, that in my calling about the city I noticed that those who had them seemed to be greatly comforted thereby. Many people have come to us to ask for protection and we have told all comers that we will do our best for all when the time comes, except to store valuables.

"While we had so many troops here I took the opportunity to look them over. As soldiers I can't hand them much, but they certainly were well armed and equipped; rifles of a fairly late model and in good shape, side arms of the very latest .45 calibre automatics and bandoliers filled with brand new ammunition. If they are trained and disciplined they ought to be able to do something. Food here is plentiful but rice has gone up a couple of dollars a picul, $11 now. Most of the boats which were commandeered have returned and have promptly gone into hiding. Everybody here is well."

From Soochow, "The wounded soldiers that come in every day are the present unfortunate element in the situation. They are almost to a man laden down with loot, which is taken away as soon as they arrive at the station; and they are most unsatisfactory in their conduct in the various hospitals. But the matter is receiving the serious consideration of the authorities."

Dr. Lee writes from Wusih, "There is no news of any kind here which can be relied on. The people are still frightened and daily registering all the dwellers in mat-sheds inside the city, and those who cannot secure guarantors are being moved outside the city wall. Work for the laboring man is scarce and if he gets hungry he will probably help himself from those who have food, as is only natural.

"We had sight of another aeroplane today, which circled around over the city and flew off toward Soochow. . . . Papers from Shanghai give us our only news outside the city and they get here two days late. It is very enterprising of the postoffice to get them here at all.

"Everybody is well and we are having an extremely easy time as there is no work to do. Some of the mills are running and we get a few accident cases from civil life that way."

Also from Wusih, Mr. Dyer writes: "Almost none of the St. Mark's School boys showed up so that school cannot be opened. A great many of them live on the other side of the fighting lines and are cut off. The Catechist School students have all come except two, though one of the teachers has not come. I am planning to teach what classes I can without him.

"Everything is very quiet, but every one seems very apprehensive. We have many applications for places in the compounds in case the town should be sacked. The city has made some preparation towards keeping out routed soldiers and bandits . . . sandbags prepared at the gates . . . the ends of the streets barricaded. . . . Several of the big mills have placed wire netting around their premises arranged on a circuit from their electric generators.

"If anything very important happens we can get word out by wireless through the Consulate at Nanking."

Changshu: Finding it necessary to make a trip from Changshu, Mr. Sanford got a boat with two boatmen and a boy to make the round trip for $12, guaranteeing $40 in case the boat was lost. The farmers sink their boats with stones, to hide them, and raise them when needed. Mr. Sanford "agreed to take a policeman and to carry a gun (which I filled with blank cartridges). The boatmen would not budge without the policeman and the policeman would not budge without the gun."

"Of course," he continues, "no one on earth knows the future. But as far as one can see and if the fighting does not actually hit us we cannot suffer worse than inconvenience as to supplies. Even if fighting comes here we have some supplies on hand and I expect we could get along all right. The military when they have been through have been decent so far as we are concerned. One Christian captain called on us, and Mr. Smith had a call on the commander of the biggest lot that came through. They took our mission boat, but returned it after a week's use unhurt. We don't quarrel over such things and they don't quarrel with us. . . . Of course the Christians and the Chinese are excited. Many problems come up. We handle them the best we can. . . . The school is closed tight as a drum. We have neither teachers nor pupils."

From Nanking, Mr. Seager writes that: "The fact that Nanking has so far been saved from the ravages of war has made it possible to plan for refugee work; tickets have been issued to the capacity of the compounds, four hundred in all, and the Christian women or wives of Christian men in the congregation are given first opportunity to secure these tickets. The girls in the orphanage and the girls' school are to have them. After the Christians have been taken care of, the remaining tickets will be given to people in the neighborhood as they are asked for. Except a request from the postoffice to take in their staff of forty the mission has not been troubled by men applying for recognition as prospective refugees."

The World Alliance Conference, Buffalo, November 11-13.

Those of our readers who had the pleasure of attending the World Alliance Conference at Philadelphia last year, or of reading the volume containing the addresses delivered there, will be looking forward with great eagerness to the Conference which is to be held in Buffalo November 11-13.

The subject of the Conference last year was "The World Court." The general subject for the Buffalo Conference is "Contributions to World Peace." The idea is to make a survey of all the agencies which are doing effective work, looking toward a Christian world order.

The speakers have been chosen with the same care which was exercised last year, and all of the men who are to take part are leaders in the work being done by the various international agencies. The American speakers are well known to us all. Among those who are to take part are: Dr. William P. Merrill, Mr. Fred B. Smith, Dr. Harry E. Fosdick, Professor William I. Hull, Hon. John H. Clarke, Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, Bishop Charles H. Brent, Professor James T. Shotwell, Dr. Frank Oliver Hall, Dr. Robert E. Speer, Dr. Hamilton Holt, Dr. Samuel A. Eliot and Kirby Page. I need not say anything about these men.

Among the well-known speakers from foreign lands who will take part in the program are:

Sir Willoughby Dickinson, one of the founders of the World Alliance and one of its most active members. He is one of the outstanding leaders of the League of Nations Union of Great Britain.

Professor Julius Richter, of Germany, who has been one of the leaders in the German Council of the World Alliance from the beginning.

Professor Francis Zilka, Professor of Theology at the Hus Theological Faculty in Prague.

Mr. Thomas Layton, editor of the "London Economist."

Sir Henry Simpson Lunn, editor of the well-known quarterly, "The Review of the Churches," and one of the best workers for international peace from Great Britain.

Bishop Brent and the Conference on Trade in Narcotics.

At a recent meeting of the Standing Committee of the Diocese of Western New York, the following resolutions were adopted without a dissenting voice or vote:

Resolved, that this Standing Committee, acting as the Council of Advice of the Bishop of the Diocese, urges Bishop Brent to accept his appointment as a member of the American Commission to the forthcoming Conference on the Traffic in Opium, under the auspices of the League of Nations at Geneva, Switzerland, in November, 1924.

Be it further resolved, that, incidental to his trip to Europe, he confer with the Archbishop of Canterbury, and such Church leaders and others as he may desire, relative to preparations for the World Conference on Faith and Order.

Be it further resolved, that the President and Secretary of this committee be requested to communicate with the rectors and ministers in charge of the parishes and missions of the Diocese, setting forth the reasons which lead the Standing Committee to give this advice, and bidding the prayers of the people for the success of the undertaking; and that such information be given to the secular and religious press by the President and Secretary of this committee, as in their discretion may be wise.

Resolution.

In loving appreciation of the life and service to his fellows of the late Robert Hallowell Gardiner, we, the members of the Council of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in the United States, desire to record our sense of loss in his passing from our temporal fellowship. During all his mature life he was preeminently a natural leader of men. This was so, not because he sought the places of leadership—for he was one of the most modest of men—but because the occasions of leadership always sought him.

In every group of Church people of which he was one, Robert Gardiner was early accorded a place of commanding influence. And this was true of him not only as a member of his parish, but also in the general affairs of his diocese. In recent years his abilities and consecration were brilliantly displayed in his great service to the Church as secretary and an acknowledged leader of her Commission on Faith and Order.

It was, however, as a member of the Brotherhood that Mr. Gardiner's life and work chiefly won us to a loving fellowship with him. As Director of his Chapter, as President of his Assembly, as member until the time of his death of the National Council of the Brotherhood, and as President for four years of the Brotherhood in the United States—in these places of leadership he touched with his wholesome and magnetic personality multitudes of men, and always to their spiritual advantage.

We, the members of the Council, mourn his passing from us, and our deep sympathy is felt and is here expressed for members of his family. In this spirit of affection, we enter this minute on the records of the Council, and direct that a copy be forwarded to Mr. Gardiner's family, and that a copy be sent to the general Church papers and St. Andrew's Cross.

The New River Convocation.

The New River Convocation was entertained by the rector and parish of Christ Church, Martinsville, the Rev. W. E. Roach, rector, on Monday and Tuesday, October 20 and 21. At the opening service the Rev. Thos. F. Opie, formerly of this diocese but now at Burlington, N. C., spoke informally, but very forcefully and from very definite experience on the need and power of church publicity.

On the following morning there was a business session, after which Mr. Roach gave a studied and illuminating devotional exposition of the First Psalm, for the Quiet Hour. This was followed by the celebration of the Holy Communion, at which service the Rev. Douglas I. Hobbs, rector of Trinity Church, Rocky Mount, preached the Convocation sermon, a powerful address on human influence.

In the afternoon the Rev. G. Otis Mead, of Christ Church, Roanoke, read an essay on "Evangelism," presenting helpful suggestions based on personal experience in methods of bringing people to the living Christ. The speaker to the essay, the Rev. Albert C. Tebeau of Emmanuel Church, Bristol, made some pointed comments. These brought out a discussion in which emphasis was laid on the need for a greater measure of personal work.

Bishop Jett then led a conference on the work of the Diocesan Field Department, noting especially its two new features of (a) self-apportionment by parishes and (b) lay leadership and direction, and called the parishes to an awakened sense of responsibility.

Mr. W. D. Tyler of Dante, Chairman of the Field Department this year, called particular attention to the plans and organization of the Department and to the letter recently published by the Executive Board and addressed to rectors and vestries but intended as well to be placed for study in the hands of every church member. Mr. Tyler's address was enthusiastically received and later a resolution was adopted in which the Convocation expressed its appreciation of his devoted labors and pledged him whole-hearted support.

The annual election returned the present officers for another term: Dean, the Rev. Devall L. Gwathmey, of Wytheville; Treasurer, the Rev. Wilfred E. Roach, of Martinsville; Secretary, the Rev. M. Paul S. Huntington, of Norton.

The Spring meeting will be held next April in St. Johns Church, Wytheville.

Interesting reports from parishes showed increased activity and progress at various points in the diocese.

The Committee on Social Service rendered a report containing the welcome statement that the Episcopal Church is becoming known in the newer sections of the diocese as "The Church that does things."

Encouraging reports were heard on the Seminary Centennial Fund and the Home for Boys at Covington.

At the missionary service Tuesday night Mr. Tyler further explained the Diocesan Program. The Rev. J. Hubbard Lloyd, of Blacksburg, gave a rich and personal account of Christianity in Japan and the Rev. Herbert H. Young, Dean of Associate Missions, spoke in a most inspiring way of the vast opportunities and needs in the great field under his charge in the southwestern part of the diocese.

Miss Gladys Fauntleroy, who has been for the past four years a missionary in Japan, returned recently to her home near Altavista, Campbell County, Virginia, coming by way of Palestine, France and England.

Miss Fauntleroy is well known in this diocese, especially to those who used to attend the Summer Normal Schools, which were conducted by the old Convocation of Southwest Virginia.

Fall Meeting of Norfolk Convocation.

The fall meeting of Norfolk Convocation was held at Onancock, October 20 to 23. On Monday evening, a preliminary service was held at Holy Trinity Church, and the Rev. M. C. Daughtry preached the sermon. At the business session on Tuesday, the Rev. Newton Middleton was elected dean for the next year, and the Rev. H. N. Laws secretary and treasurer. A paper, written by Dr. Covington on the constructive use of the Prayer Book, was much enjoyed, and was followed by general discussion. The Rev. J. K. M. Lee preached at the evening service.

On Wednesday, the Rev. J. Scott Meredith made an interesting address on the constructive use of the Bible, and an essay by the Rev. C. H. Holmead was read on the subject, "What Does the Protestant Episcopal Church Stand For?"

Perhaps the most important session of Convocation was Wednesday afternoon when Bishop Thomson, in a most comprehensive and enlightening manner, presented the subject of the Church's Program for 1925. At the evening service, Bishop Tucker preached on the subject, "The Church—The Family."

On Thursday, Convocation assembled at St. George's Church, Pungoteague, the Rev. E. Ruffin Jones spoke on Social Service, and Bishop Tucker made an address on the "Church on the Eastern Shore—Its Past and Its Future."

Daughters of American Revolution Meet at Christ Church, Norfolk.

A patriotic service was held in Christ Church, Norfolk, Tuesday night, October 21. A large delegation of the Daughters of the American Revolution was present. Evening Prayer was followed by an address from the rector, the Rev. Dr. Steinmetz, who spoke eloquently on the beautiful religious life of George Washington, and its influence on succeeding generations.

The music, under Professor Miller, was inspiring, and well rendered by the large choir of boys and men.

After the service, an informal reception was extended to the delegates and friends in the parish house.

Inspiring Meeting of Laymen.

On Friday, October 31, a very interesting meeting of the laymen of the diocese was held in the Mayo Memorial Diocesan House.

The object was to give more information, and thereby create greater inspiration for the raising of the Church's budget. At three o'clock in the afternoon laymen from every section of the diocese began to assemble. Mr. Lewis C. Williams, of St. Stephen's Church, presided as chairman. After a forceful presentation of the purposes of the budget, he called on those present for short addresses stating the method used in their several parishes for getting the Every Member Canvass under way.

Before the close of the afternoon session the Rev. Noble C. Powell, rector of St. Paul's Memorial Church, Charlottesville, was asked to present the needs of a new building for the accommodation of the students at the University of Virginia, who make up a large part of his congregation. He spoke so earnestly of the needs for a larger church building, that a resolution was introduced to create a special committee to undertake the raising of sufficient funds to carry through his building program, composed of Lewis C. Williams, chairman, John Stewart Bryan, John M. Taylor, M. M. McGuire, E. Randolph Williams and Rosewell Page.

Supper was served in the building by the ladies of St. Mark's Church. After an hour or so of recess for this purpose the sessions were resumed, and more addresses were delivered by the laymen, concluding with a five-minute speech on the work of the Social Service Department by the Rev. R. Cary Montague, and a resume of his administration by Bishop Brown, showing the progress both spiritual and temporal during the past five years.

A resolution was adopted pledging the hearty support of those present to the budget, and the meeting adjourned with a feeling of confidence in the success of their undertaking.

The Richmond Clericus.

On Monday, November 3, the Clericus of Richmond met at twelve-thirty instead of its usual time, and, after a session of an hour, adjourned for luncheon together. The Rev. Pembroke Reed was selected to prepare a paper on the subject of conversion to be read at the next meeting.

St. Paul's Church, Richmond, the Rev. B. D. Tucker, Jr., D. D., rector, held a congregational meeting on the night of November 3, to complete its plans for the Every Member Canvass to be conducted during the current week. A large percentage of the congregation was present, and inspiring addresses were delivered by Messrs. T. B. Scott, E. Ruffin Williams and Thomas McAdams. After the business session refreshments were served, and an excellent opportunity for getting acquainted and increasing the congregational spirit of enthusiasm was afforded.

Midday Preaching Services in Trinity Church.

The special preaching services in Trinity Church, at noon hour, will be resumed the first week in November. The schedule is as follows:

November 3, 4, 5, 6, 7—The Rev. William B. Kinkaid, Priest in Charge, Trinity Church.

November 10, 11, 12, 13, 14—The Rev. Father Paul B. Bull, Superior, Community of the Resurrection, Mirfield, England.

November 17, 18, 19, 20, 21—The Rev. H. Adye Prichard, Acting Dean, Cathedral of St. John the Divine.

November 24, 25, 26, 28—The Rev.

W. W. Bellinger, D. D., Vicar of St. Agnes' Chapel.

Midday services are held in Trinity Church on five days of each week throughout the year. During seven months of the year, from November to June, there is an address by some well-known preacher.

Interest in these services grows from year to year. They are attended by people whose work brings them into the region around Trinity Church. Most of these people belong to parishes other than Trinity and many of them to other communions. Some have no active church connection. But they all come to these services and use the church for private devotion as well. With them religion is a matter of daily concern and not something that occupies them one day a week.

Through the services, the ministrations of the clergy and the organ recitals, Trinity is serving more and more the downtown population of New York.

Gifts and Memorials.

Three memorials have recently been consecrated at St. John's Church, Larchmont, the Rev. Francis J. H. Coffin, rector. A Credence Bracket in memory of Herbert Nelson Lathrop, given by his daughter, Mrs. Francis Kelly, wife of the former treasurer of the parish. A Litany Desk, given in memory of James Godfrey Wilson, by his wife, which was purchased in Oxford on the fiftieth anniversary of their wedding. And a Private Communion Set, given by Mrs. Thomas G. Hall, in memory of her husband.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James H. Freeman, D. D.

First Stone Laid in Crypt of Washington Cathedral.

Laying the first stone, which will serve as a base for one of the pillars in the south aisle of the crypt of the National Cathedral, last week, marked one of the important steps in the construction of that great Gothic masterpiece of the Modern Ages, which is slowly rising on the heights of Mount Saint Alban overlooking the National Capital.

The services at the Washington Cathedral more and more demonstrate the inadequacy of the Bethlehem Chapel to hold the many who come to take part in the beautiful services held there, and make those interested in the Cathedral, impatient for its completion. The music, always of the highest order, is beautiful and intensely devotional and this with the excellent sermons heard, makes the afternoon service on Sunday unusually popular. It is necessary to be in the chapel almost an hour before service in order to have a seat and large number of people stand throughout the entire service. The Bishop of Washington is usually the preacher there on Sunday afternoons, and his sermon and the entire choral service are broadcast by radio every Sunday.

Bishop of Washington Honored.

The Bishop of Washington was the guest of honor at a dinner given at the City Club on Wednesday, October 29, when the Churchman's League and the National Cathedral Chapter were hosts. The very large gathering of more than two hundred people present was made up of men and women representing a large majority of the Churches of the Diocese.

The toastmaster of the occasion was Mr. Edward A. Harriman, president of the Churchman's League and indeed gifted for his task of presiding officer. The responses to the toasts were made by the Rev. George F. Dudley, D. D., for the "Clergy," Major-General John A. Lejeune, U. S., M. C., for the "Laity," the Rev. Z. B. T. Phillips, D. D., for the "Church in the Nation," the Rev. Chas. Wood, D. D., pastor of the Presbyterian Church of the Covenant, for the "Community of the Churches," and Dr. William Holland Wilmer for "The National Cathedral Chapter." The keynote of all the speeches heard was gratitude for the great work done by the Bishop during the first year of his Episcopacy in Washington, and the promised support and loyalty of the people of the Church in Washington.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. W. A. Guerry, D. D., Bishop.

Charleston Convocation.

The regular autumn meeting of the Convocation of Charleston was held in St. Luke's Parish, Charleston, the Rev. Harold Thomas, rector, on October 27-29. At the opening service Monday evening the preacher was the Rev. F. M. Brunton, rector of the Church at Allendale, and in charge of the adjacent missions. Mr. Brunton has just come into the diocese from Toronto, Canada. Another recent arrival, the Rev. Howard Cady, late of Brownsville, Tenn., now of Barnwell, S. C., was also present. The Bishop of the Diocese attended every session, and was the celebrant at the Communion Service Tuesday morning. After this service the regular business session was held. The customary personal reports from the clergy, representing the various parishes and missions, were of such unusual interest, and indicated such a fine spirit of hopefulness and progress, that the Bishop took occasion to express his appreciation and to say how much genuine encouragement they had brought to him personally. He also spoke a word of welcome to the Rev. Messrs. Brunton and Cady, and expressed his gratitude for the happy situation in the diocese with respect to its clergy supply. At present there is only one vacant parish and a few missions without regular services. The Rev. James G. Holland, of Sewanee, Tenn., has been called to that parish at Orangeburg, but has not yet given his answer.

The rector of St. Michael's, Charleston, reported that parish making large additions to its parish house at a cost of about $35,000.

St. Paul, Summerville, reported the erection of a parish house, to be used as a community center regardless of denominational lines, under the direction of the vestry, at a cost of some $13,000. The architect's plans call for additional building, which, it is hoped, will be done within the next year.

The rector of old Christ's Church, Mount Pleasant, reported that through the generosity of Mr. John F. Maybank, of Charleston, whose ancestors sleep in the "God's Acre" surrounding that ancient edifice, a substantial fence had been built, inclosing the whole property, and the church itself had been completely restored, both within and without.

The Rev. Dr. Starr, of the Church of the Holy Communion, spoke of the very encouraging progress of the work among the young people of his parish. The Young People's Service League is carrying on most hopefully and gives promise of solving the problem of what to do in order to hold the young people from fourteen years of age onward. The Church School, after five years of the Christian Nurture course, is now happily supplying, through its graduates, all the teachers the school needs.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rt. Rev. T. J. Garland, D. D., Bishop.

Memorial Chapel for St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo.

Women of the Church in the Diocese of Pennsylvania have decided to erect in the new St. Luke's International Hospital, Tokyo, Japan, a $25,000 Memorial Chapel to the late Miss Mary Coles, one of the outstanding Church leaders of the Diocese and a member of one of Philadelphia's oldest families.

The old St. Luke's was one of the institutions destroyed in the Japan earthquake a year ago, and the Episcopal Church has included its rebuilding in its national program for reconstruction of schools, hospitals, universities and other institutions swept away by the earthquake.

Miss Coles died four years ago at the age of eighty-six. She was the founder of the Church Training and Deaconess House, Philadelphia, the Young Women's Boarding Home, also of this city, and for more than thirty years conducted the Tuesday Missionary Bible Class in her home in Walnut Street, west of Twenty-first.

This class during its long history embraced in its membership many of Philadelphia's oldest families and scores of prominent leaders in Church work today received their inspiration and early training under Miss Coles' leadership. Miss Coles was a communicant of St. James' Church, Twenty-second and Walnut Streets. At her death she left considerable money for missionary work.

Community Canvass.

St. Bartholomew's Church on Lehigh Avenue, together with eleven other churches in the northwestern section of Philadelphia, united for a community Canvass, which began Monday, October 27 and ended November 11, in an effort to get the entire community in the habit of attending church. Churches that have united are: St. Bartholomew's. The Brethren, Presbyterian, Methodist, Reformed, Primitive Methodist, Lutheran, Baptist, Bethel Chapel and Schwenkfelder.

Anniversary Celebration.

Sunday, November 2, St. Mary's Church, Hamblon Village, now St. Mary's, Locust Street, West, Philadelphia, celebrated its one hundredth anniversary. The services continued through the week following with a reception to past and present clergy, friends and members, Thursday evening.

Woman's Auxiliary Meeting.

At the call of Mrs. J. Allison Scott, President of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese, a special meeting of the officers and members of all parish branches was held on Monday, November 3, in Holy Trinity Parish House, Philadelphia. Plans for the meeting of the national organization at the General Convention of the Episcopal Church in New Orleans in 1925 were discussed at the morning session, and at the afternoon session Miss Grace Lindley, National Secretary of the Auxiliary, reported on her recent world tour of the missionary fields of the Church.

Other Notes of Interest.

Tuesday is St. Simon and St. Jude's Day in the Church Calendar and marks the beginning of the fourteenth year of the Episcopate of Bishop Garland, the Bishop having been consecrated on October 28, 1911.

In connection with the Consecration Anniversary, Bishop Garland, on Monday morning, October 27, addressed the clergy in the Church House. At this gathering Bishop N. S. Thomas of Wyoming, a former rector of Holy Apostles Church in Philadelphia, and the Rev. Roger N. Balcom, of the Wyoming District, described the work among the Shoshone and Arapahoe Indians in the Wyoming District.

Bishop Thomas Sunday morning, October 26, was the preacher in the Special Founders' Day Anniversary celebration of the Parish of Holy Apostles, of which the Rev. George H. Toop is rector. At the time of his election as Bishop of Wyoming, Bishop Thomas was serving as rector of the South Philadelphia Parish.

Men of St. Matthew's Church, Philadelphia, cooked and served a dinner to the women of the parish recently upon the fifth anniversary of the Rev. C. Herbert Reese's services as rector of the church. The dinner also marked the birthday of Mrs. Reese.

EAST CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. Thomas G. Darst, D. D., Bishop.

Edenton Convocation.

The Convocation of Edenton held its one hundred and eighty-third meeting on October 21 and 22, in a real rural parish, Lake Landing, Hyde County, forty-three miles from the nearest railroad. In spite of its inaccessibility, Lake Landing has a well-grounded reputation for hospitality, and the meeting was well attended. The dean, the Rev. Howard Alligood, presided at the meetings. The Rev. Messrs. James E. W. Cook, of St. Paul's, Greenville, and J. N. Bynum, of St. James', Belhaven, were the special preachers. At the closing service the principal address was delivered by Bishop Darst, who called on his people to hold up the high standing which East Carolina has attained in recent years.

The women of the Convocation met at Lake Landing at the same time, holding separate business meetings, but joining the Convocation in the devotional services. A feature of both meetings was the address of the Rev. W. R. Noe, Executive Secretary, on the Church's Program.

At one service of the Convocation in St. George's a memorial window to the late Bishop Strange, given by the local Woman's Auxiliary, was unveiled.

Two Interesting Confirmation Services.

The spectacle of almost an entire community of Negroes coming into the Church at one service, was witnessed

On October 16, when Bishop Darst confirmed a class of twenty-seven adults in a one-room schoolhouse at Haddock's Cross Roads, near Greenville. This class, which was formed as a result of the work of a colored layman, John Lipscomb, of Ayden, is the forerunner of a church soon to be erected. Other confirmations are to follow instruction now being given. The Rev. E. S. Willett, Field Secretary for Colored Work in the Diocese, has been active in this and other extension work.

Apostolic in its simplicity and setting, a confirmation service at the recently completed Galilee Chapel, Lake Phelps, profoundly moved the congregation which crowded the chapel on Sunday afternoon, October 26. This chapel, which was built under the leadership of the Rev. C. E. Williams, of Christ Church, Creswell, ministers to a community that has heretofore been remote from church and school, and where great poverty and ignorance abounds. The old, the middle-aged and the young crowded to the chancel rail for the laying on of hands, the fruit of a loving ministry of priest and workers. Funds for the chapel were provided by Mrs. W. A. Graham, of St. Paul's, Edenton.

A new church is to be built at Swan Quarter, Hyde County, following a recent meeting of Bishop Darst with the congregation at that place. Pledges for over $3,500 are in hand, with $5,000 as the goal. A faithful band of women at Swan Quarter have been working and praying for a church for several years, and this action is the fruit of it. The Rev. S. E. Matthews is minister in charge.

Bequests: Two communicants at St. Paul's, Edenton, who recently died, made provision for gifts of $1,000 each to that parish. They were mother and son, Mrs. Mary Shaw Cason Wood and Dr. H. M. S. Cason, who died within a week of each other.

Memory of Old Church Revived.

The unveiling of a monument September 13 to Colonel Morgan Morgan at Bunker Hill, Berkeley County, recalls memories of Morgan's Chapel erected in 1740 by this earliest settler in West Virginia. On the site of the old chapel stands the present Christ Church, under the pastoral care of the Rev. John J. Oldham, rector of Trinity Church, Martinsburg. Among those taking part in the interesting ceremony were the Governor of the State, the Hon. Ephraim Morgan; former United States Senator C. J. Faulkner; State Senator H. P. Henshaw, of Bunker Hill; Mrs. A. A. Pickering and the Rev. J. J. Oldham. Miss Virginia Morgan, a descendant of Colonel Morgan, unveiled the monument.

An Antiquarian Find: Among the belongings of Grace Church, Ravenswood, Jackson County, there was brought to light recently by the rector, the Rev. L. O. Forqueran, a cut of the original Grace Church, the first house of worship in Ravenswood. This church, erected by Mr. Henry Fitzhugh, a relative of George Washington, was consecrated in 1851 by Bishop Meade, of Virginia, and in 1902 the present Grace Church was consecrated by Bishop G. W. Peterkin, the first Bishop of West Virginia. The Rev. L. O. Forqueran made his find the basis of an interesting article on the history of Grace Church in a Ravenswood newspaper.

New Rectory for St. Matthew's, Wheeling: The vestry of St. Matthew's have purchased a new rectory at Woodlawn, Wheeling. The rector, the Rev. E. B. Andrews, and his family will soon move into this handsome home.

A New Experience: This Diocese is looking forward with interest to the first meeting of a Provincial Synod within its borders. The Synod of the Third Province will meet in Charleston in a few weeks.

The Woman's Auxiliary.

Miss Grace Lindley held the rapt attention of delegates to the annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary from all parts of the Diocese Wednesday, October 29. The undercroft of the Synod Hall on the Cathedral Grounds at Baltimore was filled to its capacity.

Added interest attached to this year's meeting in the presence of Miss Lindley with her vivid story of her world trip and visit to the Church's mission stations in the East.

At the Holy Communion in the morning, with Bishop Murray as celebrant, the sum of $3,333 was presented as the women's offering for this year, making the total now in hand $12,333, with one more year's effort before the final offering at General Convention.

Miss Deane spoke on the Bishop Tuttle Memorial House. Mrs. Albert Sioussat presided at the sessions.

A course of Bible Study, under the direction of the Rev. C. Sturges Ball, rector of the Church of the Transfiguration, and in charge of the Department of Bible Study at Goucher College, has been inaugurated by the Educational Department of the Church Service League. These classes are held Tuesday afternoons in the Diocesan House.

Bishop Murray's Anniversary: Plans are now completed for the celebration of the fifteenth anniversary of Bishop Murray's consecration. The day is November 25. Service will be held in the church of which Bishop Murray was rector, St. Michael and All Angels'. Luncheon for the clergy will be served immediately after in the Parish House. A general reception to Church people and others will be held in the Lyric Theatre at 8 o'clock.

The Rev. R. R. Claiborne Leaves For Arkansas.

After eleven years of splendid service as rector of St. James' Parish, Marietta, the Rev. Randolph R. Claiborne held his last service in that church, Sunday, September 28. Despite the inclement weather a large congregation was present. The service was unusual in its tenor and sympathy. In the eleven years that Mr. Claiborne has served this charge he has endeared himself to hundreds of friends in all walks of life by his many kindly acts and ministrations. In the loving service of the Master he has given freely of his talents, time and sympathy, and he will be greatly missed, not alone in his parish, but throughout the entire community.

Mr. Claiborne has taken charge of St. John's Church, Camden, Ark.

Interesting Service in Historic Old Church.

The regular fall meeting at Old Christ Church, Broad Creek Hundred, near Laurel, was held Sunday morning and afternoon, September 28.

At eleven o'clock the Bishop of the Diocese, assisted by the Rev. Louis L. Williams of Delmar, celebrated the Holy Communion.

In the afternoon, after Evening Prayer, said by the Rev. Mr. Williams and the Rev. W. H. Darbie, of Seaford, the Bishop preached from St. Matthew 6: 33, to an enormous congregation. Many who could not get inside stood at door and windows, or sat in nearby automobiles.

The large grove in which the church is located was nearly filled with automobiles from Seaford, Laurel, Delmar, Princess Anne, and other towns, near and far away.

The offering was applied to the repair fund for the old church.

Some needed repairs had been made on the building, and the grounds had been thoroughly cleaned.

It was announced that the services of an architect had been secured, and he would examine the building soon and suggest necessary repairs.

A small sum, to meet this expense, is on hand, and it is hoped that friends will contribute liberally.

Meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary in the Morganton Convocation.

Under a new arrangement of the Woman's Auxiliary in the diocese the first conference of the Auxiliary in the Morganton Convocation was held in the Church of the Ascension, Hickory (the Rev. S. B. Stroup, rector) on October 22, seventy-five women being present from nearby towns, representing the churches in Morganton, Marion, Hickory, Lincolnton, Rutherfordton, Gastonia, Bessemer City, Lenoir, and Valle Crucis. Mrs. J. W. C. Johnson, vice-president for the Convocation, presided. Mrs. Michael Schenck, who as president of the Diocesan Auxiliary, is taking earnest hold of the work, was unavoidably absent.

"The Place of the Woman's Auxiliary in the Church's Program" was ably presented by Mrs. William P. Cornell, of Columbia, S. C., whose helpful leadership was the inspiration of the conference. As Province Chairman of the Ramsaur Memorial, Mrs. Cornell, with Mrs. Sanders R. Guignard, as Diocesan Chairman, reported the steady progress of that fund towards its accomplishment. The Flowering.

Anna Hamilton Wood.

There is no thing called "death!"

A little while

My garden dormant lies beneath the snow,

Yet when I go

With Spring's first smile, I find the buds are there;

The sap of life is stirring everywhere In sweet denial.

And so I know

That heaven is but the flowering of earth's buds.

Each bitter trial

Is careful turning of the soul's root-soil For stronger growth. What though I find the toil Painful and slow?

There is no thing called "death,"

And when I show

This bud I've tended, it shall burst to bloom

So full the very clouds must give it room, Warm'd by His breath!

STUDIES IN THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

The Great Intercession.

IV.

The Rev. Louis Tucker, D. D.

Our Lord prays that the redeemed be admitted to familiar intercourse with the King. A very calm statement of the meaning here might easily be mistaken for foaming enthusiasm. When Our Lord spoke, the known world was ruled by Caesar. Intimate friends and companions of Caesar were regarded as the most exalted of mankind. A special word was coined to express this. They were called "Augusti": a name derived from a title of Caesar. "Christian" is a name derived from a title of Our Lord. By as much as Christ is greater than Augustus Caesar or the Universe greater than the Roman Empire, by so much are Christians more exalted than the Augusti.

Olshausen justly makes much of Our Lord's phrase, "Righteous Father," which alike excludes from the vision of His glory a godless world and admits to it the godly believer. Yet "Righteous" also means Right, Direct, Along straight lines, and so True and Actual. It is the God of Things as They Are, not of Things as we Think They Ought to Be, Who is righteous. Along these lines modern science, with all its theological mistakes, has brought us nearer the Throne and now approximates, by a path which led through the swamp of agnostic knowledge, the same high table-land which Christians reached by the narrow ridge of faith. We know the tremendous complexity and directness, the amazing detail and simplicity, the incalculable involution yet plainness of the Universe, and realize, as never before, the rightness and sanity of God.

Yet the struggle for existence is not His. He worked out the consequences of Lucifer's sin as He works out the consequences of our sins; but the sin itself is not His. Christ knew God and taught the eleven. Through them we know God sent Him. But great as is the knowledge of God which He has given us, it is exceedingly small compared with that which He has implied. The married life does not start till the wedding feast is over, nor the wedding feast till the house is filled. Here are hints of a knowledge of God deeper, vaster, more limpid and more profound than Christendom has attained.

Our Lord not only makes known, but will make known. Always to learn and never come to knowledge of the truth is represented by St. Paul as a condition most miserable when the teachers are false, the learners silly, and the knowledge earthly and wrong; but always to grow and never come to limitation of growth is most blessed when the learners are repentant and forgiven sinners, the knowledge concerning Him Who is Love and the teacher Jesus Christ.

And so Our Lord here implies the occupation of eternity. Its details we can to some extent infer. They will include a full exploration of the visible universe and an accurate knowledge of all its workings, for God shall be known in His works. They will include training of the artistic faculties, for the King shall be known in His beauty. They will include acquaintance and friendship with the charming and delightful people of the universe, one by one, until we personally know and like them all and they like us; for we are to be United and One. They will include some great work to which we can all contribute and in which we are all needed; a work so well worth doing that the history of this world, even to the death of Christ upon the cross itself, is but preparation for its beginning. Exploration and travel, Science, Beauty, Friendship, Work, all raised to their uttermost; these are very good; but, beyond all, is plunge after plunge, as we grow able to bear it, deeper and deeper into the pellucid ocean of the Love of God. And there, as an elder brother takes his little brother in swimming, our guide, companion, teacher, friend, support, as he here promises, shall be our own dear Lord.

A Lift from Winifred.

Dora N. Kromer.

They were in the seat just behind me, going down to business. The girl by the window began it:

"I get so tired of the silly, foolish work I am doing," she said, with growing irritation in her voice.

Her friend expressed interest. "But you've been there so long. They must value your services," she ventured.

"That's just it," the other girl went on. "I have been there long enough to know how to do really important things, and I'm given only copying to do. I like to use my brains now and then. The boss smiles and says, 'I'm giving you this to do because you never make a mistake and I can trust you,' but he doesn't know how tiresome it all is," she drummed on the window-sill discontentedly.

The other girl was silent a minute. "Perhaps that copying is more important than you think," she said slowly. "I've known of hard things to come just from a mistake in copying." Her voice grew more gentle as she went on and the drumming on the window-sill stopped. "My little brother was given a dose of a prescription that was copied, wrong and Jimmy nearly died. It is a beautiful thing to be able to do tiresome things as well as you do, and you never know how your faithfulness will be rewarded."

"I believe you are right," the first girl said, and there was a different tone in her voice. "I'm glad I saw you this morning, Winifred. You have given me just the lift I needed."

The car stopped then and the two girls hurried out, and I went on to do my stupid, humdrum errands with a fresh, new courage born of that message that the tiresome, commonplace things are really important, and it is a beautiful thing to do them well.

Courage.

Mary B. Garvin.

Courage give, dear Lord, we pray,
For the coming, opening day;
That we meet its every care
With the talisman of prayer!

That we faint or murmur not,
At the trials of our lot;
As we walk by faith, not sight,
Though the path be black as night.

Knowing Christ will be our Guide,
Feeling He is at our side;
Every human cry of need
Meeting with the kindly deed.

Courage give, dear Lord, we pray,
Keep us in Thy love alway;
Till all trials shall be past,
And we're home with Thee at last.

Back to the Home.

The Rev. Thos. F. Opie, D. D.

Fathers! Mothers! Children! If the world is ever to be made better, sweeter, purer—stronger, firmer, holier—it is to be made so by this great corporation. If crime is to be lessened; if jails are to be kept empty; if hell itself is to be cheated, these will do it—these must do it—these must do it. Courts and laws and statutes will never turn the trick! This whole matter of a world out of joint goes back to the home—where all social, ethical, religious matters go.

Dishonesty, trickery, theft, meanness and murder are rampant in the land today as perhaps never before in the world's history. Fathers! Mothers! Children! What part have you in this program? In every crime, in every murder case, divorce scandal—in every low, mean, vicious act—there is a father, a mother or a child. And in every kindly deed, in every loving act, in every goodly service—there is a father, a mother or a child. Thank God for noble fathers, for pure and true mothers, and for sweet and innocent, loving and helpful children!

In an age of crime, who is at fault?

When son or daughter goes wrong, who is at fault? When the prison closes on another young life, who is at fault? It all goes back to the home life. What of your daily conduct in the home? How does Father treat Mother? How does Father treat Children? How does Mother deal with Father? How with Child? How do Children act toward Father, and Mother and Sister and Brother? Give me your answer to these questions and I will tell you what is to be the future of business, of progress—the Home, the State, the Church.

Is Father firm, noble, honest? Is Mother gentle, firm, patient? Is the Child polite, obedient, helpful? No! Hence the religious life, the political life, the business life, the whole social relation is in danger today. There is no Family Altar, no Group Religion, no Daily Reading and Bible Study.

Mr. Father, did your boy ever see you on your knees at home? Or hear your voice in prayer? Mrs. Mother, did your girls ever see or hear you in prayer? Have you taught your child how to pray, by example? If not, why wonder that Mary is a Flapper and that Johnnie is a wayward, worthless wastrel? How in the name of all that is good and holy could it be otherwise?

Why wonder that Mother's heart is broken? Why that Father's honor is wounded? Every boy that ever went to prison—every girl that ever went to a scarlet hell—every child that did the wrong—came out of somebody's home! What kind of a home have you?

There are three great training places where noble manhood and pure womanhood are made—and these are made out of Childhood. They are the Church, the School, the Home—and the greatest of these is the Home! Fathers! Mothers! Are you training your children in Obedience, in Respect, in Cleanliness—in Honesty, Helpfulness, Thoughtfulness—in Loye, Politeness, Cheerfulness—in Prayer?

"Children are the keys of Paradise; they alone are good and wise, because their thoughts—their very lives—are prayer. Blessed are the fathers and the mothers who have such children."

The Problem of Grief

L. H. Cummings.

High courage dwells in the human breast, which nerves itself to bear the blow of sorrow. Religion gives a man courage in these events, and though in loneliness sublime, with faith he dares confront all issues of life or death.

The present consoler for the loss of our dead, the first aid remedies to the malady of grief, is to be found in the present necessity of thinking of those who remain with us, the work that we must continue to do, the responsibilities that we must undertake, and the example we must set to others.

Those who soonest recover from the shock of great grief for the dead, we may often notice, are those who have the most duties to perform toward the living!

No human wisdom has solved the problem of grief. Time claims many victories over grief, but at its best time possesses only the negative virtue of helping grief to wear itself out. Perhaps no commonly accepted maxims more imperfectly expresses truth than that which asserts time is the great consoler of grief.

God's providence alone abides through every change and sorrow, to succor, cheer and finally console the loneliest lot, with His strength and the comfort of His presence and His mercy.

It requires full employment and the high courage which dwells in the human heart in the hour of grief to suffer and be strong, to endure, and with calmness to go on.

The Value of Pets in the Home.

Perhaps the sweetest recollections of childhood are those connected with a pet—some frisky, affectionate little animal or gay little bird loved and tended in the far-away golden days. Pets are an endless joy to children. They lend themselves readily to every kind of make-believe, and are always available as playthings and consolers of woe. Talking it over with a cat, a dog, or the bird, has a soothing power not at all times attainable through human agencies.

"My pony is so sympathetic," said a little girl, "and has such a sense of humor." The pure delight afforded by these cherished friends in feathers and fur is sufficient reason for their presence in every household. Parents, sometimes complain that they are such a trouble, are in the way, and require so much care. Could they realize thoroughly their value as a source of happiness and a means of education, these objections would forever cease. Childhood without pets is bleak and barren and altogether incomplete. Like a vine in the desert, with tendrils blown in every direction because there is no object to twine around, the child without some dumb creature to love and protect finds his bubbling impulses and loving longings crushed to earth. He needs to lavish his growing and expansive affection upon some suitable object, otherwise he loses more than can be counted and weighed.

What the child loves he will most observe and study. Some knowledge comes concerning the habits and ways of the little creatures that share his life; and personal affairs are insensibly arranged so that there will be time for everything—for play, for stories, for work. Birds must be fed regularly, rain or shine, no matter how tempting the invitations of playmates or the latest fair tale. The dog must be washed and kept in the house until thoroughly dried. If the kitten is dull and stupid, its little owner must see that its food is more carefully selected, that it does not have too much meat. Perhaps his small savings will have to be expended in catnip. The playful puppy must be trained with infinite patience not to trample on the flower-beds, not to scratch the furniture, nor tear holes in clothes. Animals must also be taught to avoid danger, even if pain be inflicted to insure their future self-preservation. Attention to these details influences the mind and character, leading to firmness without harshness, to economy of time, to order, method and regularity.

Children, like most savages, are many times cruel. Animals that are dependent have a civilizing influence upon the child, for the savagery of children is that of ignorance, not of malice. The many wants of pets, their helplessness, awaken a sense of moral responsibility. A living creature cannot be neglected without pain and suffering following. Very different is the condition of the book or toy that is forgotten and left out in the rain. It is spoiled, and the loss is the child's own. In a measure he is responsible only to himself for the welfare of inanimate possessions. But a sentient being who can repay love with love, has a deeper claim. Things that feel have rights. Even young children recognize this, and learn through affection for their four-footed friends to recognize this claim to health and happiness.

A boy of seven, the writer knew, found for a time his chief amusement in shooting stray animals with a shotgun, declaring it sport. One day he knocked a cat off the fence, breaking its legs. As the creature writhed upon the grass, he seemed to consider the result of his conduct both righteous and amusing. A friend who had witnessed the incident called him to her; and after a short conversation he saw the matter in a different light. Willingly he offered to pay for having the cat's legs set. But the veterinary's fee was more than he possessed. The sum needed to make up the amount was advanced to him, and he paid it back gradually out of his small allowance. With the greatest tenderness he cared for the cat until she was able to walk, and to this day she is a cherished pet. It needed but a few words to open the fountain of love and pity in his heart, and to make the little lad see that his wanton cruelty had not only brought suffering on a poor innocent, but entailed much unexpected labor and expense upon himself.

Pets also have a hygienic value, many of them requiring fresh air and exercise at regular intervals. This necessarily takes the child out of doors, in sunshine, on dark days, and in all sorts of weather. It gives an object of interest to what would otherwise be a dull performance. Many a listless girl who would rebel at rubbers and rain-coat, glides into them smilingly when it is a question of a walk with "Rover" or "Fido." How willingly these burdens are borne for a dumb friend! Who gains most in the frolic and romping? Perhaps the one who gives the most.

Childhood, like every age, needs its duties. These must be simple and genuine, not tasks imposed arbitrarily, which another might do as well. The child's duties should be definite and inexorable, not done at all if he forgets or neglects them. Through protection, nurture, and ownership of living things inexorable duties are best presented. The child secures in this way some of the best lessons in self-denial and self-control, acquires a sense of personal responsibility and wise restraint, and is taught in the most natural way, and almost unconsciously, to appreciate the rights of others, even the humblest, and to respect them always. More than this, by doing deeds that merit gratitude, children begin dimly to understand how much gratitude they owe to the loving hearts and hands forever busy in their behalf. There is a certain spiritual and intellectual growth that comes from protecting and fostering dependent creatures, from caring for lovely and lovable animals.—Our Dumb Animals.

My Life.

Eugenie du Maurier.

My life is but a weaving between my God and me:
I may not choose the colors He worketh steadily.
Full oft He weaveth sorrow, and I in foolish pride,
Forget He sees the upper and I, the under side.

Just as "love begins at home," so obedience begins in the heart, else God does not reckon it obedience. The unregenerate heart is incapable of the obedience which God requires. Christ in the heart, "fulfilling the law," not only makes obedience possible, but easy.—Selected.

A Prayer.

Estelle T. Oltrogge.

Let my first thoughts, dear Lord, each morn

Be lifted up to Thee in praise,
For guarding me throughout the night
And guiding me through all my days.

Then let me ask Thy gracious help
To do Thy will each passing hour;
Thy will, not mine, must be my prayer
If I would grow in grace and power.

Content to let Thee have Thy way
In everything, both great and small,
So shall Thy peace on me descend
And I shall find Thee All in All.

Our National Hope Chest.

"Our class is going to start a hope chest."

Seventeen-year-old Barbara Bennett danced into the living-room aglow with enthusiasm. Her mother looked up from her sewing, a shade of annoyance furrowing her brow.

"It seems to me that school girls ought to have their minds on their studies, not on possible engagements and weddings," she chided.

Barbara went off into a gale of merriment.

"It isn't that sort of hope chest, Mamma. Ours is quite different. In the first place, it calls for money instead of clothes and linen. Ten cents a week from every girl in the class. The fund is to be drawn upon for flowers and books, if any one is ill. Jellies and fruits are going to be bought for lonely convalescents that we know, and if there is a surplus at the end of each month, it will go into a recreation and health fund so that we can keep fit through proper exercises. We think now that we will rent a tennis court next summer so that a form of sport within the reach of every one will be available. Don't you think our Hope Chest is going to be perfectly lovely?"

Mrs. Bennett returned to her sewing with a smile of satisfaction.

"You are applying on a small scale some of the ideals for service of the American Red Cross," she answered. "Except that in your case you are taxing yourselves about five times as much as it costs to serve with that."

"Of course, I don't mean that the Red Cross literally goes out and buys flowers for sick people. It does better than that. By means of its campaign for sound health through proper knowledge of the subject, and a thorough grounding of our children of the Junior Red Cross in health habits, a veritable crusade is being carried on in a dozen different ways all over the nation and throughout the world."

"You know how much your Course in Home Hygiene and Care of the Sick has helped our entire family," continued Mrs. Bennett. "Multiply it by hundreds and you will realize the far-reaching results this splendid instruction is providing to the girls and women of America."

"Nutrition and Food Selection courses are emphasizing as never before the connection between the right sort and adequate amount of food and physical fitness.

"Disaster Relief is one of the most precious jewels in the Hope Chest of the Greatest Mother in the World. Do you recall how, when the tornado of last July swept down upon the doomed towns of Northern Ohio, leaving a wake of destruction and death unparalleled since the Dayton flood, the American Red Cross relief workers arrived almost before the extent of the catastrophe had been gauged? No one knows when disaster will strike. It is in these dark hours that the Red Cross banner shines most resplendently, as beneath its symbol of cheer and courage trained workers and graduate nurses bring order out of chaos and bind up the wounds of the maimed and crippled. We read of these things and take them as a matter of course, but it we stopped to think we would realize that such highly efficient and superbly organized relief is made possible only because the American Red Cross is the national response, supported by all the people, to the S. O. S. calls of the world." Barbara's eyes were big with interest.

"I hadn't realized how much the American Red Cross is doing for all the people of the country," she said. "I thought its work was chiefly confined to the assistance of disabled ex-service men and their families and to the army and navy."

"They are doing that, too, and, first of all," replied Mrs. Bennett earnestly. "Many of us would be apt to forget that to thousands of these heroes in khaki who bore the cost of peace, Armistice Day, 1918, brought no respite from suffering and pain. Maimed in body and shattered in mind, a host of these men still remain among us. For them life can never again go on at the same normal pace they knew before they enlisted. Disability and disease have caused them to fall behind in the march toward prosperity and success. But the Red Cross does not forget them."

"Oh, Mother!" exclaimed Barbara. "I'm so glad that I promised to help solicit memberships in the Eighth Annual Roll Call. That is to begin on Armistice Day and go on to Thanksgiving. Surely there isn't a man, woman or child who won't be willing to subscribe just one dollar to such a splendid cause!"

Billy's Birthday Cake.

When the twins were seven years old they went to their first party. They had a good time, but what pleased them most was the big birthday cake with candles in rosebud holders. They had never before seen such a cake and were much excited about it.

Their brother, Billy's birthday came soon after the party, but mother replied to their eager questions that there wasn't money to spare even for a plain cake, and certainly not for one with candles.

Billy laughed and said he supposed that birthday cakes with candles would be all right for little folks, but when a fellow was eleven and had a paper route he didn't mind very much not having one. Besides, next year he would be twelve and old enough to join the Boy Scouts, and then he would be too big for any kind of birthday cake. "Perhaps you are too big after you are twelve," said Sally. "Mother never has one."

"We'll save our pennies and buy Billy a surprise one next year," said Sam. "He must have one birthday cake before he's too old."

So Sam and Sally earned and saved a few pennies, but when you are seven a year is a long time and you forget.

When their own birthday came mother was sick; so of course they didn't expect a cake; besides, as Sally said, they were only eight years old, and there was plenty of time. But again they thought of the cake they had planned for Billy's next birthday. Again they saved a few pennies, but when mother didn't have quite enough money for Sam's new shoes they emptied their bank to help buy them. Then they forgot again until one morning Billy said, "Thursday I shall be twelve years old and then I can be a Scout!"

Sam thought of the cake and looked at Sally. Sally looked at Sam and slowly shook her head. But when Billy went to feed the hens a little later the twins asked mother about the cake.

"It would be lovely," agreed mother, "and I think I can manage to bake a cake, but I'm afraid I can't spare any money for candles. We couldn't ask Billy for any either, could we? Besides, Billy is saving for a new suit."

"O mother," pleaded Sally, "he must have one regular birthday cake before he is too old! Couldn't we—"

"Twinnies," said mother, "if Billy is to have candles on his birthday cake, you will have to earn them."

"Maybe," said Sally on the way to school, "Mrs. Burns would like to have me care for the baby after school."

"I'll ask Mrs. Hill if she wants her garden watered," said Sam.

Mrs. Burns was glad when Sally came, and after the baby went to sleep she gave Sally a big orange.

Sam watered Mrs. Hill's garden and received a stick of peppermint candy.

The next evening Sally went to the grocery store for Mrs. Burns and received another orange. Mrs. Hill asked Sam to find her cat and gave him another stick of candy when he brought the cat home.

"O dear!" said Sally. "The candy and oranges are good, but—Well, maybe they didn't have any pennies."

The next day was Billy's birthday. He whistled when he fed the hens and laughed when he divided the oranges and the candy.

"I shall have the cake ready for supper," mother whispered to the twins before they went to school.

"We must have candles for it; it won't be a truly birthday cake without them," Sam and Sally agreed as they walked slowly along.

After school they ran home. Mother was sewing by the kitchen window; Billy was delivering papers; the cake, covered with white frosting, was on the kitchen table.

"O mother, it's beautiful, but we must have candles," pleaded Sally.

"I think," said mother, threading a needle, "that twelve funny turtles made of raisins with cloves for head and tail and feet would be as good a decoration for the cake as candles would be. I can show you how to make them."

"O mother, the turtles would be all right, but—" began Sally. A big tear rolled down her cheek.

"Well, then," said mother, "I have a plan. I've just finished this dress for Mrs. Gray, and you may take it to her. She always pays at once for the sewing I do for her, and you may take ten cents and buy some candles."

"O mother," breathed Sally, "and can't we take ten cents more and buy twelve rosebud holders to put the candles in? Then the wax won't drip on the cake."

Mother shook her head. "No, dear," she said, "ten cents is all we can spare. Besides, we shan't mind if the wax does drip a bit, shall we?"

"Of course not," said the twins happily.

The dress was wrapped up and the children carried it carefully over to Mrs. Gray's. They rang the bell and waited. Presently the maid came to the door and opened it. "Mrs. Gray isn't at home just now," she said. "She'll pay your mother tomorrow."

The twins walked home slowly. Sam shuffled his feet; Sally wiped away a tear; neither said a word. Then they both stopped short, for right there on the walk was a bright shining coin.

"It's a dime!" shouted Sally. "And we found it! Let's run and show it to mother."

"I wonder who lost—" began Sam, and then stopped, for a little in front of them walked Mr. Noble, the minister.

"Maybe he lost it," Sam went on, "and we must give it back."

"O dear," wailed Sally; "must we, Sam?"

"Well, you know what mother would say, don't you? Let's hurry and get it over with."

"Lose a dime" repeated Mr. Noble when the children rather breathlessly questioned him. "Now let me see." He gravely put his hand into his trousers pocket and drew out a handful of coins.

The twins watched eagerly. Mr. Noble looked at their anxious little faces and his eyes twinkled.

"No," he said, "I haven't lost a dime; I seem to have one more than I need. Now, Sam, if you will keep the dime you found and Sally will take the one I don't need, we shall all be happy."

"Thank you! Thank you!" gasped the twins and ran for home.

"We'll buy pink candles!" shouted Sam.

"And pink rosebud holders!" sang Sally.—Jessie Lathrop in Youth's Companion.

Clifford Learns a Secret.

Every summer Clifford went with his parents to the country. Sometimes there were playmates near his home, and sometimes there were not. This summer, however, Clifford was delighted to learn that two little boys, Victor and Ivan Kline, lived only a short distance away. The boys lost no time in getting acquainted, and then the good times began.

Sometimes they would ride Barney the spotted pony; sometimes they would hitch up the little dog Towser to a small cart and drive him around. At other times they would roll huge iron hoops down the road, shouting like small, dusty Indians in their play.

One hot day the boys had been playing hard and sat down to rest. Clifford decided he was very tired and was going home to rest.

"What is the matter?" asked his mother, as he flung himself in a big arm-chair.

The discontented look grew on the little boy's face. "I'm tired of everything," he answered rather crossly. "I wish I had something different to play."

"Why not try a little work, instead of play?" suggested his mother pleasantly, as she went on with her work of cutting out cookies in fancy shapes.

"But I can't think of any work that I want to do," answered the small boy, shaking his head. Then he glanced out of the window. "Oh, look, the cows are in the wheat field, and they'll trample it all down."

"Then run over quickly," said his mother, "and help Victor and Ivan chase the cows out of the field. You know Mr. Kline has gone to town. It will be too bad if the cows ruin the ripened wheat."

Clifford waited not a minute, but raced out of the yard and up the road.

"Your cows are spoiling the wheat," he shouted to the boys, who were playing in their front yard.

In another moment all three boys, aided by Towser, the dog, were in the field, running after the red-and-white animals. For half an hour they worked very hard. Just as they would force a cow near the gate, she would toss her head, give a quick turn, and run back into the wheat field. After much work the boys managed to get all the cows out of the forbidden grain and into their proper places in the cow barn.

Then the boys went under a tree and sat down on the tall green grass, and began to fan their hot faces with their broad-brimmed straw hats.

The discontented look on Clifford's face was entirely gone. "It's almost as much fun to help some one chase cows as to ride ponies," he declared, laughing. "It doesn't seem like work at all."

"Well, I'm glad you were here to help us," said Ivan. "It would have taken Victor and me another half-hour to get the cows out." And tired Ivan lay down on the cool green grass. So tired was he that it felt almost like a feather bed beneath him.

"I know now when work does seem like play. It was like a game, running around in the wheat," Clifford told them.

That evening, when Mr. Kline came home from town and heard the tale, he was very much pleased that the boys had done their duty so well.

"I think I will reward my hired men at once," he said laughingly. "Then he made his way to the ice-house. In a short time Mr. Kline froze a gallon of the best ice cream they had ever tasted.

"Oh, my!" Clifford sighed after his second dish, "that was good."—Our Little Ones.

Alice and the Bird.

Alice was fast asleep. A bird saw her. "Wake up! wake up!" sang the bird. "Wake up, Little Girl!" it sang. Alice waked up. She jumped out of her bed. She saw the bird in the tree.

Alice went to play with Patty. She took her Doll with her. Patty said, "I want the Doll!" Alice said, "No, I want it!" "Give up! give up!" sang the bird! Alice looked up into the tree. There sat the bird. "Give up! give up!" it sang. "I hear you, Little Bird," said Alice; "I will give up! I will give up! Patty, you may have the doll."

Alice went home to dinner. Her mother was not there. "Oh, where is mother?" she said. "I want my dinner!" "Cheer up! cheer up!" sang the bird. Alice looked up into the tree. There sat the bird! "Cheer up! cheer up!" it sang. "I will cheer up," said Alice; "I will cheer up and be happy." She ran to play with her kitten. She sang and was happy.

After dinner Alice went for a ride. Then her mother put her to bed. Her black eyes would not shut. "Shut them up!" sang the bird; "shut them up! shut them up!" "I will shut them up," said Alice. Soon she was fast asleep. How happy the bird was! It had helped Alice all the day.—Emily Rose Burt.

Bein' Good.

Helen Bayley Davis.

I try so hard to be quite good,
But I jus' can't;
I love to say, "I won't—I will"
An' "No, you shan't!"
As soon as I get out of my bed,
There's somethin' bad pops in my head,
I want to paint the ice-box red
Or scare my aunt.

I make my mother very sad,
I know I do;
An' sometimes she gets real mad
An' hunts a shoe!
She spansks me hard an' makes me cry,
I want to lie right down an' die,
Or punch some feller in the eye,
I feel so blue.

Dad thinks he was jus' awful good
When he was young;
He says he really never would Stick out his tongue.
He always tried to relp his Pa
An' dearly loved to wait on Ma,
He never mocked an' yelled "Ha, ha!"
Or door-bells rung.

Oh, dear! I have to do those things!
But never mind;
Some day I'm goin' to get some wings,
The angel-kind!
Then I will flap them an' away,
Away I'll fly the first bright day;
Jus' nothin' else to do but play—
Pa'll stay behind!

Uncle Sam's Coal-Bins.

Mother Earth has a lot of children, black ones and white ones, brown ones and yellow ones and red ones—such a lot that you'd hardly think she could feed them all and clothe them and keep them warm. Now all these children of hers are divided into various groups and live in houses of different kinds and sizes. We live with our Uncle Sam in a large and wonderful house called The United States of America. There are forty-eight rooms in this house—some folks call them forty-eight States—and in the rooms are "all the modern conveniences." For instance, there is running water (rivers and streams) in every room.

Under some of the rooms are the coal-bins. Mother Earth has been filling them for us during all the long centuries since the world was young, since the time when there were no men in our house, but only queer-looking animals such as you and I have never seen. Do you know how she made the coal? Well, she took a lot of leaves and ferns when they dropped to the ground, and as they began to decay she covered them over with sand and dirt. This kept all the moisture out, and in the course of time, as other layers of sand and dirt were piled on top, the mass of vegetation grew harder and blacker, and harder and blacker, and today we call it coal. Mother Earth is still making coal in some places—for instance, in the Dismal Swamp of Virginia and North Carolina, and in the peat-bogs of Ireland.

Before the coal is hard and black it is called peat.—Selected.

Obituaries

MISS ALICE PETTIGREW NORTH.

On Monday, October 6, 1924, MISS ALICE PETTIGREW NORTH entered into that rest which remaineth to the people of God. Her death took place at her late residence, 1126 North Calvert Street, Baltimore, in which city she had passed the greater portion of her life. Miss North was a daughter of the late Captain James H. North and the late Mrs. Emily Klein North, of Warrenton, Va. Captain North was originally from Charleston, S. C., and served as an officer in the navy of the United States and later in that of the Confederate States.

Miss North had lived for a number of years in the family of relatives who were very near and dear to her, namely: her aunt, the late Miss Susan S. Klein, and another aunt, Miss Mary B. Klein, and a cousin, Miss Louisa K. Funn, both of whom survive her. The life in their family circle was so lovely and Christ-like as to be almost ideal. Miss North was a standing example of high principle, devotion to duty and unbounded affection to her aunts and dear ones. Coupled with these great qualities was the blessing of sound common sense and a large capacity for business, as well as great personal charm of manner. Her going from us serves as a reminder of the truth of the thought expressed by Emerson that, after the death of a loved one, the landscape seems to shut down on less of worth and nobility, and, so, to be less attractive than before. She has passed to that far greater life beyond.

REV. ANGUS CRAWFORD, D. D.

Resolutions.

We, the Faculty of the Virginia Theological Seminary, wish to record our deep sense of loss in the death of the Rev. Angus Crawford, D. D. Dr. Crawford was professor in the Seminary from 1887 to 1920, and Dean from 1898 to 1916. He served the Diocese of Virginia in the General Convention from 1901 to 1916.

Five members of the present Faculty of the Virginia Seminary were taught by Dr. Crawford, and they can bear testimony as his pupils to his thoroughness and exceptional power as a teacher of Hebrew. In accurate learning and in the gift of imparting the language of the Old Testament we doubt if he had an equal in the Episcopal Church in his generation. We recall vividly his enthusiasm, which kindled a long dead language with the liveliest present-day interest. Hebrew to him was indeed a sacred language, and even its grammatical forms were taught in the class room drill with a religious zeal.

During his many years as Dean he gave himself to the upbuilding of the Seminary with a concentration of effort so wholehearted that the grounds and buildings were gradually transformed into beauty and comfort. He wrought before the drive expert and the campaign machinery came upon the scene. Single-handed, with little or no supporting organization, he accomplished great things by sheer force of personal enthusiasm for a cause in which he firmly believed. The Seminary in all of its long life has never had a friend or official more earnest in endeavor for its well-being. Coming to the Seminary when the grounds were a wilderness and its buildings cheerless and crudely appointed, he lived to see an attractive campus and an up-to-date equipment.

But we who knew him so well like to remember him in the intimacies of the home and private life. He was preeminently a man of prayer and faith. One cannot forget the moments around the dining room table in the evening, when, after the meal, he led the household in prayer with a reverence and simplicity most impressive. Then beneath the teacher of the class room and the administrator of the institution, one saw the trust of a child and the devotion of a saint. During his last years of quiet retirement he delighted in the leisure which enabled him to think out the things which make for the peace of the spirit. These closing days were spent on "The Hill" he loved, and in a richer experience of all the old Seminary stood for. Otiurn cum dignitate well describes this last period of a life of beneficent and exalted service.

saur was noted. Miss Martha Justice led a helpful round table conference on "Our Work and Our Methods." Luncheon was served in the parish house, which has been recently remodeled.

DEATHS.

Funeral services for the Rev. C. O. Dantzer were held October 30 in All Souls' Church for the Deaf, Philadelphia. Interment was in North Cedar Hill Cemetery. Mr. Dantzer died in the Episcopal Hospital of complications, believed to have resulted from a fracture of the hip, suffered recently in his Fox Chase home.

He was a deaf mute since he was seven, and was rector of All Souls' Church from 1903 until a year and a half ago, when he retired.

When Mr. Dantzer came to Philadelphia he first used a small building on Franklin Street, above Vine, as a center for his missionary work in this state, New Jersey and Delaware. He developed this work to such a great extent that the All Souls' Church then was built. Following his ideas, seats were arranged triangular in tiers and focused to one point in front, the purpose being for each worshipper to see, no attention being paid to acoustics.

Mr. Dantzer was a leader in the country in work among deaf mutes. It was largely through his efforts the home for deaf mutes in Bucks County, Pennsylvania, was put into operation.

Bishop Garland conducted the services and they were translated to the congregation by the Rev. William M. Smaltz, rector of All Souls' Church, who succeeded Mr. Dantzer a year and a half ago.

WHAT IS MY DUTY TOWARDS THE CHURCH'S PROGRAM?

TO BE INFORMED. If I read The Spirit of Missions and The Church at Work and my diocesan paper and other literature, I will know what my Church is doing to spread the Gospel.

TO PRAY. I can pray regularly that Christ's Kingdom shall come everywhere and that I and all other Christians shall have a missionary spirit.

TO WORK. I can tell the rector that I am ready to be drafted for any work for which he thinks I am fitted, and then cheerfully make good in any duties assigned me

TO PLEDGE SUPPORT. As the Church has budgets in parish, diocese and nation, I ought to indicate by a pledge in the Every Member Canvass to what extent I will share in providing for these budgets, and my share ought to be according to my means.

TO GIVE. Unless prevented by unforeseen disaster, I ought to pay what I pledge and I ought to make my payments regularly and promptly.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

The reason a lot of people cannot find Opportunity is because it goes around disguised as Hard Work.

Our grand business in life isn't to see what lies dimly at a distance, but to do what lies clearly at hand.—Carlyle.

I believe that the root of almost every schism and heresy from which the Church has ever suffered has been the effort of men to earn, rather than to receive, their salvation.—John Ruskin.

We need a rural social philosophy more than we need a rural social technique. . . . Which is just another way of saying that the fundamental problem of progress is spiritual and its solution must be spiritual.—Home Lands.

Whether it be a day of health or sickness, joy or sorrow, rest or work, struggle or victory, let the chief thought with which you receive it in the morning thanksgiving be this: "A day that the Father gave: in it I may, I must, become more closely united to Jesus."

Spirit, who makest all things new, Thou leadest onward; we pursue
The heavenly march sublime.

'Neath Thy renewing fire we glow
And still from strength to strength we go,

From height to height we climb.

Every greatness there has been in any thought of mine, whatever I have done in life, has been due to the fact that when I was a child my mother daily read with me a part of the Bible, and daily made me learn a part of it by heart.—Ruskin.

I remember that Charles Kingsley used to say, "I wonder if there is a family in all England where there is more laughter than there is in mine." And the Lord was an abiding guest at Charles Kingsley's table. Take Him into your conversation. He will come in like sunshine.

Christ has made the world better than it was. Only Christ can make the world better than it is. Christ was the hope of the world before He came. The hope of the world is still in Christ and in those in whom the Christ spirit lives.—C. W. Fulton.

"Keep ye the Law—be swift in all obedience—

Clear the land of evil, drive the road and bridge the ford,

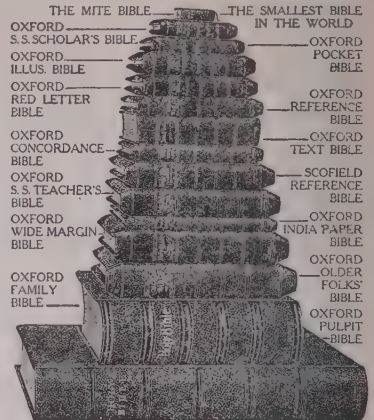

Make ye sure to each his own

That he reap where he hath sown;
By the peace among our people let men know we serve the Lord."

Worry is the antithesis of prayer. Prayer is an acknowledgment of faith: worry is a denial of faith. Prayer is putting my hand in God's, trusting to His loving guidance; worry is withdrawing my hand and denying His power to lead me: Prayer leads through the door of faith into the presence of God: worry leads through the door of anxiety into the darkness of loneliness and discouragement. If prayer does not cancel worry, worry will cancel prayer.

THE ART OF LIVING

The object of science is knowledge, or rather a systematized knowledge which then takes its place in the whole category called truth. The object of art is to utilize this truth. Art has two definite meanings. One is the conception of art as a set of rules for the practical use of knowledge. These rules constitute a method of employing the powers of nature for a desired end. The other meaning of art is that it is the actual functioning of the trained intelligence using certain tested rules as the channels of creative energy. Art in latter sense is the constructive intelligence in action. The varied activities of this intelligence have created the forms of thought which science uses in its quests. It has produced the harmonious expression of the emotions which is called poetry. It has taken the cold dead facts from the hands of science, and made them so like Nature's handiwork that the sheer beauty of the thing produced, absolves the senses as does a sunset or a star. The Art of Arts, the highest exercise of the constructive intelligence, is the Art of Living. It, like every other art, can be considered as a body of canons, or a system of rules. So considered it offers its gifts only to true intelligence. The art returns upon itself. It can be studied, however, as the actual functioning of the whole being in accordance with the tested facts of life.

St. Paul like every prophet becomes a poet in his highest moods. He bids the Philippians to go in search of the sunlit way to God. This is the highest quest of the soul, to find the shining path of light, to become children of the day, sun-tested men, found pure and unsullied in the light of day.

The sunlit path that leads to God! To seek it is the great adventure. There the sun that crowns the life heals and restores, and then reveals what it has done. The path of light leads to the mount of vision; and never does the glory fade. In olden days Moses found the Way, and when he came down from the mount his face shone, and even if he wished not that it shone, the men of Israel know that he had found the path of light.

Like some master of the chisel or the brush, Paul, great master of the highest art of all, talks to his pupils, young craftsmen seeking to build a hope that will not crumble with the years. Listen to his talk: "I buffet my body and keep it under. 'Tis thus alone, a man is made the master of his soul." "In knowledge of the fact that he who would reach the goal must push on with tireless and unhurried stride, ever do I practice in the game. Come rain or shine I train my conscience every day, knowing full well that if my conscience miss its beat, I break the rhythm of my running. When the goal is seen, it is the lost rhythm of the inner life that makes men trip and fall before the eyes of God and men."

"He who aspires to walk the sunlit way, must learn to find the straight, clear line of right, and having found to keep it with exacting care. The follower of the way must hold in mind that moral accuracy is the first inexorable law of the greatest of the arts. He may not trust to vague promptings of a well-intentioned heart, but must pause to drop the plummet, and measure angles wherever roads diverge. Outside the path of light, within the deepening darkness, grope the ones whose small inaccuracies of truth and honesty have carried them at last far from the way; poor errant fools who trusted to a wish to guide them right, and scorned the useful trouble of the plummet test.

Let no man say that to him has come no call to go and seek. It comes to all. If any have let it pass unheeded, still there is hope. "Buy up the opportunity." Make any sacrifice to purchase the privilege of gaining entrance to the gate of high endeavor. Wait not for opportunity to come again. "Gird up thy loins and pursue."

When one has entered on the path of light, there is a law to guide his steps and train his speech. Let there be no lagging on the way. Straight on! No looking back! "Let thy speech be ever gracious, seasoned with salt." With the breath of heaven in thy face and thy head crowned with sunlight, forget not the joy of living. Not with sad cadence as of one lamenting, but with the glad lilt of joy, go on thy way. The way of light is not the path of silence. Song is there, and speech that has the tang of air that borrows from the ocean its freshness and its flavor. Within the highest life there is ever place for laughter and for jest and pungent speech, but none for rude words that wound, or talk insipid in its unsalted sameness.

When mind and heart and will, the potential trinity within, distinct, interdependent, begotten and proceeding, coequal, yet meant to be forever one, shall have attained to destiny, then shall man know that the law of his own being is but another name for the will of God.

"We shall be like Him; for we shall see Him as He is."

EVERY MAN IN HIS OWN TONGUE

We publish in this issue a stinging rebuke of ourselves. It is from a devoted and distinguished layman of the Church. He calls us by implication a scoffer and a miser; and then in an exuberance of charity is willing to admit that the aberrant fantasies of a recent editorial may be ascribed to a transient fit of pique or what the doctors used to call tumidum jecur, an enlarged and indurated liver.

When we are accused of trying to put a wet blanket on the Nation-Wide Campaign and to furnish "balm" to the accusing conscience of the slackers," we understand the mental confusion of the old dame who went to sleep on the King's highway, and awoke to find that a passer-by had so changed her outward appearance that after studying herself for a while, she cried: "Lawk a mercy! Lawk a mercy! This is none of I."

We do understand, however, a little better than we did, what St. Paul meant when he talked of the foolishness of preaching."

What we were trying to do was to point out that what Christianity did first of all was to explode the ancient notion of sacrifice. For a man to give one-tenth of his income to Church and charity, and then to feel himself free to use the remainder without a thought of God or his fellowmen, is to our mind not an expression but a denial of Christian loyalty. Self-denial or self-sacrifice that leaves nine-tenths of our interests untouched, is to our mind utterly unmeaning. So long as such a conception exists, a man calling himself Christian can continue to be as a wealthy citizen of New York said he was: "a Christian above fourteenth street." Below fourteenth street he was frankly pagan.

We know of a rector, who, when he was called to a city church, met with the vestry and laid their call to him on the table. He told them that he would come to them only on the condition that they agreed to accept this ideal of what a church was. First that the unit of the church was not the congregation but the diocese. To be an Episcopalian meant this much or it meant nothing at all. Second that the diocese had no warrant of existence save as a component part of a larger whole. That an individual congregation had no more right to plan first to save itself than a soldier in a regiment had such a right. That if it became necessary the congregation must stand ready "to give itself to death," provided the diocese assume the same loyalty to the church. That the missionary work of the church constituted the first lien on the resources of the congregation; for the missionaries were the army in the field who could not possibly subsist there without being furnished with supplies and equipment. That so thorough-going was this truth that the meeting of its obligations to the advance work of the church was a claim that had precedence over even the salary of the rector. That he would never consent to any adornment or enlargement of the church, nor would he receive his own salary until the first claim was met.

For the first time it dawned upon that vestry what it meant to be officers in the Church of God.

Parochialism died a sudden death, and men who formerly had talked of being taxed by the church gave till the whole diocese wondered. During the ten years of that man's rectorship he never once appealed for money, but he continued to tell his people what he had told the vestry. What gave him even higher joy was to see the truth gradually made manifest that a man who called himself a business man and a Christian was an unworthy business man and a disloyal Christian, unless his business was Christian and Christianity his business.

A WORLD VISIONED CHRISTIANITY.

The possession of a world vision is an imperative necessity for the Christian religion if it would helpfully attune itself to the needs of the modern world. There can be but small room in an age of democracy for a religion unable to transcend the social, national and racial barriers which divide mankind. Modern men are compelled to think in world terms. The great problems of the present hour are those which touch the interests of all the nations. The human race has at last become a single family. That which concerns one member of the family concerns all. It is becoming clear that the civilization of the future, if it is to endure, must be built upon a world consciousness. Hence the Church can occupy no honored place in the day that is to be unless she learns to speak the language of humanity, and addresses herself to a solution of the problems common to all the peoples of the earth.

Wherever the Church manifests a too eager interest in a single class or group, men grow suspicious of her message; but wherever she gives evidence of possessing an impartial world sense, men look to her in hope. Where the Church is faulted today it is less for her inefficiency and impotence than for her fondness for preaching a "class gospel". The certain cure for this state of affairs is the vigorous prosecution of a worthy program; a program that is truly world-wide. An article in one of our leading magazines not long ago said that in India the keenest minds, both Christian and non-Christian, are looking to Jesus Christ as the ultimate Saviour of that troubled civilization. Whether the rising tide of the yellow race is destined to refresh or to engulf the fair fields of western civilization depend upon whether we Christianize the yellow races or permit them to remain pagan and material. Whether the Cross or the Crescent finally waves in triumph over the continent of Africa will be determined by the character of the Church's vision in Christian land. And no sane mind can fancy that it will not matter to the generations of the future whether mighty Africa finally becomes Mohammedan or Christian. Every nation on earth that is not Christian matters. Every one that is

Christian matters. And it is high time we found it out. It is my firm opinion that the Church's program of missionary work is the most distinctly worth while task she is engaged upon today. The world cannot become safe until it has been made Christian; and at all hazards it must be done. Every prayer for missions, every dollar given, every favorable word spoken, every life offered for active service, means good work done towards transforming the kingdoms of the earth into the Kingdom of God and of His Christ. To help the Church in Parish and Nation catch a world vision and carry out a world program is the most far-reaching service a Christian today can hope to render.—Bishop Strider, in "The Church News."

WHAT IS CONVERSION?

It is the process, whether sudden or gradual, by which this loyalty to Jesus becomes the reality of a person's life. For some it represents a series of forward steps. For others, who have been living contrary to Jesus and His ideals, it means literally turning around, a change in the moral direction of life. When the lost son came to himself he decided to go back to his father. Conversion is a turning from the false center of self to the true center of God as revealed in Jesus; from a base selfishness to a true self-realization in life more abundant; from the false lust of anti-social life to the fullness of love as the complete sharing of life in limitless self-giving. For those who have grown up without relation to Jesus, conversion represents a change of spiritual center as radical as the shift from the earth as the false center of the Ptolemaic, to the true sun-centered Copernican system of astronomy. It is spiritual self realization in the adjustment of the individual in the three relationships of life, religious, moral and social. It is a new orientation to the spiritual universe. It is "the birth of a new dominant affection by which the God consciousness hitherto marginal and vague becomes focal and dynamic." Conversion means the unification of the divided self, or the victory of the true self in its identification with the ideal, as a house no longer divided against itself.—Sherwood Eddy.

YE SHALL RECEIVE POWER

By R. C. Gillie

In the Presbyterian Banner

ONE of the chief hindrances to attention to Jesus and His message—the message He brought and the message that is in Him, is the misrepresentations of Christianity, which are always current. Each generation produces its own lie. There is always a temptation to spend strength fighting a lie which is already dead, answering questions which no one is asking, as Dr. Hulton says in his brilliant way. The real foe to be fought is the lie that is infecting men and women by suggestion, the bacillus that have not yet been isolated. Once the lie has become explicit, it can be fought in the open field. As soon as the bacillus has been isolated an antidote can be provided.

A malignant infection at work on the minds of a good many men today is, to put it colloquially, that the gospel is "dope." It neither feeds men's strength nor supplies their real need, it only satisfies their morbid cravings, it simply anaesthetises—that is the suggestion. All men have their bad times, we are instructed in the bitter day-break of sorrow or face to face with some implacable demand of life, they are eager for relief from mental or moral pain. They are not quite normal then. The narcotic of the gospel is offered to them and they received it, not because it is true but because it is comforting. They have accepted a lie—a beautiful lie; also, none the less a lie.

Thus the tables are turned on us. We who cry, "Awake thou that sleepest and arise from the dead," are accused in turn of accepting an injection which has drugged our faculties and sunk us in slumber.

It is partly our own fault. There is a way of preaching Christ which forbids men to love God with their mind. The Gospel is sometimes offered as a draught to be swallowed down without asking questions. There is at least one type of Christianity that lives by something like "spiritual magic." There are forms of Christianity which can only be described as "medicated."

The challenge has to be accepted. If Christianity, essential simple Christianity, is an anaesthetic, then we must place the question back to the fountain head. Is there in Jesus, the Jesus of the New Testament, anything to justify such a suggestion? Did He try to drug men or to awaken them?

A first glance at the Gospel is reassuring. It was Our Lord Himself who said: "What think ye of Christ?" He again said: "I am the Truth." He was never afraid to be tested. Though He refused the fallacious test of providing miracles to order, He was never averse to right investigation. He was prepared to yield Himself to almost brutal examination for did He not say to Thomas: "Reach hither thy hand and put it into my side." Jesus is presented to us as the Saviour of truth lovers. We misrepresent Him if we deny that fact.

But we must press the question still further back. Is there in the Jesus of the Gospels any suggestion of falsity, of unreality, of the artificial or of the inconsistent? Is there anything that does not ring true?

To ask the question is for most of us to answer it. But to let us hear the message of the New Testament. There is an antidote there to every bacillus of unbelief, however new born.

Listen to this remarkable combination of words, "full of grace and truth." That is a description of Jesus Christ. The words were evidently chosen with care for they are used to describe the message as well as the Lord. "The law was given by Moses: grace and truth came by Jesus Christ."

They are an adaptation of an Old Testament formula, "Mercy and truth," which was frequently used. But "mercy" has been displaced by "grace." That marks a deepened knowledge of God. Our attitude to men. "Mercy" can exist without love, "grace" in its New Testament sense always involves active love. "Mercy" describes the attitude of a judge who pities a criminal and lessens his sentence. "Grace" is the attitude of the father who loves his prodigal son and was watching for him, a welcome ready every day. The original idea has been much enriched by the change of the word.

It is the other word, however, which fastens our attention, truth. It is found in unusual company. Grace, mercy, pity, compassion, love—all there in full play but not at the expense of truth. How deeply that takes us into the necessity for a Gospel! This idea also has been enriched, for though the Greek word is the accurate translation of the Hebrew, it is a richer word. Did not Jowett of Balliol suggest that perhaps the Holy Spirit could at times express His meaning more fully through a translation, the word in the language of the version being richer than that in the original? However that may be, in this instance we get a view of a wonder landscape by following Dr. Moffat's translation, "Full of Grace and Reality." Grace and reality came by Jesus Christ.

You see which way this word points. Jesus Christ is more than veracious, He is actual; the foe of untruth in word, also the touchstone of all that is false in life; testing not only the truth of statements but also the truth of things. Through Him God is seen not only to be more gracious but also more real. The mists of vagueness as of error vanish before Him.

That is a tremendous claim. It is justified. Opponents of Christianity have long tried to attach the words "legendary" and "mythical" to the narrative of the life of Jesus, but all such attempts fail to tinge His person with unreality. The atmosphere of the Gospels is daylight, not moonlight, not even twilight. There is a singular absence of mere glamor, though there is abundance of romance, the romance of heroic love deepening into the tragedy of its rejection. There is nothing artificial or strained or abnormal or morbid in these pages. Strauss, the opponent of a Divine Lord, recognized "the pure sanity" of His mind. Jesus Christ is presented to us as reality. That is why simple hearted people are so sure of their Lord. Apart from the wonderful authentication of His aliveness through daily experiences of His presence, they recognize instinctively the record of a real life lived and a real death died.

This impression of reality is most powerful where we might expect it to fail, viz., in the presentation of His character as perfect, without flaw and without stain.

Shallow people hint not obscurely that a perfect character making the impression of reality, could be invented quite easily by a dramatic genius. The plain fact is that it has never been done, not once. Shakespeare never attempted it. He was great enough to know better. But attempts have been made, only to end in failure. In "Daniel Deronda" George Eliot is obviously attempting to depict a perfect man. The result? It has been said caustically, the hero is not a man, just a "moral mist." No, outside the Gospels there is no picture of moral perfection which convinces us of actuality. That is the astonishing thing about the record of Jesus. As we read them we know that He is not only perfect, He is real.

He is no plaster saint, no wax figure, faultless but lifeless. He is flesh and blood. God, the character of God, shines through this life unmistakably. The flesh and blood are the perfected instruments of holiness, but flesh and blood all the time. Yes, as really when He held little children in His kind strong arms as when these arms were helpless, nailed to the cross.

What is true of Himself is true of His gospel. Reality is its hall-mark. No, if it does not produce results, it is useless. If it will not bear all the tests of life and death, it is not authentic. If it cannot endure the scrutiny of the enquiring mind, it lacks a quality its Master had when on earth. If it must be protected from the rude jostling of other ideas and gospels and propaganda there is a vein of weakness in it which this word "reality" challenges. It triumphs because it is continually being tested and continually bears the strain. We are not afraid of people thinking too much about Christianity. We are afraid of their thinking too little. The texture of its truth will bear the most powerful microscope without revealing one destructive defect. It was tested in the laboratory of heaven before it came to earth and is guaranteed against the uttermost strain.

BISHOP TUTTLE MEMORIAL ASSURED

St. Louis Gives More Than Half a Million in Opening Drive—More in Sight

By the Right Reverend Frederick F. Johnson, D. D.

Bishop of Missouri.

WHEN Bishop Tuttle died, the people of Missouri, of the Episcopal Church and of other Churches and of no Church, immediately determined that a permanent memorial should be created of such sort as to challenge the attention of men by its sufficiency, its beauty, and its sacred uses. Quietly during the past year the memorial project has been planted in the hearts of the citizens of St. Louis. On the night of October 10, the opening dinner of the intensive campaign was had. A leading Jewish rabbi made the invocation, the Rev. Dr. Bitting, twenty years pastor of St. Louis' Second Baptist Church; Mr. Festus J. Wade, a St. Louis banker of international reputation (the foremost Roman Catholic layman of the Middle West), and Mr. Charles Nagel, Secretary of Commerce and Labor in the Cabinet of President Taft, made the addresses of the evening, and the benediction was pronounced by Bishop Johnson, of Missouri. Because Bishop Tuttle had been a sort of pastor at large to all sorts and conditions of men in every walk of life, all communions in St. Louis cooperated in the endeavor to make a successful campaign. Archbishop Glennon of the Roman Catholic Church sent a letter which was printed in the St. Louis papers, commending the Bishop Tuttle Memorial to all good citizens. The weekly bulletin of the St. Louis Church Federation, whose first president Bishop Tuttle had been a dozen years before his death, carried a full-length picture of the Bishop in his episcopal robes as its cover page. The Modern View, weekly publication of the Jewish Church, used a more recent photograph for its full-page cover. After nineteen days the closing dinner at the Hotel Chase was presided over by Mr. Festus J. Wade, a member of the original executive committee. When the lists were in, it was announced that St. Louis had subscribed over $500,000, and that more was in sight. A team headed by a woman who is a member of the Jewish faith reported the highest total pledges outside of special gifts. Dr. John W. MacIvor pledged $1,000 for the Second Presbyterian Church, of which he is the pastor. When it is remembered that the Bishop Tuttle Memorial was trying to make its way in St. Louis in the midst of a bunch of local drives totaling $7,000,000, the raising of over half a million in this initial effort is a significant success. The Church Federation weekly, after thanking the Episcopal leaders for being generous enough to permit what might have been solely a family affair to be shared by the religious life of the whole community, goes on to say:

"This is another answer by the Church to the civic challenge of the Bond Issue and the philanthropic challenge of the Community Fund. All the Churches of Greater St. Louis, and every denominational board of local missions is strengthened by this forward movement. The forces of righteousness are advantaged. St. Louis will be a better and a finer city. St. Louis Episcopalians, the Churches of all faiths, the City and the Kingdom, will be the richer in spirit and the stronger in influence for this signal achievement."

Now that the general Church knows how much St. Louis cares, we should soon be having gratifying reports from the country at large. If men and women of many faiths in St. Louis have given this wonderful testimony to the affection in which Bishop Tuttle is held, and to the value of a life like his, we surely may expect that members of the Episcopal Church everywhere to whom Bishop Tuttle gave himself so generously, will wish to do their full share in making this a splendid and worthy Memorial. It is confidently expected that gifts large and small will continue to be made by individuals who loved Bishop Tuttle, and by churches throughout the world in which his name was a familiar household word. We hope to have, from all sources, one million dollars to build and perpetually endow a National Bishop Tuttle Memorial in the City of St. Louis, the See city of the first Missionary Bishop this Church ever had, Jackson Kemper, and on ground adjoining Christ Church Cathedral, the oldest parish of our Church west of the Mississippi River. It is hoped that the Memorial may serve the National Church in various ways, and that it may be much used as a mid-western center for provincial and regional conferences of one sort and another. Bishop Gailor, President of the National Council, in a sermon at the opening of the intensive campaign, said: "I think that it is most fitting that this Memorial should be erected in this city of St. Louis. Not because Bishop Tuttle spent thirty-six years of his life here; not because he loved the place and the people; but because in a peculiar sense and degree, I think St. Louis is the central city in these United States. More than any city that I know of St. Louis represents all the sections of our country. For many years it was the great and almost only gateway to the West, but no one can say today that it is either a Western city or an Eastern city or a Northern city or a Southern city. More than any city I know anything about, St. Louis seems to be the appropriate place for a Memorial to a national character. And so I hope that we shall be able to build a National Memorial to the national figure of our dearly honored Bishop."

THE CHURCH AND THE FOREIGN BORN

By the Reverend William C. Emhardt, Ph. D.

THE force of circumstances has involved the Church in numerous diplomatic contacts and obligations. An effort to simplify the foreign-born problem brings us into contact with groups, influence, and sometimes control from abroad. Without doubt we are strategically placed in a world of conflicting ideas. We have an established position which stands in the path of development of most of the Churches of Europe and the Near East. In Central Europe a Protestantism is working toward an organic Episcopate. The Near East is trying to translate an archaic type of Evangelicalism into terms of Western thought. Many of the Latin countries yearn for Episcopal leadership which is not Papal. All these aspirations are intensified after the foreign born arrive on our shores.

Along with these are the mixed methods, possibly they are confused ideas, which motivate the Protestant bodies. This form of Church government makes them at the same time both apologetic and aggressive. Behind this, however, they are prompted by a real desire to serve these countries in the days of their recovery and readjustment. Past activities have made them objects of suspicion and often distrust. Ignorance of the Episcopal Church has placed us in their group. Our offers of cooperation in America have been hampered by misunderstandings in the homeland. I think that we are now more perfectly understood; our work at home is found acceptable; and our cooperation invited abroad. Two hurried trips have not made all paths smooth. A pathway to better understanding and fuller cooperation has been opened.

One cannot visit these countries without being impressed with the growth of Anglo-Saxon influence. The mere fact that English is displacing French and German as the popular language indicates the orientation of the people. Commercially one sees the influence of America. Old agricultural and fishing centres, even in far Mesopotamia, are becoming industrialized. American machinery and American capital are exerting their influence. Far-seeing men in the English Church see such a growth in the Anglo-Saxon population in the Near East that they predict the necessity of allocation of Episcopal jurisdiction between the two countries. Under these circumstances it seems that two possibilities are open to us. We can assume leadership by early action, or else we can enter into a campaign for the protection of our interests later. In stating this I am assuming that we believe in the policy of our Church and desire its perpetuation.

The query of the Orient was well expressed by Bishop Nicolai of Ochrida when last in New York. He then stated that his people could not understand why Americans were so generous in supplying the bodily needs of suffering people and showed so little interest in the things that pertained to the spiritual life. His people and all Eastern people need the spiritual cooperation of the West to revitalize their religion. It is because this is wanting that they distrust our efforts in America.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letter to the Editor" will appear in our columns except over the signature of the writer.

FREAK EDITORIALS.

Mr. Editor:

The wonderful editorial in your valuable paper of November eighth, on "Fractional Loyalty," should be encouragement to every one who is working to carry out the Church's Program, and appeal even to the little tot who is trying to learn how to give and earn money for the mite-box and incidentally contributing to the cause of missions.

Had this editorial been written by some scoffer or some miser, whose conscience was reproaching him for lack of interest in the cause of Christianity, no one would have been surprised.

To talk of "Enforced tribute from a man who calls himself a Christian," sounds like some one was waylaying and sandbagging men to get their money for the Church. By what process of law are men being coerced into giving to the Church? We know of none, unless it be that of an accusing conscience.

One would think that the blue ribbon was to be put on the man who thinks of nothing but self, and the motto—All for Self and None for Christ—was a good slogan for a Church paper to advocate; that self-denial and self-sacrifice were virtues to be commended no longer. To try to throw a wet blanket on the Church's methods and to destroy and misrepresent them, is to discredit the Nation-Wide Campaign and the Church's Program, which many think the greatest forward movement the Church has made in a generation.

It is temptingly easy to criticize, and one's talents can be used to pull down. Would it not be better to train those talents on to some constructive work? Any one can criticize, even the man who comes to town and is fortunate enough to live on Easy Street, and bask in the indulgence of restful ease, still has the unenviable pleasure of criticizing, but is it a useful pastime? Is this "the resistless energy, whose reflex Christ calls the blessedness of living"?

There be many "slackers" to whom this editorial will come as a soothing balm to consciences that still accuse. Such terms as "Extracting money" from people sounds like it was borrowed from the iconoclast or the tightwad. St. Paul says, "Upon the first day of the week, let every one of you lay by in store as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come."

One cannot tell why such a freak editorial as is "Fractional Loyalty" should appear in a Church paper, unless it was prompted by pique or a bad liver, or possibly our dullness fails to appreciate the high points, which would seem to encourage men to hold on to all they can get, and lay up their treasures on earth instead of in Heaven. Such editorial expression will be abundantly quoted and rolled under the tongue of the "Slackers" as a delicious morsel, but will hardly appeal to the Christian who is trying to practice self-denial and self-sacrifice and to teach these virtues to others.

ROBERT BEVERLEY.

Caret, Va.

Interviewing the President of the American Bible Society

By Jean Piper, in the Dearborn Independent.

"There are four great reasons why the Bible is the best selling book in the world," said Mr. Wood, settling himself in the big chair. "First to satisfy an innate longing. People want something outside themselves, and believe it can be found in the Bible. A step higher are those who want to confirm doctrinal beliefs, and this is not necessarily through a controversial impetus; and, last, that class highest up and most in number, those who want to know what is in the Bible that has made the people who read it superior to other people. This last is the most tremendous factor in the sale of the Bible. For the second time in its one hundred and eight years of existence, the American Bible Society has issued more than 7,000,000 copies.

The exact number issued last year was 7,101,289.

"Queen Victoria struck at the heart of the whole matter forty years ago," he continued, "when Lei Hung Chang, Chinese ambassador of the old Manchu Dynasty came to her saying:

"Your Majesty, the Emperor of China has sent me to inquire of you what has made your nation so great?"

"And the Queen replied, laying her hand on the Bible, 'This Book.'"

It is recognized that English-speaking people rule the world, and everybody else wants to know the reason why. It was a known fact, that in the ten years before the World War, the English-speaking people increased two hundred and sixteen per cent while no other language reached a one hundred per cent increase. And forty years before Queen Victoria had let Lei Hung Chang into the secret. Today the Republic of China has more Bibles published and circulated in its territory than any other country in the world. Last year 2,500,000 volumes were distributed in China, and twice as many could have been circulated if the earthquake had not cut off the supply. It is their keen interest in Western ideas.

"Do you think people buy the Bible just for literary purposes?" Mr. Wood was asked, and he replied:

"Very few. Only the highly educated are attracted because of its literary merit. The rest of the world get it because they are looking for something they cannot find, and feel it is found in the Bible."

Here Mr. Wood paused, and with that clarity and system characteristic of him outlined briefly how the work of the printing and distribution of the Bible is carried on.

"There are two great Bible societies in the world," he said—"the American Bible Society at Astor Place, New York City, which was established in 1816, and the British and Foreign Bible Society, 146 Victoria Street, London, established in 1808. The Bible is the best-selling book in the world, and this year after year. Last year 30,000,000 copies were sold throughout the world, and while in eight years Harold Bell Wright's books, the second-best sellers, have only mounted to 10,000,000 sales, the Bible has risen to 240,000,000 copies. Last year the American Bible Society sold 7,101,289 alone, 2,901,937 of which were sold in the United States and 18,334 in our island possessions."

The translation of the Bible surpasses that of any other work. It has been translated into seven hundred and seventy different languages and dialects, and, according to the reference librarian of the New York City Library, Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" ranks next. It has only been translated into one hundred and seven languages and dialects, making the Bible farther reaching by seven times. The American Bible Society has made one hundred and thirty-seven of these translations of the Bible, Mr. Wood said.

GIOVANNI DIODATI STILL LIVES IN THE ITALIAN BIBLE.

He has been dead for almost three hundred years, yet letters addressed to Giovanni Diodati are frequently received at the office of the American Bible Society in the old Bible House on Astor Place, New York City.

Italian people in various parts of the United States, seeing for the first time a copy of the Bible in their own language and noting on the title page that it was translated by Giovanni Diodati and published by the American Bible Society, address the translator at the office of the publisher, expressing a desire to own a copy of the Diodati Bible or Testament.

These requests are gladly received at the Bible House and with each volume sent out goes the story of Giovanni Diodati and his translation of the Bible into the Italian language.

Born in 1576 at Lucca, in the republic of Venice, when a boy he fled with his family to Geneva to escape religious persecution. A few years later, at the age of nineteen, he was appointed teacher of Hebrew in the Academy of Geneva, where he later became professor of Dogmatics.

His version of the Bible, translated into Italian at Geneva in 1607, met with a success comparable with that of Luther's translation and superseded all earlier translations into that tongue.

Because of the clearness of its diction and its adherence to the original texts from which it had been translated, it was chosen in 1808 by the British and Foreign Bible Society for its first publication of the Bible in Italian. Since then it has been reprinted many times by the British and Foreign Bible Society and the American Bible Society and is considered the best translation in the Italian language.

Diodati died in 1649 at the age of seventy-three. He was a rigid Calvinist and the ambition of his life was the conversion of his native land, and especially the republic of Venice, to his own Creed.—Margaret Louise Muir, American Bible Society, New York City.

Christianity and the Community

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

The Rev. R. Cary Montague, Editor.

VOTING AND THINKING.

It is no part of the function of a Church paper to "talk politics," and the circle of subscribers to the Southern Churchman is so wide that it must include persons of every political party, because the paper goes into every state of the Union.

Sometimes, however, an election presents certain phases which have an importance of an entirely non-partisan character, and this we believe to be more true than usual in the great quadrennial event of last week.

If we believe in a government by the people, as we must do if we are true Americans, then we should recognize that if we are to have Christianity in the community it is important that the voters should be intellectual as well as virtuous.

The returns this year present numerous striking illustrations of the fact that citizens are beginning to think as well as vote in several widely distant parts of this country.

The first place where we see evidence of this is in the great Empire State of New York. There the Republican national ticket received a majority of close to a million votes, while Alfred E. Smith, the Democratic nominee for Governor was elected by a majority of over one hundred thousand. We do not like Governor Smith's stand on prohibition, but he has made a very progressive executive, and is much admired by men of both parties in his own state. The interesting and encouraging thing about his election, however, is that it shows that at least one million voters in State of New York are broad-minded enough to vote for a Republican President and a Democratic governor, and are intelligent enough to know how to do it on the same ballot.

This enlightened use of the franchise is not confined to one state nor one section of the country. As we travel west and south we shall find that Oklahoma has a distinction this year in being the only state that went from the Republican column to the Democratic, but in doing so it did not vote blindly simply for all Democrats. There must have been something about the personality of John W. Davis that won the Oklahomans, for, after they had voted for his electors they took care to see that Ex-Governor Walton, the Democratic candidate for the United States Senate, did not go to Washington as their representative in the upper legislative house of Congress. Mr. Walton (now private citizen) had waged a bitter fight against the Ku Klux Klan, more bitter than wise, and had wound up by being impeached after many sensational incidents that kept himself and his state very much in the limelight during the previous year.

He had wreaked vengeance on the Klan by winning out in the Democratic primary election for the United States Senate, but an unusual combination of Republicans and Klansmen, knowing how to "scratch" their tickets brought about his downfall on the same day and in the same state in which they carried the leader of the ticket to victory.

When we pass from near the Mexican border in the south to the Canadian boundry in the north we find that in the State of Montana with its far-flung limits, the voters also knew how to show discrimination between parties and candidates. Here they reversed the procedure carried out to the south of them, and the Coolidge electors triumphed, while Thomas J. Walsh, the Democratic candidate, goes back to the United States Senate. He was permanent chairman of the Democratic National Convention in New York, and presided over that somewhat turbulent body with such skill, and fairness, that, in spite of the fact that he is a Roman Catholic, he would have been his party's nominee for the Vice-President had he been willing to accept that honor.

Near to Montana there was another example of voting and thinking among the citizens. In Wyoming the Democrats had nominated the widow of the late leader, Governor Ross, who has died in office, as the person best qualified to carry out her husband's policies.

The Wyoming voters liked the idea of a widow completing the unfinished work of her dead husband, and elected her to become the first woman governor of a State of this union, for she has already been sworn in, being elected to fill a vacancy. But on the same day that the Democratic gubernatorial candidate went to a triumphant victory the same electorate chose Republican electors in the presidential contest. Surely Americans are at last learning how to vote all over this great country of ours.

Another result of the election that must be a source of satisfaction to persons of all parties is that both houses of Congress will be of the same party as the executive. No other country in the world tolerates a situation where the legislative branch of the government can block all the wishes and suggestions of the Executive. It creates a condition in which no responsibility can be fixed on either party, and no constructive measures can be adopted. Since there seems to be no doubt that the country at large wants President Coolidge it is certainly better that he should have a Congress of his own party, so that if things go wrong that party can be changed, and must bear the responsibility for whatever catastrophes they may lead us into.

In the present Congress, which has been in power ever since Mr. Coolidge became President, the Senate is so closely divided that Senator LaFollette and four or five other Western Senators (who are called either Progressives or Insurgents according to the opinion one holds about their views) have been able to hold the balance of power and defeat any administration measure that they wanted to by voting with the Democrats. This unfortunate condition of legislative control by a little group will end with the expiration of this Congress which occurs March 3, 1925.

According to our ponderous system of government the Congress elected on November 4, 1924, does not begin its duties until the second Monday in December, 1925, more than a year later, unless called in extra session by the President.

The lightning-like rapidity with which public opinion gets government authority in England is enough to make a staid American dizzy. The latter part of September the MacDonald ministry was refused a vote of confidence, and a general election called for. In less than six weeks' time candidates were nominated, the election held, and a new ministry selected and established in office. In less than two months those slow (?) Englishmen have done what we have been struggling over for more than a year and will not finish for another year to come unless the President sees fit to assemble his new Congress in Special Session before its regular meeting a year from next December.

There can be little regret anywhere over the retirement of Senator Mangus Johnson of Minnesota. Almost the only claim he had to the literal interpretation of his first name, was his prowess as a milkman. Even the most ardent advocate of Jeffersonian simplicity will surely agree, that milking contests are more suitable diversions for the farm than for the United States Senate.

There is food for consolation for the reactionaries even in the election of two women governors. One of the favorite arguments of our good conservatives against woman suffrage was that it endangered family life and the normal matrimonial relationship. Now it develops that these two female governors were actuated to pioneer in executive fields by the impulse of conjugal affection and regard. Mrs. Fergusson ventured into the political field to vindicate a living husband's record, while Mrs. Ross was inspired by the desire to complete the work that was interrupted by her husband's death.

Both these ladies won notable victories: Mrs. Fergusson over the KuKlux Klan, which was supposed to be most strongly intrenched in Texas, and Mrs. Ross over the opposing Republican party in her state.

As we have said at the beginning of this article it is not our purpose either to gloat with the victors or to condole with the vanquished, but elections are a necessary part of a democracy and when they occur it is well to point out those features of them which show encouraging signs in which Christian citizens of all parties and sections of the country may take hope.

MAINTAINING A COMMUNITY ASSET.

One of the most effectual agencies for Christian cooperation since the Great War has been what is known as the Interracial Committee. It is the meeting of leaders of both the white and colored races to discuss matters that if left alone might lead to friction, but which if given thoughtful and unselfish consideration can be smoothed out, so as to avoid bitterness, and produce good feeling between those two races which must live side by side in this country.

There is usually a State Committee dealing with such matters as are of Statewide importance, and County Committees to handle questions of more local character.

More than eight hundred of such county committees have been in operation throughout the Southern States during the past five or six years and their efforts have been very conducive to community good feeling.

The members of these civic bodies are all volunteers and have served without pay, but there is necessarily some expense attached to such an organization for keeping it together.

Immediately after the war the Rev. W. Alexander, of Atlanta, succeeded in getting an appropriation from funds that were unexpended by the national organizations, such as the Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., Salvation Army, etc., etc. With this sum he formed these committees and began their activities.

This money is now all spent, and exceedingly well spent, and a small sum will be needed to carry on the work so well started.

In Virginia the plan has been adopted of asking each of the Church organizations to make an appropriation of a small amount for this purpose.

We know nothing that comes more distinctly under the head of Christian Social Service, and we trust that such dioceses as have available funds at the disposal of this department, both in Virginia and throughout the South, will give such an appeal favorable consideration.

The Great Commission

GOOD NEWS FROM BISHOP ROWE.

A letter has just come from Bishop Rowe with the good news that in spite of what seemed the hopeless outlook when he last wrote from Point Hope, he has been able to return to Alaska on his way to Seattle. His letter of October 15 was written at St. Mark's Mission, Nenana, in the very center of Alaska.

"I had given up hope of getting away from Point Hope until winter set and I could do so with dogs. The 'Boxer' was locked in by the ice, new ice was making, and then came a favorable wind which blew the ice off shore, sufficiently for her to escape. With the wrecked crews of the 'Arctic' and the 'Lady Kinnseley' on board she picked me up and hurried on to Nome. Because of this haste I reached Nome September 6 and then felt it possible to return via St. Michael and the Yukon. The latter has been a fierce and tedious trip. Crossing Bering Sea in a small gas boat we nearly suffered shipwreck. From St. Michael in another small boat we were held up several days at the mouth of the Yukon, unable to enter. Then the boat turned over on her side and we were nearly drowned before we could get out. We succeeded in righting her. The 'Lady Kinnseley' crew was on board. There were twenty-four passengers; food ran out and sleeping places were inadequate. The discomforts were indescribable.

"I got within fifty miles of Anvik and would have been held up for five days, but I hired a launch for $60 and made Anvik. I did want so much to visit Anvik. I succeeded. Here I found all well, living in cramped quarters, owing to the fire. The new school dormitory was closed in and is, by this time, occupied. I got away from Anvik on the last steamer of the season. I was unable to stop over at Tanana, but had time for a brief visit with the workers. Conditions at Tanana seemed satisfactory.

"While passing Tanana, I learned to my consternation, of the burning of our fine mission dwelling, and its contents at Fort Yukon. How dreadful; and so discouraging. The Anvik fire and now this one.

"I came on to Nenana. The river was low and we were held up on bars. Things are all right at Nenana.

"From here I go to Anchorage, Seward, Cordova, Valdez, then home. Then I will have to go to some hospital for an operation.

"It has been a hard and trying trip, full of discomforts. Winter has set in here. The river is frozen. Drane and his bride are here."

At all the stations visited Bishop Rowe greatly cheered the workers. They had given up all hope of seeing him this year, so their pleasure upon his arrival was all the greater.

ST. PAUL'S, RIO.

Work was begun during the summer on a new church in Rio de Janeiro. There are three parishes or missions there: the Church of the Redeemer, Archdeacon Meem's Parish of many years' standing; Trinity Church recently built in the Meyer district; and St. Paul's, started three years ago on land where the late Dr. Francesco Castro carried on a wonderful creche. Here the Rev. Salomao Ferraz has been conducting services in an old shack until a church building was begun last August. At that time, when attention was drawn to the church, Mr. Ferraz and a committee published a fifty-page pamphlet in Portuguese containing simple instruction and information about the Church.

A UNIQUE SCHOOL.

In Anking the Church has an interesting school for older girls and women, i. e., fifteen to thirty-five years. It is the only school in the city where those who have missed the opportunity of study can begin without losing face by being in a class with small children. The school's greatest usefulness is to give a Christian education to the young women from the out-stations who are engaged to marry teachers, catechists, clergymen, or men preparing for these positions, thus overcoming the difficulty of illiterate non-Christian wives for Church workers.

Graded Sunday-School Work in Holland.

Not only in the English-speaking countries and their colonies are the graded methods known in Sunday-School Work, but they have also been introduced in Holland. Though there are many difficulties to be overcome the principles of graded teaching are spreading all over that country. In 1913 the first building for children's services only, called the Children's Chapel, was erected in Maarsen. In the same city there is a training school for teachers similar to the one in Westhill, England. This is the first institution of the kind in Holland. Another Children's Chapel was opened in Bussum in 1921. These two places, Maarsen and Bussum, are now the centres of work for the primary, junior and adolescent scholars. In about ten other places graded Sunday-School Work has been taken up. As there are no graded courses of lessons in Dutch, those written by Miss Emily Huntley of England have been translated and adapted for the basis of work in Holland. A Dutch translation of the Rev. Carey Bonner's "Child Songs" is used in all the grades and special stress is placed on the worship, particularly with the older children.—World-Wide Sunday-School News.

Twice Elected Bishop.

The Rev. F. S. Fleming, rector of the Church of the Atonement, Chicago, has been unanimously elected Bishop of Olympia in succession to the late Bishop Keator.

A week earlier Mr. Fleming was elected Bishop Coadjutor of Northern Indiana, and thus has both elections under consideration.

Bishop Fiske Recovering.

Bishop Fiske, of Central New York, who has been in a hospital in Baltimore for some months past, is now said to be entirely free from the germ which has caused so much trouble while in the hospital. He has, however, had a severe attack of gripe which has left him with neuritis. This has been very painful and he has not been able to sit up as yet, but the physicians in charge state that he will ultimately make a complete recovery.

Bishop McCormick Convalescent.

The Rt. Rev. John N. McCormick, D. D., of Western Michigan, is recovering at the Butterworth Hospital, Grand Rapids, from a serious operation performed on October 26. It is hoped that he will be out of the hospital with in the next month.

To the Clergy and Vestries of the Diocese of Southern Virginia:

In accordance with authority vested in me, I hereby change the meeting place of the Diocesan Council from St. Paul's Church, Suffolk, to Trinity Church, Portsmouth. The congregation of Trinity Church and St. John's Church will entertain the Council.

The date of the meeting will be the same—Tuesday, January 27, 1925.

Bishop of Southern Virginia.

Church School Institute.

A very successful meeting of the Church School Institute for the City of Norfolk and vicinity was held Saturday, October 25, at the Church of the Good Shepherd, Meadowbrook.

There was an unusually large attendance and the general tone of the whole meeting was such that all were inspired to attempt bigger and better things in the field of religious education.

The Holy Communion was celebrated by the Rev. W. B. Lee, Jr., president of the Institute, and the Rev. Newton Middleton, rector of the parish.

Following the opening service, there was a general discussion on the subject of the Christian Nurture Series. Mrs. Burke made a short talk on demonstrative teaching in the kindergarten, and Miss Dorothy Dowling spoke on impressions of the Summer School at Sweet Briar. In the afternoon, Miss Lila Tucker addressed the teachers on box work, and Dr. D. W. Howard, from St. Luke's Church, made a most interesting and instructive address on Church History in the Church School.

Perhaps the most important result of this Institute was attained after Rev. C. E. McAllister's address on Normal School Religious Education, when over sixty-five Church School teachers promised to take a teachers' training course as outlined by the General Church.

Bible Class Celebrates Twenty-first Birthday.

In 1903, Mr. Jacob Heffelfinger, as superintendent of St. John's Church School, Hampton, organized an adult Bible Class with ten members. Under the able leadership of Mrs. Frank Darling, the class has grown steadily in numbers and influence. There are now one hundred and twenty-five members, and the loyalty and good fellowship of its members reflect a unique spirit.

The class recently celebrated its twenty-first anniversary; and the Rev. W. A. R. Goodwin, D. D., of William and Mary College, was the speaker. The whole congregation joined in extending their hearty congratulations to Mrs. Darling, and the officers of the class, for the splendid work which this organization has accomplished for St. John's Church.

Sunday-School Progress in the Diocese.

According to a recent statement in The Richmond Times-Dispatch: "There are today twenty more Sunday Schools with 1,000 additional scholars in the Diocese of Virginia than was true in 1919, the year of the introduction of the annual fall canvass and every member canvass, according to statistics just compiled in the offices of the diocesan leaders. Indications are that the expansion will continue in 1925 if the campaign now being organized is carried to every congregation and parish. In 1919 there were one hundred and forty-seven Sunday Schools, having nine hundred and fifty-nine officers and teachers, and 9,969 scholars. Today there are one hundred and sixty-seven Sunday Schools with 1,204 officers and teachers, and nearly 11,000 scholars."

"The same is true in every department of the Episcopal Church in Virginia," the statement continues, "and both ministers and laymen look on 1919 as the epoch-making year in its history. The every member canvass this fall will be taken on November 23, and plans are now under way in each of the five convocations to tell the people how the $202,000 they are asked to give will be spent. The Rt. Rev. William Cabell Brown, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese, and all the members of the committees are convinced that an intimate knowledge of the Church's work is necessary to spontaneous giving, and they have asked the clergy to preach sermons relating to the campaign and to call congregational meetings."

"No more forward step has been made than in the case of the Diocesan Missionary Society which, in 1919, spent $26,851.14 and had thirty-eight clergymen, two laymen, and nine women workers on whole or part time. The women were supported solely on voluntary gifts. Now the budget of the Diocesan Missionary Society is about $60,000, and it has forty-nine clergymen and thirty-four women workers."

Mrs. Nicholas Burke, of Boston, revisiting Alexandria after some years' absence, conducted at St. Paul's Church six classes on Meditation and Silent Prayer. Mrs. Burke conducts similar classes at the Cathedral in Boston regularly. Her teaching, absolutely true to the Bible and the Prayer Book, lays such emphasis on familiar truths by quiet, and strong affirmation and reiteration, that their significance and value become far more evident to the hearers. Among the booklets recommended are "Affirmations and Denials of the Spiritual Life" and other writings by the Rev. Franklyn Cole Sherman; "Bible Readings and Personal Prayers," by Bishop Reese, and "Prayer and Some of Its Difficulties," by the Rev. Walter J. Carey.

Interesting Meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary.

The Woman's Auxiliary in the Diocese held its fifth annual session at St. John's Church, Bedford, October 28 to 30, with Mrs. T. D. Hobart, Diocesan President, in the chair.

Quiet Hour at the beginning of the session was conducted by Mrs. C. F. Ruan, of Petersburg, a former resident of Bedford, and on Wednesday morning Holy Communion was celebrated by Bishop Jett, who also delivered an address. Representatives from twenty-five branches responded to the roll call. Mrs. O. C. Bell, of Bedford, made the address of welcome and Mrs. W. H. B. Loving, of Salem, responded on behalf of the visitors.

The workers at various missions in the diocese told of their most pressing needs and large contributions were made to assist them in the splendid efforts they are making for the betterment and happiness of their several communities.

The treasurer, Mrs. W. H. B. Loving, made a very encouraging report and the United Thank Offering Custodian, Mrs. W. E. Mingea, of Abingdon, reported offerings since the last General Convention amounting to $4,842.46.

The Auxiliary made pledges of financial aid to a number of objects to the amount of $2,320.

In addition to the Bishop's address several other interesting talks were made during the session. The Rev. Herbert H. Young, Dean of the Associate Mission Field in the Southwestern part of the diocese, spoke on "The Mission of a Christian." The Rev. Claudius F. Smith described the work he is doing at Big Stone Gap, Appalachia, and a number of important coal camps in that general section. The Rev. J. Hubard Lloyd, for a number of years a missionary in Japan and now in charge of Christ Church, Blacksburg, Virginia, spoke most interestingly on the mission work of the Episcopal Church in Japan and sketched its progress from 1859 to the present time.

Delegates to attend the General Convention in 1925 were elected as follows: Mrs. T. D. Hobart, Mrs. W. E. Mingea, Deaconess Maria P. Williams, Mrs. Philip Pendleton and Mrs. W. H. B. Loving. Alternates: Mrs. O. C. Burkhart, Miss Mary S. Bell and Mrs. Jennie Lile Lee.

Officers elected for 1925 are: Honorary President, Mrs. Robert Carter Jett; President, Mrs. T. D. Hobart; First Vice-President, Mrs. Frank Terry; Second Vice-President, Mrs. W. Russell Winfree; Secretary, Miss Mary S. Bell; Treasurer, Mrs. W. H. B. Loving; Educational Secretary for James River Convocation, Mrs. Philip Pendleton; Educational Secretary for New River Convocation, Mrs. J. R. Davidson.

R. E. Lee Memorial Church at Lexington was selected as the place of meeting in October, 1925.

Anniversary of Bishop White Prayer Book Society.

The annual anniversary service of the Bishop White Prayer Book Society, a Church organization which distributes Prayer Books and Hymnals to all parts of the world, was held Sunday evening, November 9, in the Chapel of the Mediator, Philadelphia. The Rev. Granville Taylor, vicar of the Chapel, was the special preacher. During the last year the Society has distributed more than 10,000 Prayer Books and Hymnals to forty-one dioceses and districts, printed in the Italian, Portuguese and English languages and in the Indian dialects.

The Business Men's Council of the the Episcopal Church in Wilmington Pocket Testament League, which has had a joint service in St. John's on Sun-distributed more than 300,000 pocket Testaments to workers in mills and factories of Philadelphia in three years, began November 10 a series of public meetings at noon each day during the week in the Garrick Theatre, Philadelphia.

The Rt. Rev. Arthur C. Headlam, D. D., Bishop of Gloucester, England, who is in America to deliver a special course of lectures in Harvard University, was the preacher Sunday morning, November 9, in St. Stephen's Church, Philadelphia, the Rev. Dr. Carl E. Grammer, rector. Sunday night he preached in the Second Presbyterian Church.

While in Philadelphia the Bishop was the guest of Bishop Garland. At noon on Monday he spoke at the clerical luncheon at the Church House; at 2:30 he met and addressed the ministers of all denominations in Philadelphia and vicinity in the Church of the Holy Trinity and at night he was the guest of Church Club of the Diocese. Bishop Headlam is a member of the International Commission to Promote Fellowship between the Churches.

The Rev. John R. Hart, rector of the Church of the Transfiguration, Philadelphia, and Chaplain of the University of Pennsylvania, was the speaker at the military services Sunday afternoon, November 9, at the Evangel Presbyterian Church. Major A. J. Drexel Bidle, the Rev. Dr. Carnell and C. M. Carson also made addresses.

Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., Bishop.

Meeting of the Wilmington Convocation.

The annual meeting of the Convocation of Wilmington, Diocese of East Carolina, was held this year with Holy Innocents Church, Seven Springs, October 27-29, was featured by a number of inspiring sermons and addresses. The special preachers included Bishop Darst, the Rev. Alexander Miller, rector of St. Paul's, Wilmington; the Rev. H. D. Cone, rector of St. Paul's, Clinton, and the Rev. Carroll M. Davis, of the National Council. While some attention was given to routine matters, the time of Convocation was largely taken up with a discussion of the Church's Program, religious education and Christian Social Service. The Rev. Messrs. W. R. Noe, G. W. Lay, and J. N. Bynum led the discussion.

The Rev. Alexander Miller was elected Dean of the Convocation, and the Rev. G. W. Lay, D. C. L., Secretary-Treasurer. A committee was appointed to revise the diocesan canons governing the Convocations, in order that they may come in line with the new ideas.

The women of the Convocation had their separate business meetings, with Mrs. Richard Williams, convocational president, presiding. Their reports showed that they had been very active during the year; giving full support to parish and diocese.

It is a fact worthy of mention that both of the Convocations met this year in strictly rural parishes. The people of these two country churches lived up to their reputation for hospitality.

For the Church's Program.

All of the parishes and missions of day evening, November 2, when the Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, Bishop of the Diocese, made an address on "The Church's Program."

The churches in East Carolina have been visited by special preachers and speakers this fall, who have presented the need for a continued support of the Church's Program. The Rev. W. H. Milton, D. D., of this Diocese, an outstanding leader of the national Church, has visited a number of the larger parishes. The Rev. Carroll M. Davis, of the National Department of Missions, spent eight days in East Carolina, preaching to large congregations. The Bishop and Executive Secretary have made numerous addresses and conducted conferences.

T. P., Jr.

A reception tendered the congregation of St. John's Church, Fayetteville, on the evening of October 30, by the vestry and Woman's Auxiliary of that Parish, marked the opening of the new rooms of the parish house, recently built and furnished. This old parish has laid great emphasis on the work of the young people in recent years, and this enlargement of the parish house, made under the direction of the rector, the Rev. Archer Boogher, is in line with this policy.

UPPER SOUTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. K. G. Finlay, D. D., Bishop.

Tribute From the Young People to the Rev. Frank A. Juhan.

On Sunday afternoon, October 26, despite a downpour of rain, the Young People's Service League was host to a great army of the boys and girls of Camp Capers. The Leaguers came from all points of the diocese, and joined Christ Church League in a loving tribute to the man who has meant so much to them in the life of the diocese.

The meeting was opened with a League Hymn, and prayers by Bishop Finlay, who then made a brief talk in which he explained that the meeting was a tribute from the young people of the diocese to their leader. Miss Mary Bacot Prevost, diocesan president of the Young People's Service League, presented to Mr. Juhan from the boys and girls and councillors of Camp Capers, 1923-1924, a golf bag and set of golf sticks, and Miss Edith Kole, president of the Y. P. S. L., of Christ Church, presented him with a white sweater, which she said was to take the place of the very ragged one of his old Sewanee days, which he had worn at Camp last year. Mr. Juhan replied to the two speeches, and said every time he played with the clubs, he would think of the girls and boys of camp, and that the S on the sweater, would always make him think of Sewanee, Service and South Carolina.

Bishop Finlay explained that the Young People's Service League had an honorary degree of membership, which was only conferred on adults in cases where distinguished service had been rendered, but that the Y. P. S. L. in this diocese had voted to confer this honorary degree of membership on the Rev. Frank A. Juhan, and the admission service followed, Mr. Juhan being made a member of the League.

Following this service, supper was served to all present in the Parish House.

Conferences With Dr. Milton.

On Monday afternoon, October 27, at five P. M., the Church of the Good Shepherd, Columbia, was the scene of the first meeting this fall in the interest of the N.-W. C. The meeting began with a conference with the Bishop and clergy, conducted by the Rev. W. H. Milton, D. D., of the Diocese of East Carolina. The clergy conference was well attended and gave evidence of considerable interest witnessed by all who attended.

Monday evening, the Church of the Good Shepherd was host to the combined vestries and clergy of the two districts involved. About fifty men sat down to supper, after which the men listened for two hours to an elucidation of the N.-W. Ca., again led by Dr. Milton.

Similar conferences were held on each of the succeeding days at the Church of Our Saviour, Rock Hill, Church of the Advent, Spartanburg, and Christ Church, Greenville.

On October 28, in the Church of the Good Shepherd, Columbia, Dr. Milton spoke to the members of the Woman's Auxiliary.

Every branch of the Auxiliary in the District (IV) was represented and visitors from Aiken and Graniteville were also present.

Dr. Milton spoke along educational lines, and urged the study of "My Father's Business," during the weeks of November. He also gave his approval to the plans already outlined for this study, by the educational leaders of the Auxiliary.

WEST TEXAS

Rt. Rev. W. T. Capers, D. D., Bishop.

Death of Bishop Johnston.

The Rt. Rev. James Steptoe Johnston, D. D., retired bishop of the Diocese of West Texas, was stricken with paralysis on Sunday morning, November 2, at his home in San Antonio, and died early Tuesday morning, of the body in state in St. Mark's Cathedral from noon on Wednesday, until three o'clock, when funeral services were conducted by the Rt. Rev. William T. Capers, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese, and the Rt. Rev. George M. Kinsolving, D. D., of Austin, Bishop of Texas, assisted by the clergy of San Antonio.

The active pall-bearers were the clergy of the diocese, and among the honorary pall-bearers were the ministers of every denomination in San Antonio. Interment was in Mission Burial Park.

Bishop Johnston was born in Church Hill, Miss., a village near Natchez, in 1845. He was the youngest of three sons of James Steptoe Johnston, attorney and cotton grower. He received his first education in a country school. Later he attended Oakland College.

Bishop Johnston had entered the University of Virginia only a short time before the outbreak of the Civil War. At this time, however, he left the University for Harpers Ferry and was one of the first to enlist in the Confederate Army. He personally served General Robert E. Lee and did scout duty for him.

Although he entered as a private, he worked up to the rank of a lieutenant and was later named cavalry instructor.

Bishop Johnston fought first at Williamsburg, and was wounded in the seven-day battle before Richmond. He was able, however, to fight in the battles of Manassas and Antietam.

He was captured by federal troops while on leave in Mississippi and was kept prisoner on Johnston's Island, the place where sixty years before his father was liberated from a tribe of savage Indians by Frenchmen.

After being urged to enter the ministry by friends and Bishop Green of Mississippi, he became a candidate for Orders in June, 1868, and following a year of study, he was ordained to the diaconate and one month later began his work at Port Gibson, Miss., at St. James Church. In 1871 he was ordained a priest.

He came to San Antonio, as Bishop of West Texas in 1888, from Mobile, Ala., where he was rector of the Trinity Church.

Although retired in 1914, Bishop Johnston had taken active interest in all Church and city affairs, and was loved and respected not only by his own people, but by thousands outside of his denomination.

Surviving Bishop Johnston are two daughters, Mrs. John E. Mitchell, and Mrs. George B. Taliaferro, both of San Antonio; two sons, the Rev. Mercer G. Johnston, of Baltimore, and Fred J. Johnston, of San Antonio, and two sisters, Mrs. R. J. Miller, of Natchez, Miss., and Miss Mary Johnston, of San Antonio, and several grandchildren and one great grandchild.

Two Churches To Combine.

The Church of the Heavenly Rest, Forty-fifth Street and Fifth Avenue, and the Church of the Beloved Disciple, Eighty-ninth Street near Madison Avenue, will combine and erect a new church at Fifth Avenue and Ninetieth Street. The combination does not take place until next spring. Both present properties will be sold, but for a considerable time the parish buildings of the Beloved Disciple, not far from the new site, will be retained and used. The new plant, which will be most complete, will cost approximately $3,000,000. The site is obtained from the Andrew Carnegie estate, and was purchased by that estate to protect the Carnegie residence on the opposite corner. The site is vacant.

The Heavenly Rest property was anchored where it is by the late Rev. Dr. D. Parker Morgan, who performed what was then regarded as a remarkable feat in church financing, by raising $250,000 to pay off its debt. It has a narrow frontage on Fifth Avenue, but has been lost sight of many times through lack of building of commanding architecture. The present rector is the Rev. Henry Van B. Darlington, a son of Bishop Darlington of Harrisburg. He is to become rector of the united parishes. The present rector of the Beloved Disciple is the Rev. Dr. George R. Van de Water, many years in St. Andrew's, Harlem, who succeeded the Rev. Dr. Henry M. Barbour. Both will become rectors-emeriti. The Beloved Disciple property is a memorial, and is held in part by the Diocese, but it is said there is nothing in the restrictions to prevent the changes named.

The Heavenly Rest field is one of the best in America wherein to reach people, it being in the heart of the Grand Central Station district.

The Church of the Heavenly Rest is planning to hold noon-day services during the Advent season for the first time this year. The services will begin at 12:05 and conclude promptly at 12:30.

It is planned to have all of the addresses on the same general topic:

"The Problem of the Individual Life," Father Huntington, Superior, Order of Holy Cross, will have the first week, December 1 to 6.

During the second week, December 8 to 13, Dean Randolph Ray will preach on "The Christian Solution—The Divine Father."

Canon H. Edye Prichard, of the Cathedral, will preach the third week, December 15 to 20, on "The Christian Solution—The Divine Brother," and the Rt. Rev. James Henry Darlington, D. D., Bishop of Harrisburg, the three days of the last week, December 22 to 24, on "The Christian Solution—The Divine Companion."

The Bishop of Gloucester's Visit.

The Diocese had a rare treat last week. The Presiding Bishop had for his guest for four days, His Grace, the Lord Bishop of Gloucester, the Rt. Rev. Arthur C. Headlam, D. D.

First, Bishop Headlam addressed the ministers of Bethlehem and vicinity on the Reunion of Christendom. The attendance was exceptionally good and many questions were asked the Bishop. This was on Tuesday.

On Wednesday he addressed the clergy of the Diocese of Bethlehem, whom Bishop Talbot had invited to come and meet and hear his Lordship on The Mission of the Anglican Church.

On Thursday the Bishop lectured to the students and faculty of Lehigh University on My Conception of the Purpose of a University. As an illustration he recited the history and gave some telling episodes of the University of Oxford, of which he is an alumnus. The lecture was delivered in the auditorium of the High School in order to accommodate all who wished to attend. The place was crowded.

ATLANTA.

Rt. Rev. H. J. Mikell, D. D., Bishop.

The Nation-Wide Campaign.

The parish conferences over the diocese in the interests of the Nation-Wide Campaign which are being held this year by the Bishop, Executive Secretary and the Chairman of the Field Department, with no speakers from outside the diocese, give every promise of a successful canvass in December. The Budget of the Diocese includes the salary this year for a general missionary which office will prove a great help to the missionary work of the Church in North Georgia in 1925. The Program of the diocese, amounting to $90,863.75 (including all Priorities) is the largest Atlanta has ever had, but every effort is being made to have the diocese pledge $100,000 on December 7, and so make the whole work possible.

Miss Mabel Lee Cooper, National Field Worker for the Department of Religious Education, visited the diocese from October 26 to November 4, visiting many of the parishes in the interests of teacher-training.

A strong effort is being made to get all communicants to give one day's income as their Thanksgiving Offering this year, which, by canon, goes to the support of the Diocesan Orphanage, the Appleton Church Home in Macon. A new orphanage has just been erected and a large offering will be of great help in defraying the expense of new equipment, such as linens, etc., for the institution.

The Executive Board.

At the meeting of the Executive Board of the Diocese on October 2 the vacancies caused by the removal from the diocese of the Rev. C. B. Wilmer, the Rev. R. R. Claiborne and the Rev. H. A. Willey were filled by electing the Rev. Harry S. Cobey chairman of the Department of Social Service, taking Dr. Wilmer's place; the Rev. F. H. Harding was elected Chairman of the Field Department, taking Mr. Willey's place, and the Rev. A. G. Richards was elected to membership on the Department of Religious Education, taking Mr. Claiborne's place. These new members have taken hold of their work well and the Departments they represent are sure to prosper with their help.

St. Paul's Church, Atlanta, Dedicated.

On Sunday, October 19, Bishop Mikkell dedicated the new St. Paul's Church, Atlanta, before a large colored congregation. Addresses were made by the Treasurer and Senior Warden, and Dean Johnston preached, congratulating the congregation on the completion of their beautiful new church. The Dean said that he felt the Cathedral and St. Paul's very closely allied in their interests for the first church building of the Cathedral which was given to St. Paul's, and which they have only just given up, was the beginning of both parishes and the same building in which General Sherman housed many of his horses as he marched through Atlanta on his way to the sea. The people of St. Paul's are very proud of their new church edifice and the work there shows every sign of rapid advancement.

The Young People's Service League is becoming more and more prominent in the work of the diocese and all the parish leagues are in a state of constant activity. A page in the "Diocesan Record," the official publication of the diocese, has been given to the Young People to tell of the many things they are doing and contemplate doing. The diocese has every right to expect great things as a result of their virile interest.

Trinity Church, Columbus: During the absence of the Rev. S. A. Wragg, rector of Trinity Church, the Rev. Mr. Fay connected with the Army Post at Fort Benning, Ga., took the services. Mr. Fay is a Captain in the Army. A great interest in social service activities is shown by this parish and members of one of its organizations are on an advisory council to the Juvenile Court, and associated with other religious bodies in the city in maintaining milk stations for the poor children of the community. The Young People's Service League is a very active organization in the parish.

Student Work at Gainesville: The Bishop Scott Club, branch of the National Student Council, at Brenau College, Gainesville, is more active this fall than it has ever been. These young ladies are singing in the choir at Grace Church, teaching in the Church School, having Corporate Communion regularly and meeting to study and discuss Dr. Atwaters book, "The Episcopal Church." The rector of Gainesville, the Rev. Harry S. Cobey, is also holding services at the Georgia State Sanatorium at Alto and ministering to those who are patients there.

The Hart Conference Centre.

The capacity of the Hart Conference Centre at Evergreen, Colo., has been greatly increased recently. Canon and Mrs. Douglas purchased what is known as the Bancroft property, consisting of a residence, guest house, cabins, and barns, with surrounding land. The original conference house has also been remodeled and enlarged, so that there is now accommodation for one hundred and twenty-five persons at one time.

At a recent meeting in Denver plans were made for the management of the Centre during the coming year, and officers were elected to have charge of the various departments. An office is to be opened, and regular headquarters maintained. It is hoped that the future Evergreen Conferences may draw attendance from ever-widening areas.

Autumn Meetings of the Woman's Auxiliary.

The autumn meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Archdeaconry of Harrisburg, held in St. Luke's Church, Mechanicsburg, on Thursday, October 2, was considered the best ever held in that Archdeaconry. Twenty parishes and missions were represented by one hundred and thirty delegates, in addition to eight visitors.

The morning session opened with a celebration of the Holy Communion, at which the Rev. H. D. Viets, rector of St. John's, Carlisle, was the celebrant. At the close of the service the meeting was called to order by Mrs. Caleb S. Brinton, of Carlisle, Vice-President of the Woman's Auxiliary in the Archdeaconry. Interesting papers were read by Mrs. Albion H. Ross, of Hollidaysburg, and Mrs. Horsman, of Steelton, U. T. O. Custodian. The Rev. P. H. Asheton-Martin of Mount Joy, gave an address on the work of the Church in Cuba, where he was for some years a missionary. Addresses were also made by Bishop Darlington, Archdeacon William Dorwart, and the Rev. Archibald M. Judd, Secretary of the Diocese.

A Discussion Study Class, studying about the work of the Church in China, was conducted by Mrs. James S. Spotts, of Lancaster, assisted by various women from different parishes.

The Woman's Auxiliary in the Archdeaconry of Altoona enjoys the distinction of having a branch of the Auxiliary in every parish and mission in the Archdeaconry. At the autumn meeting, held in St. Mark's, Lewistown, on Thursday, October 9, every parish and mission in the Archdeaconry were represented by delegates as well as the clergy. The day began with a celebration of the Holy Eucharist, at which Archdeacon Franklin T. Eastment, of Phillipsburg, was the celebrant. The Rev. William Heakes, rector of the parish, welcomed the delegates and the speakers of the day were Mrs. Albion H. Ross of Hollidaysburg, who emphasized the need of educating ourselves in the work of the Church, and our duty, as Auxiliary women, with regards to this phase of Auxiliary work; Mrs. A. M. Drinkwater, Vice-President-at-Large, who showed the need of interesting the younger women in the work of the Auxiliary, and Mrs. C. H. Boyer, Diocesan President, who gave a brief address on the work in the Archdeaconry.

A Joint Celebration.

On Thursday morning, October 16, the seventy-fifth anniversary of the founding of the parish church, Hope Church, Mount Hope, and the fifty-fifth anniversary of the daughter parish of St. Paul's, Manheim, were celebrated in connection with the autumn meeting of the Archdeaconry of Harrisburg. The services were held in Hope Church.

The morning session began with a celebration of the Holy Communion, at which the Ven. William Dorwart, Archdeacon of Harrisburg, was the celebrant. The Gospel was read by the Rev. Clifford G. Twombly, D. D., rector of St. James', Lancaster. The Rev. Archibald M. Judd, and the Rev. E. L. B. Pielow also assisted in the service. The rector of the parish, the Rev. Azael Coates, welcomed the visitors, and gave an historical address, in which he outlined the history of the parish, alluding particularly to the conditions which led its founder and benefactress, Harriet Amelia Buckley Grubb, to build what was originally a small unpretentious edifice of sandstone, seventy-five years ago. He also alluded to the founder's grand-daughter, upon whom the mantle of the founder of the church has fallen, and to whom is due the credit of having transformed it into one of the most beautiful rural churches in America.

Bishop Darlington was the special preacher of the day, and spoke of the good work done at Mount Hope, which included the starting of the great parish of St. Luke's, Lebanon, and St. Pauls, Manheim.

Following the sermon, the Bishop blessed a bronze memorial tablet, commemorating the occasion.

Following the service a luncheon, at which Miss Daisy E. B. Grubb was hostess, was served at the Manor House to the Archdeaconry and invited guests numbering between two and three hundred. After luncheon, at the opening of the business meeting of the Archdeaconry, at which Archdeacon William Dorwart presided, William F. Worner of the Lancaster County Historical Society, read a paper on the history of the parish, written for the occasion. Among other points he mentioned the interesting fact that the first service held at Mount Hope, of which there is any record, was held by the sainted Bishop William White, first Bishop of Pennsylvania, who on June 3, 1818, baptized the infant Clement Brooke Grubb, grandfather of Miss D. E. B. Grubb, the present mistress of the estate.

The old church, built in 1848, may easily be distinguished from the glorious addition made in 1900, by its ivy-colored walls, the original structure being completely covered. The ivy was planted by Bishop Bowman from a slip which he procured from the vine that rambles over historic Christ Church, Oxford, England.

In 1900, during the incumbency of the Rev. Sydney Key Evans, at present Chaplain of the Naval Academy, Annapolis, the church was enlarged and beautified, through the generosity of Miss D. E. B. Grubb.

In the evening, the congregation journeyed to Manheim, where supper was served at the rectory, at which Mrs. Azael Coates and ladies of the parish were hostesses. The opening service was read by the Rev. Dr. Floyd Appleton, of Danville. Bishop Darlington administered Confirmation, and congratulated the parish on attaining its fifty-fifth anniversary. Addresses were made by the Rev. P. H. Asheton-Martin, and the Rev. George John McCormack.

The day ended with prayers and the blessing, pronounced by Archdeacon William Dorwart.

Since the coming of the present rector, the buildings of the parish have been placed in excellent condition, and now present a most pleasing and attractive appearance.

Picture Presented: A large congregation from Trinity Church, Chambersburg, Pa., and the Pennsylvania Forestry Academy, assembled in Emmanuel Church, Mont Alto, on Sunday afternoon, October 5, to dedicate a picture of the late Rt. Rev. Henry Codman Potter, D. D., presented by Canon Nelson, of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York City.

The Rev. George D. Graeff, of Chambersburg, and the Rev. Howard Glisan England, Chaplain of the Mont Alto Sanatorium, conducted the services. Emmanuel Church was the first Episcopal Church built in Franklin County, Pa. While a student at the Virginia Theological Seminary, Henry Codman Potter served as lay reader in charge for several weeks. He also officiated subsequent to his graduation, and after his ordination as Priest.

EASTON.

Rt. Rev. Geo. W. Davenport, D. D., Bishop

For the Church's Program.

During the first two weeks in November, Bishop Davenport is planning to meet the vestries of all the parishes in the diocese in an intensive campaign for the furtherance of the Church's Program. This will involve a thousand-mile automobile trip. The bishop has just completed his fourth year in office, during which time he has traveled 50,000 miles by car.

Reopening of Two Country Churches.

Two old, country churches of the diocese, which have been closed for years, were recently reopened with services of Confirmation. Sunday Schools have been organized in the vicinity and a new lease of life is in prospect. The churches are St. Augustines in Cecil County, and Trinity, near Church Creek, Dorchester County. This latter parish, according to authentic records, was in operation in the year 1690. The church contains a cushion on which Queen Anne is supposed to have knelt at her coronation.

All Hallows' Parish, Snow Hill, celebrated the two hundred and thirty-second anniversary of its founding by holding a "Parish Day" on All Saints' Eve, at which time the new rector, the Rev. James A. Mitchell, was formally instituted.

PITTSBURGH.

Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., Bishop.

Dedication of the Church of the Advent.

On Sunday evening, November 2, the Church of the Advent, the Rev. T. J. Bigham, rector, after extensive repairs and enlargement, and the installation of a new organ, was dedicated by the Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., and a class was presented for the Laying on of Hands. On the Friday evening following Mr. Daniel Phillipi, organist of the Church of the Ascension, gave an organ recital, which was followed by a parish reception.

United Thank Offering.

The Fourth Ingathering of the United Thank Offering of 1925 took place on Thursday morning, November 6, at Trinity Church, Pittsburgh. The Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., celebrated the Holy Communion and made an address. Bishop Mann was assisted by the clergy of the parish. The offering amounted to almost $2,500, bringing the aggregate for the four ingatherings well up toward the $10,000 mark. The service was followed by a business meeting, at which thirty-seven parishes were represented by one hundred and seventy-five delegates.

Mr. N. P. Hyndman, for more than twenty-five years the most efficient President of the Laymen's Missionary League, has been obliged to resign that position on account of ill-health. He has been succeeded in that office by Mr. Edwin Logan, of the Church of the Epiphany, Bellevue, who has been a member of the League and active in its work almost ever since its inception.

The Dedication of the Hunter Building at St. Augustine's School.

On the morning of October 23 a new administration and class-room building was dedicated at St. Augustine's School, Raleigh, N. C. This building is called the Hunter Building in honor of Dr. and Mrs. A. B. Hunter, who were for so many years connected with the Institution; Dr. Hunter as the Principal, and Mrs. Hunter as the founder and first Superintendent of St. Agnes' Hospital.

The building, which is of a Colonial design, is of fire-proof construction, and contains administration offices, class-rooms and science laboratories. The total cost of the building and its equipment will be about $90,000, of which amount $40,000 was given by the General Education Board (Rockefeller Foundation) of New York. The addition of this building will add greatly to the development of the School which is undertaking Collegiate work in addition to the other departments of instruction.

Dr. and Mrs. Hunter came to Raleigh in order to be present at the dedication exercises, which were conducted by Bishop Cheshire, Bishop Penick, and the Rev. Edgar H. Gould, Principal of the School. Dr. Hunter was called upon to make a brief address to the large assembly of students and friends. In reply he told something of the early history of the School, and expressed his great pleasure at the progress which has been made in interesting the whole Church, and especially North Carolina where the School is at work.

Mr. N. C. Newbold, State Supervisor of Negro Education, and Dr. J. L. Peacock, President of Shaw University, here in Raleigh, made brief addresses of congratulations. Mr. Newbold paid a tribute to the work that is being done in the State by the graduates of St. Augustine's, and expressed the deep concern which the State Department of Education feels for the continued success of the private Negro schools in the State.

St. Augustine's was chartered in 1867, and is therefore our oldest institution for the education of the Negro. She has academic, vocational, teacher training and junior collegiate departments, as well as a training school for nurses connected with St. Agnes' Hospital. The annual enrollment is about five hundred students.

New Church Building For St. Stephen's.

Tentative plans for the new church building of St. Stephen's Parish have been accepted by the vestry and approved by the members of the church at a special congregational meeting, called for that purpose. The new church, with complete furnishings and equipment, is expected to cost about $250,000. The church itself will seat twelve hundred or more people and there will also be a chapel for small congregations and a parish hall which will accommodate a Sunday School of one thousand children. The plans indicate that the church, when completed, will be one of the most beautiful, architecturally, in the city.

St. Stephen's Parish is one of the most active growing parishes in the diocese, and under the leadership of its rector, Dr. George F. Dudley, is affiliated with the movement in the diocese and community which have to do with the general good. Christian Healing Services have been held regularly for several years in St. Stephen's Parish and the Sunday School is one of the largest, if not the largest, in the diocese.

The site of the new church will be on Newton Street, near Sixteenth, and it is hoped that construction may begin in the early spring.

Conference on Rural Work.

All Faith's Parish, Mechanicsville, Md., was the meeting place on Wednesday and Thursday, November 12 and 13, for a conference on rural work of the diocese. The conference was opened with Holy Communion, celebrated by the Bishop of Washington, who later delivered an address. The topics of some addresses of the two-day conference were as follows: "Survey of Rural Work in the Diocese of Washington," "Tested Methods of Rural Work," "Distinctive Problems of the Rural Parish," "Bringing Back the Rural Church," "The Rural Pastor as a Community Leader," "National Significance of Rural Life," and others. A meeting for boys and a mass meeting, at which Bishop Davenport was the speaker, were other features of the conference. The Bishop of Washington, from the time of his consecration, has emphasized the value of the rural work of the diocese, and has expressed his determination to assist in every way this very important work.

In the one year of Bishop Freeman's Episcopacy, the rural churches have already shown a response to his help and inspiration, which more than justify the emphasis he has placed on this work.

New Rector of Christ Church.

The Rev. Calvert E. Buck has accepted the position of rector of Christ Church, Southeast, to succeed the Rev. William Curtis White, who resigned last spring on account of ill health.

Broken Hearts.

Mary May.

There are so many broken hearts
That could be quickly mended,
If we would only take the parts,
And have them rightly tended.

When Jealousy begins to mar
As black as she intended,
A little Trust will soothe the scar
If well with Kindness blended.

The Sorrow poisons with her sigh
Let Balm of Cheer be minded,
And Love will gently ope the eye
That's been by Hatred blinded.

Humility, so pure and sweet,
Heals where sharp Pride has spoken;
O, soon you'll see how neatly you
Can heal a heart that's broken.

STUDIES IN THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

Our Lord Goes Out, With the Disciples to the Mount of Olives.

The Rev. Louis Tucker, D. D.

It was moonlight and the streets were full, for the Temple gates opened at midnight and many went there then. The city gates were open, and the little band went out past the guard, down the long slope, across Kedron, then turned aside and entered the little garden of Gethsemane. The present Gethsemane is only some two hundred feet square and contains a number of gnarled old olive trees; not the same which were there in Our Lord's time, for the Romans cut down every tree. Most comment guesses the garden belonged to John Mark's father. It was private, pleasant, walled in, close to the city, and its owner had placed it at Our Lord's disposal, for it was His "custom" to go there. Probably He had a key to the gate.

On the way to Gethsemane Ederseim puts that warning to St. Peter which we, following what seems superior evidence, have placed elsewhere. It is painful to disagree with Ederseim. He has a trick of turning out right after fuller investigation. With his usual minute accuracy he quotes and demolishes objection to the story of the cock drawn from the prohibition forbidding the keeping of fowls in Jerusalem, by producing a story of the death of a child in Jerusalem caused by a cock; thus proving that the ordinance was not in force at this period.

Our Lord could not begin the Last Supper until He sent Judas away. Judas had to go to the High Priest's house and get authority, then go to the Praetorium for soldiers, then bring them to John Mark's house, then to Gethsemane. Any man could see them coming, and escape, since they carried torches. He had some cause, real or imagined, for belief that Our Lord would await their coming and must have communicated that belief to the Roman officer in command; or that officer, being a trained soldier and presumably sane, would never have taken his men outside the city walls with lighted torches. All this took time.

Yet time was needed. The Last Supper. The Great Discourse and the Sacramental Prayer must all be finished and the trip to the garden made, yet leave ample time for the great struggle in Gethsemane. That could not be hurried. When things are as ghastly as that they obtain full time to work to the end.

Having entered, Our Lord went apart. He could not have gone far. He might be out of eyesight if there were shrubbery, especially rose-bushes; but He would be well within earshot. Painters and preachers usually assume a large garden high on the hills. Gethsemane is small and low in the valley—the Valley of the Shadow of Death.

The Children's Crusade.

More than seven hundred years ago, the first Children's Crusade was inaugurated when, inspired by the zeal that had animated their elders, an army of youth set forth from Europe in the year 1212 for the Holy City. Most of them perished miserably in the snows of the Alps or met a fate far worse in the slave markets of Egypt.

Today, under just such a banner, the cross of red on a field of stainless white, another army of boys and girls, numbering more than 5,000,000, has been mobilized from thirty-three different countries. "Happy Childhood the World Over" is their slogan. The emblem of their membership, a diminutive button bearing the Junior motto, "I serve." Only when this insignia has been earned in one of three ways, has any child the right to display it. He may earn it by performing a significant service for his local Red Cross Chapter, for his school or for the community generally. He may win it by taking some special part in a school enterprise by which a Junior Red Cross fund is being raised. Or he may make a personal cash contribution to such a fund by money earned by his own labors or sacrifices.

In every community there are services especially suited to juvenile undertaking. Clean-up campaigns, the destruction of poisonous plants, mosquito and fly extermination and the conservation of birch and wild flowers. In the school room, the routine of manual training and sewing classes is utilized to teach other lessons of altruism, as the toys and garments turned out are dedicated to the poor and unfortunate at home and abroad. But perhaps most far-reaching in its cumulative effects is the system of international school correspondence consisting of the interchange of letters and portfolios between the little folks of our own country with those in the thirty-two other nations that make up the Junior Red Cross.

Nothing has so vitalized the study of English composition nor made geography and history so vivid as this international exchange of childish letters and ideas through the Junior Red Cross.

"To my dear unknown friends," begins a letter from a small Eskimo who writes graphically of his beloved dogs that take the place of his American correspondent's automobile.

"Please write us all about that great America," implores a little tothead from his mountain home in Rumania.

And so, between the youth in the log school house at the foremost outpost of civilization, the palm-fringed tropic island hut, and the great institutions of learning with which American children are blessed, fly these messages of goodwill and the desire for a closer understanding. Nor is this harmonious feeling expressed only on paper. By gifts of toys and clothing made with their own hands, the children of rich countries brighten and bless the lives of those in impoverished nations.

Nothing more dramatically emphasizes the fact that it is only the accident of birth that has prevented Mary and John from sharing the fate of those homeless orphans of Europe left desolate by war as the letters that come from Maurice and Jeanne. And with this realization comes the desire to make possible for the unfortunate little refugees overseas, some of the blessings of education and abundance that American children take as a matter of course. Playgrounds, libraries, hospitals, farm and industrial schools—these are among the undertakings in foreign lands established and supported by the American members of the Junior Red Cross.

Who can say that this is not in truth a second Children's crusade to recover and restore the idea of world friendship and peace from the ruin of the greatest of earth's wars?

The American Red Cross was the first national Red Cross Society to develop its juvenile membership and mobilize it for the humanitarian works that children can carry on in time of peace. Among the other activities that it sponsors are Disaster Relief, War Service, Public Health Nursing, Nurses Enrollment, General Health Activities, Home Hygiene and Care of the Sick, Nutrition, First Aid, Life-Saving and Volunteer Activities.

The Eighth Annual Roll Call, to be held from Armistice Day to Thanksgiving, will mobilize the dollars and the memberships of the American people for the continuance of these activities and services to mankind.

Another Kind of Hero.

A generation ago almost everybody read, at least once, Carlyle's great book on heroes. He gave us the hero as prophet, as priest, as poet, as king, and he made us realize that these heroes have been the real makers of human society. We should like to add a chapter on another kind of hero, who has, perhaps, not done much to build cities and states and church systems, but who has, almost more than anybody else, shown us the spiritual value of endurance—we mean the hero as an invalid.

It is the hardest kind of heroism there is to achieve. Most of us know some man—too often it is oneself—who is a very fair Christian when he is in normal health and absorbed in interesting work, who carries a smooth forehead and easily drops into a good-natured smile, but who becomes "blue" and irritable and a storm center in the family weather as soon as the bodily apparatus is thrown out of gear. Most of us have had a taste of humiliation as we have witnessed our own defeat in the presence of some thorn in the flesh which stubbornly pricked us, even though we prayed to have it removed and urged the doctor to hurry up and remove it.

What a hero, then, must be he, who, with a weak and broken body, a prey to pain and doomed to die daily, learns how to live in calm faith that God is good and makes his life a center of cheer and sunshine! The heroism of the battlefield and the man-of-war looks cheap and thin compared with this. We could all rally to meet some glorious moment when a trusted leader shouted to us, "Your country expects you to do your duty!" But to drag on through days and nights through weeks and months, through recurring birthdays, with vital energy low, with sluggish appetite, with none of that ground-swell of superfluous vigor which makes healthy life so good, and still to prove that life is good, and to radiate joy and triumphs—that is the very flour and perfume of heroism. If we are making up to bead-roll of heroes, let us put at the top of the names of those quiet friends of ours who have played the man or revealed the woman through hard periods of invalidism and have exhibited to us the fine glory of a courageous spirit.

One of the hardest and most difficult features to bear is the inability to work at one's former pace and with the old-time constructive power. The prayer of the Psalmist that his work, the contribution of his life, might be preserved is very touching—"Establish thou the work of our hands upon us, yea, the work of our hands establish thou it." What can be more tragic than the cry of Othello, "My occupation's gone!" So long as the hand keeps its cunning and the mind remains clear and creative, can one stand physical handicap and pain, but when the working-power of mind or body is threatened, then the test of faith and heroism indeed arrives.

A man whose life meant much made us see many years ago how wonderfully this test could be met. He was a great teacher, the head of a distinguished boys' school. He was experiencing the full measure of success, and his influence over his boys was extraordinary. He realized, as his work went on, that his hearing was becoming dull and was steadily failing. He went to New York and consulted a famous specialist. After making a careful examination the specialist said, with perfect frankness, "Your case is hopeless. Nothing can be done to check the disaster. You are hard of hearing already, but in a very short time you will have no hearing at all." Without a quaver, the teacher said, "Don't you think, doctor, that I shall hear Gabriel's trumpet when it blows?" He went back to his school, learned to read lips, reorganized life, accepted without a murmur his loss of a major sense, and finished his splendid career of work in an undefeated spirit and with a grace and joy which were envied by many persons in possession of all their powers.

All our readers will think of some "star player" in this hard game of patience and endurance, and will have watched with awe and reverence the glorious fight of some of those unrecorded heroes who won but got no valor medal. The only person who ranks higher in the scale of heroism than the hero as invalid is possibly the person who patiently, lovingly nurses and cares for some invalid through years of decline and suffering. Generally, though not always, it is a woman. Not seldom is she called upon to consecrate her life to the task, and often she gives what is much more precious than life itself. We build no monuments to daughters who uncomplainingly forego the joy of married life, who refuse the suit of love in order to be free to ease the closing years of father or mother, grown helpless; but where is there higher consecration or finer heroism? Men sometimes complain that the days of chivalry and heroism are past. On the contrary, they are more truly dawning. As Christianity ripens love grows richer and deeper, and where love appears heroism is always very close at hand. Our best heroes are mothers and wives and daughters, fathers and husbands and sons.—Christian Work.

November.

Minna D. Starr.

Drear November, thou art with us
In thy robes of somber hue,
Intertwined with gleams of brightness,
And above, a wondrous blue.

Solemn sometimes is thy music;
Thou dost choose the minor keys,
Weird the moan and loud the wailing
That is heard among the trees.

Yet above thy sadd'ning cadence
Rings a bird's note, sweet and clear,
With a message calling upward
All who will but pause and hear.

For thy beauty is of spirit;
That of form soon fades away;
But with mantle fair as flowers
Thou dost veil the face of clay.

And though winter's night overshadows
And his breath has touched thy face,
Thou dost hold a child of summer
Tenderly in thine embrace.

Then thy flowers, few but stately,
Linger as though loath to part,
Yea, November, thou art welcome,
Warm thy place within the heart.

To Make You Glad.

When years have slipped by and memory runs back over the path you have trod, you will be glad you stopped to speak to every friend you met, and left all with a warmer feeling in their hearts because you did so.

You will be glad you were happy when doing the small, everyday things of life, and that you served the best you could in life's lowly round.

You will be glad that men have said all along your way: "I know I can trust him; he is as true as steel."

You will be glad there have been some rainy days in your life. If there were no storms the fountains would dry up, the sky would be filled with poisonous vapors, and life would cease.

You will be glad that you stopped long enough every day to read carefully, and with a prayer in your heart, some part of God's message to those He loves.—Echoes.

Faith's Serenity.

Our age is full of changes and unrest. I am not afraid of the disturbance. I regard it as the workings of the spiritual leaven. The widespread ferment is of God. Established things are being shaken. Venerable customs are being tested and tried. Unexpected presences appear on the hill almost every day, and many men are afraid and their hearts are sinking in pessimistic forebodings. They fear evil tidings, and every new visitor startles them as he knocks at their door. We need to get to the central things. Secondary shelters are of little or no avail.

We need a profound experimental knowledge of the power of God's grace. We must have an experience that no new setting of circumstances can ever shake. We must know God as a vital, vitalizing presence, whose work in our hearts can never be gainsaid. It is only an experience of grace that can enrich the trust that gives serenity. The man whose heart is resting in the Lord can watch events like a man who is watching the sunrise.—J. H. Jowett, D. D.

The Lord is my Teacher, I shall not lose the way,

He leadeth me in the lowly path of learning, He prepareth a lesson for me every day,

He bringeth me to the clear fountains of instruction.

Little by little He showeth me the beauty of truth:

The world is a great book that He hath written:

He turneth the leaves for me slowly, They are all inscribed with images and letters.

He poureth light on the pictures and word,

He taketh me by the hand to the hill top of vision,

And my soul is glad when I perceive His meaning.

In the valley also He walketh beside me,

In the dark places He whispereth to my heart,

Even though my lesson be hard it is not hopeless,

For the Lord is patient with His slow scholar.

He will wait a while for my weakness, and help me to read the truth through tears.

—Henry Van Dyke.

I Was Blind—But Now I See.

L. C. Cummings.

"I am getting acquainted with my infirmities," said a suffering man; "there is much they can teach, by closer acquaintance."

A man may be bed-ridden and unable to help himself. Still he can see, and hear and understand! That is all any man should reasonably ask. We often have too many blessings—too good health, too much riches—a surfeit of everything.

And many of us do not appreciate our blessings until, like our angels, they have taken their final flight. Then we stupidly awaken from our indifference to the consciousness of our remaining blessings and begin to appraise what is left. If we have the spirit indwelling and controlling we possess all things, because every earthly possession can disappear, yet we possess all!

Let us get better acquainted with our infirmities, and thus through them more thankfully appreciate the multitude of our remaining blessings, and by their instrumentality realize "that while once I was blind, now I can see" and thus grow in grace from our seeming infirmities.

Autumn.

The morns are meeker than they were,
The nuts are growing brown;
The berry's cheek is plumper,
The rose is out of town.
The maple wears a gayer scarf,
The field a scarlet gown.
Lest I should be old-fashioned,
I'll put a trinket on.

—Emily Dickinson.

A Bedtime Visitor.

Near the North West edge of the pond lay a bare, weather-beaten, fallen tree, with one broken-ended limb stretching out towards, and almost overhanging the water. It had lain there for so many Summers and Winters that not a patch of bark remained, and the trunk was so hollow as to be almost a shell.

On this particular Autumn morning, although the sun shone from a cloudless sky, there was little warmth in the air. For days before it had rained steadily, and now it had turned colder, and what little wind that was blowing had almost a touch of frost in it.

But Old Grandfather Gurk, the bullfrog, was out this morning, sitting on the bank of the pond, looking up at the broken-ended branch of the dead tree. He had been doing quite a bit of moving about for an hour or more, visiting the big, red boulder and the alder thicket on the North bank, the row of stunted willows on the South bank, and here he was at the North West shore of the pond. It looked almost as if the big, squatty frog was seeing that all the favorite resting-places and perching-spots of himself and his friends were in good shape for the Winter.

He had not thought much about visitors, feathered ones, and those birds who had flown past him had been greeted with only a word or two. But something about the broken-ended limb made Grandfather Gurk continue to look at it, and it was not long before he made out just what that something was.

"I see it now," said the bullfrog to himself. "I see it now. A strange bird has been using that limb to perch on. I can see the marks of his toes."

Grandfather Gurk was as curious as could be to know just who this stranger could be, and though he stretched his neck and looked his sharpest, those toe-marks on the branch told him nothing.

"What was that?" exclaimed Grandfather Gurk under his breath. "I'm sure that I heard something." And he turned his head to look across the pond.

There was not one bird to be seen, and the bullfrog looked again at the dead limb. Then he got a surprise; there had been a noise, those toe-marks were those of a stranger, for, sitting, or rather, perching on the tip of the limb was a bird.

Two feet or more from tail-tip to crown, this bird looked even larger, for it was broad, fluffy, and its large, round head was set on a neck so short and thick as to make it seem as if the bird had no neck at all. The short, strong legs were covered with feathers, as were the toes, and the feet ended in strong, black claws. Wings, breast, back, the top of both head and neck were white, quite heavily spotted, with black, only the face and under part of the neck being without the black marks.

"This is the last day," said Grandfather Gurk, as soon as he caught sight of the bird. "When the Snowy Owl comes to Willow Pond, it is time for Bullfrogs to think of leaving it right away."

The bird, whom Grandfather Gurk had recognized as the Snowy Owl, turned its round head, and looked down at the squatty frog, opened its hooked, black bill, and said:

O, Wintertime is coming near,
And Old Jack Frost will soon be here,
And those who frozen noses dread
Had better hurry off to bed.
All sleepers through from Fall to Spring.

Listen, as I this warning bring,
You'll soon hear winds of winter howl.
For Winter's bird's the Snowy Owl.

"I was just saying that to myself as soon as I saw you," said the bullfrog, "but don't think for one minute that I am going to bed just because you're telling me to. If Shelly Shutup the clam had not gone to sleep days ago, I don't know that I would bother snoozing this Winter at all."

The Snowy Owl looked sharply at the squatty frog, and seeing a twinkle in Grandfather Gurk's eye, the bird said:

"You are just fooling, for you know as well as can be that there would be no flies for you to catch in Winter, and no place to swim in Willow Pond, for it will be all covered with ice."

"OOO! That gives me the shivers," said Grandfather Gurk, "I don't mind cold water, but ice is a different thing altogether. Is Winter really coming very, very soon?"

"Before you know it," replied the owl, "the feathers of Winter come first, and the ice soon follows."

Heavy clouds had blotted out the sunshine, and even as the owl spoke, large, white flakes came drifting down, the first snow.

"Winter feathers—I don't like them!" exclaimed the bullfrog, climbing down from the log-end and slipping into the water, until only his eyes and his nose were above the surface.

"I told you it was time to go to bed," laughed the Snowy Owl. "Don't hurry away before you tell me where you are going to sleep all Winter long."

"I wouldn't tell any one that," said the bullfrog, "Never tell where your bed is, and no one will disturb you. I will tell you this much, though—I'm sleeping at the East end of the pond."

The big frog turned and began swimming slowly toward the marshy end of Willow Pond, and as he swam, he called back to the Snowy Owl:

When I am settled safe, and O, so cosy
in my bed,
While stormy winds of Wintertime blow far above my head,
I'll spend the cold, cold days and nights
a-dreaming pleasant things
Of all the friends that I have made who fly on feathered wings.
I'll dream of jolly things to say, so that I'll have the words

To greet, at Willow Pond, in Spring my visitors, the birds.

A Strange Memory.

A thing I cannot understand
Is why my uncle dear
Seems to forget Jean-Helen's name—
I think it's very queer.

For when he comes to visit us
He's very apt to say,
"Oh, where's that package that I brought
For you and Lindy-May?"

One time he asked if "Emma-Lu"
Would like an iv'ry fan;
Another day he brought some beads
To give to "Betty-Ann."

And in the winter, from the South
He sent a box to me
Of golden fruit in silver moss:
"Please share with Rose-Marie."

I think I've told him twenty times
Just what my doll's name is,
And yet, this very afternoon,
He called her "Florence-Liz"!

I really can't be cross with him
(His eyes are smiley blue).
I hope his mem'ry will improve—
There's nothing else to do!

Webb Graham's Patients.

It was early in the spring and Webb Graham had spent two weeks trying to get a job. But wherever he went it was the same story, "We've help enough at present"; or "Times are too hard to warrant our taking on any extra hands till business picks up a bit."

"I'll tell you what you can do," suggested Mrs. Graham one evening after Webb, who had trudged unsuccessfully all day looking for work, had eaten his supper.

Webb looked up inquiringly.
"You can doctor our back yard to-morrow."

"What! Doctor what?" Webb wondered if he had heard correctly.

"Our back yard," repeated Mrs. Graham, smiling. "When I was hanging out some towels this afternoon I realized how much it needed it."

"Being doctored?"
"Yes, and I'll give you 15 cents an hour till it's cured."

"The back yard surely does look pretty—bad," Webb acknowledged, slowly. "I've noticed it, too. Well, tomorrow I'll pay my first professional call there and see what I can do to make it well!"

Before Webb had quite finished with his new job, Judge Kilgore, who was negotiating the purchase of the lot next the Graham's, chanced to look over the dividing fence and discovered what the boy was doing.

"Webb," he exclaimed, "you've transformed that back yard of yours into a regular park—almost. I wish mine looked as well. What will you charge," he asked suddenly, "to come over and clean mine up for me?"

"Fifteen cents an hour," replied Webb in a businesslike tone.

"Very well. I'll give it. You can start in any time."

"All right! I'll come tomorrow," promised Webb.

"Good! You'll find enough to keep you busy."

The next morning Webb stopped abruptly in the midst of carting away a wheelbarrow load of tin cans from the Kilgore back yard.

"I believe I can do it!" he exclaimed suddenly, straightening his back. "I've got to get money for a course in telegraphy somehow, and I believe this is just the thing.

"It will be some expense advertising, but I can borrow from mother if I need more than I have. I can't more'n fail."

"Fifteen cents—is cheap—enough," reflected Webb later, as he began shoveling up a pile of ashes. "That's less than other doctors ask," whimsically, "and theirs isn't half the work my job is."

Webb stopped work in the middle of the afternoon, hurried home and changed his clothes.

"Mother, could you loan me a little money, if I should need it?" he asked eagerly.

"What for, dear?"

"Oh, a little plan of mine, which—"

"Which my boy wants to keep secret from his mother for a little while?" interrupted Mrs. Graham, smiling. "I guess I can let you have it, if it isn't too much."

"I don't know how much it will take," replied Webb. "I can tell tonight though."

An hour later Webb entered the Daily Herald office.

They told him the ad would cost five cents a line, each issue—on an average of seven words to the line.

"That will be," reckoned Webb, "50 cents a day, for I'd want 10 lines."

"Have you the copy with you?"

Webb held up the paper and read over what he had written.

"Webb C. Graham, Doctor of Back Yards, is ready to respond to emergency calls, or otherwise. Specialty, ill-kept and disease-producing back yards. Only medicine, vigorous arm and hand action. If patients don't immediately improve in looks after one day's treatment, no fee charged. Two dollars a call—each call to last one full working day. Office, 233 Oxford Street."

Mr. Thaxter, the clerk, laughed. "No question about that bringing you patients," he said, approvingly. "And, by the way, I'd like to have you call on my back garden immediately. Come to think of it, it's looked sick for a long while. I think it will take two calls, at least, to make it attractive enough to receive callers, and then 'twill need professional attendance all along during the summer to keep it in a healthy condition. Can you attend to it?"

"Sure."

"Very good; my number is 324 Mill-bridge Street."

"Now I'll pay," and Webb thrust his hand into his pocket for his money. He had just enough to pay for one week's insertion.

"No; we'll let that go towards my bill," and Mr. Thaxter waved back Webb's money. "We'll settle later, after we see how your patient gets on. And I hope you'll have as many others as you can attend to," added the advertising manager, encouragingly. "Good-bye."

"I didn't imagine I'd get my first patient so soon," said Webb to himself, as he started jubilantly towards home.

The next evening, when Webb got home from Mr. Thaxter's, his mother met him at the door.

"Any calls for professional services?" asked Webb, expectantly.

"Three," replied his mother.

"Three—already!" exclaimed Webb, incredulously.

"Yes," rejoined Mrs. Graham. "One came from Mrs. Downing, 978 Atlantic Street; one from Dr. King, 2 Ashburton Square; and the other was from Mr. Greeley, president of the Union Trust Company."

"Mr. Greeley! Why, he said only last week that he had no work for—"

"It's professional service he wants," interrupted Mrs. Graham.

"Hurrah for my patients!" and Webb hurried into the house to wash and get ready for supper. "My! but I'm hungry."

That week so many calls came in for Webb that he had to engage two boys to help him.

"I don't know what will happen if this keeps up," he said proudly. "I'll have to restrict my practice, or engage more assistants. Who would have thought there was so much work to be had—and so near home, too! I see now my course in telegraphy is a certainty—if I don't get sick myself or lose my patients."

"It's great—being in demand like this; I only wish I'd thought of advertising before."

Poor Mrs. Hen.

With all her children Mrs. Hen

Went walking out one day;
She wanted them to look their best,
So worried all the way.

"I wish you'd lift your feet right up;
How pretty that would be!
Now, Waddlekin, you're much the worst,
Why don't you copy me?"

"I'm sure when I was quite a chick
I didn't act like you.
So fond of mud and dirt you are,
I don't know what to do."

"And when you speak, you say,
'Quack,'
How silly that does sound!
All little chicks should say, 'Peep, peep!'
Wherever they are found."

"Now, here's a pond. Keep close by me,
And you may have a drink,
It's very hot out here today;
You're thirsty, I should think."

"We are," they cried, "we are, indeed,"
And lots and lots they drank;
Then in they went, and Mrs. Hen
Was left upon the bank."

"Come back, come back!" called Mrs.
Hen,
"Come back, or drowned you'll be."
But on they swam, and only laughed;
Her chicks were ducks, you see.

The Poppy Field.

The country in England is all beautiful, like a big well-kept garden; and one of the loveliest sights there is a field of barley or wheat when it is golden yellow and millions of scarlet poppies are growing among it.

One morning early I went out to see a beautiful poppy field. There was a narrow path running through the middle of it, so that I could stand among the flowers and grain and not step on any of them. I did wish that I could be little again, just tall enough for my head to come above the waving grain. The mischievous breeze was playing across the top of it, blowing it up and down like waves on a golden sea, and the clouds in the sky made funny little shadows run across the top of it. I stood quite still when I got to the middle of the field, and I saw many wonderful things. The poppies were still asleep, with their petals together as you put your hands when you say your prayers.

The Dewdrop Fairies had been there before me and had sprinkled the flowers with ruby dewdrops. A skylark flew up into the blue sky, away up till I could scarcely see him, singing beautifully all the time. I call the skylarks the King's choristers—the King of all the world, I mean—the King of birds, of flowers, of the blue sky, and of the stars. The lark seemed to be singing thanks for the sunshine and the flowers.

I stood watching him up there and looked down just in time to see a poppy bud bloom. The first crack had come in the funny rough green shell. The sun was growing hotter now, and the poppies were waking. Slowly the crack in the green shell got bigger and bigger, more cracks came, and one piece dropped off. And I saw the red petals all wrinkled and crushed into that tiny long, then another piece fell off. The sun grew hotter, and slowly the little green case.

I waited and watched for ever so red parcel unfolded. All the wrinkles were smoothed away by the sun, and there was a lovely scarlet poppy with little black patches at the bottom of the flower and a cushion full of lovely green-headed pins.—Christian Observer.

Face to Face.

Just before the war broke out, two sailors on a United States battleship clashed in ranks. This is a doubly serious offense, even in times of peace, for it combines two forbidden things, "fighting" and "disorderly conduct at quarters." As the men had good records, the divisional officer decided not to report it, therefore, but to try a method of his own.

He stood the two fighters face to face for an hour. He set a watch to see that they did not move or look away from each other for the whole sixty minutes.

An hour is a long time to stand and glare at any one, as these two men soon discovered. Their tightened, angry features relaxed in spite of themselves. When the hour was up both were smiling and shook hands without a murmur. There was no renewal of the quarrel then or afterwards.

On shipboard or off, as the wise officer knew, the best remedy for a quarrel is to consider one's opponent as well as oneself.—Forward.

Is sacrifice so hard a thing?

We give a useless seed
To God's kind care, and, lo, we reap
A harvest for our need.

We give a scanty draught to one
Who faints beside the way;
There flows a fountain for our thirst
Some weary, woesome day.

We give a little flower of love
To light a darkened room,
And, lo, our gardens overflow
With beauty and with bloom.

Ah! sacrifice is but a door
To dwellings of delight,
And selfishness the subtle key
That locks our joy from sight.
—Canadian Churchman.

Her Idea of Drudgery.

A little girl in a poor family has to wash a great many dishes. Some one began sympathizing with her one day, remarking what "drudgery" it must be.

"No," she replied. "It's great fun. I have given every dish a name, and they are all my children—my dolls. I talk to them while I am washing them and drying them. I pretend that I am dressing them. I like to have them all nice and clean. And I'm sure they like me for looking after them so well. It's lots of fun."—B. C. Forbes.

The Cock and the Clock.

Once a Cock and an Alarm Clock had a quarrel.

The Cock said: "I can wake everybody up better!"

And the Clock said: "No, I can wake everybody up better!"

So they went to a Bird. They asked: "Who is better for waking people up, the Cock or the Clock?"

"I don't know," said the Bird; "ask the Dog."

So they went to the Dog. "Who is better for waking people up—do you know, Dog?"

No answer.

So they asked the Cat. "I don't know," said the Cat; "go to the wise old Horse."

So they went to the Horse. They asked: "Who is better to wake people up—the Cock or the Clock?"

The wise old Horse said: "Now, I'll go to sleep a couple minutes and see who can wake me up first."

And so he went to sleep a couple of minutes. Then the Clock rang, "Ting-a-ling, ting-a-ling, ling-ling-ling!" It woke the Horse up.

Then he said: "I'll go to sleep for the Cock to wake me up." So he went to sleep.

Then the Cock cried: "Cock-a-doodle-doo! Cock-a-doodle-doo!" He woke the Horse up.

Then the wise old Horse said: "You are both good. So hereafter it is better not to quarrel about who is better or who can make the most noise, for you are both the best!"

Laxatives do not overcome constipation

LAXATIVES and cathartics provide temporary relief only. Their continued use leads to permanent injury. In time, says an eminent physician, an almost incalculable amount of harm is done by the use of pills, salts, mineral waters, castor oil and the like.

Physicians advise lubrication for Internal Cleanliness

Medical science has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus, Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless.

Take Nujol regularly and adopt the habit of internal cleanliness. For sale by all druggists.

Obituaries

Patton: Died, at Wytheville, Va., October 24, 1924, JORDAN STUART PATTON, son of the late Rev. J. Lindsay Patton and Fanny Leake Patton, aged twelve years.

Lockwood: In St. Louis, Mo., on August 11, 1924, in the seventy-second year of his age, GEORGE ROBINSON LOCKWOOD, husband of the late Anna Preston Davis, and eldest son of the late Richard J. Lockwood, of St. Louis, and Angelica Peale Robinson, his wife.

DR. RANDOLPH BRYAN CARMICHAEL.
The death of DR. RANDOLPH BRYAN CARMICHAEL, on September 3, 1924, has removed the last of a long line of distinguished and beloved physicians.

Dr. Carmichael was the eldest son of the late Dr. Spottswood Wellford Carmichael and Fanny Tucker Bryan. On his father's side Dr. Carmichael was descended from some of the oldest and most distinguished families of Virginia, among them the Nelsons, Pages, Wellfords and Randolphs. His grandfather was Dr. George French Carmichael, who was the son of Dr. James Carmichael, of Glasgow, Scotland. His grandmother was Mary Wellford, daughter of John Spottswood Wellford and Fanny Nelson, granddaughter of Colonel William Nelson, of Yorktown.

On his mother's side he was the grandson of John Randolph Bryan, of Wilmington Island, Ga., and Elizabeth Tucker Coalter, daughter of Judge John Coalter, of the Supreme Court of Virginia, and the grandniece of John Randolph, of Roanoke.

Reared in the uniquely beautiful atmosphere of Fredericksburg, where refinement is inborn and courtesy is a natural habit,

Dr. Carmichael acquired, by example and by inheritance, a charm of manner and a sweetness of disposition that characterized his professional and personal life throughout.

Studying medicine both at the University of Virginia and at the Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia, Dr. Carmichael, after his graduation, specialized in skin affections. His success was amazing. Locating in Washington, it was his opportunity to be thrown in contact with distinguished people from the four corners of the globe, and he numbered his friends and grateful patients throughout the world.

Never having married, Dr. Carmichael took upon himself the care and direction of his family after his father's death, and was both father and brother to them.

Beloved in every walk of life, admired and respected by members of his profession, adored by his family, gentle, friendly, generous, a gentleman and a Christian, Dr. Carmichael filled out the full measure of his talents and his life.

WILLIAM LOUIS ZIMMER.

In the death, on October 27, of MR. WILLIAM L. ZIMMER, of Petersburg, the Church has lost one of its most faithful workers.

Mr. Zimmer's father, the Rev. William Isaac Zimmer, came to this country from Lausanne, Canton of Vand, Switzerland. He belonged to one of the oldest families of Lausanne, members of which are still living there. Mr. Zimmer gave himself to the ministry of the Church and graduated from the Seminary in 1847, being a classmate of Bishop Whittle. He served in Prince George County, and in 1855 was in charge of St. George's, Pongoteague. He was a faithful and earnest minister of Christ. He married Julia Ellis Nimmo, of Richmond. The Nimmos for nearly two centuries were earnest laymen of Lynnhaven Parish, Princess Anne, serving as vestrymen.

William L. Zimmer inherited, therefore, that love of the church and that readiness to serve which was a marked characteristic of his life. He was a prominent resident of Petersburg, active in business, but always glad to help his church, his town and his fellow-citizens in any way. He was known and respected as a man of unfailing integrity and honor. He was closely identified with Grace Church serving as a vestryman for many years, and representing the church in the Diocesan Councils.

As Treasurer of the Bishop Payne Divinity School, Mr. Zimmer showed his warm interest in the work of our Church among the colored people. To his wise judgment and his unselfish service the school owes much of its success in later years.

Mr. Zimmer was a man of gentle, kindly nature, loving his fellowmen and living up to the best ideals of citizenship. The devoted wife and loving children have lost one who kept them close to his heart and who followed them with affection in all the ways of life.

Mr. Zimmer was born on the 7th of July, 1852. His first wife, the mother of his children, was Julia Howland. He left five children, Mrs. Mary Howland Moyler, Margaret Nimmo Zimmer, Mrs. Louise Watts Rogers, William L. Zimmer and Samuel Watts Zimmer. His widow was Esther Watts, of Portsmouth.

He was buried from Grace Church, where he had worshipped for many years, with wife and children and dear friends to offer their loving tribute of affection.

As he lived so he died, in quiet, trusting faith in Christ, whom he loved and served, in the communion of the Catholic Church, in the confidence of a certain faith, in the comfort of a religious and holy hope, in favor with his God, and in perfect charity with the world.

On All Saints' Day, Shepherd Winthrop Wells was ordained to the diaconate by the Rt. Rev. George W. Davenport, in St. Paul's Church, Berlin, Md. Mr. Wells was presented by his rector, the Rev. Roy R. Gilson, and the sermon was preached by the Very Rev. Franklin J. Bohanan. This ordination was the fulfillment of a youthful dream, for Mr. Wells was graduated from St. Stephen's in 1905 and started to prepare for the ministry at that time. Instead, he went into the publishing business. Now after nineteen years, he returns to his chosen work. He is to be business manager of the diocesan paper and to have charge of Wye Parish, Queenstown.

In St. John's Church, Lancaster, Ohio, on Sunday, October 5, 1924, the Rt. Rev. Theodore I. Reese, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese, of Southern Ohio, ordained Milton B. Sackett to the diaconate. The candidate was presented by the Rev. J. McDonald, rector of the parish. Bishop Reese preached the sermon.

The Rev. Mr. Sackett is an instructor in the Boys' Industrial School, and, since his ordination, has been appointed chaplain of the school.

On October 15 the Rt. Rev. Paul Matthews, D. D., Bishop of New Jersey, acting for the Bishop of Chicago, ordained to the priesthood in Trinity Church, Princeton, N. J., the Rev. Hugh H. F. Morton. The candidate was presented by the rector of the parish, the Rev. Robert Williams, and the Very Rev. Benjamin F. P. Ivins, D. D., Dean of Nashotah House, preached the sermon.

The Rev. Mr. Morton will continue as parochial assistant at Trinity Church, Princeton.

The Rev. Osmond J. McLeod was ordered deacon in St. Mary's Church (colored), Belhaven, N. C., by the Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, Bishop of East Carolina, on St. Luke's Day, October 18. Bishop Darst preached the sermon, and the candidate was presented by the Rev. J. N. Bynum, of St. James, Belhaven. Mr. McLeod is minister in charge of a number of colored churches, including St. Mary's, Belhaven.

DEATHS.

Funeral services were conducted at Christ Church on Tuesday, November 4, and interment was made in Chicago.

The Rev. H. B. D. MacNeil, rector of Christ Church, Sherburne, N. Y., died suddenly at St. Luke's Hospital, New York City. The funeral was held on October 8 at Christ Church, Sherburne.

The Rev. John Wallis Ohl, rector emeritus of Christ Church, Dallas, Texas, and a member of the Standing Committee of the Diocese of Dallas, died on October 16 after a long illness.

The funeral was held in Christ Church with Bishop Moore and the city clergy officiating.

The Rev. Thomas A. Haughton-Burke, a minister of the Diocese of Washington, and chaplain at Queen's City Prison, New York City, and engaged in missionary work in New Jersey, died in St. Luke's Hospital, New York, October 20.

The burial service was held October 23, in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine.

Gland Extracts Make Hens Lay

Any poultry raiser can now get dozens more eggs all winter long by giving a new scientific preparation that combines poultry vitamins and gland extract. This preparation acts directly on the hen's ovaries with amazing results in increased egg production and general health. For hens have glands just like humans. They need vitamins, too. And TABLATED VITAMINES contains both these precious energizing substances that act upon the vital organs of fowls.

Eggs! Eggs! Just crush a few TABLATED VITAMINES in drinking water. Then watch the action! Gov't station reports that hens fed vitamins laid 300 eggs. The ordinary hen lays only 60. Think of it! Five times the eggs! Five times the profit!

YOU RISK NOTHING.

Send no money in advance. Just your name and address. The Poultry Vitamins Company will send you at once TWO regular One Dollar packages of TABLATED VITAMINES. Pay postman only $1, plus 17c. postage, for BOTH packages. Sell the extra dollar package to a neighbor and thus get yours for nothing. If you prefer, send One Dollar with your letter and thus save postage. Try TABLATED VITAMINES at once. Your money refunded without question if you don't get more eggs than ever before. You risk nothing. Get lots more eggs right now while prices are high. Send today if you want five times the eggs and five times the profit. Write to Poultry Vitamins Co., 837 Spruce St., Dept. 241, Philadelphia, Pa.

LMIGHTY and Heavenly Father we glorify Thee that Thou hast again fulfilled to us Thy gracious promise, that while the earth remaineth, seed-time and harvest shall not fail. We bless Thee for the kindly fruits of the earth, which Thou hast given to our use. Teach us, we beseech Thee, to remember that it is not by bread alone that man doth live, and grant us evermore to feed on Him Who is the true Bread from heaven, even Jesus Christ our Lord, to Whom with Thee, and the Holy Ghost, be all honor and glory, world without end.

Some Considerations Affecting Our GIVING TO THE CHURCH

WE are called upon to give to many objects in the course of the year. Sometimes the many appeals mislead us into thinking that we are giving much more than we really are. It would be worth while to add up all our gifts and compare the total with various items of our expenditure.

The wise man makes a budget. This makes it easier to devote a definite portion of his income to Church and charity.

Selecting Objects.

When selecting the objects to which this definite portion of our income will be given we should make sure, as loyal Churchmen, that the Church will receive an adequate share. It is very easy to unconsciously discriminate against the Church. Perhaps we do not realize how extensive and multifarious is the work which the Church is trying to do in our name. It is not one hospital to which we are asked to give through the Church but to scores, not one school but hundreds, not one worker but thousands.

We are not likely to overlook the parish, in the support of which we are glad to do our full share. But the Church is much more than the parish. There is the Diocese and there is the national Church. We are members of both and are responsible for the work of both. This work is just as dependent upon our support as the parish is.

Investigation.

Have we fully informed ourselves as to the nature and value of the work done in the Diocese or of the work at home and abroad done in the name of the whole Church? If we do not have time to investigate for ourselves, would it not be reasonable to trust the judgment of those we have chosen as leaders of the Church?

Quotas Are Minimums.

Each parish has a quota fixed by the Diocese. This quota includes both diocesan and general work. What effect does this quota have on our giving? Do we look upon it as a maximum or a minimum? Do we realize that the parish is asked to give at least the amount of the quota? How shall the Diocese and general Church secure sufficient support for their budgets if these quotas are not regarded as minimums?

Quotas and Large Givers.

Perhaps we are able to give to the Church a larger sum than the amount we believe to be our wise and fair share of the parish quota. A man is willing to give according to his means, provided others are giving according to their means, but he hesitates to carry too large a share of the parish responsibility for fear that some might thereby feel justified in refraining from carrying their share. If, however, he can feel sure that others are doing their best, he will not let the quota prevent him from doing his best.

In determining the total amount he will give to the Church he will ask not only, "What is my share of my parish quota?" but also "What is my share of the amount needed by the Diocese?" and "What is my share of the $4,400,000 needed for the budget of the whole Church and of the $3,600,000 needed for advance work?" Having fixed the largest amount he can justifiably give through his parish, he will give additional sums directly to the Diocese and the general Church.

Great Gifts to Church Projects.

If he is able to give very large sums to good objects, he will take into consideration some of the great projects promoted by the Church. We read of princely gifts for educational, scientific and philanthropic institutions and projects, but seldom of such gifts to Church projects. Why should not great sums be given to extend the world-wide work of the Church, which has an even greater influence on the welfare of the nation and the world? As a matter of fact, would this not be the very wisest way in which a man could use his wealth if he believes in the Mission of the Church?

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

We can always count on God's help to do His work.

Start right, and trust God to bring you out right.

Those who lead children need to keep very close to Christ.

Those who lean upon their dignity, are in need of a better support.

Greatness can never be rightly measured by the age in which it lives.

There may be a wrong way of doing right, but there isn't any right way of doing wrong.

We never know what a man is until we know what he is when he can't have his own way.

There is a still small voice that will tell us wonderful things about the goodness of God, whenever we listen to it.

"There is room for all in the vineyard of God—even for those whom, perchance because of some infirmity, man hath not hired."

See the Lord, thy Keeper, stands
Omnipotently near!
Lo! He holds thee by the hand,
And banishes thy fear.
Shadows with His wings thy head
Guards from all impending harms;
Round thee and beneath are spread
The Everlasting Arms.

WHOLE-HEARTED LOYALTY

We did not quite realize that we were dealing with a high explosive when we wrote the editorial on Fractional Loyalty. By letter and by telephone we are still being taken to task for it. We are glad that it is so; for we have been forced to study more carefully the grounds of our conviction. As we studied, it became more and more evident that the question at issue is but one factor in the great problem of what Christianity itself is. Our answer to that problem is that Christianity is the mobilizing of all the forces of human nature that are constructive and creative. We say advisedly all the forces; for ever since the Voice spoke from heaven and bade Peter remember that "What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common," there is no human activity that brings man in contact with the needs and desires of his fellows that is not sacred. To a Christian there is no secular occupation. When the Church learns this truth she will awake to another Pentecost.

The zealous attempt to create a sanctity apart from and above the common life; to establish some sort of relationship for man with God that does not include all men; to make devotion a term that includes the emotions, but excludes the intelligence and the will; to tithe a man's nature as men in heathen as well as Jewish lands have tithed their possessions, is not Christianity. What the conquering Christ expects, but does not command; for He knows when men learn the meaning of His words "Follow Me," these things will come of themselves, is not a tithe of any man's purse or person, but mother and wife and children and houses and lands. To every man God makes two gifts: the first is capacity, the second, talents or opportunities according to his ability. He is no less God's man because the talent, which we must remember is not the ability, but the opportunity, comes to him in the market place, rather than in the pulpit. Christ did not come into the world to found a Church save as an instrument wherewith to save the world. God's appointed means of saving the world is through men. Men would still make Christ King on their terms. He who sifted the crowd till out of five thousand there were only twelve who would acknowledge Him as King on His terms, made audacity a mark of the highest life. Christ never appealed to anything but the best that was in men. In His service there is no short-term enlistment, or part-time employment.

The Church is the converting power, and the layman is as much of the essence of the idea of a Church as the clergy. It is not a question of how much of a man's possessions he gives. The vital question upon which the fate of the world rests, is how much of a man (and the Christian definition of manhood includes all that a man has and all that a man is), remains untouched by the Spirit of the Living God. Until this untouched part of a man becomes an irreducible minimum, he has missed the meaning of loyalty. Until the authorized interpreters of God's will with unceasing earnestness proclaim this truth, the Church will never realize the resistless energy that is generated when whole-hearted men are linked together in a common purpose for a great end.

Once in our ministry after laying siege to a man's heart for ten years we asked him at last whether he were ready to declare publicly his allegiance to Christ. His answer was: "I have longed to do so for some time, but there is one question I must decide before I take this step. If I go into the Church I should like to succeed there. I went in politics and put all of myself into the game, and my will is law in my district. I put all of myself into business and I succeeded there, and I know that unless I am willing to put all of myself into the venture of the Christian life, I can never hope to be anything but a failure. There is no place anywhere for a piece of a man."

It is still true that "the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light." What the Church needs is not money from men who call themselves Christians, but Christian men to whom money is but one means of expressing their loyalty.

When we read the story of the Confederacy, which is the sacred history of our people, we find there two illustrations which may help to make our meaning clear. One is from a letter of Stonewall Jackson to his wife, the mother of his infant child. He tells her that he is sending her an order on the Treasury for his pay as a Major-General, and then continues: "Do not let them pay you a dollar of this sum in gold. Gold is the life-blood of the Confederacy and we must not touch it. Make them give you paper currency for the whole amount."—"Wife and Child and Houses and Lands."

The other is the record of those days that followed close on Appomattox. The shattered fragments of what was once an army! But was there ever such a defeated company? Exultant even in their present despair that they had been privileged to give so much. Broken, ragged, gaunt, stripped to the bone of all that once was theirs, but grieving most of all that they had not more to give. Poverty the badge and assurance of exalted manhood. The only ones in all the land who stood ashamed were those who had money. Its possession then meant in most cases one of two things. They had either traded in their country's misfortune or they had never believed in the Cause.

For once in the history of the race wealth was a crime.

THE RECONSTRUCTION OF CHRISTENDOM

SIR HENRY LUNN, editor of "The Review of the Churches," and leader in the Church Unity movement, delivered an address on "International Cooperation and the Reconstruction of Christendom," in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine Sunday afternoon, November 16. A number of ministers of various denominations and the officers and trustees of the Christian Unity Foundation were invited by Bishop Manning to attend the service and take a place in the procession.

Sir Henry depicted the probability of a next war on a scale much more terrible than that of the recent world conflict, urging Christian unity as a preventive. He cited the new class consciousness which has shown itself since 1914, and mentioned the First, Second and Third Internationals, adding that there was one International—the Christian—which could help humanity.

The speaker called attention to the conference of Life and Work to be held at Stockholm next year, adding:

"But I should be false to the message my Lord has given me if I did not finish on a more personal note. Conferences can only be of value to the Church and humanity in so far as they are based upon the personal consecration of the members of the Body of Christ which is His Church. It may fairly be doubted, if any scales could be found which would justly balance spiritual claim—whether in that event the life and work of St. Francis of Assisi would not outweigh all the good done to the world by the seven Great General Councils of the undivided Catholic Church. What are we prepared to do to help to build the City of God where now stands the kingdom of the evil one? This great Cathedral, in the beginning of which we are gathered together, is a mighty emblem of its spiritual possibility. Rising above all the astonishing evidences of your national prosperity and wealth, it will speak to you and to all men of a power greater than that of all the combined strength, the economic forces of Wall Street, and all the other exchanges and forces of civilization. It will in its ultimate cruciform shape remind men of "That scaffold that sways the future,

Whilst behind the dim unknown
Standeth God within the shadow
Keeping watch above His own."

It will speak of a brotherhood which finds its inspiration in the cross of Calvary and the revelation of the love of the Father for all His children, and the sacrifice of Him in Whom there is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, bond nor creed. Above all, it calls to each other for personal sacrifice. We should live dangerously in nature's great grace. We should be prepared to make greater sacrifices that we may fulfill the will of Our Lord and Master."

After quoting Winston Churchill's forecast of the next war, Sir Henry said: "It is well that we should realize the enormous extension of war in this age of ours. On the field of Waterloo scarce 100,000 men entered into a conflict of a day. In that long battle-line stretching from Ypres to Verdun, in four long terrible years twenty million men were locked in an agony of blood and wounds and death as they sowed the dragons' teeth of national revenge. In a possible great war that may come between Europe on the one hand and Asia and Africa on the other, we might have hundreds of millions of combatants. This is no exaggeration, but a careful and calculated statement. If we do not Christianize the policy of the nations and coordinate their powers for the good of humanity civilization must perish in a world agony of shame and sorrow. We cannot avoid such a greater war * * * if the war spirit be not exorcized. * * *

"The great war has been the final blow to an attempt to impose upon others the domination of one culture and one race. It has left us confronted with the grave situation that white races and their war on each other have raised a sense of power in the onlooker. A new race consciousness has come into being that does not accept the supremacy of the white people. * * *

"We must carefully guard against any attempt to establish the unity we desire by force. To use force to compel the nations against their will is a real danger. The catastrophe of the Holy Alliance a century ago has shown how much we have to guard against mere military combinations and naval combinations. This is not the goal to peace. We need to develop a new Commonwealth of all the Nations, founded upon respect for international law and a keen sense of justice. * * *

"We are also face to face with a new class consciousness which manifests itself in a thousand ways. It is hard for us to realize how altered is the condition today from the condition existing in 1914 and a few years earlier. Since the opening of the Century when the United States of America and France were the only great and important republics, excepting the scattered populations of South America, China has become a republic, India is demanding self-government, Russia has become a republic, Central Europe has replaced its ancient Caesarisms with republics, monarchies have fallen on every hand.

"The social revolution means more than this. Feudalism has gone from the greater part of Europe. The old consciousness of the fight of aristocracy to precedence and respect through birth and wealth has largely vanished. We English, who live in a country that has inherited many feudal customs unknown here, are conscious of a new social atmosphere today. The old deference paid to spiritual and temporal rank has passed away to be replaced by deference yielded only to those whose spiritual and intellectual merits deserve it and demand it. This is as it ought to be, but it means a new orientation of society, a new condition of things in which the new world needs the guidance of those who have inspiration sufficient to guide.

"The endeavor of the workers to find in their Internationals—First, Second and Third—some hope for the future has real justification in the nature of things. There is one 'International' which can help humanity. It is the 'Christian International' which is rightly named when we understand the words in their full meaning, 'The Holy Catholic Church'. Lord Hugh Cecil said truly at the last Church Congress that our divisions had strengthened nationalism and weakened Catholicism. Let us urge upon all who bear the name of Christ the intrinsic value contained in the words, 'I believe in the Holy Catholic Church.' When we use these words let us also make it plain that by this great phrase we understand the company of all faithful people, the whole body of those who accept the will of Christ as law and seek to carry it into effect."

The Spirit of Thanksgiving

Near the heart of our religion lies the spirit of thanksgiving. In the recognition of the goodness of God, in the vision and knowledge of the light which the redemptive life of Jesus sheds upon every hard, dark experience, man has girded himself to serve others, and out of a heart filled with gratitude to God for His blessings, has tried to transmit the joy.

The Christian life is man's response to the love of God. It is the Christian and the Christian alone, who can calmly look at the dark facts of suffering, pain, sin, death, and, in the light which Christ has shed upon them, lift up his head in thanksgiving. He knows how Christ has transformed these dark specters and drawn the sting from death and suffering. Unless the follower of Christ can meet these experiences in a more serene and triumphant way than the non-Christian, his Christianity breaks down.

Thanksgiving is the essential spirit of the service which Christ instituted the night before His death, and asked to be continued in His memory. A later Christianity has over-emphasized the memorial of His death and passion, for to the first disciples, following the commandment of their Lord, it was perpetuated in memory of His triumphant risen life. It was a service at which the disciples renewed their loyalty to a living, present Saviour, and lifted up their hearts in thanksgiving that it had been permitted them to share His life and to spread abroad the glad tidings of redemption. They called the service the Eucharist, a Greek word meaning thanksgiving. This explains the frequency of the world thanksgiving in our Communion Service.

In the spirit of thanksgiving to God, the disciples went forth to spread Christ's Kingdom. It was a new motive in the Roman world. Political intrigue and insurrection Rome had always stamped out by force; but the spectacle of the Christians loving all men, bearing the burdens of the weak, meeting every form of persecution with serenity and radiant joy unquenchable, was a spectacle before unknown in the world. It was unconquerable. It spread rapidly through the whole empire, drawing to it people of every class, with its irresistible promise of joy and thankfulness, that should be theirs independent of all circumstances and conditions. In this, man beheld his birthright, and he eagerly claimed it.

Thanksgiving has been the spirit back of all work for Christ's Kingdom. Not duty, not mere obedience to a law or command, but the spirit of gratitude and thankfulness to God for the new life Christ had created in them, and the passionate desire to share this with others, has been, and is, the driving power in the spread of Christ's Kingdom.

These men and women have been indifferent to fame, hardship and suffering, they have been willing to be misunderstood, to be considered failures, to go down to their death in external defeat, if only in some way by the service of their love, some of the glory of God shed abroad in their hearts might be passed on to others and the power and the glory of the Kingdom go marching on.

Not until we grasp this spirit of thanksgiving, make it dominant in our life, make it a new song on our lips, can we enter into the spirit and power of our religion.—The Rt. Rev. T. I. Reese, D. D., in St. Mark's Outlook.

NON-VIOLENT RESISTANCE

By Kirby Page

THE problem before us is this: Can a modern nation protect itself from outside aggression without relying upon an Army and Navy? Are there effective non-violent means of maintaining security and justice? In order to make this discussion as specific and concrete as possible, let us consider two actual situations, one historic and the other current. First, could France have protected herself against Germany during the years from 1890 to 1918 without armed preparedness and war? Second, can the United States protect herself against Japan during the next fifty years without armed preparedness and war?

There are conflicting answers to these questions. The pre-war French Government said: No, we cannot protect ourselves without being fully prepared for war. France, therefore, participated in the general race of armaments, as a result of which the nations of Europe spent forty billion dollars gold upon armies and navies during the forty years preceding 1914, the rank in order of total preparedness expenditures during these years being France first, Great Britain second, Russia third, Germany fourth, Italy fifth and Austria-Hungary sixth. And the tragic fact was that the higher the arms were piled the more acute became the fear and hatred of the various peoples.

When the storm broke France sought to protect herself by using arms, with the result that a million and a half of her choicest sons were killed, her fairest provinces were laid waste, many of her towns and cities were subjected to military occupation, and millions of her citizens lived under tyranny and bondage for four terrible years. In the end Germany was vanquished upon the field of battle and forced to accept a most drastic treaty of peace. But France did not gain security. Never have her fears of Germany been greater than during the years since the Armistice. And so she has remained armed to the teeth and the old vicious circle has been perpetuated.

Was there any other course open to France in the pre-war days? If she had been wise enough and courageous enough could she have prevented the holocaust of the war? Of course, no one can be absolutely certain on this point. There are, however, certain facts and bits of evidence which throw light upon this question. I should like to suggest the following steps which were open to France.

(1) France might have recognized that there were two Germanys—one militarist and the other anti-militarist—and thrown the full weight of her influence behind the peaceful, non-aggressive elements within Germany. Proof of the fact that these antagonistic groups did exist is found in the political struggle within Germany. From its inception the Social Democratic Party was thoroughly anti-militaristic. So much so that Bismarck tried in every conceivable way to crush it out of existence. But without success. The vote of the Social Democrats grew from 312,000 in 1881, to 2,107,076 in 1898, and 4,250,329 in 1912; while its representation in the Reichstag increased from one in 1871 to thirty-five in 1890, eighty-one in 1903, and one hundred and ten in 1912. In the General Election of 1912 there were nine parties in the field and yet the Social Democrats polled thirty-five per cent of the total vote and elected a larger number of delegates to the Reichstag than any party had elected for thirty years.

The intensity of the anti-militaristic convictions of the Social Democrats is indicated in the following statement taken from their "Official Handbook for German Voters": "The God of Christians is not a German, French, Russian, or English God, but a God of all men, an international God. God is the God of love and of peace, and therefore it borders upon blasphemy that the priests of different Christian nations invoke this God of love to give victory to their nation in the general slaughter. It is equally blasphemous if the priest of one nation prays the God of all nations for a victory over another nation."

(2) France might have strengthened the anti-militarist forces within Germany by altering some of her own attitudes and practices and by abandoning completely certain other policies. The peoples of Germany, as well as most other peoples in Europe, were desperately afraid. They had reason to be afraid. Europe had waged forty important wars in a century. The whole of that continent was an armed camp. International politics centered about the balance of power idea. Nations were desperately afraid that this balance might be upset. Secret diplomacy was the universal rule. This practice gave the imperialists and militarists their supreme opportunity. Propaganda was widespread and had become a governmental science. The militarists in Germany were leaders in this international anarchy, but they were not alone guilty. Moreover, as we have seen, there was a very strong anti-militarist movement within Germany. If France had been wise enough to have exerted herself strenuously against militarism, military alliances, imperialism and secret diplomacy, she could have very greatly strengthened the forces of peace and conciliation within Germany.

(3) If in addition to cleaning her own house, France had spent money, time, energy and intelligence in a continuous effort to overcome the fears and suspicions of the German people and to win their confidence and respect, and had endeavored to secure their cooperation in creating effective international agencies of justice through which disputes between nations might have been amicably adjusted—if France had done these things, can there be any doubt that the tide would have been turned against the militarists in Germany? Even with the deep fear which existed among the German people because of the military alliance between Russia and France and the vast preponderance of the military and naval strength of France and her allies as compared with that of Germany and her allies, and in spite of the widespread and skillful propaganda within Germany against other nations—in spite of all these things the anti-militarists were steadily gaining and in 1912 their combined vote was more than forty per cent of the total. How much support from other nations would have been required to have increased this vote to fifty-five or sixty per cent and thus have destroyed from within the power of Prussian militarism?

Does this discussion seem fanatic and far removed from reality? Is it merely of historic interest? Or are the nations facing a parallel situation today? Does this tragic incident from history shed any light upon present problems?

How can the United States protect herself against Japan? Is cold steel the most effective way to deal with burning passions? Is armed preparedness our only alternative? Before we attempt to say whether there is another alternative, we should ask a prior question: Can we permanently maintain security and justice by force of arms? It is worth pointing out that the answer of history is an emphatic negative. Moreover, the whole tendency of the hour is against this assumption. Modern war is less and less a conflict between two nations; more and more it is waged between groups of nations. There is very little likelihood that Japan would ever make a single-handed attack upon the United States. The supreme danger is that we may drift into a new international alignment which might lead to a general war between many nations. If the war system is perpetuated, is permanent security possible for any nation?

How can we protect ourselves against Japanese aggression? I should like to suggest the following steps: (1) Let us recognize that there are two Japans—one militarist and the other non-militarist—and begin now to strengthen the peaceful and non-aggressive elements within Japan. That there are these two groups in Japan is borne out by the testimony of very many competent observers.

(2) Let us seek to strengthen the anti-militarists in Japan by altering some of our present attitudes and practices and by entirely abandoning certain others. Conspicuous among the practices which we need to change is the manner in which we exclude Japanese immigrants. Japan does not question the advisability of limiting the number of her citizens admitted to America. What she objects to is racial discrimination. If Japan had been placed on a quota basis along with the other nations in our recent immigration law only one hundred and forty-six Japanese immigrants would have been entitled to enter each year. If we want permanent peace we must not only cease racial discrimination against Japan, we must abandon such military gestures as our recent Defense Day. Our recent immigration legislation and military mobilization have enormously strengthened the militarists of Japan.

(3) Let us make immediate and vigorous efforts to strengthen the anti-militarists of Japan, not only by cleaning house ourselves, but by expending money, time, energy and intelligence in seeking to win the confidence and respect of the Japanese people. Examples of how this may be done are to be found in the Washington Conference and the generous contributions of American citizens for the relief of victims of the Japanese earthquake. What would be the result if we should cease spending hundreds of millions of dollars on battleships and armed preparedness and should spend the same amounts in constructive efforts to win the confidence and goodwill of the Japanese people? And what would happen if, in addition to this effort, we should throw ourselves enthusiastically into the task of helping to strengthen the World Court, the League of Nations and other international agencies of justice? Upon which of these plans should we expend most money and energy?

At this point the Churches of America have a very heavy responsibility and a tremendous opportunity. They can put their dependence in the army and navy, and thereby strengthen militarism in Japan, or they can cease to depend upon preparedness and can throw all their influence behind the effort to create goodwill between Japan and our country and endeavor to get our Government to cooperate freely with other nations in strengthening the World Court the League and other international agencies of justice.

At such an hour, I am convinced that the Churches of America should utterly repudiate and abandon the entire war system, for the following reason: (1) Our geographical position and freedom from the danger of invasion makes it easier for us to take the lead in this matter. (2) War on a great scale and with modern weapons is futile and suicidal—and the whole tendency of modern war is to involve many nations. War is not a method which can now be used successfully in achieving security and justice. (3) Because the weapons and practices inherent in modern war are a supreme violation of the spirit and teaching of Jesus. Fifteen national assemblies of the churches have recently passed ringing resolutions on war. These declarations contain such phrases as "the most colossal and ruinous social sin," "inherently and essentially a supreme violation of the teaching and spirit of Jesus," "supreme enemy of mankind," "its futility is beyond question," "neither inevitable nor necessary," "not only futile but suicidal," "in its very nature self-defeating," "fundamentally wrong, inefficient and irreligious," "a denial of the basic principles of the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man," "morally indefensible." If these statements are true, it seems to me that the only consistent course is for the Churches to repudiate and abandon entirely such an unnecessary, futile, suicidal, sinful method as war.

(4) Because of the effects of such action by the Churches on our own Government and upon the peoples of the earth. If our Government knew that the churches would no longer sanction armed preparedness or support war, it would undoubtedly be stimulated to make more vigorous efforts to find peaceful ways of settling disputes between nations. Can there be any doubt that unequivocal actions by the American Churches would thrill the war-weary peoples of other nations and greatly strengthen the anti-militarist forces everywhere?

The Churches of America have two courses open to them, to sanction wars for righteous causes and therefore support armed preparedness, or to repudiate and abandon the whole war system. If they follow the first course they will play into the hands of the militarists in other lands and will help to perpetuate the war system. If they follow the second course, they will, in my opinion, be true to the gospel of Jesus and render an incalculable contribution to the abolition of war and the building of the Kingdom of God on earth. "Not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord of hosts."

NATIONAL YOUNG PEOPLES' CONFERENCE

AS the delegates to the Racine Conference on the Young People's Movement were leaving Racine, they read in the evening papers the announcement that the Weather Bureau had perfected a process whereby it will henceforth be able to dissipate fogs, produce rain, and otherwise control the weather. At first the delegates were slightly disappointed, because the Weather Bureau had accomplished an achievement apparently greater than that effected by the Conference on the Young People's Movement; but on further reflection they concluded that the results of the Conference would be in the long run as important to the welfare of humanity as the exploits of the Weather Bureau. In developing agencies whereby the enthusiasm, loyalty, and vision of youth may be enlisted in the Church's Program for advancing the Kingdom of God, the members of the Racine Conference felt that they had shared in creative activities whose results were beyond calculation.

The Conference faced the two possibilities of the Young People's Movement in the Church: the one, that it should be so unduly and unwisely limited and conditioned as to become disheartened and ineffective; the other, that it should become restive and unmanageable. The action taken was intended to avoid both extremes. The Young People's Movement will have every opportunity to find itself, and to render its own service in its own way, but it is not to become a separate "Church of Youth." Rather, it will be the "House of Youth in the Church."

To give the Young People's Movement opportunity to find itself, and to express itself, the Conference voted that a National Young People's organization should be formed, at or before the next General Convention, it recommended that the governing body should be composed largely of the "young people themselves"; that a National Conference should be convoked, at or before the next General Convention, to effect this national organization, and that this national conference should be composed largely of young people. On the other hand, it was voted that advisers and councilors should take part in the organizing conference and should be members of the governing body of the national organization. Further, in the Statement of Purpose drawn up at the Racine Conference, it was set forth that the Movement needed the leadership of the Bishops of the Church, and appeal was made to the Bishops that they should give to the Young People's Movement their leadership, counsel, and encouragement. They pledged to the Bishops their strength, their loyalty, and their vision.

The Conference met in Taylor Hall, Racine, October 29 and 30, at the call of the Rev. W. E. Gardner, Executive Secretary of the National Department of Religious Education. Twenty-two Dioceses and six Provinces were represented by accredited delegates.

The Conference was composed of nearly equal numbers of young people and of advisers, and the number of boys and men was approximately equal to the number of girls and women.

The Racine Conference met at times as one body, and at times in two houses, the "House of Youth," and the "House of Councillors" (inevitably and immediately nicknamed the "House of Age"). The advantages of this arrangement soon showed themselves. The House of Youth attacked the questions before it with characteristic directness, purposeness, and indifference to meticulous detail of terminology or of measures. The "House of Age" followed the lead of the House of Youth in most matters, so far as concerned the attainment of the main purpose, but took into consideration questions of the relationship of this movement to the whole life of the Church, questions of the remoter results and less direct effects, and questions as to the appropriateness of verbal expressions and the effectiveness of suggested methods. On the whole, the arrangements worked so well, that it was decided to continue it. The National Conference is to be organized in two houses, and the governing body or General Convention of the National Organization is to be composed of a "Senate" and a "House of Representatives." The latter body is to be composed of one delegate from each of the Diocesan Young People's Organizations, while the Senate is to be made up of two young persons chosen by each Province and two advisers, one of which shall be a clergyman, elected by the Young People of the Province.

It was also recommended that a paid National Young People's Secretary would be advantageous.

The following Statement of Purpose, was approved by the Conference:

A Statement of Purpose.

We, the representatives of the Young People's Organizations in twenty-two Dioceses, sent with the approval of the Bishops, and of six Provinces, assembled in Conference at Racine, Wisconsin, October 29-30, 1924, wish to define the Young People's Movement as it is expressing itself in the Church's life.

We are confident that youth is seeking a better understanding of religion and a larger part in the life and work of the Church.

We feel that the Church should provide for us some guidance in our quest.

From our observation, we are convinced that this guidance can best come to us from our Bishops.

We, therefore, respectfully request the Bishop of each Diocese to give to the Young People's Organizations the privilege of his guidance.

We furthermore feel that there should be a larger Organization of this movement beginning with the Dioceses extending to the Provinces and to the ultimate creation of a National Organization.

We feel that this organization should be composed of boys and girls—young men and young women—with a recommended minimum age of fourteen years;

That it should aim to coordinate the activities of all the young people's organizations through the four-fold ideal of Worship, Service, Study, and Fellowship in the Five Fields;

That its ultimate purpose should be to enlist all young people of the Church in the furthering of Christ's Kingdom on earth.

To such an Organization and to such great work for Christ and His Church we pledge to our Bishops our strength, our loyalty and our vision.

Recommendations concerning the financial support of the Young People's Organizations were as follows:

The Diocesan organization to be supported by the Diocesan Boards of Religious Education and by dues from parochial chapters.

The provincial organizations to be supported by dues from the Diocesan organizations and by grants from the provincial synods.

The national organization to be supported, to the extent of three-fourths, by the National Council, and the remainder to be raised by the Young People's Organization from its own resources.

The Conference referred to the national organization, when effected, the proposal that the Movement take as one of its definite tasks, to provide, in whole or in part, for the education in America of the children of missionaries in the foreign fields.

Mr. James Rex, of Chicago, and Mr. L. H. Morehouse, of Milwaukee, acted as chairmen of the House of Youth on the first and second days, respectively. The Rev. C. L. Street acted as Chairman of the House of Councillors. Dr. Gardner, and Mr. Walter Ray acted as chairmen of the joint session.

An Executive Committee of eleven was created, to prepare for the national conference, and to draw up a constitution for the national organization. This Executive Committee was composed of the seven members of the National Council's Committee on the Young People's Movement, together with the following elected by the House of Youth, from the four sections of the country: Mr. Walter Ray, Michigan; Miss Mary Belle Conway, Mississippi; Mr. George Spratt, Iowa; Mr. L. H. Morehouse, Milwaukee.

When Dr. Gardner gave the benediction at the adjournment of the Racine Conference, he performed his last official act as Executive Secretary of the National Department of Religious Education. He said, just before closing that his deep regret at quitting this post, was tempered by satisfaction for the achievement of two objectives long cherished by him, viz.: the bringing into activity of the Young People's Movement in the Church, and the establishment of a national center for Church gatherings there at Racine. The fulfilment of both hopes had come together.

The following lines were read by one of the members of the Conference, who voiced the affection of the Young People for Dr. Gardner, and their appreciation of his splendid leadership:

Our chief, the Rev. William E. Gardner.
Takes each boy and girl for his partner.
And we all hope, in truth,
In the Garden of Youth,
That William will always be gardener.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letter to the Editor" will appear in our columns except over the signature of the writer.

FIRST THINGS FIRST.

Mr. Editor:

At this time three great enterprises of construction are before our Church with their appeals for financial support. The Japan Reconstruction Fund: The Nave of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine; The National Cathedral in Washington. All three are worthy and important objects. I do not now raise the question of their relative intrinsic importance, though that question might be discussed. The plea I do wish to make is for an immediate and serious consideration of the order in which they deserve the attention of the people of the Church. Which shall come first? And to that, the answer, in the minds of all who really understand the situation, is without the slightest doubt, The Japan Reconstruction Fund.

The Cathedrals can wait as they have waited. Japan can not wait. In that land, as perhaps rarely before in all history, "Now is the accepted time, now is the day of Salvation." There today, even more than in the past, events are moving with amazing rapidity. A Nation is choosing this day whom it will serve; what shall be its standards and ideals and aims and associations in the coming period. Shall they be those of essential Christianity or those of a completely non-religious materialism? And in making this choice Japan is watching America with the keenest observation to see what we really stand for.

We helped them in the first days of desperate need after the earthquake and they are genuinely grateful for the human kindness of it. We have harshly warned them off from our shores and the representative Japanese are in fact not angry, but puzzled, mystified and deeply hurt. They are wondering: What of America's Christianity? Is the Spirit of Christ a reality in America? Is it a reality anywhere?

And today in our Church we have an opportunity without parallel to give an answer which will have an influence beyond our measuring on the spiritual and ethical future of half the world. Do we believe enough in the reality and significance of our religion, have we enough of the Spirit of Christ in us, now, first, before we build anything else, to rebuild the Churches, the Schools and the great Christian Hospital of our Mission in Tokyo? Japan is waiting for our answer and she will not wait long before she will have settled the matter in her own mind and made her great decision. And that decision will be not for Japan only, but for the rest of Asia, too, for all Asia will follow Japan.

Kipling wrote once of West and East that never the twain shall meet. He was wrong. They are meeting now. If they do not learn soon to meet on the ground of Christian principles and the Christian spirit they will surely one day meet in a terrible struggle for the mastery of the world. Our opportunity and our responsibility are indeed greater than we realize, but not too great for our acceptance and our immediate action. Shall not the whole Church follow the splendid example of Pennsylvania and put the first things first.

It is my own conviction that in the truest interest of the Kingdom of God not one dollar for any Cathedral building fund should be given or pledged or asked for until every dollar of the Japan Reconstruction Fund has been secured.

Christianity and the Community

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

The Rev. R. Cary Montague, Editor.

SOLVING AN AGE-OLD PROBLEM.

Averaging good and bad years, ten to twelve per cent of all the workers in the United States (several millions of men and women) are out of work all of the time.

Widespread unemployment is now a constant phenomenon with far-reaching economic, social, psychological and moral bearings.

In seeking work through certain types of commercial or fee-charging employment bureaus—particularly those dealing with unskilled and casual labor—thousands of men and women are being exploited.

Public employment bureaus or exchanges can make a material contribution toward the solution of this and other phases of the ever-recurring problem of unemployment.

These are some of the facts brought out in the introduction to the report of a five-year study of employment methods, needs, and agencies, which has just been made public by the Russell Sage Foundation. It is made clear in the report that the figures on unemployment, while representing the average of the country's experience during the last two decades, are not necessarily indicative of present conditions or of the last year.

The investigation, which extended into more than seventy cities in thirty-one states and Canada, has just been completed. The full report, covering more than six hundred printed pages, will be issued shortly. The survey was conducted by a staff of trained field investigators, all of whom had previously been engaged in employment work, under the direction of Shelby M. Harrison, Director of the Foundation's Department of Surveys and Exhibits.

Practically every known means for bringing work and the worker together was studied. The "want ad" pages of newspapers, the fee-charging labor agencies, the free public employment office, the labor union's method of securing work for its members, the fraternal order's activities in this field, the practice of applying for work at the factory gate or the office door, all were investigated. The report will point out the advantages and disadvantages to employer and employee in each of these means and its effect on the general employment situation.

A special study was made of the situation in Ohio, Wisconsin, Massachusetts, and New York, where there has been the greatest development of organized public employment work. Separate studies were made also of the special problems of farm labor, migratory and casual workers, junior workers, handicapped workers, immigrants, Negro workers, and professional workers.

After citing the fact that each year from 1,000,000 to 6,000,000 persons are out of work for weeks and sometimes for months at a time, the introduction to the Foundation's forthcoming report says:

"There is something which we are just beginning to recognize—a resentment on the part of the workers against an industrial situation in which such insecurity and uncertainty of employment are possible. It is not only unemployment but the fear of unemployment—the knowledge that any job is uncertain and insecure, subject to the fluctuations of economic change—which is responsible for much of our present industrial unrest."

This situation, the report will show, has been aggravated by the fact that the unskilled worker who has sought employment through certain types of labor agencies in many cases has been subjected to such abuses as: paying a fee and then failing to get a job; being sent to distant points where no work or where unsatisfactory work exists; but whence he could not return because of the expense involved; being employed through collusion between the agent and employer and after a few days' work being discharged to make way for a new workman while the agent and employer divided the fee.

The principal recommendations of the report are summarized as follows:

That the federal government encourage and assist the states to maintain adequate systems of public employment offices and to coordinate these into an effective nationwide service.

That the states administer and support their own employment offices, subject to the terms of agreement with the federal government; and that the local governments participate in the management of the offices in their community through representation on their Local Employment Committee.

That in order to establish the non-partisan character of the Service, the functions to be performed by the federal government be administered by a Board appointed by and directly responsible to the President.

That this Board consist of the Secretary of Labor, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Agriculture.

That a National Council and local employment committees representing employers, workers, and possible other allied interests be established as an additional aid in securing neutrality of administration as well as a reputation for such.

That the procedure of the Service in respect to demands for workers by employers in whose establishment a strike or lockout is in progress or is pending, shall be such as to guarantee the neutrality of the Service.

After discussing in detail the great variety of administrative systems which have been proposed for a national public employment service, the Foundation's report says: "The balance of weight belongs on the side of a combined federal state-local administration.

"The idea of a nation-wide system of exclusively municipal employment offices seems little less than chimerical. Our observations indicate that the choice of staff in employment offices administered by the municipality has been more influenced by political considerations than that in offices operated either by the state or by the federal government. Too often they have been relegated to the charities department of the city government; and their connection with municipal lodging houses and woodyards has been too intimate."

Discussing the performance of state administrations, the report says: "State control of public employment offices, either singly or in cooperation with local communities, has wrought no miracles. Indeed it has been subject to many limitations, some of which have characterized municipal control. Lack of adequate appropriation has been the most far-reaching handicap. The inadequacy of state appropriations has necessarily been directly reflected in the quality of the personnel of its employment bureaus. From the very beginning compensation has been far too small to attract the type of ability required. Though increases have been made, there is still urgent need for further upward revision of the entire salary schedule.

"Whatever the shortcomings of state administration the fact remains that twenty-six states have established and are now operating public employment offices. While the development of efficient and scientific methods may have been unduly delayed, there has been much progress."

As evidences of the weight of opinion in favor of combined federal-state-local control of the proposed national employment service and against purely federal control, the report says: "Nine out of eleven representative economists unequivocally advocated combined federal-state-local control. The majority of employers interviewed in our study were opposed to an exclusively federal control. Organized labor appears also to favor a federal-state service."

In the conclusion following the discussion of a purely federal versus a combined federal-state-local system the report says:

"Whichever proves finally the more desirable, an exclusively federal or a federal-state-local employment service, it is commonly conceded that the former is not at present feasible; and with this we are in agreement. To think that Congress, either now or in the immediate future, would appropriate $10,000,000 for an employment service, an amount estimated as necessary to provide an adequate basis, is an idle dream. Expediency demands combined federal-state-local administration. We must begin with what we have."

"Ask God to give thee skill

In comfort's art,

That thou mayest consecrated be

And set apart

Unto a life of sympathy;

For heavy is the weight of ill

In every heart,

And comforters are needed much

Of Christ-like touch."

Church Intelligence

The Synod of the Province of Sewanee.

Following the lead of the National Church, the Synod of the Province of Sewanee, meeting with St. James' Church, Wilmington, N. C., November 11-13, did away with the old commissions and boards and created an Executive Council to administer the affairs of the Province. This action, following the recommendations of the committee on ordinances, is expected to result in increased activity and more effective administration.

In spite of the enforced absence of Bishop Gailor and the Rev. J. A. Schaad, who were to have made two of the important addresses of the Synod, the program proved most interesting to the large number of delegates in attendance from every diocese of the province.

At the opening service of the Synod on Tuesday evening, addresses of welcome were made by the Rev. W. H. Milton, D. D., rector of St. James Church, and the Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese of East Carolina. The response was made by the Rt. Rev. T. DuB. Bratton, D. D., LL. D., president of the Synod. Miss Grace Lindley made an inspiring address, based on the impressions which she received while on a world tour of the missions conducted by the Church.

The business sessions of the Synod, held in the parish house of St. James, one of the most complete structures of its kind in the United States, were presided over by Bishop Bratton. The Rev. Mercer P. Logan, D. D., was re-elected secretary, and Mr. T. H. Nickerson as treasurer. The Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D. D., was reelected provincial representative on the National Council.

Of chief interest were the reports of the executive committees of the boards of Religious Education and Christian Social Service. The Rev. Gardner L. Tucker, provincial secretary for religious education, presented a digest of reports from each diocese. This showed a greatly increased activity in Church Schools. In practically every diocese summer conferences for young people were held. Teacher training classes and the development of the Church Schools along modern lines was marked. Bishop Guerry read the report for the Committee on Christian Social Service. Its pronouncements on welfare legislation and the question of peace agitation were moderate in tone, following the lines laid down by the General Convention in Portland.

The provincial organization of the Woman's Auxiliary held its meetings in St. James' Parish House, presiding over by Mrs. James G. Staton, of East Carolina; Mrs. T. W. Bickett, of North Carolina, was secretary. A feature of these meetings was the presence of four young women at home on leave of absence from the mission fields. Their presence and addresses aroused great enthusiasm.

A resolution calling on the National Council to clearly define the status of the Woman's Auxiliary, was passed by the women after much discussion of the subject.

The personnel of the Provincial Executive Council created at this meeting consists of the officers of the Synod as ex-officio members, nine members elected by the Synod, and not more than four elected by the Council itself. The members elected by the Synod were: Bishops E. A. Penick, K. G. Finlay and H. J. Mikell; the Rev. Messrs. W. H. K. Pendleton, J. D. Wing and W. C. Whittaker; Messrs. George B. Elliott, Warren Kearney and G. W. Thomas.

A reception and dinner was tendered the delegates and visitors to the Synod in St. James' Parish House on Wednesday evening, followed by an address on parish organization by the Rev. Joseph Kuenhle and a demonstration meeting of the St. James' Service League. At the closing service addresses were made by the Rev. Messrs. Alexander Patterson, L. N. Taylor and H. D. Phillips.

The Rev. Samuel B. Booth Elected Bishop Coadjutor of Vermont.

The Rev. Samuel B. Booth, of Wrightstown, Pa., in charge of Missions in Bucks County, and known to his friends as "the farmer parson," has been elected Bishop Coadjutor of Vermont.

At the outbreak of the war he entered the Red Cross service as a chaplain. At the end of the war he bought a farm and established a mission on it and gradually expanded his work until he now supervises eleven missions through the country.

Mr. Booth is forty-one. He was born in Philadelphia, and received his early education in the Penn Charter School. He was graduated from Harvard University and the Theological Seminary of Virginia. After his ordination he served for a time as a missionary in Idaho.

A Church Paper for the Deaf.

The Rev. Oliver J. Whildin, missionary to the Deaf, with headquarters in Baltimore, Md., has started a mimeographed monthly publication in the interest of his work. It is called The Silent News-Letter, and, as its name implies, it is not only a carrier of kindly and helpful news concerning all his people to each other, but also a letter from the missionary to those, both deaf and hearing, who are in any way concerned in the spiritual and educational welfare of the Deaf. The Bishop of Maryland has given the venture his hearty approval. Two numbers, of several hundred copies each, have already been issued and so eagerly are they sought that some difficulty is being experienced in supplying the demand.

Self-Starter Needed.

There is always difficulty in starting Church work after the long period of summer activity.

October ought to be a big month for collections on pledges, thus making up the summer's loss, but for the last month our receipts were only one-half of the monthly proportion of the budget quota.

Another trip to the bank for an additional loan was the result.

With a larger budget quota, receipts to date are $17,496.04 less than last year.

Every parish treasurer should be advised of the situation by his diocesan officer. On their work from now on depends the answer to the question "Surplus or Deficit in 1925?"

Treasurer.

Activities At a Country Mission.

On the first Sunday in November the Rev. Deval L. Gwathmey, rector of St. John's Church, Wytheville, preached in the Community House at St. Barnabas' Mission in the "Piney" neighborhood near Ivanhoe in Wythe County. On Hallowe'en a very delightful party was given at this Mission, together with an entertainment. The proceeds from these will be used to defray part of the cost of furnishing daily hot lunches at the public school. Mrs. William Wilkins is the worker in charge of this mission and one of her most able assistants is Miss Mary Fred Claytor, a member of St. John's Church, Bedford, who is at present engaged as the Home Demonstration Agent in Wythe County.

A Bequest and a Novel System.

In the will of the late Charles Macalester, a resident of Wytheville and a Presbyterian, one thousand dollars was left to St. John's Episcopal Church. At the last meeting of the vestry it was decided to apply this to the reduction of the debt on a residence property owned by the congregation and adjacent to the church.

The rector and the Parish Field Department are busy with the preparations for the Every Member Canvass; their local system this year being known as "The Pilgrimage of Devotion." Group meetings are being held by progressing from one group to another until a complete circuit of the parish is made; the endeavor being to reach every member with information before the date for the canvass, December 7. A Stewardship Campaign is being held in the Sunday School and the best essay on "Stewardship" will be sent to Diocesan Headquarters.

Fine Work at Brookewood.

The erection of a church at Brookewood, in Augusta County, and the splendid spirit of cooperation in this new congregation was recently noted in these columns. While Brookewood is the postoffice, the community in the neighborhood of the church is locally known as "Folly Mills." Through the efforts of Mrs. Joseph S. Cochran an arrangement has been made whereby the church and the county school authorities cooperate in the employment of a teacher for the school, and it has been possible to secure Miss Margaret M. Proffe, who, in addition to her work as teacher in the day school, will also give a great deal of attention to social and Church work among the people.

The Sunday School was reorganized on October 5, and has eight classes, with a total enrollment of one hundred. The school is doing splendidly and the interest is fine. The day school has an enrollment of twenty-six in six grades, and the building has recently been repaired and had some improvements made. A Girl's Friendly Society has been organized and recently gave a play, from which about $15 was realized; the proceeds going toward a fund for the purchase of chancel furniture. The ladies of the church adopted a novel means recently at financing their work when they provided a lunch in conjunction with a sale of an important farm property in the neighborhood.

Only once in a long time does a congregation grow as rapidly from small beginnings, erect its own building, and exhibit such a spirit of enthusiasm and cooperation as is the case at the Church of the Good Shepherd, which is under the care of the Rev. John J. Gravatt, Jr., rector of Trinity Church, Staunton.

Memorial Shrine at Orkney Springs.

A shrine in memory of the late Rt. Rev. Robert A. Gibson, D. D., and containing smaller memorials to the Rev. Dr. Landon R. Mason, his son, Randolph Mason, who was killed in the world war, the Rev. W. W. Kimball and Miss Ann Stribling, is in process of erection at Orkney Springs, under the supervision of the Rev. Edmund L. Woodward, M. D., of Richmond.

The memorial, to be known as "The Shrine of the Transfiguration," is situated in a woodland glade on what was once the property of Bishop Gibson. It is being built of rough stone in the form of a Gothic arch, with Gothic windows. Beneath the arch is an altar, and the arch is surmounted by a cross of rough stone.

Dr. Woodward designed and planned the memorial, and has done much of the work with his own hands. He is hopeful that it will be completed by the Feast of the Transfiguration next summer. The shrine itself is to be a memorial to Bishop Gibson, who first went to Orkney Springs nearly twenty-five years ago, and held services there at frequent intervals until his health prevented. The altar, open-air pulpit, lectern, font, communion service, books and altar linen will be memorials to others.

Woman's Auxiliary Meeting.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary in the Albemarle Convocation was held at St. Thomas' Church, Orange, October 30, beginning with a Corporate Communion.

Although the day was a rainy one, the attendance was very large, and reports were read from sixteen branches. Mrs. James Hill, President of St. Thomas' Branch and also Convocational Secretary, presided.

Letters were read from Miss Ambler and Miss Lindley, on the needs in Foreign Fields, and in response to these appeals, it was unanimously decided to send the Offertory to Mrs. Claude Lee, to be used for the refugees in China.

Miss Davis, President of the Diocesan Branch, made an earnest appeal for a hospital in Manila, where two nurses are needed. She also read the emergency statement of the National Council, which we, as the Woman's Auxiliary to this Council, must heed.

Miss Mary Duke told of the book to be studied this fall, "My Father's Business," and urged the Auxiliary to form Bible Classes.

Mrs. C. P. Cardwell, of Hanover County, laid emphasis on the importance of raising the Woman's Auxiliary Specials for the Tuttle Memorial—a home in New York City, where women missionaries on furlough may rest and recuperate, and a home in Raleigh, North Carolina, for the training of colored women workers.

Archdeacon Neve spoke on the work in the Blue Ridge Mountains, pleading for an increase in the salaries of these mountain workers.

Rt. Rev. B. D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, D. D., Coadjutor.

Annual Meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary.

The thirty-second annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary was held in Christ Church, Norfolk, Va., October 28 to 30. Two hundred delegates, representing fifty-six branches, were present. Mrs. Charles R. Grandy, president, made her report for the year past.

Mrs. Meade, reporting on the United Thank Offering, reminded the branches that only about $6,000 of the $10,000, which Southern Virginia has set for the next triennial offering, has been received.

The Rev. C. E. McAllister spoke of the "Influence and Importance of Summer School." Miss Margaret Shearer told of her work at Clarkton. Miss Mary Garrett, Chairman of the Louie Taylor Letcher Memorial Fund, reported the completion of the first $5,000 which is out at interest and will be used in 1925 for scholarships at St. Agnes School, Kyoto. The second $5,000 has been partly raised.

Under the direction of Mrs. T. P. Thompson a very interesting playlet, "Woman's Auxiliary Special," was given.

Mrs. William W. Wishart, of the Diocese of Pennsylvania, gave a practical and comprehensive outline of the plan for mission study in China. The Rev. Cary Montague, of Richmond, spoke on the present opportunity for the Woman's Auxiliary in Social Service.

William C. Sturgis, Ph. D., Educational Secretary, Department of Missions, made a most inspiring address in Christ Church Wednesday night on the opportunity for service in the mission fields.

On Thursday, Miss Lila Tucker, speaking on the relationship of Church Schools and Missions, made a strong appeal for better Christian training for the children.

Mrs. C. E. Smith, of Lawrenceville, reported on the colored work of the Auxiliary in the Diocese.

Mrs. Frank Darling told in a most interesting way of her visit to Pine Ridge Indian Mission last summer, where 4,000 Indians were gathered in Convocation.

Miss Mary H. Hunter told of three institutes held by the Girls' Friendly Society, first at Camp Robert Hunt (where the outdoor altar in memory of the first landing of Robert Hunt was dedicated by Bishop Thomson), then at Dabney House and later at a Y. M. C. A. Camp at Petersburg.

Miss Powell, principal of Chatham Episcopal Institute, told of the work of the School.

Reports were made on the mission work in the Diocese by Miss Annie Hankins, Miss Alice Britton, Mrs. Ira Johnson and the Rev. E. W. Mellishampe.

Mrs. C. R. Grandy, Mrs. W. W. Whichard, Mrs. Norman H. Slack, and Mrs. Walter Ruan were nominated to the Bishop to be appointed as members of the Diocesan Committee on Missions.

The following were elected delegates to the Provincial Synod: Mrs. C. R. Grandy, Mrs. W. W. Whichard and Mrs. Meade; alternates: Mrs. Darling, Mrs. Scott and Mrs. Frank Holladay.

At the closing session Thursday night, the Rev. R. A. Goodwin gave an illustrated talk on Mission Work in China.

Memorial to Mrs. Letcher at Seminary.

On Wednesday morning, November 12, at the Virginia Theological Seminary, near Alexandria, the new building, Sparrow Hall, was dedicated; and in the Prayer Hall, which occupies about one-half of the lower floor, a bronze tablet containing the following inscription was unveiled:

"This Prayer Hall is dedicated to the Glory of God and in loving memory of Louisa Taylor Letcher of Norfolk, Virginia."

She organized the Diocesan Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions, in the Diocese of Virginia, and while its President and President of the Diocese of Southern Virginia, a period of thirty years, over forty young men and women went into the ministry and mission field of the Church, from the homes of members of the Auxiliaries, of which she was the official head. Lives lived for Christ can never die.

Colored Mission Needs Church Building.

St. Mark's Mission at Suffolk needs a church building. A lot 80x125 feet, valued at $1,000, is already owned by the mission, and there is a nucleus of $450 in a building fund. A rented room is now used for Church services, and it is declared to be inadequate and not to admit of reasonable growth. The mission is contiguous to five factories that employ some three thousand colored women and girls, and it is believed that an excellent future lies ahead of it. The work is in charge of the Rev. J. J. Posey, who comes for the purpose from the Bishop Payne Divinity School. The mission was organized in 1915.

Rt. Rev. Herbert Shipman, D. D., Suffragan.

The Rev. Dr. Rainsford Honored.

After many years' retirement, more than five hundred former associates and workers of the Rev. Dr. William S. Rainsford, once rector of St. George's Church, and a national leader along institutional work, gathered at a dinner to do him honor. Herbert L. Satterlee presided, and among those present were the Rev. Karl Reiland, D. D., present rector of the parish, and the Rev. W. R. Bowie, D. D., rector of Grace Parish.

Memorial Window To Joseph Jefferson.

The Episcopal Actors' Guild will erect in the Little Church Around the Corner a memorial window for Joseph Jefferson, which will contain scenes from Irving's story of "Rip Van Winkle." The figure of "Rip," who is Jefferson himself, of course, stands in a compassionate attitude, urging a person toward the Christ, the person being the spirit of Joseph Holland. The unveiling of the window is to occur on February 20, next, the anniversary of Jefferson's birth.

Grace Church, Hastings on the Hudson, was given some time ago a most unusual site, very prominent if very irregular in shape, and offering a wonderful view of the river. Now it is planned to erect a stone edifice, in keeping with the usual surroundings.

It is on the great highway of New York to the north. Grace Church owes much in early times to St. John's, Yonkers, and later to Grace Parish, Dobbs Ferry.

Conferences of clergy of the Diocese are being held in many churches, both city and country, to consider the National Program of the Church. One of the Bishops is presiding usually, and laying stress upon the absolute necessity of the largest of dioceses coming nearer to meeting its obligations. At a conference just held Bishop Manning called for action, and declared that the building of the Cathedral must not curtail the building of larger national work. C.

Service For Sailors: The ninth annual Sailors' Day service was held Sunday evening, November 9 in Trinity Church. "Taps" was sounded for the men who lost their lives at sea during the year. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. H. Percy Silver, rector of the Church of the Incarnation, and formerly chaplain at West Point.

A Special Armistice Service was held Sunday afternoon, November 9, in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. The sermon was preached by Canon H. Adye Prichard, acting dean of the Cathedral.

Memorial Dedicated: Bishop Manning dedicated the new choir stalls Sunday morning, November 9, in Trinity Chapel, Trinity Parish. The stalls are given by friends as a memorial to the late Rev. William H. Vibbert, who was vicar of the chapel for thirty years. Bishop Manning preached and the Rev. Dr. Caleb R. Stetson, rector of Trinity Parish, celebrated the Holy Communion.

The Ven. W. S. Claiborne, Archdeacon of Tennessee, conducted a mission from November 9 to 16, in All Saints' Church, Harrison, the Rev. G. K. MacNaught, rector.

Moving Picture Service at Old Church.

Historic old Calvary Church at Fletcher near Asheville, was the scene of an unusual service on Sunday, November 9, when several men prominent in the Moving Picture world, together with the rector, the Rev. Clarence Stuart McClellan, Jr., held a service in the interest of Better Films and the relationship between the Church and the Moving Pictures. Among the speakers were Colonel Jason S. Joy, of New York City, Secretary to Will H. Hays; Montgomery Hill, of Charlotte, manager of the Famous Players; De Sales Harrison, of Atlanta, former manager of the Howard Theatre, Atlanta; and now southeastern representative of the motion picture industry; and Edward D. Turner, manager of the Imperial Theatre, Asheville's largest moving-picture house. The Rev. Mr. McClellan's sermon had for its subject, "What of the Church's attitude toward the Motion Pictures?" The old church was filled with a very large and interested congregation. The rector is a member of Asheville's Better Films Committee, interested in the staff of the Imperial Theatre and a speaker in behalf of Better Moving Pictures.

The Bishop of Gloucester's Visit.

The Rt. Rev. Arthur C. Headlam, Bishop of Gloucester, was the preacher at St. John's Church, Lafayette Square at the eleven o'clock service on Sunday, November 16, and in the afternoon, preached the sermon at the Washington Cathedral. Bishop Headlam is lecturing and preaching in this country in the interest of Church Unity.

He is recognized as one of the outstanding scholars among the English Bishops. He has served as principal of King's College, London, and Regius Professor of Divinity in Oxford and was last year appointed by the Crown as the Bishop of Gloucester.

Rt. Rev. T. J. Garland, D. D., Bishop.

First Convention, Young People's Fellowship.

Upwards of three hundred young people, representing more than a score of parishes in Philadelphia and its suburbs, met on Monday night, November 17, in St. Mark's Church, Frankford, in the first annual convention of the new Diocesan Young People's Fellowship. This first convention marks another step in a general movement throughout the Episcopal Church in the United States to unite all parish organizations of Young People into strong Diocesan organizations for exchange of methods and for the training of all young people in Christian service that they may be fitted to take their place as leaders in the Church. The convention on Monday night opened with a supper at 6:30. The Rev. L. F. Potter, rector, delivered the address of welcome.

An Interesting Confirmation Service.

Barred from society by leprosy which he contracted after he came to America as a stowaway, Edward Smith, a Jamaican, was confirmed by Bishop Garland November 13. Several months ago Smith expressed his desire to become a member of the Episcopal Church to Dr. William F. Allen, Chaplain of the Municipal Hospital for contagious diseases, Philadelphia. Dr. Allen promised him that he should be confirmed and prepared him for it. Smith shares a small isolated cottage with a man similarly afflicted, who was formerly a lay reader. At the confirmation only the four men were present. According to Dr. Samuel S. Woody, Smith's cure is almost a certainty.

Anniversary Celebrated.

St. Barnabas' Church, Germantown, celebrated its twentieth anniversary November 16. At a special service in the afternoon, when the preacher was the Rev. George Marshall Plaskett, of Orange, N. J. At this service it was announced that the $5,000 fund for the completion of the parish house had been completed. The Rev. A. R. Van Meter, Dean of the Convocation, and the Venerable Henry L. Phillips, D. D.,

Archdeacon of Colored Work, were the speakers at the missionary service.

Mrs. Adeline Pilsbury, a member of St. Asaph's Church, Bala, and Educational Secretary of the Diocese, died November 14 at the Woman's College Hospital. Mrs. Pilsbury had written several books on devotional work.

Pee Dee Convocation.

The Pee Dee Convocation, which includes all that part of the Diocese, which is north of the Santee River, met at St. Matthias' Church, Summerton, the Rev. J. E. H. Galbraith, rector, October 20 to 22. All of the clergy except two were present all or part of the time and lay delegates from six parishes and missions. Sessions were held every morning, after a celebration of Holy Communion, and there was Evening Prayer with sermon each night. Dean O. J. Porcher preached on Social Service the first night, and the Rev. H. W. Mayers and the Rev. W. S. Storey preached the other evenings. The general subject at the morning sessions was Religious Education, with leaders on "Religion in the Home," the first day and on "Religion in the Church School and Parish," and on the Young People's Service League on the second day. The appointed speakers were the Rev. J. B. Walker of Sumter, Mrs. J. H. Coher of Hartsville, the Rev. H. D. Bull of Georgetown, and the Rev. W. W. Glover of Hartsville. This was followed by general discussion. The report of Committee on Constitution and By-Laws was introduced by the Rev. W. S. Poyner, and adopted after considerable discussion.

Summerton is unusually fortunate for a place of its size in having a very pretty concrete church with many beautiful memorials, and a large sweet-toned pipe organ. On the closing night all the other churches gave up their prayer meetings and the church was crowded with this addition to the congregation. The generally expressed opinion is that it was a successful convocation and productive of much good.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop.

Meeting of the Churchman's Club.

Speakers at the fall meeting of the Churchman's Club of Maryland were the Rev. A. L. Fleming, D. D., rector of St. John's Church, St. John, New Brunswick and the blind French soldier-poet, M. Guy Envin.

Dr. Fleming told of his experience among Eskimos in Baffin Land. His strong plea for giving our best to the small, weak and primitive races reminded some of his hearers of the similar challenge to heroic service to these people continuously presented by our late martyr missionary in the North, Archdeacon Stuck.

Decorated with his insignia, Legion of Honor, Medal Militaire, Croix de Guerre, with Palms and Stars, M. Envin pathetically referred to those soldiers who were "prisoners of the night," but immediately passed to the more joyous truth that they were intellectually and spiritually free. He pleaded for the rule of love among all people.

Mr. Edward Guest Gibson, President of the Club, announced the probability of the use of the new Soldiers' and Sailors' Memorial Hall for midday services next Lent.

Rt. Rev. W. R. Stearly, D. D., Coadjutor.

Diocesan Semi-Centennial.

In November, 1874, the Diocese of Newark was organized by the setting apart from the old Diocese of the seven northern counties. The anniversary has been marked this year by various undertakings and the result will not be known until the Diocesan Convention next May. While emphasis is put first of all upon the distinctly spiritual things like the building up of the worshipping congregations, the recall of negligent communicants, the religious instruction of a larger number of young persons, an effort has been made to induce all parishes which are in debt to remove or diminish their debts in the Jubilee year and to increase the amount given in the current year for the Nation-Wide Campaign and make a more thorough canvass for the year to come.

During the month of October, every Church in the Diocese was visited by one of the Bishops, accompanied by the heads of the Diocesan Boards and neighboring rectors to press these subjects upon the attention of parochial congregations. There were good congregations in each church and many of them were completely filled.

On Thursday, November 13, the Thanksgiving service was held in Grace Church, Newark, which was filled with the clergy, and lay representatives of the parishes and diocesan organizations, a very noteworthy congregation. The sermon was preached by the Presiding Bishop, the Rt. Rev. Dr. Talbot, and was a sermon of fine and large outlook, full of wisdom and neighborly kindness. Bishop Matthews came to represent the Mother Diocese, and the whole observance was ordered as a family gathering. There are six clergymen who belonged to the Diocese of New Jersey in 1874 who survive, the Rev. Dr. A. B. Baker, the Rev. Messrs. C. M. Perkins, E. E. Butler, P. W. Sprague, Wynant Vanderpool and L. H. Lighthipe, of which number the last two named were present. At the luncheon the four Bishops spoke briefly.

The Bishop announced a concerted effort to increase the number of subscribers to The Spirit of Missions, saying that he counted a subscription to this best of all missionary magazines as the assurance of increased interest in missions. He made a vigorous appeal to the clergy to make the year a notable one for some definite, large accomplishment in each parish, and said that the Jubilee year would not end until the next Diocesan Convention.

PITTSBURGH.

Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., Bishop.

Mr. Franklin's Visit.

Mr. Lewis B. Franklin, Vice-President and Treasurer of the National Council of the Church spent from Monday, November 10, to Sunday night, November 16, in the Diocese, making addresses and imparting instruction concerning the missionary work of the Church. He addressed the Clerical Union at a luncheon on Monday at Trinity House; the Church Club on Friday evening, at the Pittsburgh Athletic Club; spoke on Sunday morning at the Church of the Ascension, Pittsburgh, in the afternoon made an address to the Young People's Societies of the Diocese at Trinity Church, at a farewell service given for the Rev. Albert Northrop Roberts, of Holy Trinity Church, Monessen, who is leaving in December to take up missionary work in Brazil. Bishop Mann and the Rev. Mr. Roberts also spoke. His last service on Sunday was at St. Stephen's Church, McKeesport. Besides these, there were four gatherings at convenient points, for Vestrymen of the various parishes, which took the form of a dinner or a smoker; and four mass meetings for the women, two in the city at Calvary and Trinity parish houses, one at Monongahela, for the women of the Monongahela Valley, and one at Sewickley, for the women of the Beaver Valley. The women's gatherings took the form of a tea in each case. All the occasions on which Mr. Franklin spoke were characterized by interest, some by great enthusiasm.

CHICAGO.

Rt. Rev. C. P. Anderson, D. D., Bishop

St. James Church, Chicago.

The Ninetieth Anniversary of the founding of St. James' Church, Chicago, will be celebrated on Sunday morning, November 30. The rector, the Rev. Duncan H. Brown, S. T. D., will be the preacher, and the former rector, the Rev. James S. Stone, D. D., will deliver a message of greeting.

St. James' is the Mother Church of this Diocese and is intimately connected in its early history with the names of those people who laid the foundations of Chicago. Here St. Andrew's Brotherhood was founded by the late James L. Houghteling, who first gathered about him a group for Bible study. Today that Brotherhood has become national in scope. A beautiful Gothic Chapel marks the spot where some of these early meetings were held. This chapel is dedicated to Mr. Houghteling's memory.

The following have been rectors of St. James:

The Rev. Messrs: Isaac W. Hallam (1834-43), E. B. Kellogg (1844-49), R. H. Clarkson, D. D. (1849-65), Joseph H. Ryland, D. D. (1867-71), Hugh Miller Thompson, D. D. (1871-72), Arthur Brooks, D. D. County Meeting for N.-W. C.

The clergy and vestrymen of Sussex County, met in the Parish House of St. Philip's Church, Laurel, the Rev. Robt. S. Whitehead, rector, Wednesday evening, November 13, to discuss the Program for 1925, preparatory to the canvass to be made next month. Thirty-two laymen represented the parishes throughout the county, and of the nine clergymen present three were visitors, one from Dover, one from Wilmington and one from the Church Mission's House. The latter, the Rev. R. Bland Mitchell, who was present to speak on the proposed Diocesan Canvass. The address won loud applause and it is hoped deeply impressed all with their obligation to work for the Spread of the Kingdom of God, the Church. Delaware is proud of this year's record, and does not intend to lower it. The Rev. E. A. Rich, of Stanton, spoke briefly, complimenting Sussex County on its enthusiasm.

At the conclusion of the speeches the chairman, Mr. J. W. Trought, requested those appointed to organize a club to meet in another room for organization. This was done, the club to be called the Church Laymen's League of Sussex County, with Mr. Victor Records, President, and Mr. Wm. E. Valliant, Secretary-Treasurer. Supper was served by the ladies of the parish.

Holy Trinity (Old Swede's) Church, Wilmington, consecrated on Holy Trinity Sunday 1699, celebrated the ninth anniversary of the present rector, the Rev. Robert Bell, on November 10. Bishop Cook, the Rev. Dr. Kirkus, Mr. John S. Grohe, and others, spoke, emphasizing the good, faithful work done by Mr. Bell.

His many friends were glad to see the Rev. Dr. Kensey J. Hammond, sometime rector of Immanuel Church, Wilmington, who recently paid a short visit to his old parish.

SALINA.

Rt. Rev. Robt. H. Inge, D. D., Bishop.

Rural Work in Salina.

Church work in rural communities received special emphasis at a gathering of clergy of the District of Salina on October 28 and 29. At the Bishop's request the national secretary for rural work, the Rev. F. D. Goodwin, made an address, telling of the increasing attention Church work is receiving in rural districts, its importance and the need of high standards for its workers.

On the two days following, a meeting of the Archdeaconry of Hutchinson took place, where Mr. Goodwin was the first representative of the National Council, whom most of the delegates had ever seen. The presence of a national representative gave them a sense of their being a necessary part of the whole Church. The six missions of the archdeaconry are making a gallant effort toward development and self-support, for which the lay people are feeling increasingly responsible, and this with no resident clergy.

At Garden City, where the meeting took place, the present work was started only eight months before, and the mission has only seventeen communicants, but they are completely organized and have just opened their chapel, fully equipped without asking financial aid from the Bishop except for the loan of a hundred pews from an abandoned church.

It was from the District of Salina that the report came not long ago of a town where there are no men communicants of the Church, and were two men promised the Archdeacon to enroll the men of the town in an inquirers' class, because they felt the town must have an Episcopal Church.

A Beautiful Garment.

There is a beautiful garment that every Christian should habitually wear. No mantle is more becoming to the children of God, none lends more grace and beauty to their presence, none more uniformly secures the wearer's comfort. This robe is the habit of thankfulness.

There lies on the writer's desk a copy of a very old letter. The man who wrote it was in jail. He was far from home and kinsmen. His situation was uncommonly doleful. But not so his disposition. He had just received some gifts from friends in the Macedonian city of Philippi—perhaps a basket of dried dates, and a warm purple tunic, along with a purse stuffed with coins—at any rate, a substantial gift, representing genuine love, and love's spontaneous sacrifices. He is writing to say, "Thank you." But he says a great deal more. In fact, he says so much, and he says it so wonderfully, that this prisoner's "Thank you" note was destined to live through the centuries, and by the common consent of Christians, to find a place in the canon of the Sacred Scriptures.

It is the New Testament's "Joy Epistle." As we read it, it somehow seems to utter the inmost spirit of its writer, as the song of a lark utters the little bird's spring-time ecstasy. When a man posts joy letters through the bars of a prison, that man must have discovered the long-sought secret of contentment. And so he had. He tells about it in the letter—particularly in what we call the letter's fourth chapter. He declares to those Philippians that he has learned to be happy anywhere and in any state. And the secret of it? In a nutshell it is simply this: Prayerful, trustful, waiting on the Lord "with thanksgiving."

Mark you, it is not "with resignation," but "with thanksgiving!" There is the difference between a stoical Christian and a happy Christian. The imprisoned Apostle was joyous, because with faith and supplication he constantly mingled thanksgiving. He had learned to wear the sumptuous habit of thankfulness. It warmed his heart even when his limbs were shivering, and it clothed him with such princely dignity as no occupant of Rome's imperial palace ever wore.

If we would rejoice in the Lord alway, and know the secret of unflinching contentment, we must constantly wear this same lovely garment. As little birds, gratefully quenching their thirst at the brink of a silvery pool, look up to Heaven after each tiny sip, so must we acquire the grace of acknowledging the goodness of God in all of life's experiences. His mercies abound about us, as the dew of the morning. If we are His, the variable elements in our estate are as nothing compared with His constant goodness. When we are least prosperous we may be most blessed. The prison cell may yield us richer treasures than the open fields. At any rate, it behooves us to wear the garment of thankfulness "in every condition."

All men must be thankful if they will sincerely think. Thankfulness grows out of thankfulness. Men fail to praise the Lord when they fail to consider Him. "Bless the Lord, Oh, my soul, and forget not all His benefits!" In our poor shallow selfishness, it is easy for us to forget. Because we do not pause to think, we do not kneel to thank. Let us then welcome and honor our national Thanksgiving Day. Like a great, golden exclamation point it stands at the end of the autumn saying, "Stop! Think! Be ye thankful."—Christian Observer.

What Is Success?

The Rev. Thos. F. Opiay, D. D.

It is a singular fact that the word success is mentioned only once in the Bible. Apparently, the writers of the Sacred Book had no great regard for what the world calls success. What is this thing we call success? Why are men so hot after it? Is it a worthy ambition? How may true success be achieved?

Is success money-getting? Is it big dividends? Is it social standing? Is it political prominence? Is success a thing of financial rating? Of stocks and bonds? Of forging ahead of neighbor Jones in the business whirl? These are merely by-products of success—and not the thing itself.

Success is progress of personality. Success is expansion of character. Success is service. Success is personal development. Success is growth. "Success is not fame, which may vanish," says the author of the winning contribution in Success Magazine, in answer to that magazine's question—"not riches, which may dissipate. Success is rather that priceless wealth which the heart, the mind, the soul possess when high ideals are fulfilled, adversity is vanquished, the difficult task is surmounted—when achievement triumphs over circumstances."

"It is the act, and not the reward which makes true success," we are wisely told. "Success is honest labor well done. Success is establishing and holding fast to high ideals. Success is vision, optimism, courage to carry on. Each day to have done your noblest—that is success."

Many an unsung mother, many a remote school teacher, many a humble parson, many an honest laborer, clinging to decency, to honor, to duty and to ideals, have more assuredly succeeded than did the bloody Napoleon, the silly Nero or the wrathful, cowardly Kaiser.

To progress is to succeed. Is your home cleaner, sweeter, better ordered, happier than it was last year? Then, there is a successful wife, mother, housekeeper there! Here is a successful woman: "I have served 235,425 meals, made 33,191 loaves of bread, 5,980 cakes, 7,960 pies, in the thirty years of my married life. I have canned 1,550 quarts of fruit, raised 7,660 chicks, churned 5,450 pounds of butter, put in 36,461 hours of sweeping, washing, and scrubbing. I estimate the value of my labor conservatively at $115,485.50—none of which have I ever collected. But I still love my husband and children and wouldn't mind starting all over again for them." Surely that is success! Something in love and devoted service for others—something that counts! This is greater success than was ever attained by a painted Jezebel or an idle Cleopatra.

Success is not mere material progress, but development of mind, growth of character, expansion and spiritual progress. Success is an attitude—a relationship—harmonious adaptation and adjustment to life, to death, to the world, to humanity, to self, to God.

"Success is the progressive development of your best self in accomplishing work worthy of your best efforts and in harmony with the spirit of human progress."

THE PARABLES OF SAFED THE SAGE.

The Parable of the Key That Did Not Fit.

There was a man who sold Antique Clocks. And I saw in his Shop a Great Many Antique Clocks that were for Sale. And I said, How about this Little Old Clock? And what is the Price thereof?

And he said, Thou mayest have it for a shekel.

And I said, A shekel is not much for a Clock. What is the matter with it?

And he said, It hath been cleaned and overhauled, and there seemeth to be nothing the matter of it, save it must be wound two or three times in a day. It is all right if a man hath no other occupation than to keep winding it.

And I said, I will gamble a little on this clock. Here is thy shekel.

And I took the Clock home, and I set it upon a Shelf and it started running to Beat the Band. But after a time it stopped. And I secured a Level, and started it again, and it would not go. And then I wound it, and I found that it had Run down. But when I wound it a little way, the Key slipped on the Post, and went around and around. And the Clock ran about Four Hours and stopped.

Then I said, We have other clocks that have Keys. And I will see what a Different Key will accomplish.

And I tried a Smaller Key, and it wound the clock four times, or it may have been six or eight times as far. And the Clock ran all day and all night.

Now once a day and no more I wind it with the Smaller Key, and it keepeth right on the job. Neither doth it seem to mind being moved around by the Dusting Lady. I have not known a clock that asked Fewer Favours or showed more Constant Industry. And now I know why I got it so cheap. The Winding Posts were worn and so was the Key, so that it could not be wound up; and all it needed was a Key that would fit its worn Posts. And it is so thankful to be running again that it is ticking right away as industriously as the Little Busy Bee.

Now this parable teacheth that there are men who work Ineffective, or who stand idle in the Market Place, whose real trouble is that no Proper Key hath yet been fitted to their Motive Apparatus. And I sigh for the Wasted Energy that is lost upon them, and the waste of their Futile Endeavor, and the waste of the time that they run not, and the uncertainty always of their telling the Correct Time. And I wish for all men that they might find that Key to Right Endeavor which shall start them going as they ought to go. For some of them are on the market at Reduced Price, and that is too much for them as they are; but they might be Productive and Profitable.—Selected.

Thankfulness.

Helen Bayley Davis.

We are so used to fragrance of the flower,

To apple blossoms drifting in the breeze,
To song of nightingale at twilight hour,
The silent pool that mirrors willow trees.—

That we forget to say a prayer
Of thankfulness, for these.

We are so used to sunshine, gilding field

And meadow-daisies with its golden light,

To pink arbutus, sheltered and concealed

By fallen leaves; the moonglow, silver-bright,—

That we forget to say a prayer
Of thankfulness, at night.

We hear the laughter of a little child,
And smell the rare perfume of mignonette—

A winsome baby looked at us and smiled,

We caught the greeting of a friend... and yet

Why do we fail to thank our God
For these? Ah, we forget.

November.

I found ten kinds of wild flowers growing

On a steely day that looked like snowing;

Queen Anne's lace and blue head all
A buttercup leaning close to a wall,

A rusty aster, a chicory flower—

Ten I found in half an hour.

The air was dark with dry leaves flying,

Gold and crimson, gaily dying;
A squirrel ran off with a nut in his mouth,

And always, always, flying south
Twittering, the birds went by,

Flickering sharp against the sky;
Some in great bows, some in wedges,

Some in squares with wavering edges,
Flocks and flocks were flying over

With the north wind for their unseen driver.

"Flowers," I said, "You'd better go, Surely it's coming on for snow."

They did not heed me nor heed the birds
Twittering thin, far-fallen words—

The whole world thought of tomorrow, but they

Only remembered yesterday.

Window Flowers.

The flowers in my window box
Are ruddy-gold and gay;
I've tended them and watched them grow
And loved them night and day.

I bathe their faces now and then
To make them cool and sweet
And tuck the soft brown earth around
Their little crumpled feet.

I try to make them look at me;
They never, never will,
But crane their naughty little necks
And stare across the sill.

They seem to love the sun, and yet
Perhaps when days are fair
They peer outside because they think
I must be playing there!

Betty's Thanksgiving Surprise

Betty always loved to help, so when she went to Aunt Betty's for Thanksgiving, she planned happily how she would help get the dinner, just as she always had done at home.

But it was different at Aunt Betty's house. There were servants to do everything. It was all very lovely and very new to little Betty, but she was such a helper girl that when Thanksgiving morning came, and she smelled some of the good things she could not help to cook, she began to be a little homesick.

Then suddenly she thought of a surprise she and mother had made for father last Thanksgiving day. Mother had written a verse, and, just before they sat down at the dinner table, Betty had stood behind her chair and repeated it. Why couldn't she do that this year? No one here knew her verse, and it would be a real surprise.

Betty said the verse over and over to herself so she would be sure to remember every word when the time came. And she was so happy in her plan that she forgot all about being homesick.

There were guests at dinner, and Betty felt a tiny bit shy. But as they walked out into the dining room she whispered to Aunt Betty, "Please may I say something for a Thanksgiving surprise before we sit down?"

"Certainly, dear," answered Aunt Betty.

"Betty has something to say to us," she said with a smile, as they gathered round the table.

"I couldn't help get dinner," explained Betty, "and I wanted to do something, so I thought perhaps you'd like this little verse that was our Thanksgiving surprise for father last year."

Then she bowed her head and said softly:

"For my Heavenly Father's care,
Around me always, everywhere,
I'm glad on this Thanksgiving day,
And so my loving thanks I say."

For a minute every one was so quiet that poor Betty was afraid she had not done the right thing. But presently her uncle said, "That is to me the very best part of our Thanksgiving dinner, little girl, and I thank you."

"And so do we," said the guests. Aunt Betty did not say a word, but she stooped and kissed Betty, with a look in her eyes that said that she was remembering the Heavenly Father whom she had almost forgotten on that Thanksgiving day.—The Continent.

The Happiest Boy.

Once a king had a son whom he loved very dearly. He gave him beautiful rooms to live in, and pictures and toys and books, a pony to ride, and a boat on the lake. He provided teachers to give him knowledge that would make him good and great.

But the young prince was not happy. He was always wishing for something he did not have.

One day a wise man came to court. He said to the king: "I can make your son happy. But you must pay me my own price for telling the secret."

"Well," said the king, "what you ask I will give."

So the wise man took the boy into a private room. He wrote something with a white substance on a piece of paper. Next he gave the boy a candle, and told him to light it and hold it under the paper, and then see what he could read. He then went away and asked no price at all.

The boy did as he was told, and the white letters on the paper turned into a beautiful blue. They formed these words:

"Do a kindness to some one every day."

The prince made use of the secret, and became the happiest boy in the kingdom. That is good advice for every boy and girl.—Our Little Ones.

The Thanksgiving Pies.

Mr. and Mrs. Harrol and their children had come to spend Thanksgiving with Mr. Harrol's brother and his family. Grandmother and Grandfather Harrol lived in the same town, so they were all to have a merry time together.

It was soon after breakfast on the morning of Thanksgiving day, and the four cousins, Grace and Alice Harrol, Clara and Virginia Harrol, were already playing house. Grace had Virginia for her child, while Clara took Alice, for they had said: "We can play with our own sisters every day, so we must change off now."

They were having "lots of fun" when the telephone rang. "Who wants to go help grandmother with her pies?" asked Clara's and Virginia's mamma as she hung up the receiver. "She has cut her hand and can't roll out the dough."

"I don't," said Clara quickly. "I want to play."

Alice bent lower over the doll she was dressing and pretended not to hear.

"I don't like that kind of work," Grace replied.

"I'll go, and I can play when I come back," Virginia said as she ran for her work apron.

She found that grandmother had cut her hand badly, and certainly needed help with the pies. She rolled out the dough, and put it in the pan just as grandmother directed; then she put in the mince meat; grandmother had to help with the upper crust, but Virginia cut the "eyes," as she called the air-holes. After the pies were in the oven she helped "tidy up" the living room and wiped the dishes, then she swept the kitchen. She stayed to help grandmother dress and carry up the basket that held the pies, and when she reached home it was time to dress for dinner, and she didn't get to play a single bit.

When the nice brown pies came on the table, Virginia felt very proud because she had helped to make them. She could hardly help saying: "Don't our pies look fine, grandmother?" But she knew it wouldn't be polite to brag on something they had made.

Her father looked up when his piece was half eaten. "I never tasted better Thanksgiving pie," he remarked, "and it is because a little girl was unselfish enough to give up her play and help grandmother make them," and he smiled at Virginia.

Then Virginia looked and felt, O so happy! but the other three children looked at their plates and felt very uncomfortable.—Herald and Presbyter.

The Pigeon's Thanksgiving.

The evening before Thanksgiving little Dorothy Perkins was cuddled up in her mamma's lap chatting very happily about the baskets of nice things that had been prepared to send to poor people.

"Oh, mamma," she suddenly cried, looking very grave, "we haven't any Fanksgiving for the pigeons!"

"Sure enough!" replied mamma. "The pigeons must have something nice for Thanksgiving. I believe they would like a Thanksgiving pie filled with sweet corn."

"That would be lovely," cried Dorothy. "A real pie 'spressly for them?"

"Yes," said mamma, "Bridget shall make you one tomorrow morning."

Every day Dorothy was allowed to sprinkle bread-crumbs on the window sill for the pigeons, who came to her call. Many of them had grown quite tame, and she called them her friends. At twelve o'clock on Thanksgiving Day she had on her cloak and hood, and stood at the open window with mamma, waiting for the pigeons.

The little pie made like a cranberry pie, only filled with sweet corn, was placed on the window sill, and Dorothy was eagerly watching to see if the pigeons would eat it. As soon as she began to call them they flew toward the window and alighted as usual. At first they seemed to miss the bits of bread they were accustomed to find.

In a moment, however, one ventured to dive his beak into the pie. Then another and another followed his example, until soon it could hardly be seen, there were so many pigeons around it. Dorothy watched them in perfect delight as they fluttered about and eagerly picked at the delicious food.

When at last every bit was eaten and the pigeons all flew away, she gave a sigh of satisfaction as she exclaimed, "Oh, mamma, wasn't it nice that the pigeons had a Fanksgiving, too?"—Exchange.

Swifter Than the Swiftest.

It was late summer, and Grandfather Gurk, the bullfrog, sitting on his favorite lily-pad, had found this particular morning most enjoyable. This had been a "duck-day" for the squat frog, that is, Willow Pond had been visited by no less than seven different kinds of ducks, and Grandfather Gurk had talked with all of them. The little Butter-ball, the quacking Mallard, the swift Green-winged Teal, the slim Pintail, the Redhead, the Widgeon, and one cross, solitary Black Duck had halted for a while, and given the big frog a chance to ask questions.

Oh, yes, it had been a great morning for Grandfather Gurk, and you would have thought that he would have been satisfied. But it seemed as if the more visitors who came to see him, the more he wanted, and though he had not been left alone for a minute since nine o'clock this morning, he began to grumble just as soon as the last of the ducks flew away.

"Of course there have been more callers than usual," said the bullfrog aloud to himself, "seven visitors, but all one kind, all ducks. Now, if one of them had happened to be an eagle, or something like that, this would have been a perfect morning."

Grandfather Gurk, although quick to notice anything unusual in the actions of any of his feathered visitors, had paid no attention to the somewhat hurried departure of the last of the ducks, the cross Black Duck. That wise, old bird had risen from the water and flown, almost darted to the shelter of the densest part of the rush border at the eastern end of the pond.

The first that the bullfrog knew of a newcomer to the pond was a swish of a swift wing through the air above his head, and a loud, harsh, bold voice calling to him. The speaker was now perching on the dead, overhanging limb that Peter the Kingfisher claimed as his own, but this stranger neither spoke nor looked as if he cared what any kingfisher thought about perches.

"Frogs! Frogs! Frogs!" exclaimed the newcomer.

It seems to be about my luck, When I for dinner wish a duck, And, hunting, then my way I take, O'er brook and river, creek and lake, In fens and marshes, ponds and bogs I find few ducks, but always frogs.

Old Grandfather Gurk thought quickly. He could have told where one, at least, of the ducks was now hiding, but he said nothing, for he knew what would happen if this latest bird-visitor of his heard of the Black Duck hiding in the rush-bed. What the bullfrog did say was this:

"This is one of the times I feel glad that I never grew feathers."

The percher on the kingfisher's tree laughed harshly.

"Even if you had a feather-coat, you would not be large enough to tempt a Duck Hawk."

Grandfather Gurk had been looking sharply at his new visitor, and when he heard the bird name himself a Duck Hawk, he looked more sharply than ever.

The Duck Hawk was a powerfully built bird, almost eighteen inches from tip to tip, with a flattish topped head, and almost no neck at all. The bird's back, wings and head were a dark, slaty blue, the blue running down back from the base of the bill, and under each eye, in a dark, pointed patch on the white feathers of the neck. The breast and vest of the Duck Hawk were brownish, a little darker than creamy buff, and were checked with broken barrings of black.

"That fellow has big feet, I'll say," thought Grandfather Gurk, and well he might think it, for the clawed talons of the Duck Hawk were exceptionally large for a bird of his size, even though he were a hawk.

The bill was a true hawk-bill, strong, and sharply hooked, almost black, except for a light band across the upper part at the base.

"A very handsome bird," said the bullfrog to himself, but not aloud this time. "If the ducks won't stay at Willow Pond, there can be no harm in asking this fine-looking bird to make his home here."

Then aloud Grandfather Gurk asked: "Will you build your nest here if I let you have the top of one of the stunted willows all to yourself?"

The Duck Hawk laughed until he almost fell off his perch on the kingfisher-tree. "Well, I should say not! Don't you know that a Duck Hawk does not nest in a tree? A rocky ledge, a cliff-side, or some place like that is where you have to hunt if you would find the brown-marked buffy eggs of the Duck Hawk. I never think of building what you would call a nest, nor does my mate, who chooses a slightly hollowed spot in a safe place, and lines it just enough to keep the eggs from rolling out."

"That kind of nest-building may be all right, but it sounds to me almost like laziness," thought Grandfather Gurk, who did not altogether like the rough, bossy ways of the visitor.

The Duck Hawk had been keeping a sharp watch in all directions, and suddenly sat motionless, his keen eyes fixed on a bird that was flying swiftly towards the pond from the north. As this bird approached the far edge of the pond it swerved sharply eastward, and flew more swiftly than ever, some twenty feet above the water. Its sharp eyes had seen the watcher, its enemy, the Duck Hawk.

Swifter than the bullfrog thought it possible for the hawk to move, the Duck Hawk left his perch and darted towards the fleeing bird. But, rapid as had been the attack of the hawk, there was speed to match it. The pursued bird, a Green-winged Teal, had now reached the eastern end of the pond, and with an arrow-like swiftness, that not even the hawk could equal, it flashed downward to the wild rice and rush-tangle below, and to safety.

"Ho! Ho! Ho!" laughed Grandfather Gurk, the bullfrog.

"Frogs! Frogs! Frogs! Nothing but frogs! Such a pond!" grumbled the Duck Hawk, as he turned northward and flew away.—B. E. Green in Canadian Churchman.

Glad Thanksgiving Day.

The goldenrod candles are all burned out
By the zigzag fence of gray;
The asters have turned to withered seeds
That the wind will flutter away;
But here's a cheer for the waning year,
And the glad Thanksgiving day!

The thrushes have flown from the tree-tops high,
And the bluebirds could not stay;
And lone and hushed are the empty nests;
But the children smile as they say,
"When frost is chill on the misty hill Comes the glad Thanksgiving day."

They know that the harvest is garnered in
With its ripe and golden store,
And patient and still the brown earth waits,
For the time of its toil is o'er;
It waits the snow that shall fold it low,
Till it wakes from sleep once more.

The daisies will whiten the fields again
And the robins build, next May;
So gratefully sing, little children, sing,
Till the air with mirth is gay,
A song for the cheer of the happy year
And the glad Thanksgiving day!

The Sense of Immortality

By Philip Cabot

In this little book Mr. Cabot, one of the most influential laymen of our time, gives expression to what is now the fundamental conviction of his life, forced upon him through dangerous personal experience. Seldom has the belief in immortality been more cogently set forth; seldom have words been compelled to carry such depth of meaning. In a day of religious indifference Mr. Cabot is a new prophet, his lips touched with coals from the divine altar, his whole heart aflame with his message. Such faith will not only bring deeper satisfaction to those who already believe; it must carry unusual weight to the hesitant who are still debating the question of life after death.

Thanksgiving Fable.

It was a hungry pussy cat upon Thanksgiving morn,
And she watched a thankful little mouse,
That ate an ear of corn.

"If I ate that thankful little mouse, how thankful he should be,

When he has made a meal himself, to make a meal for me!

"Then with his thanks for having fed, and his thanks for feeding me,

With all his thankfulness inside, how thankful I shall be!"

Thus mused the hungry pussy cat, upon Thanksgiving Day;

But the little mouse had overheard and declined (with thanks) to stay!

—Oliver Hereford.

A Thought.

The camel, at the close of day,
Kneels down upon the sandy plain
To have his burden lifted off,
And rest to gain.

My soul, thou, too, shouldst to thy knees,

When daylight draweth to a close,
And let thy Master lift the load
And grant repose.

"How Long Shall It Be to the End?"
Dan. 12:6.

Does the Cronological Answer to the Above Question point to the very year of our Lord's Return?

When the difference in the lengths of the four periods of Daniel 12 is regarded as occurring at their beginnings instead of at their endings, and when they are seen thereby to have a common end and to culminate in a single year (the present one), is not this the opening of God's long closed timeclock, the unsealing promised to "the wise" in "the time of the end." Get rid of constipation by internal cleanliness

H EADACHES, biliousness, sleepless nights, heaviness, are Nature's warning that intestinal poisons are flooding your system. If this is allowed to continue, you may become a victim of serious organic disease.

Laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, says a noted authority, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition and often lead to permanent injury.

Why Physicians Favour Lubrication

Medical science has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus, Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless.

Take Nujol regularly and adopt this habit of internal cleanliness. For sale by all druggists.

Bonham Bird: Died on the 19th of September at Teignmouth, S. Devon, MARY BOWDOIN PAGE, poet and writer, wife of Gilbert Bonham Bird. Cremation September 23rd, at Golders Green, for burial at Cobham, Virginia.

MRS. CHARLOTTE BARNES WRIGHT SCOTT.

Entered into life eternal from the University Hospital, Charlottesville, Va., October 11, 1924, CHARLOTTE BARNES WRIGHT SCOTT, beloved wife of Dr. Frank Garrett Scott, of Orange, Va. and daughter of Mrs. Della Preston Wright and the late Judge T. R. E. Wright, of Tappahannock, Va. She is survived by her husband, her mother, two sisters—Miss Jeannette Wright, of Richmond, and Mrs. Everard Meade, of Boyce, Va., and three brothers—Messrs. Preston Wright, of Madison, N. C., T. R. B. Wright, Jr., of Syracuse, N. Y., and Hon. William Wright, of Tappahannock.

Reared amid the best traditions of her native State in a home where refinement, culture and Christian training were the atmosphere of her daily life, this lovely and beloved woman absorbed into a nature rarely noble and pure those influences that molded the happy girl into the woman whose grace and charm were the fine flower of those sterling qualities on which respect and confidence rest secure after the heart is won.

Married December 28, 1912, she brought from her old home into her new the rippling laughter of her joyous girlhood, drawing around her a host of friends. The home she so adorned became a center of hospitality, the rare flavor of which was that courtesy and consideration for others that characterized the gracious hostess, putting each guest at ease, drawing out the best in all. Loving little children, the young folk, sure of their welcome, tripped in and out of her pleasant home, responding to the sunny influence of her presence, which did not restrain their gaiety while making them gentler for the contact. Highminded and unselfish, the soul of truth and honor, every cause that needed support found in her an ally. In the social, civic and patriotic circles of her community, as in the activities of her church, she was always prominent—indeed, indispensable—in her sound judgment, her good taste, tact and ability. In the giving of herself, her time, her means, she gave royally; faithfully and fully she tried out the stimulus of Christian service—"Give, until it hurts." Though the encroachment of an insidious disease threatened blindness, and slowly but surely sapped her strength, demanding at every turn a heavy toll, it was as though she whispered to herself, "Excelsior!" When the Great War drew into voluntary service her husband and brothers, and others of her near connection, the same spirit of self-sacrifice enabled her to follow on, as it were, in personal service, in Camp or Cantonment, giving cheer and comfort as was her wont; thus participating in her husband's interests and in his work, as she had ever done, and continued to do after their happy re-union in the re-opening of their home.

In the long and longer periods of weakness and suffering that prostrated her, at ever-shortening intervals, in the last years of her life, hope and a splendid courage sustained her, and in her absolute unselfishness she was ever planning and doing for others, so that friends who went to cheer and lighten her forgot their mission, receiving the cheer they sought to convey. With the up-keep of her home, every detail of which was a joy to her, her mind was busy even when her capable hands must needs be still. Throughout the long conflict her sweetness and patience were a marvel to all who loved her. Truly, the fine gold of her character was tried as by fire, and came through the ordeal without alloy.

Having just attained her fortieth birthday, her race well run in so short a span, she was called from her sphere of usefulness here to the higher service of the Paradise of God. Such as she can ill be spared, whose fair lives fulfil their promise, illumining the way they tread, making the path of duty easier for others, by their bright example. With sad hearts we mourn our loss, yet are comforted by the thought of her release, and thrilled by her triumphant entrance into the glory of her Lord.

"For all the saints, who from their labors rest,

Who Thee by faith before the world confessed,

Thy name, O Jesus, be forever blest. Alleluia."

M. N. M.

THOMAS CARTER DULANY.

Youngest son of H. Rozier and Anne Carter Dulany, of Oakley, Fauquier county, Virginia.

So suddenly parted the spirit from the fair form of this splendid young man that those who loved him had no time to say to him "Hail and Farewell!" So true and faithful was he, and so tender with those who loved him, that they know that with him all is well. From his early youth, drilled in the principles which have produced the best men of our country, and sharing with them their traditions and ideals along with their blood, he walked in the Christian paths of love and duty, and possessed those qualities of mind and heart which coupled with an engaging personality, made him a favorite in any company.

From the Episcopal High School, with its traditions and fine influences, he entered the University, where he acted as one would who bore a proud name and goodly heritage, and seemed to possess the rich promise of future usefulness.

Handsome in person, gallant in spirit, upright in his dealings, modest, though courageous, he was regarded by those who knew him as one who bore the certain mark of a brilliant career.

Thus he was as he retired to rest on the first day of November, 1924, in the fullness of his youth, surrounded by companions whom he loved, knowing the love his family and friends bore him; conscious of the Fatherly love which he had early been taught, he went to sleep to awake in the bosom of God.

ROSEWELL PAGE.

MEMORIAL.

As representing the clergy ministering to the deaf in the United States, the undersigned, his co-workers, desire to place on record an expression of our esteem and sense of great loss in the death of the REVEREND CHARLES ORVIS DANTZER, M. A., a priest of the Church, and up to a short time before his death pastor of All Souls' Church for the Deaf, Philadelphia, Pa., who entered into Life Eternal Sunday, October 26, 1924.

After serving efficiently as missionary to the deaf in the Dioceses of Central and Western New York, Mr. Dantzer became pastor of All Souls' Church for the Deaf, Philadelphia, continuing in that capacity for approximately twenty-five years. Throughout his ministry he endeared himself to the people and was a pastor in every way, entering into the joys of his people and always ready to share their sorrows. It was largely due to his indefatigable labors that the present All Souls' Church for the Deaf was built, and the church edifice will stand as a memorial to him and his work.

To his widow and family we extend our sincere sympathy.

May he rest in peace and light perpetual shine upon him.

JOHN M. MEADE.

On the eve of his seventy-first birthday, JOHN M. MEADE, one of the pioneer railroad men of Kansas, died at his home, at Fillmore and Crane streets, Topeka, Kansas, October 30, 1924. Death came after an illness of two and a half years.

Mr. Meade was born at Nineveh, Va., November 1, 1853, the son of John Nelson Meade. His early education was obtained at Shenandoah Valley Academy, at Winchester, Va. He removed to Kansas in 1877 when he was made assistant to the superintendent of construction of the Santa Fe railroad. On July 1, 1915, he was given the title of special engineer for the entire Santa Fe system, which title he held until his retirement in 1919.

Mr. Meade was married to Miss Jennie Ward, of Topeka, November 12, 1879. He is survived by his wife and seven children. They are: Mrs. Mary Ewart, of Topeka; Mrs. W. E. Ramsey, of Arkansas City; Mrs. Russell Cave of Manhattan; Alice Meade of Topeka; Holmes Meade, of Topeka; Nelson Meade, of Denver, and Lakin Meade, of Topeka.

Mr. Meade had been one of the pillars of the Grace Cathedral congregation since he came to Topeka and served for a long term of years as vestryman and for several terms as a trustee of Bethany College.

Funeral services were held from Grace Cathedral, Topeka, Dean Theodore R. Ludlow officiating, assisted by Rt. Rev. James Wise, Bishop of Kansas, and Canon David Beatty.

A New Chapel for Zion Church. The building of a new chapel at Ransom under Zion Church, Charles Town, has already begun. This is one of a number of thriving missions in this parish.

Board of Social Service in Penitentiary. The members of the Diocesan Board of Social Service were the guests at a delightful dinner in the apartments of Warden Smith of the West Virginia Penitentiary at Moundsville. After the dinner a meeting of the Board was held and a constructive program of work instituted.

Brought to Light. The work at Logan has been admitted by the Bishop as an organized mission of the diocese. The Rev. W. H. Cumpston, in charge of this work, has carried out a survey of the county, not yet completed, but has discovered fifty-six families, seventy-nine communicants, and one hundred and seventeen baptized members of the church, hitherto unreported.

In Their New Home. The Rev. and Mrs. Jacob Brittingham have moved into their new home on Walnut Avenue, Woodlawn, Wheeling. In this locality also dwell the Bishop Coadjutor and the rector of St. Matthews, Wheeling.

Church Building Activities in Louisville.

The beautiful and commodious parish house close by the Church of the Advent, the Rev. H. S. Musson, rector, is steadily progressing toward completion, with facilities planned that will mean far-reaching usefulness in every line of evangelistic and social service agencies.

St. George's Mission, in the western end of the city, the Rev. J. Webber-Thompson, rector, is building a similar addition to its parish plant, and its people are bending every effort to the achievement of a hope long cherished, and a necessity imperative to the furtherance of enlarging opportunity.

Emmanuel Mission, an outgrowth of St. Andrew's Parish, in charge of the Rev. William O. Johnson, is rejoicing in a most attractive rectory, which will be completed just in time for a Thanksgiving house-warming and reception to the young priest and his bride of but a few months. This mission, situated in a rapidly growing section in the southern part of the city, has a most promising outlook, and in proportion to its communicant list is already making a rare record through its Church School, its Woman's Auxiliary, Parish Guild, and especially its Men's Club.

Church Attendance Campaign.

A six weeks' campaign, planned with fine executive foresight, has been completed in the Cathedral, with enlarged Church attendance as its objective aim, and with encouraging reports. Many features of interest have marked its progress, and the Rev. Franklin Cole Sherman conducted daily classes and awakened much interest in the study offered by the American Guild of Health.

In Bowling Green, one of the older towns of the Diocese, a parish organized three quarters of a century ago, has seen its fruition in the consecration of Christ Church, erected in 1913, and now released from all financial obligations. During the past year a new parish house has also been built at a cost of $15,000, and under the faithful ministry of its rector, the Rev. A. E. Cole, and active vestry, an enlarged field of service and hopeful growth is anticipated.

Conferences for the Laity.

Five conferences at five strategic points in the diocese will be held this month by Mr. L. L. Giallard, one of the Field Secretaries of the National Council. He will be assisted by some of the clergy of the diocese. The conferences will be for the laity.

The Rev. Dr. Geza de Papp, a minister of the Magyar Reformed Church, has been recommended for ordination to the Diaconate and Priesthood by the Standing Committee of the Diocese.

Dr. de Papp's work lies in the mining region of Eastern Kentucky, where he is doing a very excellent work. A class for Confirmation is being prepared, and the Bishop will make a visitation to this field soon.

St. Andrew's Church, Fort Thomas, the Rev. W. B. Dern, rector, celebrated its fifteenth anniversary on November 2 and 3. On the second the Bishop of the diocese preached and administered the Rite of Confirmation. On the third there was a Corporate Communion for the Woman's Auxiliary of the parish. The Rev. Curtis Fletcher, a former rector, being the celebrant. On the night of the third the anniversary program was held.

Educational Conferences: By the suggestion of the Men's Bible Class of Calvary Church, Ashland, a series of educational conferences, on the general subject, "My Father's Business," are being held on Sunday nights during October and November with very fine attendance on the part of the congregation.

Marshall Field once said: "Careful saving and careful spending invariably promote success. Economy is one of the most essential elements of success, yet most wretchedly disregarded."

We again call attention to the attractive terms on which we invite accounts: Where the balance maintained is $500 or more, we pay 3 per cent interest, which is calculated on the average daily balance and compounded monthly.

Capital and Surplus.....$2,000,000.00

Thousands say of this book:

"This is just what I have always wanted!"

Dr. Lyman Abbott, one of the nine eminent educators who created the new plan described here.

Will you accept it, FREE?

A YOUNG business man once said to a famous newspaper editor: "You know so much about life, tell me what is the matter with me. I can't read worthwhile literature. For the past two weeks I've been trying to read the works of Carlyle, yet I—"

"Stop," exclaimed the editor. "Have you ever tried to eat roast beef three times a day, seven days a week? That is what is the matter with your reading—you need variety, daily variety. Then you'll find the reading of immortal literature one of the most thrilling pursuits of your life. Yes, and the most profitable."

Everybody knows that good literature offers the surest, quickest way to broad culture.

But where to begin is the question. There is such a multitude of famous writings. We have only time to read the most important ones.

The Tremendous Problem.

This is the problem that has always stood in the way. And then, recently, suddenly, by a stroke of consummate genius, nine of the most famous men of letters did strike upon a plan which threw open the doors of literature's treasure house. It made reading of the worth-while things one of the most entertaining of pastimes.

These nine eminent men were Dr. Lyman Abbott, John Macy, Richard Le Gallienne, Asa Don Dickinson, Dr. Bliss Perry, Thomas L. Masson, Dr. Henry van Dyke, George Iles and Dr. Hamilton Wright Mable.

Thousands Acclaim It.

The inspiration that came to these men was a Daily Reading Guide—an outline which would schedule for each day's reading an entertaining variety of prose and poetry, of fictional writing and historical description.

This variety was so arranged that the selections fell upon anniversary dates in each reader's calendar. Thus on July 14 much of the reading is about the Fall of the Bastille. Each day is full of such timely interest.

The Daily Reading Guide requires only twenty minutes of reading a day. It is for busy men and women. One year's reading brings you broad culture. Already this Daily Reading Guide in book form has solved the reading problem of thousands.

ACCEPT IT FREE.

In the interest of good reading it has been decided to distribute a limited edition of the Daily Reading Guide free. You are asked only to help defray the expenses of handling and mailing by enclosing 25c with the coupon. The Daily Reading Guide, bound in rich blue cloth and containing nearly 200 pages with introductory articles and essays by the famous editors, will be sent to you entirely free of all other costs or obligation. This famous book can mean so much to you in helping you to a wider and deeper erature that you should take advantage of the world's great literature of this unique opportunity at once. RESPONSIBILITY

Who is responsible for the National Program of the Church?

Responsibility for the National Program is of five kinds:

1. Responsibility for making the Program.
2. Responsibility for executing the Program.
3. Responsibility for apportioning the sum needed for the execution of the Program.
4. Responsibility for raising the sum needed.
5. Responsibility for providing the sum needed.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR MAKING THE PROGRAM

The National Council is required to prepare and submit to the General Convention a Program for the ensuing triennium, including a detailed budget for the ensuing year and estimated budgets for the two succeeding years. It is provided that the General Convention shall consider this Program at joint sessions and after consideration take appropriate action. The Program adopted by the General Convention becomes the National Program for the ensuing triennium.

The joint Conference of the Bishops and National Council held recently in New York was called for the express purpose of giving the National Council the benefit of the advice of the Bishops in the preparation of the Program which will be submitted to the General Convention next fall.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR EXECUTING THE PROGRAM

The Canon provides that the National Council shall have charge of the unification, development and prosecution of the missionary, educational and social work of the Church; shall exercise all the powers of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society; and shall have power to expend all sums of money covered by the budget and estimated budgets and to undertake such other work as its income will warrant.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR APPORTIONING THE SUM NEEDED FOR THE EXECUTION OF THE PROGRAM

The Canon provides that the Council shall submit to the General Convention a plan of apportionment. After the General Convention adopts a plan the National Council must make apportionments according to this plan and notify the dioceses and districts. Each diocese and district then adds to its apportionment the sum needed for its diocesan program and apportions the combined sum to the parishes and missions. The quota assigned to a parish or mission therefore covers both diocesan and general work. The diocese determines what proportion of the total amount raised to meet these quotas shall be sent to the National Council for the National Program.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR RAISING THE SUM NEEDED

The Canon provides that after the apportionment to the dioceses and districts and after the allotment of quotas by them to the parishes and missions, "each diocese and district and the parishes and missions thereof shall then take necessary steps to raise their respective quotas." The diocese does not discharge its responsibility by allotting quotas to the parishes, but is expressly charged with the duty of taking "necessary steps." In other words, the Canon contemplates a diocesan as well as a parochial effort. It is to be noted that the National Council is made responsible for executing the work but not for securing support for the work. Nevertheless the National Council renders to the diocese every assistance in its power in securing the needful support.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR PROVIDING THE SUM NEEDED

The support of the work of the Church can come only from the members of the Church. They constitute the Church. They are all members of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society. It is their work which the National Council executes. In all these above-mentioned responsibilities the members of the Church act through official representatives. In providing support for the work they bear the responsibility personally.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

Christ sees in a man what He will make of him.—A. W. Kelly.

Peter, the bold man, fell by cowardice; Moses, the meek man, fell by anger; Solomon, the wise man, fell by folly; and there is no telling by what we may fall.—The Lutheran.

"If the will moves needle-like to the one blessed point, the Holy Will of Jesus, and rests there, the deepest conviction of prevailing prayer is realized."

Is our religion flame or ice? Where among us are to be found lives blazing with enthusiastic devotion and earnest love?—Alexander MacLaren.

"If you have faith, preach it; if you have doubts, bury them; if you have joy, share it; if you have sorrow, bear it. Find the bright side of things and help others to get sight of it also. This is the only and surest way to be cheerful and happy."

Those who live by faith in God in the midst of great trials and sorrows do not grow callous, nor are they hardened. They are conscious of the storm that sweeps about them, but they live on in quietness and patience, knowing that God will protect them.—Christian Observer.

Are we aware of the urgency of the present moment, of the precariousness of today, of the inevitable approach of life's night? Are we aware of the brevity of the noontime? The whole purpose of religion is to enable us to make the most of life. Work is a law of life. It is not faith, but faith's true bloom and fruit.—C. C. Albertson.

"Ask, seek, knock," says our Lord. To ask is to have a sense of need, and when our souls are alive to their needs, asking follows. If mere asking wins no response, intensify it and seek. If seeking proves insufficient, knock till heaven's door opens. Could encouragement to pray with faith and hope be made stronger?—Lutheran.

Truth will not dissolve into its elements at the touch of science. Truth needs faith, such faith, such surrender as Saul of Tarsus evinced, when the

THE EXPENSE OF GLORY

One of the saddest commentaries upon the great war was that it brought to light again the inherent sin and debasing tendency of what is known as a military career. Soon after America entered the war we were privileged to spend an evening with a distinguished officer in the army of the Allies, and in the conversation we asked him what was the general impression at headquarters of the personnel of the American general officers. His reply was, "They have quite swept us off our feet. They are eager to learn and only ask the privilege of serving. We haven't hit upon a self-seeker yet. They have got hold of the truth that the glory is in the serving, and are willing to do it anywhere and anyhow." Then he added sadly: "If some of those in the glare had found out that truth three years ago, there would have been no need for America to come in. We would have won the war before now. It is the seekers after glory for themselves who have kept the shambles bloody all the time. The greed for glory has made effective cooperation impossible." We shall never forget the bitterness of his speech when he went on with the story. "I have seen the fate of a battle trembling in the balance while professional soldiers disputed about matters of military etiquette and the prerogatives of rank and seniority. Vanity is the worse curse of military life."

Many a time since that evening his words have come back to us. Apart from the story of unselfish devotion in the lives of individuals, we have schooled ourselves to take but little interest in war. For the most part, war is but selfishness in action, criminal folly that inoculates whole nations with the virus of hate, and is more destructive to the character of non-combatants than to those who make atonement for the evil thing in their hearts by the sacrifice of life on the battlefield. The bloodiest name in history is Glory. The crimes that have been committed in the name of Liberty are but peccadilloes compared to those done in the name of Glory. Glory is as cruel and ruthless as fire or flood. Loyalty, patriotism, comradeship, go down before it. Nothing is too costly, nothing too precious, nothing too holy for its destroying embrace. Glory seeks the company of all the great virtues; calls them friends and sings their praises, but history has shown that Honor, and Truth and Loyalty never had a more dangerous friend than that love of praise which men call Glory.

All that is here written is by way of prelude to a very simple statement, which is sure to bring forth protest, but is nevertheless inherently true. The great sin is schism, and there is just as much schism in our Church as in the world about us. The divisions of Christendom are but a picture of the divisions within every branch of Christendom. The divisions of Protestantism owe their origin in most cases to the stubbornness and rancor of individuals. The shipbooths, with which these divisions were once defended, have for the most part been forgotten. The barriers that divide cannot be seriously described as either those of faith or order. We are intensely interested in the Conference on Faith and Order, but it will never get anywhere unless it recognizes at the beginning that the real differences are those growing out of Vanity and Bad Manners, which together spell Disloyalty. It is striking how the life that is called Christian in any city is like the broken fragments of a large crystal. Every fragment shows the same axes of crystallization found in the larger one; and if these fragments be broken up into individual lives the axes are still the same. The axes of schism are ever the same, Vanity and Bad Manners. Say there are twenty variants of ecclesiastical order and doctrine in a city; and that each variant has five separate congregational representatives! It is readily agreed that under such conditions there will be twenty claimants to the devotion and loyalty and partisan affiliation of the people of the city. There is schism a plenty with its inevitable manifestations. This, however, does not tell but a part of the story. Every one of the five representatives of each of the variants has caught the spirit of the struggle, and what goes on between the variants, goes on in precisely the same manner within the life of every variant. Every congregation out for itself. Every Church (and the proof of our contention is that "our Church" to most of us means the particular pile of bricks we have helped to rear), like rival herdsmen on a free range, is fighting for the best herbage and the largest water hole. The simile is far-reaching, for they do combine to oppose the inroads of the sheepmen. (The Ba-ba men who do not speak their tongue—and this includes all the nineteen other variants.)

This is not an indictment, but a confession. We fought this devil of schism for twenty-five years in our own life. We saw it all about us; and watched it work disaster and eat the heart out of loyalty. The words: "Whosoever is forever striving to save his life shall lose it," are not a mere warning to the individual self-seeker, but the statement of the principle upon which rests the whole spiritual structure of the universe.

The self-seeking Church is defying this principle of life itself. The result is a divided and dividing Christendom, with infinite waste of means and opportunity.

Sidney Smith's words come back to us as we write: "There is nothing so expensive as glory."

BLIND ALLEYS

Bismarck once said in regard to the intensive program of education in Germany, that the greatest menace to Germany's future was the fact that its program if carried out would result in an overeducated proletariat.

It is difficult for us in America to understand life from the standpoint of autocracy. What Bismarck probably meant was that the trained intelligence of the nation, having no adequate play for its exercise in other fields, would busy itself with the study of governmental principles; and that education, no matter how guided and guarded by governmental influence would inevitably lead to the overthrow of government. It will be a long time before America will have a problem of the overeducated proletariat. There is no dearth of schools—lower and higher; but somehow the whole system of education has lost the sense of proportion. With every avenue of learning—science, literature, history, economics and art—open, the youth of the land seem to have missed the meaning of it. There are plenty of young men and women who study hard, but outside the comparatively few who are preparing themselves for some particular vocation, none of them seem at all interested in what they are studying. They are studying to be able to pass an examination. A diploma generally means that he or she who has earned it, has really, in the language of the schools, finished Mathematics, or Latin, or History, or Literature. In most cases the process of acquiring a sufficient knowledge of these to pass an examination has killed forever the roots of interest. One reason for the futility of so much of our educational system lies in the fact that the teachers' horizon is so narrow that they think that a school-teacher's education or a college professor's education is the one type desirable. Schools and colleges are trying to educate all the pupils to be school-teachers. The result of the endeavor is to make a poor type of school-teacher, and to fill our land with young men and women who since they can find no possible use for the school-teacher kind of education in the world into which they have come, deliberately turn their backs upon it, and start out at twenty-two or twenty-three with a fair equipment in English, some little knowledge of the lower branches of Mathematics (the knowledge of the higher branches has been tossed upon the waste-heap), to explore the world. There are certain roads, however, they are determined never to travel. Those roads are forever blocked for them and blocked by a diploma certifying that they have a school-teacher's knowledge of this department of human interest. We are not speaking lightly of the school-teachers, for we believe that they represent perhaps the highest example of unselfish service in our civilization. They are themselves the greatest sufferers from a system of education which forces the mind into a mould; and though they recognize that this process has made the acquisition of knowledge a dry, and often profitless task, they are forced to perpetuate the system. For many years the system itself has been under fire.

We are quite certain that the function of education so far as the school is concerned is to train youth in methods of accuracy and to think a thing through whether it be a sum in arithmetic or the use of a subjunctive. The value of such training is, however, largely destroyed if the method of instruction be such as to destroy interest in the subject matter. The dead languages have been killed by the school teachers, and the lost arts probably owe their fate to the same cause. Most of the eagerness to know the meaning and worth of life that is carried by children into the school-room perishes there. Life itself is the quest of Truth and Beauty and Value. The Value when discovered proves to be goodness, but goodness is not the conscious quest of youth. If the interest in Truth and Beauty be stifled, the quest of Value becomes a helpless sort of wandering—and life, robbed of its loveliness becomes a victim of the senses, Value being translated into physical terms.

DINING WITH DUKE HUMPHREY

"Dining with Duke Humphrey" is the quaint old English slang for having no dinner at all. Its origin is an open question. It may allude to the report that the Duke, who was a son of Henry IV, was starved to death, or to the habit of the unfortunate young gentlemen in the days of Elizabeth, who, having been unable to secure an invitation to dine at the house of a patron, used to beguile the dinner hour by promenading near the Duke's tomb in old St. Paul's.

Byron, who could make poetry out of most unpromising material, has kept alive the memory of the Duke—

"Do you dine with Sir Humphrey today?"

I should think with Duke Humphrey was more in your way."

This is the question the people of our own land and other lands are asked to put to themselves on Sunday, December 7. Shall we dine with Sir Humphrey or with Duke Humphrey? Golden Rule Sunday is set aside to remind us that the years are still lean in the Near East, and that a multitude of helpless ones look to us not for luxuries, but for the bare necessities of life.

During the last days of the Civil War, when hunger sapped the strength of Lee's "long arm," as one of his soldiers has called the Army of Northern Virginia, General Lee was the guest of a friend in Petersburg. They pressed upon him rich food, but he declined everything but bread and meat. When they urged him to taste the dainties that had been prepared for him, his voice choked and he said: "I cannot feast when my men out yonder on the lines are starving." Is it any wonder that we love him?

The Great Gift

B. A. M. Schapiro.

Blessed Lord, our glorious Host;
Through Thy promised Holy Ghost;
At the table where the bread
And the wine of life are spread;
Meet Thy faithful who partake
Of these emblems for Thy sake.

Gather Thou dear saints of Thine,
Bought by Thee, O Christ Divine,
By the death which Thou didst die,
Bring them to Thy bosom nigh;
Of Thy mercy and Thy love,
Feed with manna from above.

But as they who know Thee well,
Seek Thy passion thus to tell,
May they not forget Thine own
Of Thy blood and race well-known,
Who with darkened, blinded eyes
Catch no vision in the skies.

Lord, heal Thou the broken parts;
Softened Thou their hardened hearts;
From despair Thy brethren lift:
Be their everlasting gift;
Jesus, Prophet, King and Priest,
Draw them to Thy sacred feast.

The Purpose of Government

If the Church were united in condemning a war, it is certain that the nation would not be united in waging it. Churchmen are still citizens, and will always reflect the same differences of judgment on questions of fact as appear among other citizens. The really profitable question is this: If the State is not its own end, what is its end? To what does it owe allegiance?

An attempt is being made in our day to move cautiously towards an organization of States which may have some characteristics, at least, of a Super-State. Supporters of the League of Nations have often told us that this organization in no way interferes with the sovereignty of the national State. After four or five centuries of Machiavellianism, this may be salutary humbug; but plainly it is humbug. By the Covenant of the League the national States transfer to the League certain rights which they have hitherto possessed—such as the right to make war upon any other State according to their own judgment, without any opportunity given for inquiry or reconciliation—to say nothing of arbitration. Plainly this is a limitation of sovereignty. And indeed the best of all arguments for the League is that it marks the end of this horrible idolatry of the State into which Christendom slipped with the decline of the Middle Ages.

That the policy represented by the League of Nations ought to be supported whole-heartedly by all Christians does not seem to admit of doubt. It is a political expression of belief in a common human interest and, therefore, of a world-wide fellowship. The progress of morality has consisted in a steady widening of the area within which moral obligation is recognized as binding. We have learnt that this extends to all men, in their individual relationships; but the relations between States have been almost non-moral. The inauguration of the League is a great step forwards in the moralization of the relations between nations.

But the League is still a political contrivance. Is the end of the national State to be found in a super-national State? Or is it to be found in something which belongs to another plane of existence? Here we are at once involved in questions concerning the nature and destiny of man. If man is terrestrial only; if his existence is bounded by birth and death; if fellowship with his contemporaries is the fullest expansion possible to his nature—then the end of the State may be a super-State. But if man is always a child of God as well as of his earthly parents, if he is a citizen of eternity, if he is capable of membership in a Communion of Saints where death is no longer a barrier, then the State which exists to serve the purposes of human life must find its end in something of a different kind from itself, and recognize that all its work is preliminary and preparatory only. And inasmuch as the higher spiritual interests are only realized through the free activity of personality, we may say with confidence that, if Christianity is true, the end of the State is freedom, because freedom is the indispensable condition of all the higher aims of mankind.—The Bishop of Manchester.

St. Andrew

The Message of St. Andrew! What is it? We have found the Messiah. And with what result? He brought his own brother Simon to Jesus.

St. Andrew was a native fisherman of Bethsaida on the coast of the lake of Gennesareth, or as it is sometimes called the Sea of Galilee. He had sat at the feet of John the Baptist and doubtless had learned to speak plainly as his master used to speak. One day as he stood with the Baptist, they beheld the Christ, and from that day Andrew became the first convert to Jesus Christ—the first known disciple and missionary of His gospel. St. John the Evangelist tells us, "He first findeth his own brother, Simon, and saith unto him: We have found the Messiah (which is, being interpreted, the Christ), and he brought him to Jesus." St. Andrew, as we see, readily obeyed the calling of Christ and followed Him without delay. Then, later on there were "Greeks who desired to see Jesus"; these, too, he must bring to the Divine Master and "open the door of faith to the Gentiles." The influence of Jesus burned within his soul. It was enough. He had to publish the glad tidings abroad.

Church History tells us of his courageous missionary work and reward of success in Scythia and its solitudes, and about the borders of the Caspian Sea. History tells us of his life and diligence, devotion and self-sacrifice to his Divine Master's service, for he was crucified like his Blessed Lord. Otherwise nothing extraordinary is recorded of him. It is simply the story of Christian living, Christian devotion, and Christian activity. He is reckoned as the Apostle of Greece. He is also the Patron of the Russian Church. He is likewise the patron saint of Scotland.

Like St. Andrew, we have found the Christ, and have followed Him. We have our sacrifices to make for Jesus' sake. We have our Christian work to do if we are going to walk in the footsteps of this first disciple of the Christ.

Like St. Andrew we must be on the alert and prepared to seize the opportunity, to pray for the progress of the Kingdom of God among men, to speak boldly in His Name; to confess Him openly before men; and to work with zeal for His glory. Life is full of such opportunities. Like St. Andrew we must bring others to Our Lord, so that they, too, might acknowledge and follow Him also. I am my brother's keeper. I am intensely interested in his welfare. I am thinking of the other man and praying for him. We are all of us God's instruments. Our plain duty is one of service to one another. Every Christian should be a missionary of the Christ, for the missionary spirit is nothing else but the profound experience of the power and influence of Jesus Christ in our own personal lives. Our Christian obligation then, is to tell others about the Christ and to bring them to Him so that they, too, may receive the Saviour's blessing. The man of the world says: "If you want to convert me tell men of your own personal religious experience. What has the Christ done for you? What has He meant to your life?"—From "The Diocese of Louisiana."

Advent

Again the Church begins the round of her observance of the Christian year. Once more the Sundays are named "Sundays in Advent,"—as festivals when the keynote of the teaching and worship is the Coming of Christ.

As we all know, there are two Advents—one which took place not so very many centuries ago in the world's history, and another which is to take place nobody can say how many centuries off in the same world's history.

Neither of them is a mere spiritual conception, an idea, a mental picture; each is an event, a visible occurrence on this earth.

The manner and circumstances of the first Advent we are well aware of, for we have the beautiful narrative given in the Gospels. So one leading thought as the Advent seasons opens is the thought of the Babe born at Bethlehem, while Angels sang the Gloria in Excelsis.

But the other leading thought is of the Second Coming of the Lord. For all who accept His words there is a flush on the horizon, "an awful rose of dawn," presaging the Christ before whose throne of glory all the nations shall be gathered and the books shall be opened.

At times the horizon seems very near, and at times it seems very far—for of that day and hour knoweth no man, nor even the angels—but that flush is always on it. "Again and again have come dismal periods in human history, when Christians looked in agonized desire for the Coming of Christ as the only possible preservation of human society. Yet those periods passed away and a better time came in. Christ had not appeared to cut down the worthless tree, but rather had so treated it that it bore fruit once more.

It is not surprising that at the present day, when the world is so torn and rocked by racial and national and class hatreds, when there is so much gloomy doubt and bitter discussion, when the grand old standards are so largely impugned and repudiated, when men's hearts are failing them for fear—it is not surprising that there should be in many minds an expectation of the speedy Advent of the Lord, "to terminate the evil, to diadem the right."

And it may be so. We cannot tell.

But this age may pass, as did various other ages when such expectation was widespread, and yet the flush on the horizon not be merged in the rays of the risen sun.

And when the Lord does at last appear it may very probably be in a guise and with accompaniments as different from our imaginings as was the Babe of Bethlehem from the imaginings of that Hebrew race which looked for the Messiah.

This only—but this much—we are certified of—that He will come, and will come to make the final pronouncement upon and the final disposition of all human souls.

And having that certitude let us fervently say the prayer, "Grant that as we joyfully receive Him for our Redeemer, so we may with sure confidence behold Him when He shall come to be our Judge."

These are the two teachings of Advent.—Palm Branch.

THE EVILS OF INSTITUTIONALISM

SOLEMN warning against the dangers of over-stressing the institutional side of the Christian Church and a call to clergymen and laymen to bring to their religion all the ardor of a crusade were voiced by the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop of Washington, in the opening sermon at the eighth annual synod of the Province of Washington, held in St. John's Church, Charleston, West Virginia.

"I am prepared to say," Bishop Freeman asserted, "that the Institutional Department of the Christian Church has in no small degree deflected the ministry from its primary purpose, and possibly more than any other single cause, impaired its great functions, commonly designated Pastoral and Prophetic, which in another age were its chief adornments and most compelling aspects."

"Institutionalism has diverted interest and enthusiasm from religion and given them to pastimes and recreations. Most deplorable and tragic of all, it has shifted the emphasis from a concern for souls to a concern for bodies."

The modern emphasis on the institutional equipment connected with the Church can be rightly challenged, Bishop Freeman said, because "the age is calling for a crusade and the crusaders' spirit. It is calling for a Church for religion only. It has its every need met by multiform and ever-increasing agencies. It seeks its house of worship for spiritual refreshment and renewal. The multitude is at our gates saying 'Sirs, we would see Jesus.'"

"The day in which we live, with its colorful and kaleidoscopic life lays claims upon the minister that his brother of another generation never knew. The occupations of the modern busy pastor are so varied and call for gifts and qualities so diverse, that neither university nor seminary can adequately equip him to meet the clamorous demands of the hour. The twentieth century conception of the ministry calls for a larger variety of gifts and talents than any other calling or profession of which we have knowledge.

"Within the lifetime of most of us a distinctly new department has been added to the Christian Church, known as the Institutional. It began in great centers of population and rapidly spread until today even the smallest village has its modest equipment designed to meet the social demands of the community in which it is placed. That this new department has played its conspicuous and useful part is clearly evident. Its purpose was to humanize the Church as an institution; to make more clear, particularly to the youth, the high purpose of a Christian faith that sought, in the language of the Master, the 'more abundant life'. To make a man every whit whole, to deal with bodies as well as souls; to effect physical robustness and spiritual virility; all this was the high aim that lay behind this new force of Christian enterprise. Parish houses, under this new system, became as costly, if not more costly, than church buildings. In some instances they combined not only every form of social and physical entertainment, but they also comprehended many other agencies that had to do with human needs.

"If a careful survey could be made of the spiritual results accruing to these costly enterprises, one wonders what it might disclose. Some one caustically observes that 'we have machinery but no motion'.

"In an age that was characterized by mechanical skill and efficiency, the Church felt the need of newer and more perfect mechanisms for its enterprises. No one doubts the purity of its motive nor the desirability of much that it called into being. That institutionalism served, and will continue to serve, a large purpose is generally admitted. It is not against institutionalism as such that we contend; it is rather the exaggerated importance and the results that have accrued to it that we challenge.

"When any mechanism or agency impairs the major function of the Church's enterprise we are bound to inquire as to its utility or value. The modern complexity of Church administration has brought the ministry itself dangerously near the breaking point. It has laid upon the shoulders of the Church's chosen leaders burdens too heavy to be borne. It has brought about a situation that has resulted in the impairment of the pastoral and prophetic offices. It has called for an outlay of time and money, the volume of which has mounted from year to year. It has put the Church in competition with secular agencies and placed it at a disadvantage it cannot readily overcome. It has shifted the emphasis from a concern for souls to a concern for bodies.

"That the Church has a definite concern for bodies, for the physical well-being of men, goes without saying. The question which institutionalism has raised, is largely one of economy and ultimate purpose. Economy as it relates primarily to the distribution of the minister's time. Purpose as it relates to the spiritual development of those whom it seeks to serve.

"A Church engrossed with the most wholesome forms of recreation, essential and valuable as these may be, must ultimately lose its place of influence as a factor in the spiritual enrichment and elevation of the community in which it is placed. We register no plea against the recreational side of the Church's enterprise; we do maintain that if this phase is to be continued, it must be subordinated to the major things for which the Christian Church stands. If it cannot be a means to the one supreme end of character building, which we submit is the Church's highest aim and purpose, it must be regarded as a menace to the Church as an institution.

"If the Christian Church is to contribute its large share to meet the needs of our modern complex life, it must safeguard its ministry from becoming so utterly mechanical that its spiritual functions are impaired or rendered inefficient. For my own part, after thirty years of extensive and costly indulgence in institutional work, I question very seriously some of the methods it employs.

"If it cannot be demonstrated that its enterprise issues in spiritual illumination and enrichment, it has no valid place as part of the Church's equipment. No word too strong or urgent may be spoken against any enterprise, no matter how attractive or appealing it may be, that retards rather than accelerates the spiritual functions of the Church's ministry. Let us build the whole man—body, mind and soul—but let us be very clear that it is the whole man we are conserving." While we serve his body, let us not forget his soul."

MOTOR CARS IN THE HOLY LAND.

Motor traffic, insignificant in Palestine before the war, is today more developed than in most European countries, due to the system of excellent roads constructed by the British government and the Palestine Foundation Fund, according to a report from Jerusalem, made public by Samuel Untermyer, president of the fund, which receives most of its financial support from American Jews.

Thirty-two motor car and motor bus lines are now operating between the various towns of the holy land. Recently motor connections were established between Haifa, Palestine's principal seaport, and Bagdad, center of the Near East's commercial activities, which has opened this vast hinterland for the sale of Palestinian products, and has greatly stimulated business in the holy land.

Because of the cheap rates charged by the motor lines for passenger and freight service, and the stiff competition they offer to the railroads, railroad fares have been greatly reduced in Palestine to meet the competition.

The ninety-one Jewish colonies of Palestine, forty-one of which owe their development to the Palestine Foundation Fund, are now all in easy communication with the cities through the motor lines and new roads, thus affording them excellent opportunities for the prompt disposal of their products.

ST. ANDREW.

A poor and humble fisherman was he,
A simple man unlettered and unskilled,
Yet kind of heart and great of soul, and filled
With a wide knowledge of the shifting sea;
The sort of man who makes good company
Beside the campfire when the wind has stilled,
Ready in action and yet not self-willed,
Sturdy and strong and full of sympathy.
It was but natural that he should be Among the first to rise with faith instilled,
Touched by the Master's voice, enraptured, thrilled,
A leader in that glorious company.
So if we labor on and do not ask,
We may be called to our appointed task.

BOOK REVIEWS

WHAT AILS OUR YOUTH? By George A. Coe. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. Pp. 97.

The author of this little volume is an educator, and, therefore, in constant contact with young people, and he writes with a sympathetic understanding that is quite refreshing. He feels that he should deal with the problem of our young people of today in a scientific method, and if there is an ailment that it should be treated as it would be if it were a physical infirmity; not simply by applying outward applications to the sore spot, but by seeking the source of the trouble and trying to cure it. In his chapter on "What Ails Education?" he sheds an illuminating light on the inside methods of college life that is quite surprising, and enlightening to the outsider. In discussing so-called "religious education," and Church Schools and colleges he points out that one trouble is that there has been no real amalgamation of religion and education. He points out that the purpose of a denominational school or college is merely to provide a secular education in a religious environment and not to educate in religion. The inefficiency of most so-called "religious exercises" is pointed out.

The book is well written by one who knows his subject, and contains many helpful suggestions and much food for thought.

TWO DAYS BEFORE. By the Rev. H. R. L. Sheppard (Honorable Chaplain to the King). Macmillan & Company, New York. Pp. 77.

We have here in eight short chapters seven brief addresses on the Seven Words from the Cross. There is one chapter that is introductory, entitled "The Way of the Cross." What we read was originally delivered in addresses, and the short incisive sentences enable the reader to feel the presence of the speaker. The subject is old, but the material is new, and the style attractive and forceful. The book will be valuable for devotional reading during Holy Week, and its contents will be found useful and suggestive in preparing addresses for those days which bring to the preacher their annual demand for greater spiritual effort, and sometimes involve a certain amount of mental strain.

CREATIVE TEACHING. Letters to a Church School Teacher. By John Wallace Suter, Jr. The Macmillan Company, New York.

A sane and excellent little book. If really studied and followed, would do away with all mechanical teaching and give both leader and pupils inspiration to lead a higher life.

Though written for those who have classes ranging from nine to thirteen years, all may learn the larger use to be made of the opportunity to instill the great fact that religion is not a series of precepts, but a life to be lived with body, soul and spirit.

THE METHOD OF THE DISCUSSION GROUP. By Laura F. Boyer. National Council, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York. 1924.

Discussion, as a method of getting information, reaching conclusions, and producing activity, has won for itself a definite place in all schemes of modern education. As applied in groups of adults to the study of the Church's Mission, it is proving invaluable, but its most successful application demands a high degree of skill on the part of the leader. Such skill may be acquired by any person of average capacity who really desires it. There are manuals on the conduct of mission-study classes, and there are volumes on pedagogical methods, but there is a lack of any short and simple direction as to self-training in the discussion-method, and its most helpful application. This lack, Miss Boyer's book supplies. She is perhaps the most experienced and skillful exponent of this method in the Church today, and her book is the result of years of practice in leading. The chapter-headings give an idea of the scope of the book. They are: I The Discussion Method, II The Course as a Whole, III The Individual Session, IV The Formation of Questions, V The Management of the Group Meeting, VI The Leader of the Group, VII The Training of Leaders.

The book is recommended to every one, man or woman, priest or lay person, who desires to understand this method of teaching, and to apply it where it will do most good in the line of religious education.

THE SACRAMENT OF SILENCE. Noel Sylvestre. The Macmillan Company, New York. Pp. 266.

One feels better for having read "The Sacrament of Silence."

The strength and help that religion gives is demonstrated throughout the book.

The two Catholic priests, their kindness and their humaneness, their sincerity and helpfulness give all Protestant readers a respect for their faith and a realization of the comfort that confession brings, that is unquestioned. The story is a sad one, sweetly told. The two priests are the only strong characters in the book. One of them lays down his life, to spare the punishment of a friend, who is a murderer. His trial demonstrates injustice and indifference in a terrible degree.

The book is recommended as far above the average of the season's new books.

THE ALASKAN CALENDAR is an ever welcome annual visitor to our office. This year it appears in its usual bright red dress with gold trimmings, and within this attractive cover one finds interesting and instructive photographs about our work in the far north. The price of fifty cents goes to support this work. It contains the usual secular calendar with Church seasons, and festivals duly marked. We heartily commend it to our readers as a Christmas remembrance that will bring pleasure to the recipient, and contribute to a good cause. Order from the Alaskan Churchman, Box 6, Haverford, Penn.

Christianity and the Community

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

The Rev. R. Cary Montague, Editor.

BE NEIGHORLY.

The following thoughts on neighborliness, sent us by the Rev. Malcolm Taylor, of Epiphany Church, Danville, are so practical and suggestive that we use them here this week, although some of them have been emphasized in previous articles along this line.

"The man who 'fell among thieves' in the Parable of the Good Samaritan was not the only one who was helped. The despised Samaritan needed to feel, as we all do, that he was of some use to some one and as he mounted his humble beast and rode away from the inn, after bandaging up his new friend and providing lodging for him, he certainly felt a satisfaction, which, however humble, was both real and righteous.

"For people find satisfaction and happiness in fulfilling God's laws for human life. The Samaritan saw his opportunity to obey the second great Law of Jesus Christ, 'Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself,' and he seized it. Of course, he felt a righteous satisfaction and was happy. He was being neighborly.

"Within the reach of each person reading this lies, at this moment, opportunities to be neighborly, which, if seized, will help not only the person needing help, but the person giving it.

"In the Parable of the Talents, 'Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord,' follows naturally upon the 'well done, thou good and faithful SERVANT.'

Rural Opportunities For Neighborliness.

"The great need in rural communities—by which is to be understood any community with a population of twenty-five hundred or less—is the need for COOPERATION, or working together as good neighbors. This is equally true for the small town and the open country. Opportunities for cooperation in a rural community are many and varied. We should have the habit of looking for them. For convenience in listing some of them, let us group them according to the end or purpose which they best serve: the religious life of the community, or its educational life, its recreational life, or its health.

Religious.

"Here the emphasis is placed, of course, on the Church and all of its activities. The question for rural Christians to ask themselves, and one another, is, 'What can I do to be neighborly along lines of Church activity?' And the answer is:

"1. Attend the Church services oneself as regularly and frequently as possible, and, if possible, form the habit of inviting some irregular attendant to go. Are there any people in your community who never attend Church because they need a conveyance and cannot easily get one? If you cannot take them in a car of your own, why not see that some car-owner takes them occasionally? There could be no finer act of neighborliness! If there is no Church of your own denomination in your community, attend your neighbor's Church faithfully. Not only will you be discharging a religious duty, but you will be showing a neighborliness which will be deeply appreciated.

"1½. In the rural community nothing is more important as a unifying force than the Church School, which should provide instruction for persons of all ages. Are you attending such a school regularly and are you constantly on the lookout for new members for it? Was your school a 'banner school' in the Diocese last year? Ascertain the requirements for 'Banner Schools,' for your Diocese and State.

"2. Become an active member of at least one of the societies of the Church. If the Church has no society, see if you and a few others cannot start one, remembering the importance of cooperation. Let the women begin with a branch of the Women's Auxiliary, the girls of twelve and over with the Girls' Friendly Society, the little girls with a Candidates Class of the G. F. S. The boys, with a man to lead them, could organize a Troop of Boy Scouts and the men could start a Men's Club.

"The above are only suggestions, some of which are already being carried out in many rural communities. But not until they are in force in every rural community and not until every person is actively practicing them will they be useless as suggestions, for they are fundamental. They are first steps and are, therefore, the most important until they have been taken.

Educational.

"The rural public school offers an almost ideal field for neighborly cooperation, second only to the Church. If for any reason, the Church cannot minister adequately to the social needs of your community, through its Church School and its societies and clubs, see what you can do with the public school as a base. Parent-Teachers Associations, for the adults, are excellent, but in the rural school a branch of the Virginia Cooperative Educational Association is even better. (Write Mr. J. A. Guy, Secretary Virginia Cooperative Educational Association, Richmond, Va., for literature and detailed information. He will be glad to help you organize a branch). Community activities for the children also are thoroughly covered through this Association.

Recreational.

"In its recreations a community, whether rural or urban, has a splendid field for learning and practicing neighborliness and cooperation. Indeed, 'team-play' and 'team-work,' terms borrowed from the language of sports, are fine synonyms for 'cooperation.' Picnics, ranging in size from county picnics down to the picnic which the little girls of the Candidates Class of the Girls' Friendly Society hold are fine opportunities for knowing one another better and so for being neighborly. We all know from experience that by playing together we often find an attractiveness in one another that we never knew existed.

"It is impossible here to give anything like a complete list of suggested recreations for all ages and groups. If you desire such a list for your Church group or society, write the Executive Secretary for Social Service in your Diocese. If you are working in and through the public school, write Mr. J. A. Guy, Secretary Virginia Cooperative Educational Association, Richmond, Va.

Health.

"What the Good Samaritan did in relieving the bodily affliction of his neighbor, we Christians must do if we would be neighborly. The question facing each one of us is, then, 'What will improve the health of my community, and what can I do about it?' The best answer, in this day of specialization, is to suggest asking this question of the local physicians or health officers and of the Commissioner State Board of Public Welfare, Richmond, Va. The State Boards particularly, have splendid plans for community health work which have been operated successfully in many communities—for example, clinics for eye, ear, nose and throat cases, for the tubercular and for crippled children. Perhaps a letter of inquiry from you will be the means of securing one of these blessings for your community.

"In the health work which is being done in your school, be a 'booster,' not a 'knocker.'

Urban Opportunities for Neighborliness.

"It is impossible to draw a sharp line between rural and urban social service activities, and much of what has been said above applies as well to the city as to the small town or open country.

"The following list of suggested activities is given without comment. Each one is a real opportunity for being neighborly and most of them are open alike to those living in cities and in the country:

- Take invalids and old people to drive.
- Teach an illiterate adult to read and write.
- Help the unemployed and ex-prisoners to find work.
- Visit the almshouse, orphanage, old people's home and hospital.
- Visit the shut-ins, the sick and strangers.
- Serve on community committees.
- Assist in night-school, day nursery, playgrounds, etc.
- Adopt a child.
- Make some weekly recreation possible for over-worked mothers.
- Give practical help in time of sickness."

BE NEIGHORLY!

Death of Archdeacon Meem.

Word was received on November 21 at The Church Missions House of the death of the Rev. Jno. G. Meem, D. D., of Rio de Janeiro. Archdeacon Meem was one of the four veterans of the Brazil Mission. After the present Bishop Kinsolving and the Rev. Dr. James W. Morris went down there in 1889, the present Bishop Brown of Virginia and the Rev. Mr. Meem followed them in 1891, and for thirty-three years the latter has served in that field, a pillar of strength to the Mission, a faithful hard-working representative of Church people at home.

He was born in Shreveport, La., August 2, 1864. At the Virginia Military Institute, Lexington, Va., he completed a course in Civil Engineering, and was an instructor in that subject at the Institute when the Rev. Dr. James Walpole Warren, former rector of St. James Church, New York, in a mission held at Lexington, drew the young man's attention to the ministry, and he was later graduated from the Virginia Theological Seminary, Alexandria.

In the early days in Brazil he assisted in training the present generation of Brazilian clergy, but the work chiefly associated with his name is the building of the Church of the Redeemer in Pelotas. He was his own designer and architect for this. It is interesting that part of the gifts providing it came from Mrs. Walpole Warren. In Rio, where he has been for ten years, he developed another Church of the Redeemer, and he has been doing the work of an archdeacon in Northern Brazil.

He married Elsa Kruschke, the sister of one of our Brazilian clergy. A burden they have long carried, of which few have known, has been the serious ill-health of two of their children. Their son-in-law has for two years been away from home in service in the Brazilian army.

There is one office which Mr. Meem has held for the past twenty-five years; that of Treasurer of the Mission, which has been of inestimable value to the Mission and to the Church at home. It has meant that night after night, for these many years, he has come in, worn from the evangelistic labors of the day, and has stayed up until a late hour working over the books of the Mission and keeping them in a uniformly excellent condition. For this skillful and laborious work he has never asked thanks and has never asked or received remuneration.

Thus, a third of a century of quiet, faithful, little-noticed service in a difficult field, is completed.

A Double Centennial.

St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, celebrated during the week of November 16-23, the first hundred years of its establishment as a parish and the hundredth anniversary of the coming of the Episcopal Church to the Northwest. A large list of visiting Bishops and distinguished preachers and educators from various parts of the United States and Canada assisted the Cathedral authorities and the Diocesan committee in carrying out the celebration, which was recognized as a gala occasion, not only by Episcopalians, but by the Protestantism of Detroit generally.

Beginning Sunday morning, November 16, the anniversary Communion service was held with the Very Rev. Warren L. Rogers, Dean of the Cathedral as the celebrant. The Rev. Samuel S. Marquis, D. D., first dean and builder of the Cathedral preached at this service, pointing his hearers to their responsibility as inheritors of a glorious tradition and a great responsibility.

Sunday afternoon the anniversary service for the Detroit parishes was held, every available seat in the great Cathedral being filled and several hundred turned away. The Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop of Michigan, presided at this service and introduced the Rt. Rev. David Williams, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese of Huron, Canada, who brought to the gathering the greetings of the sister Church in Canada. The special preacher for the occasion was the Rt. Rev. Thomas F. Gailor, D. D., president of the National Council who preached the anniversary sermon and brought the congratulations of the General Church. At this service at which a large number of the Diocesan clergy were present, a choir of two hundred and twenty-five voices sang two special anthems written for the occasion, a Te Deum; in B Flat written by Francis A. Mackay, Mus. B. and dedicated to Dean Rogers and "Great and Glorious is the name of the Lord of Hosts," written by Clarence Dickinson, Mus. D., of New York City and dedicated to Mr. Mackay, who is master of the Cathedral Choristers.

In the evening Bishop Williams preached to a congregation which again overflowed the Cathedral.

On Monday, November 17, Social Service Night was celebrated, the Rev. Robert W. Woodroffe, rector of St. John's Church, Detroit, and chairman of the Diocesan Department of Social Service presiding. Dean Shailer Matthews, Ph. D., of the University of Chicago, spoke at this meeting, paying a tribute to the late Bishop Williams of Michigan for his great contributions to the field of social philosophy. Several hundred social workers of all denominations in Detroit were specially invited guests at this gathering.

Professor Edwin D. Starbuck, of the Department of Philosophy, University of Iowa was the special speaker at the celebration of Religious Education Night which took place Tuesday evening. He spoke on "The Worth of a Child," being introduced by the Rev. William L. Torrance, rector of St. Andrew's Church, Detroit, and a former head of the Diocesan Department.

Professor Dickinson rendered a special program of organ music on Wednesday evening, Music Night, being assisted by the Cathedral choristers under the direction of Mr. Mackay.

Missions Night was celebrated on Thursday, the Rt. Rev. Henry St. George Tucker, formerly Bishop of Kyoto, Japan, being the principal speaker. He was introduced by the Rev. S. S. Marquis, D. D., rector of St. Joseph's Church and chairman of the Diocesan Missions Department.

Friday, November 21, was celebrated as international night with a great anniversary banquet at the Hotel Statler, Detroit, at which more than four hundred were present, the gathering numbering many prominent citizens of all denominations in Detroit, several of whom brought greetings to the Cathedral and the Diocese of Michigan. The principal speakers were the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop of Washington, and the Rev. Canon Henry John Cody, D. D., Minister of Education for the Province of Ontario, Canada, and rector of St. Paul's Parish, Toronto. Bishop Page presided at the banquet.

The climax of the week's celebration occurred on Saturday afternoon and evening, when the pageant, "The Long Life of the Church," with more than three hundred characters taking part and representing ten of the leading parishes of Detroit was presented in the Cathedral.

The Executive Council, Synod of Sewanee.

Following the meeting of the Synod of Sewanee in St. James, Wilmington, N. C., November 11-13, the Executive Council of the Synod met and organized along the lines laid down by the legislation creating it. Bishops Darst, of East Carolina, and Guerry, of South Carolina, and Mrs. T. W. Bickett, of North Carolina, were elected by the Council. The Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, Bishop of East Carolina, was elected chairman of the Department of Missions. Bishop Mikell, of Atlanta, was made chairman of Department of Religious Education; Bishop Guerry, of South Carolina, of Social Service; Bishop Penick, of North Carolina, of the Field, and Bishop Finlay, of Upper South Carolina, of Publicity.

The Synod of the Second Province.

The Synod of the Province of New York and New Jersey met at Bronxville, where members were entertained at one hotel, and held meetings in Christ Church, near by. There were the usual religious and social features, the latter including a dinner at the hotel, at which Hon. George W. Wickersham and Hon. John H. Finley were speakers.

There is forming in the State a Council of Churches, in which all bodies save only the Roman are said to have pledged to cooperate. The aims are: better religious education, social legislation, and more adequate enforcement of laws to improve moral conditions. The Synod voted to recommend to the Diocese affiliation with this Council. Bishop Lloyd led the move, and won by a narrow margin only.

Secretary Gilbert of the New York Commission on Social Service, and of the New York Diocese, met stout opposition from a Brooklyn delegate, Col. William S. Cogswell, when he urged the Synod to endorse the World Court and participation in it by the United States. The vote seemed about equal for and against, but the chair decided for, and a demand for a rising vote was not seconded.

The clergy of the Province were urged to lead their people in earnest consideration of world peace, and methods by which the Church in the Province may promote it.

There was discussion of a change in the constitution to admit women as delegates, but it was tabled because it was reported that at New Orleans a year hence the whole matter is to be considered. The women of the Province also held meetings during the Synod sessions.

Bishop Stearly, of Newark, was elected president, succeeding Bishop Brent of Buffalo, who at the moment is in Geneva, pushing forward plans for the termination of the opium traffic. Bishop Oldham of Albany made the following report:

"The total number of clergy shows an increase over all previous years, and the number of communicants is the largest on record. But in spite of this we find a marked decrease in the number of priests ordained and also a decrease in the number of confirmations, all of which taken together would seem to indicate that we are advancing from accretions from without instead of development growth from within. The increase of Church School teachers and officers is ground for encouragement, but why should there be a decrease in pupils? The number of baptisms also shows a decrease as compared with last year, and the number of parishes and missions shows a decrease of 1,000, as compared with 1918, and of fifty-nine as compared with last year. Of course, some of these decreases may be due to more careful and honest tabulations, and the decrease in parishes may simply indicate a regrouping and consolidation such as makes for greater efficiency. At any rate, the larger number of clergy ought to be able with a smaller number of parishes to do better work than formerly. The steady increase in the number of postulants and candidates for holy orders is a distinctly encouraging sign."

Bishop Oldham stated that up to November this year twenty-one young men had been ordained deacons, and that twenty-three deacons had been advanced to the priesthood, making the whole number of clergy in the province 1,314. He said there were at present eighty-four candidates for holy orders, eighty-two postulants and five hundred and eighty-four lay readers.

To Elect Bishop-Coadjutor of Milwaukee.

The Rt. Rev. William Walter Webb, D. D., has given official notice that on account of failing health he will make request for the election of a Bishop Coadjutor at the next session of the Diocesan Council, which meets at the Cathedral in Milwaukee on January 27.

Christmas in Leper Land.

Where is Leper Land?

Where do the more than two million lepers of the world live?

The answer is: in almost every country of the globe. Hundreds live right here in our own United States.

Who takes care of this great host of helpless or nearly helpless people? There is an organized movement led by the American Mission to Lepers to be of special service to leper people in all lands. This organization has a direct relationship at present to ninety-five hospitals in thirteen countries.

Every year, as part of its Christian ministry, the Mission distributes Christmas gifts and provides a Christmas feast for as many of the leper people as can be reached by the missionaries. Christmas is a day long looked forward to and long remembered among the lepers, many of whom are child-like in their simple enjoyment of the few pleasures that remain to them.

All the work of the Mission is made possible through voluntary gifts of people who wish to see a few ordinary comforts and the benefits of medical treatment brought into the lives of these most wretched of human beings. Christmas is a particularly appropriate time for people of a Christian nation to show their sympathy for the lepers. Gifts, preferably of money, may be sent to Fleming H. Revell, Treasurer, The American Mission to Lepers, Room 1118-M 156 Fifth Avenue, New York City, or to Miss E. P. Meriwether, President and Treasurer of the Richmond Branch, Leper Mission, 2346 West Grace Street, Richmond, Va.

Sewanee News Letter.

Friday, October 10, marked the sixty-fourth anniversary of the University. The day was celebrated by impressive exercises held in All Saints' Chapel at which the Very Rev. James G. Glass, Secretary of the Board of Trustees, was the principal speaker. The concluding exercises were held at the former site of Dr. Ware's home, where the cornerstone of the new Cannon Hall was laid.

Armistice Day was observed by appropriate exercises held in the University Chapel. Speakers of the occasion were the Chaplain and Dr. Allen Lear, who is head of the local Red Cross. Both speakers plead the cause of this organization.

At the request of Dr. Arthur Gray of the National Council, Mr. Martin Gillett has formed a Latin-American Study Club among the students of the University. At present the Club has ten active members, each one being a representative of some Latin-American country, and in touch with the missionaries there. The Club meets once a week for the purpose of study and discussion. The club has already enjoyed several interesting addresses from members of the University faculty, who have had actual experience in Latin-American countries.

Ohio To Elect Bishop Coadjutor.

At the request of the Rt. Rev. W. A. Leonard, D. D., Bishop of Ohio, and acting under the canons of the Diocese, the Standing Committee has given notice that a special convention for the election of a Bishop Coadjutor will be held in Trinity Cathedral, Cleveland, on Wednesday, January 25, 1925.

Declines Both Elections.

The Rev. Frederick S. Fleming, rector of the Church of the Atonement, Chicago, has declined his elections as Bishop of Olympia and as Bishop Coadjutor of Northern Indiana.

In announcing his decision Mr. Fleming said he felt that his obligations for the present belong to his parish.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop.

Girls' Friendly Society.

The autumn meeting of the Diocesan Council of the Girls' Friendly Society was held on November 13, at the Central House of the G. F. S., Baltimore.

Report of the Spring Conference at the Holiday House, Hartford County, showed that over eighty persons attended and that it was the most successful occasion of the kind ever undertaken by the Diocesan Organization. Many delegates came from throughout the Province of Washington. The Conference was in charge of Miss Minnie E. Ashcom.

The Holiday House Department reported a successful season and included among its guests those from many of the nearby Dioceses.

A more intensive policy of extension was adopted by which the Field Department will be enabled to extend its activities throughout the Diocese, wherever a speaker or knowledge of the work is requested.

It was announced that the Diocese would pay its entire quota to the Washington National Center Fund for 1924.

Three new Branches had been formed since the last meeting of Council, with the prospect of several others in the immediate future.

The annual elections resulted as follows: Miss Julia J. Cunningham, President and Head of Extension Department; Mrs. Henry Duffy, Miss Minnie E. Ashcom, Mrs. Janon Fisher, Mrs. Charles B. Penrose, Mrs. Charles J. B. Swindell, Vice-Presidents; Miss Virginia Lee Reese, Secretary and Head of Mission Department; Miss Harriet W. Staples, Treasurer; Mrs. Albert Sloussat, Head of Commendation Department.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop.

Activity in the Diocese in Four Years.

It happened that the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia was organized December 19, 1919, so that its birth was practically coincident with the inauguration of the first Nation-Wide Campaign.

Recently, in preparing material for speakers on the Church's Program, etc., some interesting figures have been assembled; interesting not alone to the people in Southwestern Virginia, but to the many friends of the Diocese living elsewhere. A comparison was made between the statistics for the year 1919 and those for the year 1923. Those for 1919 of course relate to the territory now embraced in the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia, though until the end of that year, as noted above, the diocese had not been separated from its mother diocese of Southern Virginia.

The statistics presented to the first Council of the young diocese showed that in 1919 there were two hundred and twenty-five baptisms and two hundred and thirty-seven confirmations, while for the year 1923 there were reported three hundred and ninety-five baptisms and four hundred and ninety-one confirmations. Thus in 1923 there were seventy-five per cent more baptisms than in 1919 and one hundred and seven per cent more confirmations.

The number of communicants reported as of December 31, 1919, was 4,969 and as of December 31, 1923, 5,963, which means a net increase of twenty per cent.

The number of pupils in Church (Sunday) Schools in 1919 was 3,649 and in 1923 was 5,693, which represents a fifty-six per cent increase.

Quite as interesting as the above figures are some additional ones in the matter of finances. In 1919 the local current expenses of churches in this diocese were reported as $64,197, and in 1923 as $97,363—an increase of fifty-one per cent. The greatest gain of all was registered in the contributions for objects outside the parish—that is, for Diocesan and General Church purposes, home and foreign missions, Near East and Japan Relief and similar objects. In 1919 these figures were $22,659, while in 1923, they were $80,886, or an increase of two hundred and fifty-seven per cent.

Total expenditures for all purposes by churches in this diocese in 1919 were $142,582, and in 1923 were $317,379—an increase of one hundred and twenty-three per cent.

It is interesting to note also that between the organization of the diocese and the present time seven churches and missions have been erected, three rectories and seven parish house have been purchased or erected, lots have been purchased at two new points for the erection of churches in the future and in numbers of instances extensive additions and improvements have been made to properties previously owned: churches, rectories and parish houses.

These comparisons are naturally most encouraging to the Church people of Southwestern Virginia and it is felt that few dioceses, if any, of similar size and within whose bounds similar conditions exist in matters of personnel, financial resources and topography, can exhibit more definite and concrete evidences of growth, both spiritually and materially than this one, notwithstanding the fact that it contains a large missionary territory, and, in certain sections, great numbers of people to whom our Church is little known, if at all.

Some Interesting Field Department Meetings: The Chairmen of the seven Districts in the Field Department organizations of our diocese are hard at work on their preparations for the fall work. Very excellent District meetings have been recently held at St. Paul's Church, Lynchburg, and at R. E. Lee Memorial Church, Lexington. The Lynchburg meeting was arranged by Mr. R. T. Watts, Jr., Chairman of District No. 2, and was attended by a large number of Lynchburg people. The Lexington meeting was arranged by Mr. H. McK. Smith, of Staunton, Chairman of District No. 1, and there were present at this time representatives from Staunton, Hot Springs and a number of other points in the District. At both meetings Mr. W. D. Tyler, Diocesan Chairman of the Field Department, was present and made addresses on the work that the Diocese has done in the past and is expected to do in the fall canvass and throughout 1925.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. B. D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, D. D., Coadjutor.

St. Luke's Church, Norfolk, the Rev. David W. Howard, D. D., rector, is planning a new church and parish house, which, when completed, is expected to cost $400,000. The main portion of the parish house, exclusive of the auditorium, is to be built at once. This plan was made necessary by the large increase in the Church School and other organizations in the parish.

A new kindergarten has been opened at the parish house on Granby Street, under the direction of Miss Frances Myers.

St. John's Church, Portsmouth, recently celebrated the twentieth anniversary of the coming of their rector, the Rev. William A. Brown, D. D. Dr. Brown, during these years of faithful service, has endeared himself not only to his own congregation, but to the whole community.

St. Paul's Church, Newport News, for the purpose of bringing the three Episcopal Churches of the vicinity into closer cooperation, recently held a "get-together" dinner in the parish house, with the Rev. J. Keith M. Lee presiding. The principal discussion of the evening centered around bringing into active affiliation with the churches the "stay-at-homes" and those from other cities as yet not identified with the local congregations. Addresses were made by the Rev. J. Keith M. Lee, rector of St. Paul's Church, the Rev. Charles E. McAllister, rector of St. John's, Hampton, and the Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, D. D.

Bruton Parish, the Rev. E. Ruffin Jones, rector. The children of the Sunday School, largely at their own expense, have been renovating the parish house. The example has inspired their seniors so that additional funds are being provided for the purpose. There is a new interest, and more children are being added to the roll. Teachers meet regularly each month to discuss Sunday-School methods and problems. The Bible Class is in charge of the Rev. W. A. R. Goodwin, D. D.

At a recent meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary, an address was made by Miss DuBray, of William and Mary College, whose father is an Indian missionary among his own people in Dakota.

The services at Jamestown have been regularly maintained with encouraging attendance, as well as those at Hickory Neck Church, Toano. The Hickory Neck Guild has recently beautified the interior of the church by whitening the walls and by laying a handsome new carpet.

St. Paul's Church, Petersburg, the Rev. J. M. B. Gill, rector, has formed a parish council composed of two members from each organization in the parish. They have taken as their ideal "Everybody work somewhere, in the Church."

At St. Andrew's Church, Lawrenceville, the Rev. F. Bland Tucker, rector, Miss Elizabeth Barber, a returned missionary from China, recently gave a most instructive and inspiring talk on Woman's Work in China.

St. Thomas' Church, Clarkton: At a recent visitation to this Church Bishop Tucker dedicated the new community house there. This house, with all its furnishings, is a gift to the parish from Mrs. T. B. Clark, who devotes much of her time and thought to this work.

Rt. Rev. W. R. Stearns, D. D., Coadjutor.

Death of the Rev. F. B. Carter.

The death of the Rev. Frederick B. Carter, on November 14, has taken away one of the most honored and useful Presbyters of the Diocese. For nearly thirty years he was rector of St. Luke's Parish, Montclair, his early home and ministry having been in Long Island. Upon his resignation in full strength, he gave himself to the service of the Church in Essex County as the Archdeacon of Newark and was unwearied in his care of the mission churches, making himself a great servant of the Church in the Diocese. He was long a member of the Standing Committee and its Secretary, of the Board of Religious Education and its representative in the Provincial Board. His memory will live as one of the most devoted men the Diocese has ever had in its service.

Anniversary of Grace Church.

The seventieth anniversary of Grace Church, Orange, was observed on November 12, the Rev. Dr. Charles T. Walkley, rector. Bishop Mann came back to the church in which he served for seventeen years as assistant and rector, and the church was crowded with a great congregation, many of the clergy of the diocese being present. A reception was held after the service, thronged by a multitude of parishioners and friends. The anniversary has been marked by the payment of all parish debts.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rt. Rev. T. J. Garland, D. D., Bishop.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the ordination of the Rev. Archibald Campbell Knowles to the priesthood was celebrated Sunday, November 23, in St. Alban's Church, Olney. The Bishop of Fon du Lac officiated and preached at the morning service.

The Rev. E. C. Chorley, of Garrison, N. Y., Historiographer of the Church in the United States, addressed the Church Historical Society, November 17, in the Church House, Philadelphia, on "The Rise of Parties in the American Church."

The Rev. William A. McClenthen, of Baltimore, conducted a Retreat for Teachers November 15 in St. Margaret's Mission House, Philadelphia, and on November 19 in the same place, the Rt. Rev. Paul Matthews, Bishop of New Jersey, gave a Retreat for Associates and other ladies.

A bronze tablet, erected by the American Clan Gregor Society in memory of John Magruder was recently dedicated at St. Barnabas' Church, Queen Anne Parish, Leland, Md.

The Rev. James W. Magruder, of Baltimore, the Rev. Enoch M. Thompson of Washington, and the Rev. Harry C. Goodman, rector of the parish, officiated at the services. The historical address was delivered by C. C. Magruder, III, one of the Clan.

Bishop Hunting Memorial Dedicated.

All Saints' Day was beautiful at the historic mining camp of Virginia City, Nevada, when the Memorial Monument to Bishop Hunting was dedicated at an out door service in the plot of the Masonic Cemetery, where the ashes of the Bishop are buried. The Stone is a beautiful piece of Nevada granite, modest and simple, yet it will make clear to future generations the strength and sturdiness of the man honored.

Placed as it is at the crown of the Hill Top Cemetery it can be seen from all the surrounding country, a benediction indeed upon the City where the Bishop was for so many years a shepherd.

Holy Communion was celebrated by the rector of Trinity Church, Reno, the Rev. E. T. Brown, who also read the prayer of dedication. A large number of Church people from the surrounding country were present and will never forget the quiet, solemn hour nor the reality of the belief in The Communion of Saints.

The Monument was given by many Church organizations in Nevada and over ninety individual friends from both within and without the State. Every cent was entirely voluntary—just as Bishop Hunting would have wished—and the response was so generous that the committee hopes to publish a memorial account of the Bishop's life in the State.

PITTSBURGH.

Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., Bishop.

A Good Cause Needing Help.

For a number of years the small group of Episcopalians in Donora tried to keep alive the Church work through their mission. They met with many failures, the chief one being the lack of a building in which to hold services.

About five years ago the mission work was finally abandoned and nothing further done until April of this year when a few members of the former mission held a meeting for the purpose of reviving the interest in the Church work again.

It was decided at this meeting that a town boasting of a population of 18,000 should have an Episcopal Church and that the only successful way in which to carry on the Church work would be first to build a church and then secure a rector.

A building committee was appointed and in two weeks every Episcopalian family in town, numbering forty, had been canvassed with the net result in subscriptions of $4,000. With this encouragement the committee visited Bishop Alexander Mann and placed the proposition before him. Bishop Mann, immediately referred the matter to the Building Committee of the Diocese, which voted them a donation of $7,500, with the proviso that the members of the mission raise a like amount.

Plans have been prepared and specifications drawn for a church constructed of brick, having a seating capacity in the nave of one hundred and sixty, and a basement to be used as a parish room with a seating capacity of three hundred. The cost of the building is to be $25,000.

The contract has been let and actual construction will start as soon as weather conditions permit.

The members of the St. John's Mission would appreciate any financial assistance that any church, Church organization or individual may care to give to this worthy cause. In addition it may be possible that there are churches purchasing new equipment such as organs, alters, pulpits, pews and chairs, and that their old equipment would be very suitable for their needs, which would indeed mean quite a saving to the Mission.

Address all donations and communications to Mr. H. D. Teeter, Treasurer of St. John's Mission, 722 Walnut Avenue, Donora, Pa.

The First Diocesan Young People's Convention.

The recent young people's convention of the diocese held in Holy Trinity Church, Greensboro, was a greater success even than was expected by its promoters. There were about three hundred boys and girls present. To see the church packed to the aisles and doors for early communion is a sight one does not often witness. This convention proved that the young people of the church have been literally surging like a tide back and forth, against the time when they would be recognized and utilized and properly organized into a great force in the Church's life. Bishop Penick and the Rev. Chas. Scovil were the principal speakers, but the young people themselves also produced several talented speakers and conducted their own business with understanding and effectiveness, under the general direction of Mr. Scovil, secretary of religious education. This was the first convention of the kind ever held in the diocese, a preliminary conference of a smaller body of young people, having first been held some time back in the parish of the Holy Comforter, Burlington.

The Rev. Lewis N. Taylor, of Roanoke Rapids, has been made part-time field secretary of Social Service in the province of Sewanee and is now devoting some weeks to this work, having been for a long time diocesan chairman of Social Service.

The Rev. Harvey A. Cox, of Red Springs, N. C., has been called to Alamance County as assistant to the Rev. Thomas F. Opie, D. D., of Burlington, to devote himself to missionary work in the county, under the Holt Missionary Fund. He has not yet made known his decision.

SOUTHERN OHIO.

Rt. Rev. Boyd Vincent, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. T. L. Reese, D. D., Coadjutor.

The Cincinnati City Mission has accepted responsibility for services and visiting at Longview Hospital for the Insane. The Superintendent and the Social Service Department of the Hospital are giving the heartiest cooperation. Fully two hundred and fifty of the patients attend and the attention and participation in the services are most inspiring.

Deaconess Drant of the Mission has started a small library in the County Jail. One lady gives her a new book and a used book every month and others are taking up the idea.

The Cincinnati Clericus this autumn is taking up a series of very interesting topics. The Rev. Maxwell B. Long read a paper on the Religions of the East and the Rev. Carl Stridsberg presented the subject of Mysticism. The Clericus meets on the first Monday of each month at Christ Church, and visiting clergy are welcome.

Death of Mrs. Wm. C. Otte: The sympathy of a host of Cincinnati friends goes out to the Rev. Canon William Crossman Otte, in the loss he has sustained in the death of his wife, Jane Ellis Otte, who died on November 11, from an attack of heart failure, after a brief illness at the home in Pleasant Ridge. For sixty years Mrs. Otte was the competent and hearty helper of her husband in his varied fields of activity. Although eighty-one years of age she was active in all good works until the end. The small chapel of All Saints, Pleasant Ridge, could not accommodate the many friends and relatives and so the service was held at St. Stephen's, Winton Place, Canon Reade, a long-time friend of the family, officiating.

The Fortieth Anniversary of the founding of St. Stephen's Church, Winton Place, Cincinnati, will be observed on December 21. A program is being arranged. Of the founders of the church several survive. Mr. William Salway lives near by in Clifton, and Mr. Henry H. Vail, for many years a prominent publisher, resides in the East. The widow of Mr. Robert J. Smith, who not only helped found the parish, but also left an endowment to assist in perpetuating it, is still an active and generous supporter of the church, while Mrs. Keith Hubbell, one of those who appealed to the Bishop for the services of the church in that locality, is still a communicant of the parish.

Young People's Service League Presents Pageant.

There was recently presented, under the auspices of the Young People's Service League, which consists of the young people of St. James' and St. Andrew's Churches, Greenville, the pageant, "The Little Pilgrims and the Book Beloved."

The pageant was first presented at St. James' Church. It was beautifully and impressively rendered, and a large congregation, which crowded the Church to its utmost capacity, witnessed the play. Many were present who were not of our Communion, and were deeply impressed with the teaching of our Prayer Book.

Too much credit cannot be given to Mr. Robert M. Hammond, superintendent of the St. James' Sunday School, for his interest in getting up the pageant and for the rendering of appropriate hymns.

Mrs. A. W. Taylor, the wife of the rector of Grace Church, Anderson, very kindly lent many of the costumes and banners.

Collect for the First Sunday in Advent.

Almighty God, give us grace that we may cast away the works of darkness, and put upon us the armour of light, now in the time of this mortal life, in which Thy Son Jesus Christ came to visit us in great humility that in the last day, when He shall come again in His glorious Majesty to judge both the quick and the dead, we may arise to the life immortal, through Him Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost, now and ever. Amen.

Collect for St. Andrew's Day.

Almighty God, Who didst give such grace unto Thy holy Apostle St. Andrew, that he readily obeyed the calling of Thy Son Jesus Christ and followed Him without delay; grant unto us all, that we being called by Thy Holy Word, may forthwith give up ourselves obediently to fulfil Thy Holy Commandments; through the same Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

When He Comes.

Thus may it be (I thought) at some day's close,
Some lilac-haunted eve, when every rose Breathes forth its incense. May He and me there,
In holy leisure, lifting hands of prayer,
In some sweet garden place,
To catch the first dear wonder of His Face!

Or, in my room above,
In silent meditation of His love,
My soul illumined with a rapture rare.
It would be sweet, if even then, these eyes
Might glimpse Him coming in the Eastern skies,
And be caught up to meet Him in the air.

But now! Ah, now, the days
Rush by their hurrying ways!
No longer know I vague imaginings,
For every hour has wings.
Yet my heart watches . . . As I work I say,
All simply, to Him: "Come! And if today;
Then wilt thou find me thus: just as I am—
Tending my household; stirring gooseberry jam;
Or swiftly rinsing tiny vests and hose,
With puzzled forehead patching some one's clothes;
Guiding small foot-steps, swift to hear,
and run,
From early dawn till setting of the sun."

And whensoe'er He comes, I'll rise and
go,
Yes, all the gladlier that He found me so.

"O LITTLE TOWN OF BETHLEHEM."

A Visit to the Birthplace of Jesus.

The Rev. C. S. McClellan, Jr.

The little town of Bethlehem, which the Hebrews were wont to call "the House of Bread," and today is known as Beit Lahm, lies nestled on a ridge surrounded by lovely hills and pleasant valleys, some six miles south of the "Mecca" of all Christians, Jerusalem, the Holy City of Palestine. Now, as of old, Bethlehem is situated in the province of Judea with the "Wilderness," stretching away from it on the east and the waters of the Dead Sea looming up far away toward the dawn land. Many miles distant to the south is Idumea, a great barren tract of country, like our Texas plains, while to the west, some thirty or forty miles is the Mediterranean Sea, "The Great Sea," of history, with its ships coming and going to the ports of Jaffa and Haifa and bringing in thousands of tourists each year to see the Holy Land.

Clustering about Bethlehem are places closely associated with the Bible story. There is the tiny town of Tekoa, south of Bethlehem, the home of the prophet, Amos, the contemporary of Isaiah and Hosea, the author of that rugged little book of the Old Testament, which bears the reflection of the wild country in which its author was reared. There is Hebron further south of Tekoa, with its Cave of Macpelah, one of the ancient "Cities of Refuge," and the by-gone capital of David. And Herodium, the burial place of Herod, is not far distant and the "Cave of Adullam," with its memories of David, and the place of Gath associated with Goliath and Timnath and Zorah, still alive with the stories of the strong Samson. Throughout that part of Palestine there are countless places each with its legend and story about some mighty hero of the Old Covenant. One must not be too susceptible to their reality, for there is much that is unauthentic amid the facts of Palestine's history and fakirs are not uncommon in the Holy Land and commercialism has made strong inroads into the country of Jesus. The old dictum about a "grain of salt," "cum grano salis," must be constantly kept in mind in journeying about Palestine.

It is to the little town of Bethlehem that the thought of all the Christian world is turning at this time, for soon we shall be celebrating the birth of Our Lord in Bethlehem. Sung by the poets of all Christian centuries, painted by the master brushes of great artists, described by historian and romancer alike, the little town of Bethlehem has been and still is the center of more interest than any other place in the world. Who would not journey with me to Bethlehem today? Who would not rejoice in roaming or sitting in meditation in the Field of the Shepherds on a star-light Christmas Eve? Who would not kneel with me by the star in the grotto, where, they say, Christ was born? Who would not listen reverently to the hymns as multitudes sing them and to the prayers as countless hosts pray them in Bethlehem's Church of the Nativity on Christmas Day? Who would not be happy in wandering through narrow streets, where once shone the "Everlasting Light" and in feeling the very atmosphere of the town of the Lord's birth? O Little Town of Bethlehem, how the whole world turns to you in this hour!

The journey to Bethlehem is a spiritual pilgrimage. Hills dotted with dim and dusky green olive trees; winding roads and lanes and by-paths along which gayly colored pilgrims journey; white houses with flat roofs, picturesque and quaint; towers lifting themselves up over roofs and house-tops; camels and donkeys and sheep resting in the noon day's shade; a market place with merchants in gay oriental costume and surrounded with houses with white-washed walls, ancient, brown beams and rafters, a simple but very busy mart.

Bazaars with curios of all shapes and sizes and made of mother of pearl and native woods, rosaries, match boxes, crosses; women with blue eyes tranquil and deep, and wearing dark blue skirts, dark red jackets and a white veil over their heads—a distinct type. Under their veil married women wearing a peculiar cap of embroidered black cloth about six or seven inches high and stiff and across the front of the cap a string of gold or silver coins—a dewry. Then a church, called the Nativity, with long rows of great pillars and having dark winding steps slippery with candle drippings and leading down to the grotto with the star marking, where the Christ was born. An almost endless stream of pilgrims, Greeks, Armenians and Latins—out of every tribe and nation—crowding the church in bewildering fashion on Christmas Day. And overhead the fair blue skies of Palestine and the glorious sun of the Orient bathing the town in dazzling golden and white light. That is the little town of Bethlehem by day.

But by night! That is the real time to see Bethlehem. As Walter Scott enjoined his readers to visit, fair Melrose, "by pale moonlight," so would we bid our readers see Bethlehem. Then the true spirit of the pilgrimage is realized. Then comes the contact between your world of fancy and your world of fact. It is well to come upon some ancient ruin or town embattlement or sacred shrine or ancient churchyard at twilight or at dawn, or better than all these by "pale moonlight." Then ghosts walk abroad. Then dreams come true. Then in the half-light material objects become more spiritual. Let us journey in fancy then beyond Bethlehem's walls to the Field of the Shepherds and under the starlight, let us be still and in imagination travel back over the years and down the corridors of history, across the shadows and sunlight of the long, long, long ago to that night, "when shepherds watched their flock by night" on these very fields.

Let us again hear the angel song of that first Christmas night. Let us listen to the heavenly voices for today we need "peace on earth and good will to men." And then "let us go even unto Bethlehem," and to the manger where lies the Infant Jesus and before which stand His Mother and Joseph.

The journey along the road from Jerusalem to Bethlehem under a brilliant moon is an experience one never forgets! It is one of those very unusual and spiritual events that forever makes its impress. The hills, the vales, the houses, the paths, the gardens, the walls, the bridges, the tombs, the historic places together with the thrilling anticipation that we are coming nearer and nearer Bethlehem—these are, indeed, best felt and realized under the moonlight.

The tourist or pilgrim to Bethlehem usually leaves Jerusalem by the Jaffa Gate. We round the scarp of Mount Zion and cross the Valley of Hinnom below the Pool of the Sultan and ride up the hill opposite. On the left is pointed out the Judas Tree, where the traitor is said to have hanged himself after betraying Our Lord. We must not be too exacting—remember the "grain of salt." Looking back as we leave the tree we see a wonderfully beautiful view of Jerusalem in all its glory.

The Ophthalmic Hospital of the English Knights of St. John now comes into view—a clean, wholesome house of healing in the midst of a country where blindness is so prevalent and where dirt and the plague of crawling flies spread the germs of contagion, and where fatalism and the will of Allah have settled down over the inhabitants for centuries. What a blessing is this Hospital! An interesting stop and a symbol on the road—the "Via Dei"—that leads to Bethlehem. "Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened."

At the right is the railway station, not very interesting or picturesque and reminding us how modern conveniences can lack all the features of art and beauty.

Southward, as we travel on, is the Plain of Raphaim, another historic spot with its memories of David and his smiting the Philistines. Gardens and cultivated soil, the almond trees and fig trees, now come into view and give us delightful glimpses of rural Palestine. Past the Valley of the Giants we arrive at the Well of the Magi, where that first Epiphany the Magi saw the Star reflected in the bosom of this well. Beyond is the Hill of Mar Elyas with its Convent of Elijah founded long ago by Bishop Elias. Here tradition points to a place where Elijah tarried and slept in the rock—the very depression in rock upon which Elijah slept is shown—but "the grain of salt." The Convent is interesting and worthy of a short stop. As we look out towards the east, if the weather be clear, we shall catch from here views of the distant Dead Sea. The journey to Bethlehem from Jerusalem, though not long, only six miles, and over an excellent highway, is filled with interest and should be taken slowly and thoughtfully. We must not "rush" into Bethlehem, even though we motor along this historic road. We must think much of that expectant Mother and the anxious Joseph, as they journeyed by this route those many centuries ago from Nazareth up in Galilee to Bethlehem, there to be taxed, when Cyrennius was governor of Syria and when on Tiber's shores the mighty Augustus Caesar ruled the Roman Imperium.

The Fundamental Element.

What is the fundamental thing in religion? The supreme element is not our intellectual reactions, but it is outreach of what Jesus called the heart. "Out of the heart are the issues of life." The affections, emotions and desires driving the will to a supreme surrender of itself to God, to a supreme appropriation of all that God has for us, and to sacrificial service for our fellow-men. As I understand the teachings of Jesus, this is the inner citadel of our holy faith, and this is what He meant when He said, "Believe!"

Please do not misunderstand me. The intellectual elements of faith are not to be underrated or neglected. A clear, true, balanced thinking is immensely important to the individual and indispensable to the Church. Organized believers require organized belief, and a system of doctrine that shall be firm enough for solidarity, while flexible enough for individual variety. In fact, our intellectual grasp of truth will enhance the very intensity of our affections. And we must have such clear apprehension of truth, else our very affections and emotions will swing off into vagaries and fanaticism.

You will readily see that it could not be otherwise. Suppose that religion were fundamentally the intellectual acceptance of certain facts. How many of us have intellects adequate to keeping our facts straight? They tell us that only four and half per cent of the population ever reaches the mental age of eighteen. Is this little group the only one capable of true religion? There are very few intellects which are not warped by training, environment, early bent, or failure in balanced reading and thinking. We have many brilliant minds, but few balanced ones. The brain is never sure-footed, but in the long run the heart is always sure-footed. And what I am trying to say to you is that one may have a very small or inadequate intellectual conception of Christian Creeds; if his heart in affection and desire and purpose, leaps out to Christ in the light of what he does know, then he is a Christian. It is as Spurgeon once put, "Christ looked at me and I at Christ, and were one forever."—Dr. C. F. Wishart.

If man could only see

How by his mockery

This world is spoiled,

And from himself exact

Truth in his every act,

For which Christ toiled,

There would come perfect peace,

Wars from the earth would cease,

If he would live

Sincere, and trustingly,

From every meanness free,

His noblest give.

If each could only find

Deep in the inner mind,

His guiding light,

And let no outer thing

Blow to its flickering,

All would be right,

"I am the Light, the Way."

If, one by one, today

Men sought to beam

Truth—all transparently,

Making the Pudding.

Do folks still make their plum puddings at home, or does everybody buy them ready-made from stores? I have so fallen out of domestic ways that I hardly know. But I can almost bet that the plum pudding I shall eat this year will come from some great food factory.

But I feel sure that at ten I should have wept and thought that the bottom had tumbled out of Christmas if I had thought that the pudding had come from a shop. Every child knew in those days that Christmas pudding was not a Christmas pudding unless it were made at home. Only Mother and Cook of all the people in the world knew how to make one. And our puddings were always richer and better than anybody else's.

Yes, we made our own plum pudding then—or, rather, puddings, for we made twenty-six, enough to last us beyond the Christmas holidays into many Sundays and birthdays. And all our neighbors made their puddings. From early November housewives greeted each other with "Have you made your puddings yet?" And the answer might be, "Yes, thank goodness; I've got that over," or "No, but I really must this week."

But that was before the days of flats. Kitchens were larger then. And there were all sorts of handy places beyond the kitchen—sculleries and wash-houses that gave you ample room for big operations. And outside was the plentiful garden and the yard in which a turkey—the one survivor of an unlucky brood of six—was fattening among the hens, and farther afield the little paddock with old Grannie the cow. With your own turkey getting ready for the Christmas table and with the promise of real cream such as only your own cow gives, what else could you do but make your own plum pudding?

* * * *

And of course you did. Mother would have thought herself guilty of the unpardonable sin if she had not made at least a dozen.

And the day came when cook chopped spet until her arm must have ached. Every kind of curranty thing that ever was made had its own little pile on the kitchen table. And there was goodness knows how much of candied and other peels.

Sometimes I thought that the peel was put in to catch the nerve in an uncertain tooth of mine and so to remind me that there was a flaw in all mortal joys. Another flaw was that if I showed too much interest in the work that was going on I might be impressed to stone raisins.

Presently all the many things were mixed into one big pile. And we were prodigal with sugar, working pounds and pounds of it into the mountain. And then all was shovelled into a great earthenware bowl such as I have never seen since.

Then came stirring. We stirred the mass with a great wooden spoon until it grew so sticky that stirring was hard. And, as a reward for our labor, we tasted, and found the raw pudding good.

Then at the end of one of the most perfect days in a child's year a score or more of white bowls were filled with the stiffening mass and wrapped up in cloth—we must have used yards and yards—and taken away to the copper to be boiled. And on the morrow, on the deep shelf in the larder whence the last of last year's puddings had been taken only a short while ago, some twenty of this year's puddings went into store.

That was how we made puddings, well ahead of Christmas, in the spacious days of more than thirty years ago.

Are they still made like that in these times?—Daily Mail.

Him evermore I behold

Walking in Galilee,
Through the cornfield's waving gold,

By the shores of the Beautiful Sea.

He toucheth the sightless eyes;

Before Him the demons flee;

To the dead He sayeth: Arise!

To the living: Follow Me!

And the voice still soundeth on

From centuries that are gone,

To the centuries that shall be!"

The Holy Tide.

A Christmas Mystery Play, based upon the customs which from every age and land have gathered about the Feast of Our Lord's Nativity.

PART I.

Claudine E. Clements.

Episode 1.

Christmas Eve in Greccio—The first Christmas creche.

Place: The house of Signior Velita.

Time: Christmas Eve, 1223.

Persons: St. Francis of Assisi, Signior Giovanni Velita.

Signior Velita is at work on a creche which is almost complete. St. Francis is heard outside singing, "The Ballad of the Stork." (These verses may be sung to the music of Hymn 54.)

"The stork she rose on Christmas Eve
And said unto her brood,
'I now must fare to Bethlehem
To view the Son of God.'

She gave to each his dole of meat,
She stowed them fairly in,
And far she flew and fast she flew,
And came to Bethlehem."

Signior Velita: 'Tis the Little Poor Man; I must make haste to finish my work.

St. Francis (outside singing):

"Now where is he of David's line?
She asked at house and hall.
'He is not here,' they spake hardly,
'But in the manger stall.'

She found Him in the manger stall
With that most holy maid;
The gentle stork she wept to see
The Lord so rudely laid.

Then from her panting breast she plucked
The feathers white and warm;
She strawed them in the manger bed
To keep the Lord from harm.

'Now blessed be the gentle stork
Forevermore,' quoth He,
'For that she saw My sad estate
And showed such pitye.'
—Traditional, Sixteenth Century.

During the song, Signior Velita puts the figures of the creche in place. As St. Francis concludes, children are heard outside clapping their hands. He enters the room.

St. Francis: Thy children love a song and a story, Giovanni.

Signior Velita: When thou tellest it. But today is the feast of the Blessed Indeed, father, thou art always welcome, but even more today, for my task is complete.

St. Francis: Scarcely now will my preaching be needed. Thou rememberest, Giovanni, that last year I told the children how Christ was born in Bethlehem of Judea; but the mystery was too great for them to comprehend. Yet even the simple minded may see and understand thy images.

Signior Velita: Thou art ever more generous of praise than blame, yet methinks thou seest something amiss.

St. Francis: Thou hast forgotten some that were among the Little Holy One's first worshippers.

Signior Velita: Nay, for Madonna is here in her heaven's blue, and Holy Joseph. The Shepherds, too, and the three kings in emerald, and gold, and scarlet. I have forgotten none, good father, who knelt at the manger on the Holy Night.

St. Francis: Thinkest thou then that there were no cattle in the stable where the Holy Family lodged?

Signior Velita: Ay, doubtless, yet a cow is but a stupid thing and an ass a senseless creature.

St. Francis: Nay, friend. The ox kneweth his owner and the ass his master's crib, but Israel did not know, His people did not consider.

Signior Velita: Thou didst ever love the dumb brutes, father. And see, it shall be as thou desirest.

(He begins to cut an animal from wood.)

St. Francis: Surely, the beasts recognized the Holy Child, and as He lay between them worshipped Him. too, and kept Him warm with their warm breath. And tonight methinks in every stall as Christmas dawns, we shall find the cattle on their knees, and in every fold the sheep a-worshipping the Lamb of God.

Curtain.

Between Episodes one and two is sung the carol, "Good Christian Men Rejoice" (No. 549—New Hymnal).

Episode 2.

The Boy Bishop of Salisbury: In the Cathedral towns of mediaeval England, the celebration of the Holy Tide begins on the festival of St. Nicholas, the children's saint. On Christmas Eve itself, candles in every window and the carols of the choir boys through the streets usher in the Birthday of Christ.

Place: The home of Master Wilton in Salisbury.

Time: Scene 1—St. Nicholas' Day, December 6, 1219.

Scene 2—Christmas Eve, at night.

Persons: Master Wilton, Mary, his wife, Jane and David, their children, choir boys.

Scene 1.

Mistress Wilton is embroidering a mitre of small size. Jane is watching her.

Jane: Mother, what dost thou make?

Mistress Wilton: What dost thou think?

Jane: A mitre, save that it is so small. But it is well garnished with pearls and precious stones.

Mistress Wilton: Thine eyes are sharp, little one. 'Tis for our boy bishop.

Jane: Who is he?

Mistress Wilton: That I do not know.

Nicholas who loveth children, and so the choir and altar boys meet to choose from among their number him who hath sung best for a twelvemonth. Him they call the "little bishop," and from now till Christmas Day his companions will obey him and even the great bishop and the holy priests will honor him.

Jane: I would David might be chosen.

Mistress Wilton: Ay, ay, thy brother singeth well and he is fair and comely, too. 'Twould be a brave sight to see him in the procession with mitre and staff. But he is the youngest of all.

David is heard outside calling, "Mother!"

Jane: There he is.

Mistress Wilton: Here, son.

David enters.

David: Mother, thou canst scarce guess who hath been chosen St. Nicholas' bishop.

Mistress Wilton: Mistress Thorp's son? or Dick Gilder?

David—Nay, another guess.

Mistress Wilton: Not William Sel-den? or—my son, not thou?

David, Ay, mother, truly. I thought thou wouldst never guess.

Mistress Wilton: 'Tis scarce possible that so great honor should come to us. How pleased thy father will be. Methinks even now I can see thee in mitre and cope and with thy staff in thy hand.

David: Think, mother how I shall sing vespers on Holy Innocents' Day Eve, and a carol too at the Christ-mass at midnight. Wilt thou hear it now? 'Tis the angels' song.

Mistress Wilton: And thy sister and I will listen as the shepherds did.

David sings the carol, "In Excelsis Gloria" (New Hymnal No. 547).

Curtain.

Scene 2.

Mistress Wilton and Jane enter. They take off their hoods and cloaks.

Mistress Wilton: Come, daughter, we must hasten now, for soon the caroling will begin. Our house must be ready when the singers come by.

Jane: Will David be with them?

Mistress Wilton: Ay, thy brother will lead them even as he did today in the minster.

Jane: Then he seemed like an angel.

Mistress Wilton: Methinks even Gabriel could scarce sing more sweetly.

(There is a knock at the door.)

Mistress Wilton: 'Tis thy father little one.

(Jane opens the door. Master Wilton enters. He carries an armful of holly and evergreens.)

Mistress Wilton (to her husband): Ah, John, thou hast brought the forest with thee.

(They begin to hang the greens about the room.)

Master Wilton: See, these cedars are as sweet as the incense at the Christ-mass; and the pine and balsam, too.

Jane: But the holly is best of all.

Master Wilton: 'Tis the tree of the Holy Tide.

Mistress Wilton: And it hath made our home fair and sweet for the Christ Child when He comes tonight.

Jane: But how will He find us, Mother, and know that He may come in?

Mistress Wilton: See, little one, our Christmas candle shall show Him the way, even as the star guided the wise men unto Bethlehem.

(She lights and places the candle in the window.)

Master Wilton: Sing to us, Mary, the story of the Holy Night.

(Mary seats herself by the window.

her child beside her and her husband standing near in such a manner as to recall the usual representations of the Holy Family.)

Mistress Wilton sings the traditional carol, known as the "Cherry Tree Carol." (It may be sung to the musical setting of "O Little Town of Bethlehem".)

"As Joseph was a-walking,
He heard an angel sing,
'This night shall be the birth-time
Of Christ, the heavenly king.

'He neither shall be born
In house nor in hall,
Nor in the place of Paradise
But in an ox's stall.

'He neither shall be clothed
In purple nor in pall,
But in the fair white linen
That use babies all.

'He neither shall be rocked
In silver nor in gold,
But in a wooden manger
That resteth on the mould.'

As Joseph was a-walking,
There did an angel sing,
And Mary's child at midnight
Was born to be our King.

Then be ye glad, good people,
This night of all the year,
And light ye up your candles,
For His star it shineth clear."

During the last stanza, a group of choir boys outside the window, join in the singing of the carol. Master Wilton opens the window. Among the choristers, is David vested in mitre and cope as the boy bishop. They sing the carol, "Nowell, Nowell" (No. 551 New Hymnal). At its close they go off the stage singing, their voices growing fainter in the distance.

For the Southern Churchman.

The Church Year.

Eugenie du Maurier.

Advent begins the ecclesiastical year, that is, the Church year. The Church, through the Gospel, tells us all to think of the end of the world, and the end of life, which is the end of this world for each one of us.

The Prophecy.

The Church tells us of the signs that will precede the Day of Judgment and of the awesomeness of it all. But there is so much of hope added that the fear is lessened for the time of "redemption is near." Our Saviour closes His prophecy of the end with the solemn words: "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but My words shall not pass away."

A Memory Gem.

In schools today, all children are learning memory gems. If there is a memory gem that every child should know surely it is those words of Jesus: "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but My words shall not pass away."

A memory gem is a precious thing to be kept in memory. It is something to be recalled, to give hope, faith, strength and pleasure.

We know from this prophecy of Christ that what He has said will live forever, that it is true and that truth cannot die. When trouble comes, when we do not know what to do or where to turn, if we recall this memory gem we know we have proof that Jesus keeps His word always; that the eyes that saw, in the poor widow's mite, a greater gift than the vast sums given by the rich, cannot fail to count the little sacrifices made for Him, even as He sees the fall of a sparrow, and to reward each sacrifice.

And so we are bidden to remember the end of all things; but that which has no end is God and His truth.

Advent.

The word Advent is derived from two Latin words, meaning to come, or coming. Advent is the time of preparation for the coming of Christ. Advent begins with the Sunday that is nearest to St. Andrew's Day, which is November 30. This is the season when we are to prepare worthily to celebrate the anniversary of the Lord's coming into the world as the God of Love, and so to be fit to receive Him, as we hope to be ready for His coming as Judge on that last great day.

Four thousand years had passed since Adam and Eve had brought sorrow and sin into the world. In all those years the faithful Hebrews kept the faith and hope of a Saviour Who was to come. They knew the promises and the prophecies and that the Messiah was to be born of a Virgin and of the family of David.

The Virgin Mary.

She it was who heard the message: "Hail, Mary, thou art highly favored, the Lord is with thee: blessed art thou among women." She was chosen to be the Mother of the Redeemer for Whom the world had so long looked, the Redeemer Who opened again the gates of Paradise. Among all the people of the world this fair, simple maiden was chosen to be so honored. "The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee," the Angel said to her, "and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee; therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God."

The Magnificat.

And this simple maiden was so glad to so be honored by God that she sang those beautiful words of The Magnificat that all Church people all over the world rejoice to sing: "My soul doth magnify the Lord."

The Raindrop Fairy.

By Charlotte E. Wilder.

A rain-drop fairy sat on the edge of her cloud house one day and looked far down on the little ball that is the earth swinging below her. She was sitting on the very edge, where the black color changes to a pearly gray, and she was swinging her feet and waiting to slide down a raindrop path; but before she began her long slide she wanted to be sure that she should land in the right place—the place where she could do a good deed.

She heard the sad story about raindrop fairies that are sometimes blown far out to sea and are never able to return to cloudland because whenever they try to climb a sunbeam a big green wave leaps at them and knocks them down again into the depths of the ocean.

While the fairy was thinking of that terrible fate a gray cottage with a red roof passed under her; it had bright windows that shone like new pennies and a garden filled with flowers that bobbed and swayed their shining heads. Without waiting a moment the fairy gave a little push with her hands and a little kick with her heels and went sliding down the long silver path of a raindrop.

Plop! With a bounce she plumped into the white cup of a flower. Although she was very light, the flower bowed low with surprise and stood straight again and folded her arms round the visitor. It seemed to the fairy as if she were locked in a sweet, tiny room with creamy wall paper and a beautiful soft yellow dust on the floor, a clean kind of dust that no one would wish to brush away.

"Oh, what shall I do!" said the fairy, and she cried a little raindrop tear. "I must do a good deed before I can go home again, and here I am, locked up! But it is a very pretty place, to be sure. I shall have to spend the night here."

"Stay as long as you please," said the dainty flower. "I shall see that you are kept warm and quiet because I am grateful to all your sisters who gave me a drink when I was thirsty." And, so saying, she slowly folded her arms tighter and made a little round room for the fairy to sleep in.

Little Eva, who lived with her mother in the gray house with the red roof and the windows like pennies, came into the garden to play that evening just as the sun went down. She saw the tall flower all closed for the night, but she did not know that it held a rain fairy. If she had known that, she might have put her ear down to the blossom and heard a happy little noise and bustle inside it—the noise of a fairy getting ready for bed.

But Eva remembered the white flower and early the next morning before her mother or the big black dog or the little yellow cat was up tiptoed out into the garden just as the golden eye of the sun was beginning to peep at her over the red roof of the house. She walked down the brown path until she found the white flower. Then she knelt, picked it carefully close to the ground and took it into the house to put it into one of the windows near her mother's bed. The little fairy was still sleeping soundly, and so there was no noise inside the tight ball of the blossom.

Then with a shout Eva jumped up on her mother's bed as she did every morning just as the sun came up. Her mother woke with a little start and said, "What, is it time already? I do think you get up earlier every day." And that was what she said almost every morning. Of course she saw the flower at once and went with Eva to the window to look at it. As they stood there the petals began to open and the rain fairy looked out, and the little girl looked in.

"O mother," she said, "there's a big raindrop in this flower. What a funny place for a raindrop." She could not see the fairy because the shiny surface of the raindrop looked only like a blue and rose rainbow.

"Yes," said her mother, "a raindrop caught inside like a big bumblebee."

When the two had looked a little longer they went down to breakfast, chatting and skipping with their arms round each other, but first Eva's mother pulled the green window shade high up and opened the shining window to the very top and turned the vase so that the lovely face of the flower looked straight at the sky. The sun was hiding behind the roof of the next-door house, but white fleecy shreds of clouds were drifting across the blue sky like pieces of fine cotton or a flock of tiny sheep.

The fairy looked at them and began to feel a strange tickling in her heart. When raindrop fairies feel a tickling in their hearts it means that they want to travel; they are always restless, longing to slide down the silver chute of the rain or climb up the golden ladder of the sunbeam.

While the rain fairy was longing to leave her little flower bedroom the sun put his shining face over the roof next door and threw a long fine-spun ladder in at the window.

The tickling in the heart of the rain-drop fairy grew and grew, but she could not go because she did not think that she had done a good deed yet. She had not watered the roots of the flower or given a drink to a bird or cleaned a bit of dust from any one's doorstep. So she waited, unhappy, until Eva came into the room, skipping and singing.

"My dear, what is it that makes you so happy this morning?" asked her mother, smiling almost as much as Eva herself.

"Oh, I don't know," said the little girl. "Perhaps it was the beautiful sun or the orange that I had for breakfast or the flower. Yes, yes, I do know. It was seeing that funny bumblebee raindrop all curled up inside the flower."

When the fairy heard that she smiled and gave a little push with her hands and a little kick with her heels and started on her long climb back to the sky.

Removed At Last.

A West Point cadet, some years ago, was told by his instructor to draw up the plans and specifications for a railroad viaduct to connect two high hills, between which ran a small stream.

In due course an excellent set of drawings was presented, one showing the bridge in its completion with a sketch of the surroundings. On the bridge sat two men, with their legs hanging over the side, fishing. The drawing was returned with the request that the men be removed from the bridge.

Upon receiving the paper the second time the professor discovered that his instructions had been carried out, but that the two men were seated on the banks of the stream, still in quest of fish.

Again was the paper returned, and this time with positive orders to remove the men from the drawing altogether. Imagine the consternation which overspread the features of the "learned instructor," upon receiving the paper for a third time, to find two little graves and tombstones with appropriate epitaphs, situated near the bank of the stream. His orders had been obeyed, and the men removed altogether.—Virginia Guide.

Most headaches due to lack of internal cleanliness

WHEN you are constipated, poisons form in the accumulated food waste and are carried to all parts of the body. Headaches follow. Bilioussness, insomnia, lack of energy, all result from constipation, which if unchecked will lead to serious results.

Avoid Laxatives—Say Doctors

A noted authority says that laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition.

Medical science has found in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus, Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative, and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless.

Take Nujol regularly and adopt this habit of internal cleanliness. For sale by all druggists.

RESOLUTIONS.

JOHN BROOKE YOUNG.

At a meeting of the Vestry of St. Paul's Church, Richmond, Va., held in the rector's study, on Thursday, November 13th, a Committee was appointed to prepare a memorial of respect on the death of JOHN BROOKE YOUNG, a member of the Vestry. The following minute was presented and unanimously adopted:

We come together now, and in sorrow, to pay this meagre tribute to one whom we all greatly trusted, highly respected, and genuinely loved. Our brother Vestryman, John Brooke Young, after a brief illness, departed this life on the night of November the 11th; called to his eternal place of rest, in the bosom of our blessed Saviour Jesus Christ, in Whose service he had devoted so large a part of his life. Although now removed from us in the flesh, his memory will ever remain dear in our hearts and minds.

Elected a Vestryman on April 12, 1893, he had been, with only a brief interim, a continuing member until the final call removed him from our congenial circle of friends. He had been ever faithful in his attendance and cheerful in the performance of every duty assigned to him.

A most devoted son and brother, a true and loving husband and father, a friend whose love and esteem was worthy to be coveted by any one; with a kindly and courteous manner to all, and with unfriendliness to none, he stood by the side of any man. The void caused by his death cannot be easily overcome; and his loss to St. Paul's Church is second only to that of his own family. To his bereaved widow and child, and to the other members of his family, this Vestry, in the name of the congregation of Saint Paul's Church, extends its most earnest and sincere sympathy, with the hope and belief that a kind Providence will grant to each of them a full measure of His Grace.

Therefore, be it resolved, That a copy of this testimonial be sent to his family; and also that the same be published in "The Parish Register," "Southern Churchman" and "Virginia Churchman."

A TRIBUTE.

Whereas, it has pleased God to remove from our midst to her heavenly home, our beloved and faithful member, MISS MARY JANE FULTON, we, the members of All Saints Woman's Auxiliary, desire to pay a loving tribute to her memory. Miss Mary was one among the oldest members of All Saints Church, having moved her membership there from Monumental Church when All Saints was organized in 1888. Her love for her rector, her church and its societies filled her life and though a semi-invalid, she was often found in her pew and ever ready to render some act of service. Her kindly face will be missed at our meetings, but we rejoice to know that she has gone to her reward.

JOHN MIDDLETON BERKLEY.

Passed into life eternal, September 28, 1924, in Winchester, Virginia, JOHN MIDDLETON BERKLEY, son of Lyongus Berkley and Eliza, his wife, of Berkley, Norfolk, Va., aged 70 years. Interment at Suffolk, Va.

A personal loss is sustained by all who knew him in the passing of this "big hearted" man; for his was a type not found every day. His faithfulness to his church was a beautiful example many might follow. His love for humanity, his unselfishness, kindness and courtesy, always genuine and from the heart, endeared him to all whose lives touched his.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

So successful was the pageant that, by request, it was presented the following Sunday night at St. Andrew's Church.

WESTERN NEBRASKA.

Rt. Rev. G. A. Beecher, D. D., bishop.

Successful Preaching Missions.

Two successful preaching missions have been held this fall in the district. The first, lasting one week, was conducted by the Rev. James N. MacKenzie, rector of St. Stephen's Church, Grand Island, in St. Joseph's Church, Mullen.

At the evening service, each evening, in addition to the regular sermon, a series of addresses were given on the Prayer Book. Each afternoon a conference for Church School teachers was conducted by Miss Elizabeth Beecher, Educational Secretary for Western Nebraska. The evening services and afternoon conferences were well attended and much interest has been aroused in the general work of the Church.

The second mission was held in St. John's Church, Valentine, by the Ven. Samuel E. Wells. Daily conferences were conducted by Miss Elizabeth Beecher on the Church Service League and the "Program of the Church." At the evening services Archdeacon Wells took as his subject "The Way of Life." Sunday being the last day of the mission, Bishop Beecher was present and preached at the morning service and administered the rite of confirmation.

Splendid congregations were present at all of the services.

Hastings Deanery.

The annual meeting of the Hastings Deanery was held in Grace Church, Red Cloud, October 31 and November 1. The Holy Communion was celebrated by the Rev. Samuel Hardman, Rural Dean. At the afternoon session the speaker was the Very Rev. Ralph V. Hinkle, Dean of St. Mark's Cathedral, Hastings, who gave an inspiring address on "Prayer." This was followed by a round table discussion led by the Rev. John M. Bates.

On All Saints' Day, after the celebration of the Holy Communion, Archdeacon Wells gave a very practical address on "Proportionate Giving," and this was followed by a talk by Miss Beecher who spoke on "The Church School Organized for Service." In the afternoon the Rev. J. C. Ferrier of McCook, spoke in a very practical manner about the "Ideal Communicant." The closing address was given by Mrs. A. J. Ford on "The Publications of the Church." Mrs. Ford is an enthusiastically for Church papers, and in a splendid manner, presented the need for every family to read a Church paper.

Church Progress.

This winter, the whole work all over the district seems to have taken on new life. A number of new Church Schools have been organized, and old ones revived. The majority of the parishes and missions are working hard to meet the full quota for the "Program of the Church." A number of parishes and missions have paid in full, some of which had not paid anything since the beginning of the Nation-Wide Campaign.

SPRINGFIELD.

Rt. Rev. J. C. White, D. D., Bishop.

Meeting of Laymen.

Some seventy-five of the laymen of Christ Church and St. Paul's Church, Springfield, gathered for a joint dinner in Christ Church Parish House, November 19. Bishop White presided and the rectors of the two parishes, the Rev. Jerry Wallace of Christ Church and the Rev. Edward Haughton of St. Paul's, were present. The speaker of the evening was Mr. William F. Pelham, of Chicago. Mr. Pelham is President of the Chicago Diocesan Assembly of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, and came in place of Mr. George K. Gibson, who was unable to be present. Mr. Pelham's address was on the subject of Stewardship and he drove home some most interesting points.

The Bishop introduced the new Executive Secretary of the Diocese, Mr.

Spencer; who spoke briefly to the men on some of the things it was hoped the laymen would undertake this winter.

NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. W. T. Manning, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. S. Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan.
Rt. Rev. Herbert Shipman, D. D., Suffragan.

National Education Week.

National Education Week was observed in New York with an interesting program. There was an exhibit of work by schools and pupils held in an armory, and in seven churches there were given definite suggestions for work by men, one list of suggestions being broadcasted in part.

The points made were that there are important tasks that all can enter upon, no matter how busy; that they are leads to larger tasks, and that together they form a four-square program for all men.

'Fraid.

Helen Bayley Davis.

I used to be jus' awful 'fraid
At night when it was dark;
At every little sound I heard
I'd jump an' whisper "Hark!"

I thought a Boogie-man was hid
Behin' each rocking-chair;
An' Ghosts an' Goblins would walk down
Behin' me on the stair!

I'd cover up my head each night
Because the chairs would creak;
An' everythin' jus' scared me so
The bed would even squeak!

But las' night when I said my prayers
I asked the Father dear,
To send a little Angel down
An' keep him very near

To walk beside me in the dark,
To make me brave an' bright!
So now I like the dark — indeed,
I'm not afraid at night!

VAIN is the chiming of forgotten bells
That the wind sways above a ruined shrine.
Vainer his voice in whom no longer dwells
Hunger that craves immortal Bread and Wine.

Light songs we breathe that perish with our breath
Out of our lips that have not kissed the rod.
They shall not live who have not tasted death.
They only sing who are struck dumb by God.

minutes, and there was a new note of reverence in his voice as he ended with:
"Or ever the silver cord be loosed or the wheel broken at the cistern. Then he exclaimed: "Isn't that wonderful?"

"It is," I agreed. "Would you like to read more by the same author?"

He nodded, and I handed him my Bible that lay on my desk.

He stared at me. "You don't mean to say that's from the Bible?"

I nodded and opened the book at the twelfth chapter of Ecclesiastes and he read: "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them."

"I didn't know that was in the Bible," he said quietly. "Are there any more passages like that?"

I turned to the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah and then passed on to other beautiful passages both of the Old Testament and of the New. He listened to them eagerly.

A few days ago he said to me: "I'm

December Brings the Acid Test

In each Every Member Canvass we have an opportunity to express in promises the extent of our interest in the Church's work, for which each and all of us are responsible as loyal members of the Church.

The true measure of our interest is not known until the end of the ensuing year, when the treasurers of the Church total up the offerings actually made.

Making a definite expression of purpose before the year begins is a test of our devotion, but the complete carrying out of that purpose before the year ends is the real acid test. This month brings to us a double test:

I. In the Every Member Canvass on December 7th we will show the measure of our interest by the pledge we make for next year.

II. We will prove the sincerity of our action last year in making a pledge by paying it in full before December 31st, and perhaps we will do better than we promised.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

There is no such thing as standing still in this world. Each soul is either a little stronger or a little weaker, a little nobler or little less noble, a little more self-reliant or a little more dependent today than it was yesterday.

A few short years at most (it may be less)

I shall have done with earthly storm and stress;

So for today I lay me at Thy feet.

Oh, keep me sweet, my Master, keep me sweet!

—Fay Inchfawn.

Christ rules not merely by the tradition of what He once was, spake, did, and endured, but by a real power, which even now, seated as He is at the right hand of God, He exercises over lands and nations, generations, families, and individuals.—Kuyper.

Some one defines optimism as the habit of seeing other people's troubles on the bright side. There is a good deal of that kind of optimism, apparently. Also it is easy to acquire, though of no particular value after one acquires it. Sympathy for other people is one thing and optimism for home use quite another.—Forward.

It is not any theory about God, even the best, that makes life worth living. It is God Himself; the order of His universe; His mornings and evenings; His sunshine and His stars; His spring-time resurrection; His human love; His little children. Because God is, life is worth living.—John W. Chadwick.

There is no sorrow that He will not share,

No cross, no burden, for our hearts to bear,

Without His help, no care of ours too small

To cast on Jesus; let us tell Him all—
Lay at His feet the story of our woes,
And in His sympathy find sweet repose.
—Selected.

"I have come to the sincere conclusion that the person who refuses to support Foreign Missions, with the plea that he believes more in Home Missions, does not really believe in either, and will do about as little for Home Missions as he does for Foreign Missions. But, if I read the gospel aright, no person can be a true Christian and not believe in and support worthily both Home and Foreign Missions."

FOLLOWERS OF THE WAY

One of the most charming stories told of the Great Bear of English literary history is that of his encounter with the old beggar woman. Dr. Johnson was coming out of his house when he was accosted by the old beggar, who asked him for a shilling. The old bear growled out: "Who are you?" The answer was: "I am just a poor old struggler, Sir." Instantly the gruff old tyrant's manner changed. He lifted his hat and said: "Would you mind shaking hands with me, Madam? That is just what I am, a poor old struggler."

When all is said, it is the company of poor old strugglers who have ever been the Church Invisible—the very heart of the body of the Christ. In that company are the wise and the learned; the unlearned and the humble; but that which gave worth to all of them was the fact that they were struggling to be the men and women God meant them to be.

The tragedy of the struggle has been that so many have failed to realize what is the goal of life. To the question: In what do the moral aim and duty of the individual consist? different answers are still given. The need of the world is to find a definite answer.

The best of antiquity and the best of the non-Christian world today give one answer—and the best of the Christian world has given another. The fact that antiquity went bankrupt of virtue and that the non-Christian world is helpless to share its best with the common man argues the futility of their answer. To ancient culture and to the non-Christian culture the wise man is one who finds out early in life that beauty and truth not only adorn, but enhance the value of the individual life, and that self-enjoyment of one's own personality freed from envy, rancor and strife constitutes the end of endeavor. This is paganism in its fairest form. At its very best it knows little of benevolence and is cruel in its forgetfulness.

Just the opposite of this is the answer given by that form of Christian culture which, ever since it incorporated the monastic note, has dominated the mind of the Church. The difference between the Christianity of the first two centuries and those which followed is that joy is the dominant note of the early faith. It did not make abstinence and pain virtues in themselves, but with deeper insight than the Church has known since, rejoiced to find even in these momentary experiences which the world dreaded, not only a discipline, but a revelation. "Rejoice always" was the strange command given them. To these early strugglers the cherished grief that cankered the soul was a sin against the Lord of Life.

Monasticism was the substitute of man's way for the way revealed in Christ. Pain and abstinence became virtues in themselves. There was actual merit in denying to self any of the gifts brought through the senses. There was in joy a note of disloyalty, and the highest life consisted either in ascetic devotion or in the complete surrender of one's own self to others. Self-sacrifice became synonymous with self-wretchedness. The command "Love your neighbor as yourself" was amended to read "Love your neighbor and hate yourself." Not until this pagan note, which crept into Christianity in the third century, is eradicated, will the Christian ideal be restored. The loss of the note of joy in Christianity has taken the winning power out of its marching song.

It cannot be said too often or too strongly that the essence of Christianity is not self-denial, but self-affirmation. It is perfectly true that Christ's words hold good for all time. "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me"; but these words never meant the continual round of petty deprivations and quantitative sacrifices. It was Christ's offer of leadership to men. A man must choose at the beginning whether he was going to follow the beck of his own desires and take as the law of his life the crude generalizations of his own experience or take Christ as his guide, and steadfastly refuse to heed the clamor of the babel voices of his own disordered mind. To follow Christ was to find the pastures of abundant life, and to be His friend was to make the great affirmation of man's kinship to God. The essence of Deity as revealed in Christ is the will to share its Being. The essence of redeemed humanity is the same. Not the making of gifts in things, not the repeated discipline of abstinence, not the hours of contemplation, not the seasons of devotion, constitute the aim of Christian endeavor. All these are but means to an end. That end is to live the Christian life, which is a life of sharing the best of ourselves with others. The real struggle is not to love your neighbor—Oh! how the Devil cheats us here. We give, we pity, and we serve, and know not the task is hardly begun. Christ's mission was to make men love Him. The Christian's mission is no less. Until we make our neighbor love us, we have failed. This is the meaning of the struggle. Not till he trusts us; not till our best has waked the best in him; not till he recognizes in us a likeness to the Father, God, and his heart claims us as brother, have we won the fight.

The highest honor that has ever come to us has been the invitation to sit at table in some humble home of poverty, for we knew that we had gained a brother. The most humiliating failure has been when the beggar at the door steadfastly refused to sit at our family board because she could not be made to believe that she would there be welcomed as an honored guest. She took the food we gave, but she would not share the meal. She took the barren charity and scorned the offered love; but the failure was our own.

Through many years of work among the unfavored and the poor, we never saw any one actually starving for food; but scarcely was there a week in all that time that we did not meet some whose hearts were starved for human brotherliness, and this in communities that gave of their means generously. Not in self-denial, but in the giving of self, is the secret of the creative Christ.

CHRISTIANITY AND CURRENT LITERATURE

We once asked an old soldier to tell us about a battle in which he had fought. We thought we were in for a good story. His reply was: "I know very little about the battle. You see, I was in it. After the battle begins, the smoke and the dust are so thick that a man cannot see thirty yards ahead of him. The hardest task is to distinguish friend from foe. If a man ever tells you that he was in a fight and begins to describe it, he is either lying about what he saw or he was off somewhere in a safe place just looking on."

When we read the descriptions of Christianity that appear with increasing frequency in the magazines, we are reminded of what our old friend told us. To these side line critics the clergy are all ignorant or cowards. The ones who call themselves Christians are either hypocrites or fanatics. To us who are in the thick of the fight it does not appear this way. We have a fairly wide acquaintance among the clergy in our own and in other churches. We have fought along side of them for many years, and to us they seemed a courageous lot. The coward in the ranks of the clergy is as well known and as openly condemned as a cowardly officer would be in the army. Many of them are not scholars, but when a clergyman has the combined duties of general manager, advertising agent, clerical staff and office boy, he has often neither time nor energy to devote to study. When these critics of organized Christianity solemnly tell us that on their occasional visits to churches they failed to be interested, they tell the whole story. It is the persistent demand of these peripatetic sermon-tasters and their like, to find in the churches a source of entertainment. The persistent demand for something new, for a complete change of program once a week, for the use of the latest catch-words of science, for a momentary excitation of the dormant spiritual faculties, has not infrequently betrayed the clergy into the effort to meet what is broadly proclaimed as the need of the time. The truth of the situation is that until the last few years the laymen of the Church and the Churchless husbands of Christian wives have put the task of bringing the world to the sweet reasonableness of Christ upon the shoulders of the clergy and the women of the Church. That there is any Christianity left under such conditions has been a continuing miracle. That there is confessedly a feminine note in its presentation is inevitable. That the clergy as a class is not recruited from the cultured and wealthy nor from the most vigorous intelligence of our colleges, is likewise probably true. The cause is not far to seek. When men live by and preach by precept and example a gospel of success, and measure life's worth by material standards, the youth who is brave enough to defy such teaching and become a clergyman has in his nature a touch at least of heroic stuff.

Whatever of worth there is in our civilization is the gift of Christianity. The conveyors and guardians of that gift have been the clergy, the large body of Christian women and a small minority of faithful men. The literary gentlemen who are constantly belittling what has been done are cordially invited to get a gun and join us in the smoke and dust of the fight.

"WHERE DO YOU LIVE"

By the Reverend Robert E. Browning

"They said unto Him, Master, where dwellest Thou?"—John 1:38.

Oliver Goldsmith was thus taunted by one: "Do you live in that basement?" Instantly came the retort: "Your soul lives in a basement." It is possible for one to live in a fine house on the best street; in short, to have the best of environment, and yet in heart and soul, be a basement dweller.

The question of the early disciples was a most natural one. Moved by a primal instinct, they wished to know where this Person, who was winning His way to public recognition, really lived. But what a startling discovery, when they came in answer to His summons, and found One who could turn their vision from outward abodes to the inner realities. They discovered that the Son of Man had not where to lay His head, and yet who more truly lived? The question then ceases to be one of geography, of streets, cities, provinces or countries. It has to do with the inner world. It makes no difference whether we live in a peasant's cottage or a prince's palace. Environment is not the whole of life. Men try to tell us that when we are clothed, housed, fed and amused, our wants are satisfied, and the golden age will be ushered in. Man has deeper yearnings which nothing material can satisfy. He lives in a world of thought, an inner realm of faith, hope, love. This is the more important of the two. He only really lives when his mind, heart and soul are on the higher levels. Let us cease judging people by the house or street and look rather to the inner spiritual world. Washington asked Robert Morris on the latter's visit to France to bring back a watch, describing the one he wished as follows: "It should be chaste and simple on the outside, and well cared for within." Is that not a safe rule to apply to a life too? Samuel Adams said: "There is no superiority among men save that of wisdom and virtue." Another version of the same rule—"Well cared for within." It is this that Christ demands. A man's disposition, and not his position, is the matter of supreme concern. That is what life meant to Jesus. Gandhi, one of the world's greatest men, goes into prison for conscience sake. He goes in with only the robe on his back. He has no other worldly goods. One might better be Gandhi in prison, however, than a great many persons out of prison, for "Stone walls do not a prison make,

Nor iron bars a cage."

There are freemen dwelling in humblest abodes, while slaves may be found in gorgeous palaces. As God causes the lily to grow out of the stagnant marsh, so one sees many a fair lily in the moral flora, springing out of an untoward environment.

Astronomical observatories are placed on great elevations, not to get nearer the stars, but to escape a bad atmosphere. So, too, with the heart and soul, they must come up out of the basements to the sweeter and purer air of the higher levels. We must pitch life high. Over a shooting gallery were these words: "Improve your aim." Failure and success in life are measured by the aim.

We must move from the basement of bitterness and prejudice. Nothing so effectually poisons the springs of life. Hatred and prejudice are prolific breeders of unhappiness. The prejudiced person judges before the evidence is given. He pre-judges. What would we think of the tribunal who should so judge us? A great negro leader once said: "I will not allow any one to drag me down by making me hate another." Life is too short to cherish bitterness and animosity. Let us get the Christ spirit of open, frank and tolerant sympathy with people, believing in their better nature. Such love acts as a magnet to draw from their hearts the pure gold, some of which every one has if we search deep enough. "Love covereth a multitude of sins," says the apostle, meaning that love overlooks faults in its desire to claim the good. To rejoice in another's success, to be happy in their advancement, is the supreme test of nobility.

We must get above the fetid atmosphere of pretense, of unreality. Shakespeare makes Hamlet say: "I know not seems." The word with which we frequently close our letters, "Yours sincerely," is our best gift to the world. The only persons Christ ever denounced were the insincere Pharisees, whose hypocrisy He revealed in these scathing words: "Robbing widows' houses, and for pretense making long prayers." From the sunless depths of these "whited sepulchres" there issued a dank and malignant atmosphere, reeking with deceit and hollow mockery. Camouflage may have suited the exigencies of war, but it finds no place in the bivouac of life. Are we sailing under any false colors? Do we ring true? Are we natural and unaffected, glad to be ourselves, imperial, plain and true? "Christianity," said one, "makes a good garment, but a poor cloak." The noblest tribute ever paid to any one was this: "The common people heard Him gladly."

Finally, we must rise above selfishness. Many live out their lives in this bad atmosphere:

"I lived for myself,
For myself and none beside;
Just as though Christ never lived,
As though He never died."

Do we wonder that they are as restless as caged animals? The essence of Christian ethics is that a man first be cured of himself. He must put himself out of the center of his life and get on the circumference. He suffers from in-growing thoughts. As a cure let him fling himself in utter abandon into the great world of service. Let him learn that happiness can only come as a by-product of life. It is incidental to the pursuit of duty, unselfish service. Then he will find his life in being willing to lose it. Last New Year's Salvation Army greeting went around the world in the form of a single word, but that word spells the whole alphabet of happiness: "Others." Of one it was written: "He forgot himself into immortality." There is no other way to "enter into life," as Christ termed it. God calls us from the basement of selfishness into the sunshine of service and love. One has described love as the past tense of the verb to live. Certain it is we do not feel the thrill and joy of life till, having severed the ties that bind us to self, like a ship loosed from its moorings, we sail out on the great sea of service, where we must learn that "Whatever life brings,

Our place is with our fellows;
Toiling and striving with them,
To hasten the coming of the day
When the whole wide world shall every way
Be bound with gold chains about the feet of God."

Let us rise to the heights where, freed of prejudice, of pretense and of self, we may "behold the King in His beauty."

"Let me live in the house by the side of the road,
Where the race of men go by—
The men that are good; the men that are bad,
As good and bad as I.
Then why should I sit in the scorner's seat,
Or hurl the cynic's ban?
Let me live in a house by the side of the road,
And let me be a friend of man."

WHAT CAN I DO TO END WAR?

By Sidney L. Gulick

In the Federal Council Bulletin.

Mere denunciation of war will not end it. Descriptions of the horrors, costs, cruelty, injustices, sufferings, futility, and even of the sins of war, will not abolish it. As well expect denunciations to stop the various ravages of the periodic floods of some mighty river. Only great feats of engineering skill can control raging waters in flood time. Dikes strong and well placed must be built to keep them in their proper channel. This is a world of cause and effect. If we really want to end all war, we will deal with the causes of war. As well expect a huge powder magazine to refuse to explode when the lighted fuse reaches the powder, as to suppose that wars can be stopped while the causes of war have been allowed to work freely.

Wars are not like floods, tornadoes and earthquakes, natural events over which men have no control. Wars spring from states of mind and peoples and nations. War-psychology brings war preparation and, ultimately, war. Great national injustices, wrongs, misunderstandings and misinformation, national arrogance, greed and selfishness, thoughtless or wilful deeds of high officials, national policies of aggression and oppression, the general belief that "we" are always right, "they" are always wrong, "we" are a superior people and "they" inferior, and the popular assumption that really difficult disputes between peoples can and must be settled by appeal to brute force—these are the fundamental causes of war.

If war, therefore, is to be ended, in some way a new psychology must be instilled into the mental processes of millions of men in many nations. Whole peoples must learn to think peace and to will peace. When difficult disputes arise, nations must naturally assume that resort will be had to judicial processes or to arbitration. They must be ready to think that "we" may perhaps be wrong, or at least partly wrong, and "they" right or partly right. There must develop among many nations the desire to be fair to each other.

Nations must also recognize that a new world has come upon us in which absolute independence, unlimited sovereignty and complete self-sufficiency are no longer possible; that instead of each nation living only for itself, the lives and interests of all are so intertwined that they must live for each other; that only by mutual help can each reach its own best and highest aims. Entire nations must discover that even in such questions as national security and honor, international justice and economic opportunity, the nations can more surely achieve their legitimate ambitions when they cooperate than when they seek these ends independently, by their own right arms.

The real question, therefore, is how this new peace-psychology can be created and made powerful in each nation. To be very concrete, how can it be created here in America? There must be, of course, wise leaders, great engineers in human undertakings, creative minds producing constructive measures of many kinds, all looking to the ultimate goal—the complete outlawry of war as a legitimate and accepted method for settling disputes between nations.

But what can I do about it? What can a single individual with no official position in national life or even in a community, do really to help in the campaign to end war? This is the practical question which millions of earnest citizens are asking themselves.

The first thing is inform oneself. Find out what constructive proposals have been made for ending war. What, for instance, is meant by the outlawry of war? What is the World Court of Justice and how is it working? How about the League of Nations? What is it doing? What are some of the disputes that make disarmament difficult? Just what is the dispute between America and Japan? Is there some way of meeting the just demands of both nations? Get acquainted with the constructive proposals—the great dikes in process of building for controlling the raging floods of human passions and national ambitions.

When you know the facts, then you can talk about them. Talk to your friends and neighbors; help to get them interested and informed. This is the way to help create public opinion.

Talk to your pastor. Tell him how interested you are in the question and that you want to help. Suggest how important it is for your Church as a Church to take its part in the drive to end war. Ask him to preach about it. Tell him that in your belief the Church is not doing its full work in proclaiming the gospel and in establishing the Kingdom of God unless it puts itself on record and seeks to teach all its members on the question of war and peace. You might suggest that the Church as a Church ought to adopt a peace plank as a part of its working creed and a peace program as a part of its regular work; that, as a Church, it should make a regular contribution in support of the anti-war crusade.

As suitable opportunity offers you might also suggest that all the churches of the city get together and work together in the educational campaign; that at least once or twice each year great public meetings might be held on this subject, when outstanding national speakers might be secured. Let your pastor know your personal thought on such matters as these. Urge him to start study classes in the Sunday school, or Young People's Societies and adult organizations.

Suggest the formation of a Church Committee on International Goodwill, to help the pastor in this part of the Church work. This committee may be asked to be responsible for finding the best books on the problem of outlawing war and establishing a world-peace system. It may see that these books are placed in the Sunday-school library and are so advertised to all church members as to be widely read. It may also urge the public library to have a shelf of these books easily accessible to readers. It may arrange for pageants and concerts and lectures dealing with these questions. When several churches have such committees they may join in holding big public rallies on world questions once or twice a year. This committee will be the connecting link between the local church and the national agencies of the churches for carrying on the crusade to substitute law for war.

The point I wish to make absolutely clear is this: One wide-awake, consecrated, intelligent, resourceful individual in each church can accomplish wonders if he has faith and will really do what he can along the lines suggested above.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED AT THE NINTH ANNUAL MEETING OF THE WORLD ALLIANCE FOR INTERNATIONAL FRIENDSHIP THROUGH THE CHURCHES, AT BUFFALO, N. Y., NOVEMBER 11-13, 1924

BELIEVING strongly in the Christian principle of human brotherhood, and that the human family rests on the basis of mutual friendly interest, we have viewed with deep concern the approval by our National Congress of the Japanese exclusion provision of the recent Immigration Act, and the precipitate manner of its adoption. The Hon. Charles E. Hughes, Secretary of State, spoke prophetically in his expressed belief that this "legislative action would largely undo the work of the Washington Conference which so greatly improved our relations with Japan," and further, that the enactment of this provision "would be regarded by the Japanese as an insult not to be palliated by any act of charity."

We make no appeal for unrestricted immigration. We are not blind to our own national interests. But it does not accord with our national traditions to make unfavorable reflection upon any people with whom we have friendly relationships. Deeper than the impairment of peace in the region of the Pacific, and more important even than the affront to a friendly nation, is the fundamental question of our moral obligation to be fair and just to all men, and in the name of the Master, whom we serve, and in the interest of international comity, we oppose all discriminatory treatment of any branch of the family of nations.

America has no occasion for misunderstandings or unfriendly relationships with Japan, and we plead for moderation and the spirit of mutual interest and good-will in efforts to find an amicable adjustment of the situation which has arisen out of the recent congressional action, and we express the hope that in the light of clearer understanding, the recent legislation on this subject may be revised, even to the extent of admitting ultimately the Japanese to the quota provisions of the new immigration law.

The World Alliance, realizing that it is not competent to judge of naval and military technical policies, yet urgently asks that in the interests of continued good feeling and understanding with our neighbor Japan, that the arrangements for the manoeuvres planned for next spring in the Hawaiian Islands be changed and the proposed mobilization be held in another part of the world in order that the resentment and irritation of the Japanese Government and people caused by the domestic policy of the United States of America in regard to immigration, which policy was strongly opposed by religious forces of America be not increased.

Whereas, the World Alliance believes that international education is one of the most pregnant and permanent aids to international friendship and to world peace:

Be it resolved, that we commend every effort in behalf of international education, and especially congratulate Mr.

Marcus Marks on his success in organizing and having adopted a plan for foreign undergraduate study with scholastic credits for American students, and pledge him our hearty support.

Whereas, our future prosperity and safety depends largely on our treating all nations with justice and good understanding, we urge our National Bureau of Education and all educational authorities to emphasize the need of definite instruction to promote good will and cooperation with other nations and races, and to call on trained educators to provide programs and subject matter which shall teach America that the true citizen today is a citizen of the world and his ultimate loyalty is to mankind.

We recognize the part the various relief organizations have played by their beneficent activities in promoting international understanding and good-will. We heartily endorse the proposal that has been made, and endorsed by many of the churches, that Sunday, December 7, be observed as Golden Rule Sunday, when, limiting our own personal expenditures, we shall minister to the suffering and hungry peoples of the world.

The World Alliance notes with extreme satisfaction the growing impatience with war upon the part of youth and their dedication to the great endeavor to create a new world where international relations shall be based upon the Christian principle. We have watched with sympathetic interest the manifestations of this new spirit in the great Christian student conventions and in the youth movements of Europe and America, and while we deprecate any utterances which would seem to disparage love to one's own country, we welcome this accession of youth to the ranks of those working for a warless world.

Whereas, the greatest lesson taught by the World War is that it should be the first duty of every civilized nation to take definite action to prevent future wars which are bound to be increasingly terrible and more destructive than any in the past, and

Whereas, the Government of the United States spends yearly a major portion of all its income on the army and navy in preparation for future wars, soldiers' pensions and interest on war debts, and spends nothing for the direct promotion of peace or the prevention of war by peaceful means; therefore be it

Resolved, that we recommend to the President and Government of the United States that a commission of men and women, with an adequate appropriation, be created, whose duty shall be to promote international peace. Because the principal duty of our State Department is to conduct foreign relations, we urge that this commission be made a part of the Department of State.

ECHOES FROM THE SYNOD OF SEWANEE

The Reverend Thomas F. Opie, D. D.

For the benefit of many who did not have the privilege of attending the recent sessions of the Synod of Sewanee, in St. James' Church, Wilmington, N. C., a few echoes from some of the excellent addresses of that occasion may be passed on to good and wholesome effect.

Miss Grace Lindley, who told of her recent trip to the mission stations of the Orient, related the story of a Japanese woman who was banished from her home because she embraced Christianity. This woman, turned out of her own home by her father, afterwards returned and asked to be received into the household as a servant. She is now occupying the position of a servant in the house. This story is also a parable. Is not this the true spirit of Christianity? To serve, to work, to cleanse, to carry burdens, to lighten the load for others—to be as "one who serves"—this is the very genius of the religion of Christ.

The same speaker told also of a leper in one of the mission colonies who "thanked God that he was a leper." "Because," said he, "if I had not been a leper I would probably never have heard of Christ!" Here, too, is a parable. Interpret it as you will.

Miss Lindley was in Japan at the time of the passage of the Japanese Exclusion Act in Congress. She told of the intense feeling of the Japanese and said that they were so "beautifully inconsistent" as to carry around tons of posters calling on all Japanese people to boycott all American products—and these they carried through the cities in Ford automobiles! She said that the people of Japan resented the insulting manner in which Congress passed this act, rather than the actual exclusion of the Japanese.

The only woman delegate seated in the Synod made a telling address and took the Synod quite severely to task for its tardy recognition of the sex feminine in an official capacity. She contended earnestly that the Church is not "using its woman power." Referring to the status of education under the Church, she cried, "You talk about the 'University of the South.' Since when did the South become a land of 'men only'?"

Speaking on the subject of the Church and Mill People, the Rev. Lewis N. Taylor, part-time Field Secretary of Social Service in the Province of Sewanee, stated that a certain town in North Carolina few years ago contained a population 49 per cent of whom were malarial. Medical science took the situation in hand, and now less than 1 per cent of the population have malarial germs in their system. Here, too, is a story that is a parable. Is it not the work of the Church to reduce the things that afflict mankind?—to lessen danger; to reduce filth and disease; to restore health, peace and happiness; to make life normal and wholesome and rich and abundant. Is this not the high task of the Church of the Divine Physician?

"The Church must tell both capital and labor," urged Mr. Taylor, "of the fact of stewardship—stewardship of wealth, of power, of influence, of time and of talent. The man who makes clothing is helping God Almighty to clothe humanity. The man who ministers to the sick is helping God Almighty to alleviate the suffering of humanity. The mill or corporation that supplies work for men and women is helping God to feed, clothe, educate and to house and shelter humanity." How this does exalt and dignify and sacramentalize work and every business enterprise!

Speaking to the subject, Religious Education, the Rev.

Henry Phillips, D. D., pictured Material Prosperity and Scientific Education as giants strutting through life. "Religiously, educationally, we are in the very nursery of life," said Dr. Phillips. "It is not surprising that when these giants get into the nursery there is shock and fear. We speak of 'religious' education. There is but one kind of education—and that is education which recognizes man as a threefold unit, and that teaches and develops and draws out man as a unit. What is the mind, but man thinking? What is the will, but man determining? What are the affections, but man loving? What is faith, but man—the whole personality of man, believing?"

Following the address of Dr. Phillips, Bishop Bratton, President of the Synod, gave out this timely warning: "If we as a Church are not deeply interested in 'religious' education, the day will surely dawn on us when we shall see America an agnostic nation."

DEBT OR OBLIGATION.

Mr. Editor:

At the recent meeting of the Synod of the Province of Sewanee held at St. James', Wilmington, N. C., the following resolution was introduced by Bishop Darst, as chairman of the Executive Committee of the Provincial Board of Missions.

"Resolved, that it is the sense of this Synod that the budget portion of the national quota be considered as an obligation of the Diocese, and that deputies to the General Convention be so instructed when elected."

Dr. Milton, former head of the National Field Department, introduced an amendment to strike out the word "obligation" and substitute the word "debt." A vigorous discussion followed and the proposed amendment was defeated by a majority vote. The original resolution was then presented and passed unanimously. The passage of the resolution unanimously may mean much or nothing. It is hoped that there will be a sufficient discussion of the subject before the General Convention to ensure a vote meaning something. If the delegates from a Diocese vote for the Program as submitted by the National Council it should mean that they pledge themselves to use every possible means of meeting the quota assigned to their Diocese. We may safely assume, I think, that the quotas for the next Triennium will at least not be smaller than those for the present Triennium. There will, of course, be some variations, but, generally speaking, the quotas will remain pretty much as they are now. It would be helpful if the National Council could give to each Diocese an approximate idea of what its quota would be for the Triennium, then the delegates in voting on the Program would have a clear idea of the quota which would be given to their respective Dioceses.

In any case we want to avoid the unanimous adoption of the Program by the General Convention unless the Dioceses are thoroughly committed to it. We should have a clear understanding of what we mean by the word "obligation." Does it mean: (1) A Diocese accepts the quota assigned to it by the National Council, divides that quota among the various parishes and sends on to the National Council whatever proportion of that quota the parishes give? Or does it mean that if the parishes fail to subscribe the quota in full the Diocese is in duty bound to canvass the parishes and use every available method of having the quota pledged in full? Some Dioceses have even borrowed the money in order to meet in full their quotas. Inasmuch as a Diocese is not a money-raising organization, the problem really goes one step further to the parish. In the parishes where they are playing fair the same effort is made to raise the Nation-Wide Campaign quota as to raise the parish budget. (In our parish the Nation-Wide Campaign budget quota for 1924 was slightly over-subscribed and the parish budget under-subscribed.) Has the parish fulfilled its "obligation" when they have presented the matter to their people and given them the chance to subscribe? If that is what the word "obligation" means, then the parishes should make known that fact to their delegates to the next Diocesan Convention so that the Diocese may in turn so instruct its delegates to the General Convention. The resolution as presented by the Provincial Committee on Missions does not contemplate that the National Church is going to attempt to browbeat the Dioceses into paying their quotas or inflict any penalty upon them for failing to do so. However, it is essential that the word "obligation" should mean more than it evidently means now. When delegates by a majority vote reject the word "debt" and unanimously accept the word "obligation," it looks as if they do not attach the same importance to it.

Although this matter has already been discussed somewhat in the Church papers, it would be helpful to have it thoroughly, candidly treated between now and January, when a great many Dioceses hold their annual conventions. It is evident from the above resolution that the Dioceses in the Province of Sewanee intend to send the deputies to the General Convention with some sort of instructions in regard to the National Program. If all the Dioceses of our Church will do the same it will mean that the vote on the Program at the General Convention will really express the mind of the Church.

OLIVER J. HART,

Member of the Executive Committee of the Board of Missions of the Fourth Province.

THE LAYMEN'S CHURCH LEAGUE.

The Laymen's Church League is a new interdenominational effort by laymen to secure real working fellowship and cooperation between all groups of Christian laymen who are eager to serve their Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and to increase the spiritual power and efficiency of the Church of Christ.

This movement does not propose to supplant any of the plans adopted by different organizations, but to supplement them by exchanging the rich experiences enjoyed by some, to the end that all laymen may be directed to lead the happy, victorious, fruitful lives in Christ that are possible.

No layman can do his best work alone. The group method of spiritual fellowship, prayer and service has proved so fruitful as to challenge the attention and consideration of all who are interested in lay activities.

In the belief that every successful group and organization of men wishes to share its best plans and experience with all other similar groups, the Conference of Laymen from ten States has called a General Conference to be held in March, 1925. It is proposed to appoint a strong commission of laymen on each of the following eight subjects, to make a study of the questions and bring in their reports and recommendations to the General Conference referred to:

- (1) How Can Many More Laymen be Led into Victorious and Fruitful Christian Lives?
- (2) How Can Christian Business and Professional Men Make Their Business Itself a Revelation of the Mind of Christ and a Means of Expanding His Kingdom?
- (3) What Is the Gospel of Christ? What is the Main Business of the Church?
- (4) What Can Be Done to Put the Bible and Jesus Christ More Fully Into Our Total System of Education, Including the Home and the Public Schools?
- (5) What Should Be Done by Laymen to Help the Church to Adopt an Adequate Missionary Policy and Program, Including the Rural Church Problem?
- (6) How Can We Enlist Laymen in Making Their Financial and Other Resources Count Most for Christ and His Cause?
- (7) What Can Be Done to Improve the Methods of Training Ministers and to Lead More Strong Men Into the Ministry?

(8) What Methods of Men's Organizations Are Recommended—for an Individual Church? For a City or District? For a Nation? Can the Laymen of all Evangelical Churches Act Together in Behalf of the Cause of Christ?

These commissions are to consist of twenty-one members each, representing different organizations and denominations, and the work is to be directed through a chairman selected by the Executive Committee.

The organization thus far is a tentative one. All matters relating to permanent organization, plans and policies are to be determined by the General Conference to be held in March, 1925, probably in St. Louis, and to consist of one thousand of the most capable and representative laymen of the United States and Canada. Already many of the strongest laymen in America have endorsed the effort and volunteered their support in every way possible.

The following is a list of the officers as elected by the Executive Committee:

Chairman—Joseph M. Steele, Philadelphia.

Vice-Chairmen—A. A. Hyde, Wichita, Kan.; Dr. Howard A. Kelly, Baltimore; Charles A. Rowland, Athens, Ga.; J. Campbell White, New York City.

Treasurer—Joseph A. Richards, 247 Park Avenue, New York City.

General Secretary—Captain M. L. Swinehart, 541 Lexington Avenue, New York City.

Christianity and the Community

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

The Rev. R. Cary Montague, Editor.

A CROP THAT NEVER FAILS.

There is one crop in the world that never fails, though it may vary in its size. It is a product of humanity. We refer to the crop of suicides that is harvested by the "grain reaper" from year to year.

Every type of person is represented in this group, from those in their teens to those in their eighties. They are all the victims of fear impelled to self-murder through the fear to live on. Their thought is, "Let a bullet or a dose of poison end it all," so they seek a way of escape from burdens which at the time seem so unbearable that the fear of death becomes less than the fear of life.

The wise old composer of "The Collect for Peace" in "The Evening Prayer" surely knew humanity when he made us pray, "We being defended from the fear of our enemies may pass our time in rest and quietness." That prayer, that comes down to us from Sarum Breviary and has been used by the Church for many centuries, is as modern as our friends of the followers of Mrs. Eddy, for it recognizes that the fear of our enemies is more dangerous than the enemy itself, and that if we can be rid of that haunting dread we shall indeed find "that peace which the world cannot give."

It may seem a foolish thing to write rationally on so irrational a subject because it is only perpetrated when they are in no mood to reason about anything, and yet we believe if the idea could be eradicated that the bullet or the dose of poison does end all we should have taken a long step towards stopping this form of murder.

It may seem a long step from the desperate one with the pistol at his head to a star in "The Milky Way," but there is a reason to connect the two.

In these modern days they have discovered a means for measuring almost everything (one might say everything but the age of a woman), and now a known astronomer announces positively that one of the stars in that interesting group that blinds us from the heavens is one thousand billion years old.

How did he measure it? We do not know, but could every preacher produce stronger argument for an Infinite God and an eternal life than had this scientist who tells us of a world a thousand billion years old?

If this be true, and it had the facts of science, and not the faith of religion behind it, then how can any one think that a bullet or a dose of poison can "end it all" for a human soul with the aspirations, ambitions and emotions with which such souls are endowed?

On the other hand, does the contemplation of such infinity of time in the age of a world add assurance to the thought that life, as we know it here, is but the beginning, or perhaps a link in an endless chain of existence? Or does such contemplation suggest that the attempt to "end it all" by self-murder will simply expel the victim from a school of life here to another experience of life somewhere else, begun under tragic and unnatural circumstances that will prove to be only an accumulation of those conditions sought to be avoided here.

The sermon in a play, "Outward Bound," depicts a couple that had boarded the "outward bound" ship by the way of a suicide pact, as being compelled to sail on and on having no passports to any port.

If this conviction of certain endless existence can become ingrained in people in their normal life and senses, it will surely have its effect when periods of abnormality inducted by unhappiness overwhelms us.

There have been times in the life of every one, who has had a ripe experience of life, when obvious annihilation would have seemed a welcome escape from seemingly baffling and overwhelming difficulties, but if the road through death by the victim's own hand does not lead to either oblivion or annihilation, but to the facing of a situation only made more difficult by that deed, then such conduct would lose its fascination.

AN ENCOURAGING SIGN.

"The present President of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, Mr. Richard F. Grant, is giving much of this year of his term of office to addresses on the subject of rigid morals in business. The Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, New York City, has granted the use of its Great Hall in Liberty Street to the American Board of Applied Christianity, for an address by President Grant, of the United States Chamber, on Thursday, December 11, at 12:15 noon, on the subject of "The Soul of Commerce." A well-known member of the New York Chamber will preside. While no appeal for money will be made at this meeting, President Grant will appeal, it is known, for men to apply their patriotism and their Christianity through volunteer service in whatever cause looms largest in their respective minds in favor of the general good. The Board has issued two thousand invitations, but the public is invited without cards of admission."

The foregoing, taken from the New York news, is merely one evidence of the encouraging trend of business life in these modern days.

Chambers of Commerce are no longer merely economic organizations for the development of material resources and the advancement of business interest. We know of one town in which this organization got behind a community open-air Sunday night service, bought chairs, arranged lights and a platform, and underwrote the financing of the speaker's expenses.

The new civic clubs like the Rotary, Kiwanis, Lions and others are other evidences of the new spirit of service that is rapidly entering secular life. These clubs are no sooner formed than they begin to look round for some altruistic object of their attention and efforts in order to justify their existence.

In all community chest drives the Chamber of Commerce almost invariably heads these other civic bodies in the effort to raise the necessary funds for charitable and uplift purposes.

Clergymen may deplore the lack of interest among men in Church work, and it is indeed lamentable, but when we see such secular bodies assuming many responsibilities heretofore left to the Church it is certainly some compensation for the apparent lack of interest in the doings of the Church, and it should encourage us to know that the inspiration of Christ's love has spread into this broader field.

Church Intelligence

Eighth Synod of the Province of Washington

By the Rev. Joseph H. Earp.

That the provincial synods should be given increased powers was the prevailing sentiment among the deputies to the eighth Synod of the Province of Washington, which met in St. John's Church, Charleston, W. Va., November 18-20. A committee, of which Bishop Cook, of Delaware, was the chairman, brought in a report which was discussed with great interest. The Synod went on record as believing that the expenditures within a province might well be left with the provincial synod, but that the apportionments to the various dioceses should remain in the hands of the National Council. It was agreed that the provinces should be empowered to employ executive secretaries for missions, education and social service, and that synods should be allowed a certain per cent of the funds collected within the provinces for work directly under the care of the synods.

The reception given by Bishop and Mrs. Gravatt on Wednesday afternoon was typical of the perfect hospitality which prevailed throughout the city.

The President of the Synod, the Rt. Rev. Ethelbert Talbot, D. D., was celebrant at the opening service and presided over all the sessions. The preacher at the Holy Communion was the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop of Washington.

Bishop Talbot delivered the annual address. It was an adequate summary of conditions within the Church today, and was full of reassurance.

The evenings were devoted to mass meetings. On Tuesday evening Bishop Davenport presided and addresses were made on various phases of social work.

Mr. E. Reinhold Rogers, Superintendent of the Industrial School and Farm for Homeless Boys, at Covington, Va., spoke on "The Church and the Unprivileged Child," and the Rev. Frederick Goodwin, Secretary for Rural Work, Department of Social Service of the National Council, spoke on "Rural Work." On Wednesday evening the Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, D. D., Bishop-Coadjutor of Southern Virginia, presided at a mass meeting devoted to missions, and the address was made by the Rt. Rev. Irving P. Johnson, D. D., Bishop of Colorado. On Thursday evening the Rt. Rev. R. E. L. Strider, D. D., Bishop-Coadjutor of West Virginia, presided over a mass meeting devoted to Religious Education, and addresses were made by Mr. Stephen E. Kramer, principal of the Central High School, Washington, D. C., on "The Responsibility for Character Building of Public School Pupils," and the Rev. William Colcord Woods, Ph. D., of the Kent School, on "Preparing Students for the Religious Problems of College Life."

The morning session on Wednesday was also devoted to missions. The Rev. A. W. S. Garden read a paper on "The Missionary Problem in Relation to the Province." It was at this session that the discussion arose over the question of giving increased powers to the synods. The Rev. Martin Aigner, D. D., representing the Joint Commission of the General Convention on Enlarging the Powers of Provinces, presented for the information of the Synod a partial and tentative report of that Commission, which was referred to the Synod's own committee on the subject, with the result above mentioned.

The report of the Commission on Social Service was read by Bishop Davenport, who was followed by the Rev. R. Cary Montague, who outlined an excellent plan for social service in the parish.

On Thursday morning the subject of Religious Education was considered in several addresses and a number of impromptu remarks. In the absence of Mr. Harvey H. Smith, of the Provincial Committee on Religion in the Home, the committee's report was read by the Rev. Karl M. Block. The report lamented the fact that family worship is infrequent now as compared with former times, and vigorously urged the return of the practice. Bishop Tucker related some of his early experiences with family prayers, and emphasized their importance. The Rev. S. S. Hepburn considered this the most important subject that had been before the Synod, and compared former times with the present. The Synod always listens with great respect to the Rev. Mr. Hepburn, who in his ministry of fifty years has given a faithful and fruitful account of his stewardship.

Commander Jewell, Secretary of the Provincial Commission on Education, read a carefully prepared paper on "Some Modern Sunday-School Problems." The floor was then taken by Mrs. Thomas J. Bigham, who as superintendent of the Church school in her home parish meets the problems of the Church school in an intimate and practical way.

Perhaps the highest point of interest in the minds of many was reached in the address given by Mr. Kercheval E. Smith, President of the Young People's Service League of the Diocese of Maryland, and Vice-President of the Young People's Service League of the Province of Washington, on "What the Young People Expect of the Church." The report of the Commission on Religious Education was read by Bishop Strider.

The interest of the Synod was enhanced by the presence and addresses of Mr. John W. Wood, of the Department of Missions of the National Council, and Dr. Teusler, of St. Luke's Hospital in Japan. Their addresses resulted in the formation of a committee consisting of all the bishops of the province, who pledged themselves to use every means to promote the success of the campaign for rehabilitating the devastated properties of the Church in Japan. The importance of doing this in the interest of international amity was stressed by Dr. Teusler, and produced a profound impression.

Coincident with the session of the Synod there were meetings of the Women's Auxiliary and other women's organizations. Excellent arrangements for the comfort of the delegates had been made by a committee of which Mrs. George W. Peterkin was president. There was a Conference on Supply Work led by Mrs. Theodora Wade, National Supply Secretary. The Rev. Frederick D. Goodwin spoke on the opportunity of the Woman's Auxiliary in rural places. Mrs. Wishart conducted a Conference on "A Definite Plan for a Year's Work in a Parish Branch."

Mrs. A. L. Sioussat, President of the Woman's Auxiliary of Maryland, told of the work of Miss Margaret Ridgely, in Liberia, who has given twenty years of her life to work among negroes without a salary. Miss Ridgely went to Africa as a young woman, where with her own money she provided herself with a little hut and for the last twenty years has performed the most menial labor in endeavoring to bring the light of Christianity to those people.

The Girls' Friendly Society of the Province held several interesting conferences. Miss Lukens, the president, extended greetings. Miss Meigs spoke on "How Shall We Interest the Clergy in the G. F. S.?" Miss Cunningham spoke on "Our National Center." Mrs. W. W. Wishart gave a talk on "Is the G. F. S. Needed in Parishes Having the Church Service League?" "Moral Standards for G. F. S. Girls" was presented by a Senior Friendly girl. Miss Lukens conducted a round table for diocesan presidents. Conferences were also conducted by the Daughters of the King and the Church Periodical Club. Bishop Johnson led a conference for all women of the Church on "Ways in Which the Provincial Organizations Can Strengthen One Another." A Quiet Hour for women was conducted by the Rev. C. T. Warner, under the auspices of the Daughters of the King.

In the election of officers of the Woman's Auxiliary Mrs. Marcella C. Adams, of Pittsburgh, was prevailed upon to accept again the presidency. Mrs. J. Allison Scott, of Philadelphia, was made Vice-President; Mrs. Austin B. Mitchell, of Kearneysville, W. Va., Secretary; Mrs. P. J. Bolton, of Erie, Pa., Provincial Director, and Miss Louisa Davis, of Virginia, representative on the National Executive Board.

Labor Leaders in the Pulpit.

Twenty-five of the leading ministers of El Paso, Texas, met at St. Clement's Church with Mr. Kemerer, the rector, on November 24 to swap impressions. The meeting was opened by the Rev. Mr. Sweetland, pastor of the First Methodist Church, and president of the Ministerial Alliance of the city, with an address which was a gem for brevity.

"Yesterday," he said, "was a historic day for El Paso; a great day for religion in America; a great day for the Kingdom of God. Twenty-three pulpits of our city were opened yesterday to America's foremost labor leaders, meeting here in annual convention. It is the first time that this has ever been accomplished in America. We now want you pastors to give us briefly your impressions. Set your valuation on the effort."

It took an hour and a half to make the rounds—a monotonous hour and a half, for each minister had the same story to report—of a Church welcoming and honoring a labor speaker who stood in their pulpit and told the story of labor struggles, absolutely unhampered by any "kindly word of advice not to offend my people." Clean cut labor messages were given, and they went over with the crowds that came to hear them—for the ministers all reported record breaking congregations.

Just before luncheon the following resolution, presented later in the day to the convention of the American Federation of Labor, where it was greeted with applause, was passed unanimously by the ministers: "The Ministerial Alliance of El Paso commends the opening of the pulpits of our churches to labor leaders and expresses its hearty appreciation for the messages of the union leaders and the secretaries of the various social service commissions of the churches." The ministers also voted to send a communication to the ministers' association of the city which will entertain the next convention, recommending that a similar effort be made by them another year.

Women's Conference On the Cause and Cure of War.

Women of all denominations will have a notable part in one of the most remarkable gatherings ever held in the United States, the Women's Conference on the Cause and Cure of War, which will take place in Washington, D. C., from January 18 to 24, 1925.

The Council of Women on Home Missions and the Federation of Women's Boards of Foreign Missions in North America are two of the eight women's organizations in the country which will take part in this conference, which represents the most business-like and serious attempt ever made by the women of America to face facts and substitute clear thinking for hazy idealism in the matter of war prevention. The purpose of the conference is to arrive at a practical working program which may unify the independent efforts now being made in behalf of world peace by each of the organizations. Approximately 5,000,000 women will be represented by the conference.

Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, internationally known leader of women's movements, will serve as chairman. Among other leaders are prominent women in the eight cooperating organizations, which include the two already mentioned, the American Association of University Women, General Federation of Women's Clubs, National League of Women Voters, National Council of Jewish Women, National Board of the Young Women's Christian Association, and the W. C. T. U. Among the speakers will be Dr. James T. Shotwell, largely responsible for the draft treaty which gave rise to the present Geneva Protocol; Secretary Charles Evans Hughes, Dr. Manley O. Hudson, Bemis Professor of International Law at Harvard, and John Foster Dulles of the Foreign Policy Association.

General Convention News.

Preparations for taking care of the General Convention in October, 1925, in New Orleans, are well under way. Committees were appointed by the Bishop about a year ago and the Executive Committee, with Mr. Warren Kearny as general chairman, has had numerous meetings. The finance committee has been actively at work for several months and the amount necessary to cover the expenses of the convention has practically all been pledged. Leases have been entered into for two large buildings. The "Athenaeum," belonging to the Young Men's Hebrew Association, having a large auditorium and a smaller hall, will be used for the House of Deputies and the House of Bishops, both having ample accommodations. Adjoining this building is the "Jerusalem Temple," the home of the Shriners. This contains a large auditorium, with seating capacity of about 2,000, and fine organ, which will be used by the Woman's Auxiliary for their meetings, and also for mass meetings. On the ground floor there is a spacious banquet hall, in which the daily luncheons to the delegates will be served. This is a most beautiful building and well equipped with reception halls, lounge rooms and committee rooms. Both of these buildings are situated on the famous St. Charles Avenue, said to be the longest and most beautiful avenue in the country, extending five miles through the choicest residential section of the city. Within two blocks of these buildings are the Hotel Bienville (containing two hundred and seventy-five rooms, all of which have been reserved for guests of the Convention during the month of October), the Public Library, Lee Circle, Howard Library, Confederate Memorial Hall and St. Paul's Church. This location is just on the edge of the business section of the city and but a few blocks from the St. Charles, Roosevelt, De Soto and Monteleone Hotels and the famous restaurants. Arrangements are being made to house the offices of the National Council, either in the Athenaeum, Jerusalem Temple, or in other buildings in close proximity. Recently, Mr. Chas. A. Tompkins, assistant treasurer of the National Office, and Mr. Hoster, director of the publicity department, visited New Orleans, with a view of making arrangements for the accommodation of their staffs.

Within a very short time the Committee on Places of Meetings will be able to announce where the opening service and United Thank Offering Service will be held, as several places are under consideration. It is hoped to be able to have all exhibits in one building, as negotiations are under way for leasing a large hall, easily accessible to the General Convention meeting buildings.

Applications are already being received for hotel and rooming accommodations. The Rev. J. Derickson Cummins, 1622 Sixth Street, New Orleans, is chairman of the Committee on Reservations, and all enquiries regarding them should be sent to him. However, full information regarding this will be mailed to delegates in ample time.

The weather in New Orleans during this past October was delightful. The days were balmy and pleasantly cool, and during the nights wraps were necessary at times. Not a drop of rain fell during the month. This is not unusual weather for this season of the year, and while no accurate prediction can be made for next year, there is no reason to anticipate other than similar conditions, as the month of October is always one of the most delightful periods in this section of the country.

Everything is being done to make the next General Convention one of the most successful ever held and those attending can be sure of having a most enjoyable time. The committee on outings have already arranged for several pleasure trips. A large new ocean-going passenger steamer has been promised for trips on the river, and a visit to one of the sugar plantations during operations, will be one of the interesting features.

Call to the Ministry Conference.

One of the most important actions taken at the recent Synod of the Province of Sewanee, held at St. James' Church, Wilmington, N. C., was the decision to hold a "Call to the Ministry Conference" at the Porter Military Academy, Charleston, S. C. The conference will be held immediately after the close of the schools in the South and will probably be attended by three hundred boys.

The matter was presented by Bishop Guerry, of South Carolina, and a committee of the Synod was appointed to investigate and report the feasibility of such a conference. The committee reported its unanimous approval and the Synod enthusiastically endorsed the resolution.

The following committee was appointed to plan the conference:

The Rt. Rev. Alexander Guerry, D. D., Bishop of South Carolina; the Rev. Oscar DeWolf Randolph, of Birmingham, Ala.; and Mr. Rex Meade, of New Orleans, La.

The committee is to work in conjunction with the Rev. Gordon M. Reese, the new rector of Porter Military Academy. The committee will augment its number from each of the Southern Dioceses and has already started plans for the conference.

It is the feeling in the Province of Sewanee that the success of this conference is assured. With such leadership as that of Gordon Reese and Oscar Randolph, both of whom have been leaders in boys' conferences about the country—notably Chestnut Hill—it is believed that a new form will be set for this type of conference.

As soon as diocesan representatives are secured by the committee farther plans and information will be given publicly.

Annual Meeting, Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

The annual meeting of the Philadelphia Assembly of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew was held November 28 in Holy Trinity Memorial Chapel, Philadelphia, the Rev. B. Janney Rudderow vicar. The principal speaker was Dr. Howard Kelly, of Johns Hopkins University.

Dr. Kelly ridiculed the idea that scientists have proved the fallacy of the Bible. On the contrary, he claims that the further one delves into scientific work, the more certain he is to discover that the Bible is true. There is no scientific explanation for many things. Science can go back to early and low forms of life, but it reaches a certain point and stops. There is no explanation of this world with its people and plants and animals, without recognition of the Creator.

"Present-day Christianity is like a dry sponge," said Dr. Kelly, in stressing the beneficial results of close study of the Bible, "and when you subject it to pressure, the pressure of questioning, nothing comes out. It takes a powerful machine to get moisture out of a dry sponge, just as it takes the Bible, the most powerful factor in religion, to instill more intensive Christianity in the lukewarm Christian."

The difficulty with the modern attitude toward the Bible lies in the fact that "it is not being given a fair trial by its critics."

Dr. Kelly claims that the Bible is proved true by science, but that it is proved true also by the pragmatic method. "It works," he says. "If any man will read and study and try to live the Bible, he will be convinced that it is true, all true, because it does what it claims to do. It works."

Dr. Kelly was for thirty years a member of the faculty of the University of Pennsylvania, is one of the most celebrated surgeons in America, and is perhaps the most constant and profound Bible student among our laity.

Mr. Frizzell spoke on the Church's problem in interesting and holding the older boy, and utilizing for the extension of the kingdom his potential powers.

The Rev. Dr. Floyd W. Tompkins conducted a short devotional service, and the Assembly President, Mr. J. Lee Patton, assisted by Mr. Percy Grainger, presided.

The meeting was well attended both by Seniors and Juniors of the Brotherhood.

The annual celebration of the Holy Communion by the Brotherhood of St. Andrew was held Sunday morning in the parishes and missions of the Diocese. It has been estimated that approximately 10,000 male communicants of the five counties of the Diocese received the sacrament in their respective parishes. Many of the parishes with no active chapters of the Brotherhood sent cards to the men and boys who were communicants, inviting them to the service.

G. Freeland Peter, and the Rev. Drs. J. Y. Downman and J. F. Ribble. The meetings were presided over by Miss Louisa T. Davis, of Leesburg, Diocesan President of the Woman's Auxiliary, and among the speakers were Miss Margaret Monteiro, returned missionary to China, and Miss Louise B. Graves, of the mountain missions.

A "Junior Section B" has been formed voluntarily at St. Paul's, Alexandria, Va., by a group of little girls, who were impressed by the zeal of their mothers and aunts and friends for the missionary work of the church. They open their meetings with prayer and hymns, and the rector's daughter has given them lessons in raffia work. At a sale given by Section B November 30 the Juniors had a table which was very popular, yielding $4.45.

Thanksgiving in New York.

The keynote of the Thanksgiving addresses in New York this year was that America must help the world. Nothing else compared with this ideal in prominence in all sermons. The help was not limited to ends of wars, but included missions. The Rev. Dr. Stires, in St. Thomas' Church, said in part:

"A thankful heart is the greatest blessing man can know," said Dr. Stires. "While other governments are shaking and in peril a great election has swept over America from ocean to ocean and has left American institutions unshaken, left the principles upon which it has been founded stronger than ever. But the nation needs to be reminded that God's hand has directed its destinies and that its great wealth and power should be used with wisdom and kindness."

In institutions for the poor the usual abundance was given, both in things to eat and in things to think about. Besides those in institutions, 1,700 nurses spent the day in visiting the sick in their own homes and apartments. In the provision of nurses the Jews of New York take a leading part. Providing for large numbers and those numbers in better ways, one Jewish giver has just contributed in one gift $500,000.

The Cathedral Campaign.

The campaign of Bishop Manning and his committee to complete the Cathedral of St. John the Divine has asked all church parishes to omit evening service on Sunday, January 18, and to urge attendance of their members at the Madison Square Garden, in a mass meeting held to launch the Cathedral campaign for $15,000.00. A striking feature of the campaign to date is the receipt of a gift of $25,000 from a well-known Jew, who said in his letter accompanying the check that he regarded the Cathedral as a New York institution, to be helped without regard to the doctrines of religion. Another giver sent $200,000—a Christian but not a Church woman. It is announced that beyond a doubt building on the nave will start early in the spring, the minimum sum of $3,000,000 being in hand. There are being formed committees of men following certain occupations, after the manner of the most up-to-date of money-raising plans.

Laymen Hold Interesting Meetings.

The business men identified with men's clubs and Bible classes of Brooklyn churches met by representatives and voted that the time had arrived for laymen to work, not just listen to sermons and religious addresses, to eat dinners and smoke, and do nothing. They voted also that study of the Bible out of a book must be followed by the Bible in actual deeds. It was announced by the presiding officer at this meeting that those present represented 2,000 men. It was determined to call a mass meeting at an early date to show the strength of Protestant volunteers, and meanwhile to study methods by which the largest numbers of men possible may be put into actual service.

In the Bronx and Manhattan the representatives of 1,000 laymen took similar action. They also plan public meetings to be held in each Borough on Washington's birthday next, and meanwhile to enter upon promotion of scientific management methods. Speaking at one of these meetings, the Hon. Elihu Root, the aged Secretary of State under President Roosevelt, and now identified with the distribution of Carnegie gifts, said:

"Not only is it extremely difficult to spend large sums of money beneficially, but it is extremely difficult to expend them so as not to do more harm than good. Money itself can do nothing. All the money in the world and all the organizations in the world are of no use unless the man be found. The human element in the equation is all in all. Find the man of penetration, enthusiasm, wisdom, devotion and spirit, and then money gives him opportunity to serve the public good. The great question of all people who seek to improve the condition of mankind is how to get mankind to make the effort to improve itself."

An Interesting Rectory Sold.

When Alexander Hamilton was at the height of his influence in affairs, city and nation, he bought sixteen acres of land in upper Manhattan and on it erected a splendid colonial mansion. That was in 1801. In front of the house Hamilton had planted thirteen trees to stand for the original States, and the trees thrived until about 1880, when city conditions killed them. The house was named Hamilton Grange, after the country seat of Hamilton's grandfather in Scotland.

For thirty-five years his house has belonged to St. Luke's Parish, the present rector of which is the Rev. William T. Walsh. It has now been sold to the American Scenic and Historic Preservation Society for $50,000. It stands as almost a part of St. Luke's Church, yet the parish authorities say they do not know what the society purposes to do with it. The parish has purchased another rectory. There is talk of removing the Grange, but this is held to be an unlikely course. The society owns and administers a number of other historic buildings in the Hudson River district.

Blessed Lord, Who hast caused all holy Scriptures to be written for our learning, grant that we may in such wise hear them, read, mark, learn and inwardly digest them, that by patience and comfort and Thy Holy Word, we may embrace, and ever hold fast, the blessed hope of everlasting life which Thou hast given us in our Saviour Jesus Christ. There Is Rest.

Clyde Robe Meredith.

There is rest at the close of the weariest day,
Though the tired steps falter and lag on the road;
Though the aching back bend with the toil on the way,
Rest is sure when at evening we lay down the load.

There is rest for the weary, and rest for the sad;
There is rest for tired feet, and for broken hearts sore;
In the cool of the evening we shall all be glad,
In the peace of Our Father in Heaven evermore.
Though the head bend with anguish, the heart break with woe,
There is peace, sweetest peace, at our Father's right hand;
And His strong arms will shield us wherever we go,
And will bring us at last to His heavenly land.

Christmas Gifts For Health.

By Dr. Henry L. K. Shaw.

Christmas in the minds of children is synonymous with toys. At this season, hallowed with sacred memories, it has long been the custom of parents to make gifts of toys to their children. But why not toys that are sensible and appropriate, that stimulate the imagination and satisfy the play instincts of their little ones? Too often parents select their gifts unwisely, choosing those toys which appeal to their own tastes, rather than to those of their children.

There is no denying the tendency of being too generous in gifts to our children. Often they positively suffer from an over-abundance of toys. Indulgent parents, devoted relatives and fond friends vie with each other in providing playthings. The one thought seems to be, "the more the merrier." The child gets a wrong impression of life; he thinks the whole world is only a big toy-shop made solely for his amusement.

A child should not receive all the toys he asks Santa Claus for, because this tends to destroy all anticipation and delight in new playthings at another time. No child is capable of appreciating or enjoying a large number of toys at once. Furthermore, too many toys tend to a lack of concentration and cause restlessness, desire for change and a blase and dissatisfied disposition. Children learn to brag to one another about the number of toys they receive, which leads to no little rivalry, jealousy and discontent—traits that should be banished from the child's mind, not fostered or encouraged. A sensible mother will hide away the majority of Christmas toys for use later on in the year. One mother of my acquaintance saves the best toys for use only when her children are sick or convalescing.

Childhood is the toy age. It begins with the little baby and reaches its height when the child is in his teens. Childhood's happiest days are the ones spent with toys which kindle the imagination and supply it with fuel.

Adults need much education about toys, for the proper bestowing of them requires careful selection. Toys should give pleasure and bring joy and happiness; but at the same time they should assist in the education of the child in a natural and effective way. Toys are the most treasured possessions of a child during the most impressionable years of his life, and they exert a marked influence upon his character and development. We can by our selection of toys turn the activities of children into productive and creative directions or into destructive and selfish channels. The right kinds of toys are those that are adapted not only to the age of the child, but also to his environment and physical and mental development.

Toys for the young baby should help him exercise and develop his muscles and his senses. At this period of life simple rattles, rubber dolls and animals, celluloid or rubber floating bath-toys are appreciated and enjoyed.

The small metal whistles in many of the rubber toys must always be removed, because there is the danger that they may be loosened and swallowed or inhaled. A baby puts things in his mouth, not because he is hungry, but because the tactile sense is more keenly developed there than in the fingers. For this reason the right kinds of toys for babies have no rough edges, corners or points which can injure the delicate mucous membrane of the lips and gums or collect dirt and undesirable germs. They should be washable and not have any paint or dye that can come off when the baby chews or sucks them. They must be strong enough to withstand rough usage.

Babies are born with a desire to investigate and experiment. Small bells, buttons or ornaments should never be attached to the toys of young children, for they like to remove and swallow them and, if small enough, put them in their ears or up their nostrils. For the same reason animals covered with fluffy wool or fur make harmful toys for babies. No toy should be given which might startle the baby by loud and unexpected noises or by sudden movements.

Young children like soft dolls, teddy-bears, etc., which they can take to bed, hold in their arms and cuddle while going to sleep.

Before the child is able to walk alone, he can get enjoyment as well as training from the use of a so-called baby-walker; but the seat should be adjusted so that the entire weight of the baby does not rest on his legs. A rocking-horse chair in which the baby is held by a strap affords much pleasure and exercise.—From The Delineator for December.

"O LITTLE TOWN OF BETHLEHEM."

A Visit to the Birthplace of Jesus.

The Rev. C. S. McClellan, Jr.

The Tomb of Rachel is another good resting place. It is familiar from the many pictures we have seen of it—a dingy, little building with a white dome. It is a double compartment structure of concrete twenty by forty feet in dimensions. The front room forms a kind of vestibule to the rear room, where is the sarcophagus under which is said to be the grave of Rachel. Much has been written about this curious old place. It dates in all probability from the Twelfth Century and was erected by the Moslems. Jews, Moslems and Christians all venerate it, for the incident it commemorates is one of the most touching of all human stories. It was here or very near here that the favorite and beloved wife of Jacob died, after the birth of Benjamin, and here it was that they buried her body. "There was but a little way to come to Ephrath (Bethlehem) and she was buried in the way to Ephrath and Jacob set up a pillar upon her grave: that is the pillar of Rachel's grave unto this day." "Many years passed. Jacob, now an old man, came this way . . . And as for me, when I came from Padan, Rachel died by me in the land of Canaan in the way, when there was yet but a little way to come to Ephrath; and I buried her there in the way of Ephrath; the same is Bethlehem."

Today the interior of the tomb has many scribbles upon its century old walls and the buying of wares is not unknown even here, for vendors profane the spot by selling native cold drinks, slices of melon and cakes.

In the year 1163 A. D., by one Benjamin of Tudela we have this interesting note regarding the Tomb of Rachel:

"Two parasangs from Jerusalem is Bethlehem of Judaea, called Beth-lehem; and within half a mile of it, where several roads meet stands the monument which points out the grave of Rachel.

"This monument is constructed of eleven stones, equal to the number of the children of Jacob. It is covered by a cupola, which rests upon four pillars and every Jew who passes there inscribes his name on the stones of the monument. Twelve Jews, dyers by profession, live at Bethlehem. The country abounds with rivulets, wells and springs of water."

The orchards about Beit Jala come in view after we leave the Tomb of Rachel. There are pastures and rivulets. And now we get our first glimpses of Bethlehem. But before proceeding into the little City it is good for us to stop at another historic spot. This place is the famous David's Well. You recall that when David was hiding at the Cave of Adullam, Bethlehem, his native place, was in the control of the Philistines, his enemy. David longed for some tangible connection with his boyhood days (as many another man has) and expressed a desire for a drink of water very precious in a desert country from the well by the gate. That was like a rill from the town pump on the Common to a New Englander! "Oh, that one would give me drink of the water of the well of Bethlehem, which is by the gate." His desire challenged three of his noblest warriors to undertake to penetrate the lines of the enemy and obtain water. It was a sure death venture, but they dared for the sake of their beloved chieftain. And the water was brought back! But David would touch none of it. He could not. It was now too sacred to him. It meant more than memories. It stood for the sacrifice of friends. So he poured the water upon the ground. It was a libation. One cannot help but admire David for his act in the midst of the harsh criticism that has been heaped upon him for this deed. "It was the highest gratitude, because it was touched with poetry. It was the best compliment that David could have given to his friends."

We come now to the little town of Bethlehem. As we approach it we note its location upon a hill with well-cultivated terraces of vines and fig trees, with corn and wheat abounding. It is an exceedingly picturesque place, whose beauty is further heightened by its hallowed memories. The City of David! The home of Ruth! The Birthplace of Jesus Christ! Here the young shepherd boy of Israel tended the flock out there upon those terraced hillsides. "The Lord is my Shepherd"—how real those exquisite lines are here and now! "I shall not want." Verily! Was not Bethlehem called "House of Bread" and was not the "Bread of Life" born here? "He maketh me to lie down in green pastures"—there they are today as of old. "He leadeth me beside the still waters"—those rivulets and brooks we passed on our journey to Bethlehem. And "The House of the Lord forever"—Bethlehem, the Birthplace of Jesus!

The little town of Bethlehem contains today about 8,000 souls and 2,000 houses. Here dwell many wealthy Jews, who have come hither to live and die upon their native soil of Palestine. At one time the Moslems were in the majority, but today Bethlehem is one of the most, if not the most, Christian towns in all Palestine. It was in 1834 that the Moslems rebelled against Ibrahim Pasha and were by him almost exterminated and at the same time the Moslem Quarter was destroyed. Since then the Christians have held sway—and it is fitting that the town of the Nativity of the Founder of Christianity be in the control of His followers.

Naturally the historic interest of the town centers about the spot where Jesus Christ was born. There stands the Church of the Nativity, said to be the oldest Christian Church extant. It is not a very large church, for it measures about ninety by one hundred feet, and contains a chapel with two rows of twenty-four columns each, decorated with Corinthian style of capital. On these columns also are carved the crests of the Crusade Knights, who came here in the Twelfth Century. Once the walls were decorated with fine paintings and mosaics, but time has effaced these—unfortunately, for they would be of historical interest as well as antiquarian note today.

Beneath the church are the grotto, a rock hewn chapel ten by twelve by thirty-three feet, called the Nativity, and the Manger. A Star implanted in the floor of the grotto marks the site of the Saviour's birth. Its inscription is in Latin—"Hic de Virgine Maria Jesus Christus natus est." Red velvet curtains with gilded lace ornaments are draped above the alcove, while fifteen silver lamps perpetually burn. Nearby is the reputed Manger of the Infant Jesus.

Close by is also the Chapel of the Annunciation, where it is said, the angel told Joseph to flee into Egypt and thus spare the life of the Christ Child from the hand of the cruel Herod. In the Chapel of the Innocents many of those babies slain during the Massacre of the Holy Innocents are buried, if history's story told here is to be relied upon as authentic.

We are not to be too credulous regarding the authenticity of the spot where Jesus Christ was born. The place has the claims of a long and honored history. The Church of the Nativity was built about 333 A. D., and history has it that at that time (comparatively near the actual birth of Jesus) the exact cave was well-known. It is one of the most likely of the historic spots of Palestine today. And as we kneel in the grotto we are surely not far from the site of the Lord's birth.

Christmas Day is never to be forgotten in Bethlehem. Crowds of pilgrims come hither like the tribes of old went up to Jerusalem to keep the feast. They have worn the marble floors of the Nativity Chapel smooth. In the Field of the Shepherds (just east of the town) they gather on the day before Christmas for a great picnic and on Christmas Day itself from early afternoon until midnight the little town is overcrowded with visitors, all trying to get nearest the Star. Does it not seem strange, indeed, that right here, where the Prince of Peace was born, have occurred many fierce riots in which several persons have been killed. Strange are the events of history!

Those Ten Commandments.

The Rev. Thos. F. Opie, D. D.

"Our modern world defined God as a 'religious complex'—and laughed at the Ten Commandments as old-fashioned," says the prologue to the great drama of the movies, The Ten Commandments. "Then, through the laughter, came the shattering thunder of the World War! And now a blood-drenched, bitter world, no longer laughing, cries for a way out. There is but one way out. It existed before it was engraven upon tablets of stone. It will exist when stone has crumbled."

This gripping and terrible picture shows how men endeavoring to rule God and honesty out and defying the Commandments, go to pieces on the rocks. These laws are the law of the race. They cannot be ignored. They cannot be transgressed. They are necessary to the integrity of the human family. They are essential to human progress and to civilization itself.

"The Ten Commandments are not rules to obey as a personal favor to God," continues the prologue. "They are the fundamental principles without which mankind cannot live together. They are not laws—they are THE LAW."

There are three typical characters in the second part of this notable motion picture. "There is the Mother, who believes the letter, but fails to catch the spirit of religion." She is narrow, Puritanical, misguided. She turns her son out of her home, because he says he does not believe in God. But she seems not to reflect that if her son cannot find God in his own home, he will be very unlikely to find Him anywhere in all the world! She "holds the cross in her hand—but uses it as a whip." The typifies that great class of bigoted people, of biased, ignorant, unhappy, unsmiling literalists who have done much to make the All-Father persona non grata to millions of people. Sticklers for extreme detail, they are—harsh, having no patience and no sympathy with any opposing view. Narrow literalists, they are, teaching a mechanical, a materialistic view of life, the Bible, religion, God. Stressing the fear of God, they forget the love of God.

Then there is the Younger Son, Dan. He defies the Ten Commandments, saying he would go out into the world and break the laws of Moses, wax rich and have the world at his feet. He defies decency, honor, loyalty. He is untrue to his wife, untrue to himself, untrue to every noble impulse. He comes to an ignoble end and a tragic death—with one word written across his dead body: DEFIANCE.

The Elder Brother is honest, forgiving, sympathetic, simple in habits, thoughts, tastes—just a plain carpenter—but rugged, faithful, courageous, honorable, brave and true. Thank God for his type—in home, in industry, in religion and in a world of shallowness and make-believe.

Man may defy the Ten Commandments—he may ignore them—he may transgress them. But "break" them—never! You can no more break the laws of God than you can destroy sunlight! Those who have tried it are in the asylums, the jails, the hospitals, the reformatories, the penitentiaries! They have broken themselves—not the laws of God! The laws of God stand as of old—unbroken, familiar, ideal! Hate cannot kill love. Sin cannot murder purity. Evil cannot annihilate goodness. God is true and God is love—and His laws are in the best interests of the whole human race. "Thou shalt love God with all thy heart, mind, soul, strength—and thy neighbor as thyself."

Rudyard Kipling Learns.

Rudyard Kipling, whose blood is Methodist, theology Calvinistic, and outlook on life imperialistic, was asked by the Rev. E. L. Massey to tell him what class get most in touch with the sorrows of men. And he said, "Had you asked me that twenty years ago I should have said the soldier at once, but today I am sure that the man who reaches the sorrows of men is the clergyman every time."—Presbyterian Banner.

Sacrifice.

"God is a kind Father. He sets us all in the places where He wishes us to be employed; and that employment is truly 'our Father's business.' He chooses work for every creature which will be delightful to them, if they do it simply and humbly. He gives always strength enough, and sense enough, for what He wants us to do; if we either tire ourselves or puzzle ourselves, it is our own fault. And we may always be sure, whatever we are doing, that we cannot be pleasing Him if we are not happy ourselves.—Ruskin.

For the Young Folks

A Christmas Folk-Song.

The little Jesus came to town;
The wind blew up, the wind blew down;
Out in the street the wind was bold;
Now who would house him from the cold?

Then opened wide a stable door,
Fair were the rushes on the floor; (1
The Ox put forth a horned head;
"Come, little Lord, here make thy bed."

Up rose the Sheep who were folded near;
"Thou Lamb of God, come enter here."
He entered there to rush and reed,
Who was the Lamb of God indeed.

The little Jesus came to town;
With ox and sheep, he laid him down;
Peace to the byre, peace to the fold,
For that they housed him from the cold.

THE HOLY TIDE.

A Christmas Mystery Play.

Part II.

Claudine E. Clements.

Episode 3.

The Vision of St. Anskar—The First Christmas Tree.

Place: A forest in Denmark.

Time: Christmas Eve, 850.

Persons: St. Anskar, the Apostle of the North; Haco, his companion; Faith, Hope, Love.

St. Anskar and Haco enter, dressed as travelers.

Haco: The forest is quiet tonight.

St. Anskar: Even so, peaceful silence enwrapped all things and night in her own swiftness was in midcourse, when the all-powerful Word came forth from heaven.

Haco: Ay, 'tis the birthright of the White Christ. See how the berries of the Christ thorn gleam in the snow.

St. Anskar: Methinks, the soldiers used its leaves to make their crown of mockery and the berries are even now red with the Saviour's blood. And truly I fear lest even now He goeth to be crucified again.

Haco: Wherefore, Anskar, speakest thou thus?

St. Anskar: Thou knowest that tonight the vikings were wont to assemble about the oak tree to worship Thor. Who can tell but that they will again stain the Holy Eve with their heathen rites? So long have they worshipped fire or wind or swift air or circling stars or raging water or luminaries of heaven, that it is hard for them to forget their ancient practices.

Haco: 'Twas but a few paces hence that Thor's tree stood. Do thou wait here, while I go yonder, to see if there is any sign that the people are assembling themselves together.

St. Anskar: Do, good Haco.

Haco leaves the stage. St. Anskar sits down in troubled thought. He falls asleep. Faith, Hope and Love appear.

Love: Hail, Anskar!

Hope: Thou doest well to be anxious tonight because of thy vikings. For lo, even now their thoughts turn again to the Frost Feast.

Faith: But seek thou in the forest for a tree which may be to them a sign of the coming of the Christ Child. Then will they forget Thor and his oak tree and their evil rites.

Hope: Hope bids thee choose a tree whose leaf never fadeth and whose head is lifted up.

Love: Let its branches reach out even as the love of God, to fill the land.

Faith: And on every godly bough shall there be the cross of Christ.

Faith, Hope and Love disappear as Haco returns.

St. Anskar (rousing as Haco enters): Haco, Haco! Didst thou see any one?

Haco: Nay, there is none stirring. Thor's oak tree is silent.

St. Anskar: Didst thou not meet three heavenly maidens?

Haco: Whom meanest thou, Anskar?

St. Anskar: They of whom the apostle did write: Faith and Hope and Love, but now ta'ked with me.

Haco: What said they?

St. Anskar: They bade us seek a tree beneath whose branches the Norsemen shall gather on the feast of the White Christ. But not in the forest depths shall they meet for evil rites, but by their firesides shall they celebrate the Holy Eve and even children welcome the birthnight of Emmanuel.

Haco: What manner of tree shall it be?

St. Anskar (selecting a fir tree): See, Haco, 'tis the fir of which the voices spoke, and which shall become the Christmas tree of the North, for it is fadeless as hope, widespread as love and it bears the cross on every bough.

Curtain.

Episode 4.

The Feast of the Sun of Righteousness—At Canterbury, St. Augustine's converts transfer to the celebration of the Christmas-tide many customs belonging to the Yule feast of the winter solstice.

Place: Outside the walls of Canterbury, beside a heathen temple.

Time: Christmas Eve, 597.

Persons: King Ethelbert of Kent, Queen Bertha, St. Augustine, the founder of the Church in Kent; Laurentius, a monk, a Group of monks, companions of St. Augustine; Cadoc, a Celtic boy; a group of Kentish men, bearers of the Yule-Log.

A group of monks, one of whom carries the cross, enter and cross the stage singing the first two verses of Hymn 45, "O Come, O Come, Emmanuel." They are followed soon by St. Augustine. About the same time King Ethelbert and Queen Bertha enter from the other direction and greet St. Augustine.

Queen Bertha: How beautiful are the feet of him that preacheth the gospel of peace, that bringeth glad tidings of good things, that publisheth salvation.

St. Augustine: The Lord bless thee, my daughter, and thee, O King.

King Ethelbert: Thy return is more welcome than the golden splendor which cometh out of the north when the wind driveth the clouds from the face of the sky.

St. Augustine: Even now as we journeyed hither our hearts were gladdened, for multitudes hindered us desiring to be baptized, and tomorrow when we keep the birthday of Christ, many shall wear the white chrisom robes of new-born souls.

King Ethelbert: But tonight my people have been wont to celebrate with merrymaking and good cheer the return of the burning sun wheel unto the heavens. And in his honor they kindle on every hearth a sacred fire. Even now they seek the Yule log in the forest; so hard is it for the gods to die. Wilt thou then that my soldiers forbid the feast and destroy the Yule fires?

St. Augustine: Not so Ethelbert, for hath not Gregory, the holy father, warned us that we may not leap to the top of the ladder, but must climb hither by degrees? Therefore, shall the day of the sun-wheel become the feast of the Sun of Righteousness Who hath risen with healing in His wings. And nations shall come to His light and kings to the brightness of His rising. Harken, O King, to the vesper hymn that even now my monks are singing.

The monks are heard off-stage singing the third verse of Hymn 45—

"O come, thou day Spring, come and cheer

Our spirits by thine advent here;
Disperse the gloomy clouds of night
And death's dark shadows put to flight.

Rejoice, rejoice, Emmanuel Shall come to thee, O Israel."

Queen Bertha: See, they have fetched the Yule log and are coming to kindle it with last year's brand.

A group of Kentish men enter, dragging the Yule log after them. They cross the stage repeating the following verses:

"Come, bring with a noise,
My merry, merry boys,
The Yule-tide log to the firing.

With the last year's brand,
Light the new block, and
For good success in his spending,
On your psaltries play,
That sweet luck may Come while the log is a tending."

Sixteenth Century.

King Ethelbert: Come, my queen, let us follow to keep a merry Yule-tide, for our people walk no more in darkness, but the light of the gospel hath been shed abroad in our hearts. (To Augustine) And unto thee and thy monks do we give yonder temple of the old gods, that ye may destroy its images and consecrate it anew unto the worship of thy Christ.

St. Augustine: Because it hath been dedicated on the feast of the Holy Child, it shall wear the name of Pancras, the boy martyr; and many shall remember how the heathen Yule feast became the holy Christ-tide.

The King and Queen follow the bearers of the Yule-log off stage as Laurentius with Cadoc enters from the other side.

St. Augustine (to Laurentius): Ah, Laurentius, methought we had lost thee by the way.

Laurentius: Nay, father, but as we came nigh unto Canterbury, I found this lad preparing for magic rites. So I have brought him unto thee.

St. Augustine: He seemeth but young for a worker of magic. (To Cadoc): What is thy name, child?

Cadoc: Cadoc, sir.

St. Augustine: 'Tis not a Kentish name.

Cadoc: My mother was a Briton.
St. Augustine: Well, tell me, Cadoc, what toughest thou but now in the forest?

Cadoc: I am afraid, father to answer thee.

St. Augustine: Nay, nay lad. Come, what hast thou under thy cloak.

Cadoc (showing branches of evergreen): Our wise men say that when the frost nips the leaves of oak and maple and elm, the fairies hide in the evergreens. And so we hang their boughs in our houses if haply they may bring us luck. (He shows a branch of mistletoe.) And this is but a sprig of mistletoe. But the Druids whom our fathers revered, held it a sacred plant. "Heal all" they called it. So I broke it from the tree where it grew. But now thou wilt take it from me.

St. Augustine: Nay, Cadoc, thou shalt keep thy mistletoe to hang within King Ethelbert's hall, but no longer shalt thou trust in magic and in charm but in Him Whose coming hath been for the healing of the nations. And thy garlands and thy branches thou shalt bring to deck the king's latest gift to the Child of Bethlehem. Rememberest thou, Laurentius, how it is written in Isaiah, the Prophet, "The glory of Lebanon shall come unto me, the fir tree, the pine, and the box tree together to beautify the place of my sanctuary"?

Cadoc: Thou art certain, father, that thy God will accept these garlands and sprigs of evergreen? The good Queen Bertha hath said that though He became a Child tonight, yet is He a great king, mightier even than King Ethelbert. Is this so, father?

St. Augustine: Ay, Cadoc.

Cadoc: And then the queen hath said that when Christ was born there came three kings with a multitude of camels that bare spices and very much gold and precious stones. It is true, father?

St. Augustine: It happened even as thou hast said.

Cadoc: Then surely He will despise so poor a gift as this.

St. Augustine: Nay, my son, for when the Christ Child became a man, they brought young children unto Him and He took them up in His arms and blessed them.

Cadoc: Then bring me unto Him, that I, too, may worship Him.

They go into the heathen temple.

Between Episodes four and five, Hymn 45 is concluded.

The Christmas Story.

Eugenie du Maurier.

Over and over again, year after year, we love to listen to the story of the shepherds who watched on the hill-sides of Bethlehem, and of the vision they saw. The shepherds were poor and unknown to the rich people in the towns. They feared the wolf and the lion and the bear on these lonely hills. They had to defend their flocks from these wild animals and from robbers as well. They were brave and hardy, like David of old, played on pipes or harps to cheer themselves in the lonely night watches. It was in these same fields that the boy, David, had kept watch over his father's flocks, before he was chosen to be the anointed king. Now, in lowly appearance, the King of Kings comes to earth and the angels sing in joy. But only the shepherds hear the message and the song. What did the shepherds see? An angel so clothed in light that the glory lighted all the hills and fields. And the shepherds were greatly frightened. But the angel seeing their fear said: "Fear not, for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For this day is born to you a Saviour Who is Christ the Lord." Then the vision changed. A multitude of angels joined the first angel, and their song of joy filled the air. The angels sang on earth that first Christmas night. And their song of joy and praise filled the air, ringing on forever, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will to men."

The angel told the shepherds that they would know the infant Saviour, because "He would be laid in a manger." When Joseph and Mary, tired and worn with their long journey, were turned from the inns, where they sought shelter "because there was no room," one kind man directed them to a place of shelter—a cave in the side of the hill, where an overhanging rock gave protection and in this grotto stable was the manger, and in that manger lay the infant Saviour, the Babe of Bethlehem. The light from the manger made the place glow with the radiance of Heaven. In silent adoration Mary and Joseph knelt.

When the angels had gone away into Heaven, the shepherds said: "Let us go to Bethlehem." And so "they came with haste, and found Mary and Joseph, and the infant lying in the manger." The shepherds understood. They adored their Saviour and then went away telling of the glory they had seen. To Mary and Joseph they were the first to come. Blessed visitors who had seen the blessed vision and then gazed on Him! In the crowded city people slept. Only the shepherds knew that Christ had come.

A Pleasant Day.

"Jessica," said Cousin Diantha in the abrupt way in which she sometimes spoke, "I wonder if you realize how much of the time you are finding fault?"

Her question was answered before Jessica had said a word for her expression of astonishment made it perfectly clear that she had never thought of such a thing.

"I, Cousin Diantha?"

"Yes, my dear, just you."

"But I don't understand. Find fault about what?"

It was on Cousin Diantha's lips to reply "really everything," but she suppressed that answer as not being sufficiently tactful, and tried another.

"Well, sometimes with people and sometimes with things."

"Of course everybody has to criticize something sometimes," Jessica said, with an offended air. "But if you think I find fault more than other people do, I'm sorry Cousin Diantha, and that's all I can say."

"Bless the child. Don't be so fearfully dignified," laughed Cousin Diantha. "I hope I'm wrong, I'm sure, and now I'm going to suggest a little test which will show whether you are right or whether I am."

Jessica listened unsmilingly.

"Tomorrow," continued Cousin Diantha briskly, "whenever you start to find fault with anybody or anything, promise me you'll check yourself and say instead, 'It's a pleasant day.'"

"Every time?" asked Jessica opening her eyes.

Cousin Diantha smiled, but did not speak. Jessica flushed.

"Why of course," she said quickly. "You mean if I should happen to start to criticize something I'm to say instead that it is a pleasant day."

"That's what I mean."

"It seems a little bit foolish, doesn't it?"

"Only you and I will know about it."

"I'm willing, of course, but I can't see what is to be gained by it."

"Perhaps you'll have found out by bedtime tomorrow," suggested Cousin Diantha. "If you have, call me up and tell me." And then as she rose to go, she stopped and kissed Jessica so affectionately that her young cousin felt her resentment ebbing away. Indeed when she went to bed, Jessica was laughing over the queer promise she had made. No one but Cousin Diantha would ever have thought of such a thing.

She herself did not think of it again till she was dressing the next morning and missed the shoehorn. She knew at once that Helen was to blame, for Helen was always mislaying things, while Jessica herself was orderly. "Now Helen," she exclaimed imperiously.

"Well, what?" demanded Helen in anything but an amiable voice.

Jessica caught herself up just in time, "It's a pleasant day," she said.

Helen looking surprised turned and glanced through the window, "Yes, it is," she agreed. "Last night it looked as if it might rain, didn't it?"

Jessica did not remember. "Do you know," she inquired meekly, "where the shoehorn is?"

"It's in the top drawer under a pile of handkerchiefs."

Jessica was rather silent as she completed her dressing. She was annoyed that she had been obliged to fall back on the weather so early in the day, for that meant that she would be obliged to guard her speech very carefully till she had started for school. But she forgot the need of caution when she sat down to breakfast, and discovered there was buttered toast on the table instead of waffles. Wednesday was the regular morning for waffles, and Jessica pouted like a fretful baby, "Mother," she began resentfully.

"Well, Jessica?"

Just in time she had remembered. "It's a pleasant day," she said breathlessly.

"Yes, it is," said her mother. "And I'm glad for we're going to wash some of the blankets today. That's why Mary didn't take time to make waffles for breakfast."

It was George who had the next narrow escape. George was just enough younger than Jessica so that she was continually telling him not to laugh so loud, or not to eat so rapidly, or to stop doing one thing or to remember to do something else. As George extended his plate for another fried egg, Jessica felt an irritated conviction that George was greedy. He had already eaten enough for two breakfasts. "George," she exclaimed severely.

"Well, what?" George knew her critical tone and his manner was defiant.

"I—I mean it's a pleasant day," said Jessica.

George set down his plate and stared at her. "You seem to have the weather on the brain," he replied wonderingly, and Jessica answered with a feeble smile. She didn't speak again during breakfast.

The first hour of the day set the pace for the rest; again and again, Jessica found herself obliged to refer to the weather. When she had intended to say that Miss Collins, the mathematics teacher, was the most unreasonable person she had ever known, when her lips had parted to declare that Angeline Cox looked like a fright with bobbed hair, even when she was about to utter the time-honored criticism of the street-car service, she remarked instead that it was a pleasant day. And some of her friends exclaimed, "I can't see what there is about today that has made such an impression on you. I've seen lots of days I liked better."

A little before ten that evening Jessica went to the telephone and called Cousin Diantha. "Why, it's Jessica," said an eager voice. "Well, dear, what sort of day have you had?"

Jessica groaned.

"Cousin Diantha," she replied, "I've said about a million times that it was a pleasant day, but really and truly, it was about the unpleasantest day I ever lived through."

Cousin Diantha began to laugh. And she laughed till even Jessica smiled sourly at the other end of the line.

"I've proved which one of us was right," continued Jessica, "and I'm going to stop criticizing if I have to muzzle myself to do it. But please, don't make me call everybody's attention to my weaknesses, by talking about the weather."

Cousin Diantha laughed again. "That promise was only for today," she said blithely. "But the time is coming, dearie, when you'll conquer this foolish habit of faultfinding, and pleasant words will spring naturally to your lips, and then—won't that be a pleasant day?"—Christian Observer.

It's Me!

Helen Bayley Davis.

I know a very little boy,
He's good as he can be.
He never disobeys his Ma
Or answers back—not he!
He gathers all the kindlin' wood,
He'd like to chop it up—he could,
I never saw a boy so good,
It's Me!

He minds his little sister, too,
He takes her out to walk;
He runs the errands for the cook
An' never stops to talk!
He sweeps the dead leaves off the grass
An' bows politely when folks pass,
He never breaks a pane of glass—
It's Me!

An' when it's time for Christmas Eve
To come aroun' again,
That little boy is 'specially good,
He's like an angel, then;
He never asks to sit up late,
Eats all the food upon his plate,
Hurrah! Who thinks old Santa's great?
It's Me!

LUCK COMES HIS WAY.

A Sermon for Children.

Give and it shall be given unto you—
Luke 7:38.

The principal of the school heard a group of boys talking about one of their comrades.

"Fred will probably win the prize this year," one of them said. "Luck always comes his way."

The teacher interrupted at this point. "Fred may win the contest as you boys say. But if he does it will not be because of luck, but a reward for faithful work. A lot of things which people call luck are really rewards for conscientious service. You boys know that Fred had been working hard for weeks. He has denied himself the good times that some of the rest of you have insisted on. These things will furnish the reason, if he wins. Surely that is not luck."

Luck is supposed to be the good fortune which comes accidentally. But as someone has said, real luck is found more seldom than four-leaved clovers. Another person explains why the finding of four-leaved clovers will bring luck. "The man who sticks to the search until he finds a four-leaved clover will be apt to stick to any other task until he wins out." Then his reward comes as a result of service; but people carelessly call it luck.

There is an eastern parable which illustrates the system of rewards very well.

A certain king divided up the kingdom into farms, giving to each subject the same-sized plot. To all those who worked faithfully, and brought to him the fruits of the harvest, he would give a valuable reward.

Among the subjects was Alphonse. His plot lay along the king's highway. He carefully put in his seed near the highway. The rows were straight, and the seed carefully sown. But back a few rods from the road he decided to skip every other row. He went to the highway, and looked back.

"The king can't tell the difference from here," he said.

In a little while the sun became hot, and his body tired, and he decided that he could skip two rows and plant each third. Again he saw with satisfaction that the king passing by could not detect the missing rows.

In the fall each subject brought the fruits of the harvest to the king and awaited the prize which he had promised to give. The sack that Alphonse received seemed smaller and lighter than that given his fellows. He complained because of the injustice which was done him.

"I have not done you injustice," said the king. "Each man has received as a prize the exact value of the grain he brought to the storehouse. If you neglected to get the most from your plot you have done yourself the injustice and you have no one else to blame."

And that is the way our rewards are given in life. Real luck is scarce.—Church Management.

"Charlie's Life."

"Mother," said little Charles, "Will Harnish says his mother writes books."

"Does she?" said his mother, and then she went on sewing and forgot Charlie, who was trying to stand on his head.

"Mother," said Charlie, presently, "is it very hard to write a book?"

"I don't know, I am sure," said mother.

"I am going to write a book," said this small man.

Just then the doorbell rang and Charlie's mother went to see who called. When she came back her little boy was sitting on her footstool, busily writing, but as he wrote with a slate pencil it didn't do any harm.

"Now, mother," said the little boy, "I'm done with my book."

"No," said his mother, thinking a little while, "you are not done. God has given you a book to write. I hope it is a big, long one, full of beautiful stories."

"What is the name of my book?" he asked, coming closer to her.

"It's name is 'Charlie's Life.' You can only write one page a day, and you must be very careful not to make any black marks in it by doing ugly things. When you pout and cry, that smears your page; and when you help mother, and keep a bright face, and don't quarrel with Reddy, that makes a nice, fair page, with pretty pictures on it."

"And when will I be done writing that book?" asked Charlie.

"When God says that your book is long enough," answered mother. "He will send an angel to shut its covers and put a clasp on it until the great day when all our life books will be opened and read."—Selected.

HOW LONG TO THE END---Dan. 12:6

Does the Chronological Prophecy in Daniel 12 point to the very year of our Lord's Return?

When the difference in the lengths of the four periods in this chapter (which were given as an answer to the above question) is regarded as occurring at their beginnings, instead of at their endings, they are found to have a common end, because they culminate in a single year, the present one.

Is not this the answer requested and the opening of God's long-closed time-lock, the unsealing promised to "the wise" in "the time of the end"?

75% of disease avoided through internal cleanliness.

WHEN you are constipated, poisons are formed in the accumulated food waste, and reach all parts of the body. The first results, headaches, biliousness, a feeling of "heaviness", etc., serve as warnings of graver diseases to follow if this intestinal poisoning continues unchecked.

This is why intestinal specialists state that constipation is the primary cause of three-quarters of all illness, including the gravest diseases of life.

Physicians Advise Lubrication for Internal Cleanliness

Medical science has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste, and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus, Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless. Take Nujol regularly and adopt this habit of internal cleanliness. For sale by all druggists.

WILLIAM L. ZIMMER.

Resolutions.

On the morning of Monday, October 27th, MR. WILLIAM L. ZIMMER, in the home of his daughter, Mrs. G. Floyd Rogers, of Charlotte, N. C., passed from his earthly life into the life eternal.

Mr. Zimmer had been a member of Grace Church, Petersburg, Va., from his young manhood. He was a vestryman for more than forty years, and had laid down the responsibility of a vestryman only in the last few years. As a vestryman of Grace Church he gave to the business of the church the same careful scrutiny that he gave to his own business; he was always ready to act and always vitally interested in every detail of administration. As a member of the congregation he was liberal in his gifts, constant in his attendance upon the services of the church, faithful to his communion and keenly alive to all affairs of the church.

Therefore, the vestry of Grace Church, in meeting assembled, desire to place on record their keen appreciation of all that Mr. William L. Zimmer has meant to Grace Church and their deep sense of loss in his removal from their midst. They also desire to express their sympathy to his bereaved widow and family.

Therefore be it resolved, That the above expression of appreciation, sympathy and loss be sent to his widow and children, also published in the Southern Churchman and a copy thereof be spread upon the minutes of the vestry of Grace Church

Calvary Church, Clifton, Cincinnati, is contemplating the enlargement of the parish house to make room for the increasing social and educational work of that substantial parish. The sum of $60,000 has been set as the goal to be reached.

Death of Mrs. Reese.

Mrs. F. F. Reese, wife of the Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese, died on Saturday, November 29, after an illness of three months. The funeral was held from Christ Church, Savannah, on Sunday afternoon, the rector, the Rev. David Cady Wright, conducting the service, assisted by the clergy of the city, and the burial was in Bonaventure Cemetery.

SPRINGFIELD.

Rt. Rev. G. H. Sherwood, D. D., Bishop.

Alaskan Missionary's Visit.

The Diocese of Springfield is fortunate to secure for the first ten days of the month of December the services of Miss Alice Wright, of St. Mark's Mission, Alaska, who is in the States on furlough.

Miss Wright is booked for a very strenuous itinerary, and will address the congregations of thirteen parishes in the following towns: Urbana (University of Illinois), Springfield, Alton, Edwardsville, Bloomington, Cairo, East St. Louis, Belleville, Granite City, Carlinville and Lincoln.

The Rev. Frederick D. Butler, D. D., rector of St. Paul's Church and Archdeacon of Alton, Ill., has accepted a call from the Church of St. John the Evangelist, St. Paul, Minn., and begins his new work January 2, 1925. Dr. Butler has been closely identified with the diocesan work of the Diocese of Springfield for the past seven years, giving valuable service in his work on the financial committees of the Diocese, and also in the administration of his archdeaconry. He was personally responsible for the opening of the work in Wood River, a rapidly growing community to the south of Alton, identified with a large oil industry. The mission which he organized was admitted into union with the Synod in 1921 under the name of St. Gabriel's Mission.

At the time of receiving his call he was chairman of the Field Department of the newly organized Diocesan Council, and in this capacity had given much inspiration to the conferences being held in the various parishes and missions of Springfield.

Mission at Ada.

The Rev. Joseph Carden, rector of St. Philip's Church, Ardmore, recently gave a mission of instruction at St. Luke's Church, Ada, the Rev. Charles Widney, rector, with a series of sermons covering the fundamental truths of religion, and with meditations every afternoon based on the invitation in the Communion Office.

Throughout the two weeks of the mission the attendance was very satisfactory, many strangers being present at each service, and our own church people being very regular in attendance.

Mr. Carden repeated the mission in his own parish, beginning Sunday, November 30.

The address of the Rev. W. H. Osborne is changed from South Norfolk, Va., to 303 West Amelia Avenue, Tampa, Fla.

Ordinations.

The Rev. Reginald Rogers Genois was advanced to the priesthood on Thanksgiving Day in Ascension Church, Westminster, Md., by the Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray, D. D., Bishop of Maryland. Archdeacon Edward T. Helfenstein presented the candidate and the ordination sermon was preached by Archdeacon Romilly F. Humphries. Mr. Genois has been deacon in charge of Ascension Church and has accepted the call of the vestry to become rector immediately upon ordination to the priesthood.

In the Church of St. John the Evangelist, Newport, R. I., on Sunday, November 2, the Rt. Rev. J. DeW. Perry, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese, advanced the Rev. Rudolph Schnorrenberg to the priesthood. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Spence Burton, S. S. J. E., and the candidate was presented by the Rev. Julian D. Hamlin, rector of the parish. The Rev. Mr. Schnorrenberg remains at St. John's as curate.

On Wednesday, November 5, the Rev. James Parker Love was advanced to the priesthood by the Rt. Rev. C. S. Quin, D. D., in All Saints' Church, Cameron, Tex. The candidate was presented by Archdeacon Sloan and the sermon was preached by the Rev. W. Postell Wittsell, rector of St. Paul's Church, Waco.

Mr. Love served his diaconate in Holy Cross Church, Harrisburg, Tex., after a business career of twenty years. He recently moved to Cameron, where, in addition to All Saints' Church, he also cares for St. Thomas' Church, Rockdale.

Deaths.

Word has come from Bishop Roots of the death of Mrs. A. S. Kean, of Wuchang, from pneumonia. Mrs. Kean went to China in 1912 as Miss Ada Whitehouse, and for five years served as nurse in connection with what is now the Church General Hospital, Wuchang. In 1917 she married the Rev. Arthur S. Kean, one of the faculty of Boone University. Mrs. Kean heartily cooperated with Mr. Kean's work among students and made their home a place to which many of the University students were glad to come for counsel and good fellowship.

Have We Forgot?

"Now, therefore, why speak ye not a word of bringing the King back?"

The King went forth a kingdom to obtain,

With promise to His own to come again;

The long, long years have passed, the years of pain,

And yet He cometh not;—
Have we forgot?

He bade us keep our hearts forever pure,
And, following Him, to suffer and endure,

That we to Him might weary men allure,

And He might tarry not;—
Have we forgot?

He asked us for Himself to wait and long,

To turn our faces from the worldly throng

Upward to Him, to whom our lives belong;

And yet He hast'neth not;—
Have we forgot?

And thus the days go by; we joy and sing,

We take His gifts—yet little to Him bring,

And speak no word of bringing back the King;

And so He cometh not;—
We have forgot!

O Christ our King, forgive us this our sin,

And help us henceforth, many lives to win,

That we may haste to bring Thy kingdom in;—

And oh, forget us not,
Though we've forgot!

—Henry W. Frost.

Every soul must break out of a prison of things. We are dungeoned by possessions, smothered by a clutter of merchandise, the life flattened out by the cumulative instinct of selfishness. The prison house of selfishness is the common jail of mankind, caging them in the little cell of personal advantage.

The way seems too narrow only to those whose feet have never entered it. The gate seems too straight only to those who do not know that God's commandments are exceeding broad.

Christ's law is a gracious liberty. His service is a perfect freedom. His statutes become our songs in the house of our pilgrimage.—W. M. Clow.

SCHOLARSHIPS

In granting aid, preference will be given to Candidates for Holy Orders, who possess full literary qualifications, and who are worthy on account of Christian character, high scholarship, vigorous health and natural energy and force.

Our contributors are given the choice of agency in the great work of preaching the Gospel. They may do this either by the living voice or by the printed page.

FORM OF BEQUEST.

I give, devise and bequeath to THE EVANGELICAL EDUCATION SOCIETY OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH in Philadelphia the sum of Dollars or all that certain lot, etc (describe Real Estate briefly), to be used for the general purposes of the Society (or for any specific purposes or with any limitations as to principal or income testator may desire).

Note.—By Act of Assembly in Pennsylvania a devise or bequest for charitable uses is void unless it is done by will, attested by two credible and at the time disinterested witnesses at least thirty days before the decease of the testator.

SKY SWEEPING

promises to become a customary procedure. Even London fogs may be shot away by electrified sand from airplanes.

We would like to sweep away some foggy ideas; for instance, that the small estate cannot afford trust services.

To the family concerned, it is of greatest importance that the small estate be guarded and safely administered. Mistakes of experience and poor judgment can quickly wipe out the small fortune. In most cases it cannot afford to be without a SAFE executor and trustee.

We cordially invite consultations on this subject, confidential and no cost.

IF I lay waste and wither up with doubt
The blessed fields of heaven where once my Faith

Possessed itself serenely safe from death;
If I deny the things past finding out;
Or if I orphan my own soul of One
That seemed a Father, and make void the place Within me where He dwelt in Power and Grace,
What do I gain by that I have undone.?

Patience.

But if impatient, thou let slip thy cross,
Thou wilt not find it in this world again,

Nor in another, here, and here alone,
Is given thee to suffer for God's sake.
In other worlds we shall more perfectly Serve Him and love Him, praise Him, work for Him,

Grow near, and nearer Him with all delight;

But then we shall not any more be called

To suffer, which is our appointment here.

Canst thou not suffer then one hour, or two?

And while we suffer, let us set our souls

To suffer perfectly; since this alone,
The suffering, which is this world's special grace,

May here be perfected and left behind.

—E. Hamilton King.

When the memory of battles
At last is strange and old,
When nations have one banner,
And creeds have but one fold.

Then Hate's last note of discord
In all God's word shall cease,
In the conquest which is service,
In the victory which is peace.

God has lent us the earth for our life.
It is a great entail. It belongs to them who are to come after us, and whose names are already written in the book of creation, as to us; and we have no right, by anything that we do or neglect, to involve them in unnecessary penalties, or to deprive them of benefits which it was in our power to bequeath.—Ruskin.

Let me but touch Thy garment's hem
(Thou wilt forgive and not condemn);
Lay but thine hand upon my eyes,
And I shall see light from Paradise.

AS THE YEAR NEARS ITS END

HOW MUCH OF GOD'S MONEY IS STILL IN YOUR HANDS?

ARE YOU A PROPORTIONATE GIVER?

A proportionate giver is one who gives each year a definite percentage of his gross income to God for Church and charity. It may be a tithe. It may be a smaller percentage. It may be the 15 per cent inferentially suggested by the income tax law. It may be more than this. Whatever the percentage, he fixes it in advance.

BALANCING THE LORD'S ACCOUNT

As the year nears its end, he figures out how much he has still to expend as the Lord's steward. He selects the objects to which to devote this balance.

WHAT ARE YOU PLANNING TO DO?

As a member of the national Church, have you thought of giving a generous share to the general work of the Church?

It used to be a law in some of the old monasteries that the chanting of praise should never cease. When one brother ceased another took up his chant and so praise continued night and day. So should our lives be ceaseless praise.

PRIVATE WARS

We have never seen the question raised, whether in the War on War the little private wars are to be exempt from attack.

Dr. Braxton Bryan, who knew the legends of every courthouse green in Virginia, used to tell the story of a kindly but bibulous countryman, who, when he was in his cups, used to challenge the prowess of every passerby. This happened with such regularity on court day that the county officers wearied of arresting him, and he was allowed to conduct his little private wars without rebuke. One day he visited the courthouse green in an adjoining county, and, growing turbulent, was promptly arrested, and sentenced to thirty days in jail. When he returned home after his release, he remarked to a friend: "It's fine to be back in old Fluvanna again where a man can fight in peace."

There are at present two little wars going on in the Church, one in the Philippines and the other in the city of New York.

The Philippine situation is simply the outcome of the interesting and forceful personality of Father Staunton, who, working among the Igorots who are almost the last of the primitive peoples, has created for them not only a Church, but a civilization and a language. With the immense driving power of his unique personality he has overcome almost impossible conditions. The work has been almost entirely his own. If canons, precedents, episcopal authority got in his way, so much the worse for them; Staunton kept right on. The inevitable crisis has arrived. The voice of authority has challenged his right to be a law unto himself. The questions involved will probably come before the General Convention for settlement. There seems to us no need for the whole Church to get excited. Everybody has known the facts for many years. After all, it is a little private war.

The other flurry of feeling is in the City of New York. To us at a distance there is a touch of the absurd; we had almost said opera bouffe in the incident. The story as told in the New York Times suggests a Latin-American atmosphere—an ecclesiastical coup d'état that failed. Some one in authority connected with the Clerical Union for the Maintenance and Defense of Catholic Principles, a society to which about one-fourth of the clergy in New York City belong, sent a message to the New York papers requesting them to omit the word Protestant from the title of the Church in the published notices.

The Protestant Episcopal Church was dethroned overnight and a new sovereign known as the Episcopal Church enthroned.

The temperamental gentlemen who engineered this movement are still explaining. The battle rages. Why get excited? Everybody has known all the time how these gentlemen felt about the name of the Church. The affair is a little private war, good copy but rather a pathetic sort of business when the world's need of the Church's message is so urgent.

It may interest some of our readers to know that in Richmond, Virginia, which is not far from Fluvanna, the notices in the authorized announcements in the daily press have for many years been in the name of the Episcopal Church.

LAYMEN

Newman in his essay on the Anglo-American Church has much to say about the fact that in the Diocesan and General Convention there is lay representation. He calls to mind the fact that such lay representation is distinctly an American institution and that its author was Bishop White. To Newman who declares that such representation is a violent breach of Catholic tradition, the notion of the laity having a word to say about the doctrine and discipline of the Church, was a monstrous conception.

He also has much to say about the enormity of misconception implied in the name of the Protestant Episcopal Church. Having eased his mind on these matters, he proceeds to tell us what is the Church. We know not whether it be a constitutional infirmity, but we confess to an utter inability to find in history any justification for such a definition as he gives. To our mind the Church, which is the oldest living organism in the western world, is subject, like every other organism, to the laws of life; and life means change and development. The law of that development is that there is in every imperfect form of life a sense of need; and there is effort to satisfy that need in the presence of conditions that challenge its right to exist. Such efforts, after spasmodic and short-lived struggles in many directions, finally result in organic change, and the organism is provided with distinct organs adapted to its environment.

In the beginning the Church was the people. It mattered not whether there was an apostle on the same continent. "The Church that is in thy house," of which St. Paul speaks, was typical of the Church everywhere. That Church was proscribed, boycotted and ostracised, but charged with a living energy such as no organism before had ever possessed. The organism, it must be remembered, was the body of Christian disciples. Conscious of need and challenged by environment, it developed crude and short-lived organs of expression, the varying lists of which are seen in the Epistles. The great needs, however, were, if it were to continue to exist, for organs wherewith to meet the pressing necessities of discipline, doctrine and dole. The organism in that stage of its existence developed three new organs for its own use. As the first well-defined new organs they have immense historic value and interest. The three-fold ministry, developed as organs by the body of believers continued to function in a proscribed Church, but the deacon, though retaining his name, soon ceased to be the right hand of pity and became something entirely different, the temporary assistant of the presbyter to whom he had borne no relation in the early days.

To change the simile; the form of a crystal is determined by its constituent elements. When by intense heat the crystal is dissolved, new elements can be added or some of the constituent elements withdrawn. When the mass cools a crystal is again formed, but the axes which determine the form are determined absolutely by the elements in the new mass. If the Church was suddenly dissolved and was confronted by the necessity of establishing discipline and doctrine, and distributing dole, it would inevitably crystallize into the form of the primitive Church.

The churches of two-fold ministry represent a crystallization in which one of these is lacking. The fact that has to be faced today is, that the Church seems to have forgotten that the clergy are only organs which the body itself has developed in the answer to the challenge of environment. Those organs, so far from constituting the body, are only instruments of the body. When the laity awake to the realization that they are the Church, the living organism; and the need of this organism becomes articulate, they will find in the entirely new environment of the modern world a challenge to the latent creative power of a living organism. We do not hesitate to state our belief that a three-fold ministry as at present conceived, is utterly inadequate to meet either the needs of the Church or the challenge of life today. Nor do we hesitate to say that a sanctity as high and a usefulness as great await the new organs some day to be developed as that which has ever attached to what we love to call the sacred ministry of the Church.

FROM BISHOP MOSHER TO DR. STAUNTON

Manila, October 13, 1924.

Rev. John A. Staunton, Jr., D. D.,

Sagada,

Mountain Province, P. I.

My dear Fr. Staunton:

ON MY return from Iloilo Thursday my mail contained four letters, one each from the priests of the Sagada Station. As they were written within two days of each other and all deal with the same subject in the same way it is obvious that they represent concerted action and a well-organized plan. I shall reply to them, therefore, in a single letter addressed to you and sent to all.

In my letter to you of September 9, I made apology for my delay in replying to yours of July 9, and gave my reasons. Yours of September 18, states that this was your first intimation of my having received your previous letter; you forgot, perhaps, telegrams relative to your coming to Manila that were based on that letter. If my letter failed to satisfy you, I have nothing further to add in the way of explanation, other than the statement that I have long realized it would be necessary for me to come to some understanding with you regarding the station in Sagada, and that I have been postponing the taking of the initiative in the hope that I might see a way to do it without making such a break in the Mission as you are now proposing. Your letter showed me that postponement would no longer be possible but it came at a time when the situation at St. Luke's Hospital entirely prevented my giving that at Sagada the attention and thought it demanded. I think I have fully as much right to delay as you have to precipitate action.

I am still asking you to come to Manila; and your telegrams, received since my return from Iloilo, refer to your letter of September 18, as perhaps showing that for you to do so can be neither necessary nor useful. But, whether you accede to my request or refuse it, it is best that I should write you in reply to the letters you have sent, and have had the remaining Sagada priests send me.

The situation is the same that confronted me on my first arrival in the Islands, in March, 1920, except that now I have behind me four years and more of an effort to satisfy the Sagada demands. In my reply to your letter of January 26, 1920, I accepted your resignation, whereupon you telegraphed me that I had misunderstood your letter. I knew I had not misunderstood but I was entirely willing to make every allowance. In my letter to you I said:

"You ask not merely that I shall give general acquiescence but hearty and sympathetic leadership, because the future of 'this Mission' depends upon this. That is to ask no more than it is my full purpose to accord to every missionary in the District. But I feel sure you will recognize, if you think for a moment, that it can be given by the Bishop only to those who accept his leadership, and who are willing to follow him wherever he may lead. Forgive me if I misread your letter, but it seems to me that you reverse the position entirely: You seem to expect from me a support of you in your Mission Station that you would not give to me in the District. No Bishop, I think, could possibly accept such a condition and feel that he was true to his consecration vows."

In your reply letter, following your telegram dated March 27, 1920, you said:

"Of course we realize that the lines upon which the work at Sagada and Bontoc have developed cannot possibly, under the existing conditions of the Anglican Church, be considered the only or the normal lines for all other missionary stations in the Missionary District. The policy and the direction of the whole District must necessarily be in your hands as the Bishop, and we note with pleasure your desire that the work at Sagada should be carried on on the same lines as have existed since its foundation, and we heartily assure you of our readiness to support you in every way we can in your work in other parts of the District."

You now withdraw from this agreement and have led the other priests in the station to follow you. And, what is more, it is proposed now to abandon and, in effect, to turn over our work (not only in Sagada but in the entire Mountain Province) to the Romanists. This seems to substantiate the statements made to me in 1920, which, at the time, I was entirely unwilling to believe, that you had a similar intention then. I happen to know that such a proposal is not acceptable in all three of our Mountain Province stations nor to all of the missionaries there; neither does it meet with approval in the Mission outside of the Mountain Province, while in the Church at home it would cause the greatest consternation.

Sagada is constantly referred to as "Catholic," but I call to your attention that the word is not used in the sense that we find it in the Church at home. All teaching given and all ritual used in Sagada are Roman; and this is so marked that the staff will help me today if I agree to let the Romanists succeed to our work, while I have no reason to hope for your assistance if I try to keep it Catholic—but Anglican. And this, in spite of the fact that you all have solemnly promised to conform to the Doctrine, Discipline, and Worship of the Protestant Episcopal Church. On my first visit to Sagada, in 1920, I expressed my regret that in making the necessary adaptations so that the Igorots could have a Christianity possible for their comprehension you had not gone back to primitive Catholicity but had invariably turned to the Roman; the opportunity for a splendid contribution to really Catholic practice and teaching was being lost. The local result is that now Sagada is in an impossible situation and the four letters I have received would place the blame on:

1. The Church, for failure to give adequate support.

Let me remind you that Sagada receives over one-fourth of the appropriation made to the entire Diocese, and, I venture to say, the largest appropriation made to a single mission station of the Church anywhere in the world. Also, that (to quote your letter of July 9) "The material fabric of the Sagada Mission was built up, not by appropriations from the Church Missions House, but mainly by Specials sent directly to me or to Bishop Brent. Changed methods of finance in New York have almost dried up Specials"; and herein lies the source of most of your financial troubles. I have worked for twenty-eight years in the Church's missions, and always under the ruling that the Board of Missions was underwriting me to an amount without which I could not have gone on at all, and with the understanding that I should make no special appeals that had not been sanctioned by both the Bishop and the Board. You, on the contrary, have resented this ruling as an encroachment upon your personal rights, and have gone ahead with little thought for the future, receiving and expending large sums for plant with no guarantee of future maintenance. It was inevitable that the time should come when continuance would be impossible.

Moreover, it must be remembered that all through the Islands of the South Seas one finds missionaries doing thorough work with meagre support, and they have been doing it for eighty years. All through the Philippines we find American missionaries, and in the Mountain Province Belgian, who are doing effective and permanent work without anything like such great expenditure. In letters to you, and in a conversation with you last January, I called to your attention the entire precariousness of the Sagada station in that you have a plant far in excess of anything the Mission can hope to maintain and a variety of activities that no one now in Sagada would be either able or willing to continue; and the practical impossibility of finding any one who could and would. I urged you, in effect, to develop on more conservative lines in the future and to conserve some of your money as capital in hand for future maintenance. This is the only possible way of saving Sagada financially—and of finding funds for necessary work such as, e. g., the barrio schools in your out-stations.

2. The Mission also is blamed for not conforming to Sagada customs. I ask you to read again the quotation given above from the letter of March 27, 1920, written by Fr. Frost and yourself. No station in the Mission outside of Sagada has exceeded the limits permitted by the Church, and if the complaints made to me against Sagada are evidence I can only say that Sagada has been detrimental to the work elsewhere quite as much as other stations have hurt Sagada.

3. Finally, the Bishop is blamed for the situation. I shall not go into details but mention two things only, of a general nature.

1. The Church has given the bishops certain discretionary powers in order that there may be flexibility without disorder. It seems rather curious that priests, to whom no such authority has been given, but who have assumed it almost without limit, should feel that they are in a position to criticize their Bishop for exercising his delegated authority to a very limited extent.

2. Rigidity in interpretation of the Church's law in one station would have necessitated rigidity in all. In that case I should have had to call on Sagada:

(a) To use the Prayer Book service of Holy Communion and not that put out by the Society of SS. Peter and Paul;

(b) To cease entirely the practice of administering the Holy Communion in one Kind only;

(c) To make confession optional and not obligatory on communicants;

(d) Not to admit children to Holy Communion before confirmation;

(e) To present for Confirmation only those who are duly prepared in the Church Catechism.

These examples will suffice, without going further, to show what rigidity would have meant for Sagada.

Finally, To the proposition to desert our work in the Mountain Province, or to turn it over to the Roman Church, I can only say a positive No. I have no desire to make Protestants out of the Igorots, but there is a Catholicity in which I believe with all my soul, which is to be arrived at through Anglican and not Roman channels. And I shall also expect in Sagada a complete change as regards material development, so that the Christian training of the Igorots can be much more effectively carried on and throughout a wider area.

Two things are made abundantly clear. An effort to plant a little piece of pure Romanism as a station of the Protestant-Episcopal Church has been proven impossible. I can only wish that I had seen before as clearly as I do now how inevitable it was that this should be the result. And an entire staff of missionaries committed to your leadership has been led into discouragement to the point of being ready to withdraw their acceptance of God's call to work in a Mission of His Church. There are priests and other workers in Sagada who could have been led into doing magnificent work and to overcoming any and all discouragement.

It remains only to be seen, now, whether you love your Church more than your Churchmanship and will help rather than hinder Sagada's continuance as a Catholic station of the Church in which you are a priest.

Faithfully yours,

GOUVERNEUR FRANK MOSHER,

Bishop of the Philippine Islands.

BISHOP MURRAY'S ANNIVERSARY

By the Reverend Arthur B. Kinsolving, D. D., Rector of St. Paul's Parish

Address on Behalf of the Clergy at Bishop Murray's Fifteenth Anniversary.

THE committee in charge of the arrangements for the Fifteenth Anniversary of the consecration of our Bishop have kindly designated me to say a few words on behalf of the clergy of the Diocese of Maryland.

To some people it seems that the office of a bishop in the modern world is an anomaly. Several of the largest groups of Christian people in this country have no bishops. The Church in the American Colonies was deprived of the presence of a bishop for a hundred years. In a land where every man is king, and the spirit of democracy runs strong, it is not easy to serve and commend an office which would seem to have been in more perfect harmony with remoter centuries and earlier habits of thought. Yet it is true on the other hand that at no time has leadership counted for more in Church and State, in business and religion than now. History is still largely determined by the character and qualities of its leaders.

We in the old mother Church of the English-speaking peoples of the world have inherited our bishops. They come down to us, as we believe, by divine appointment, and first we honor them for the sacred office which they bear among us. We expect them to be to us fathers in God, pastors of pastors, and centers of unity and loyalty. This Diocese has been served by a succession of marked men. We look back to Bishop Claggett, the first American Bishop who united in himself both the Scotch and English successions, a man of wisdom, sound judgment and definite churchmanship; to Bishop James Kemp, a Scotchman of real simplicity, able and inflexible in his adherence to right in a turbulent and difficult period; to the quiet and godly Bishop Stone, the Scholarly Whittingham, whose intellectual force, strong convictions, and mastery as a writer and debater, made his influence felt throughout the nation, to the lovable and approachable Bishop Pinckney; the learned, able and indefatigable Bishop Paret.

During the past fifteen years the Diocese has been under a man who brought to us his own individual gift, and who has rendered a service which may with confidence be placed by the side of that of any of his predecessors.

In the first place, from the beginning our Bishop has shown himself a friendly bishop. The proverb says, "If a man would have friends, he must show himself friendly." There has been no aloofness about our Bishop. He has known and loved all his clergy, High Low and Broad, and they feel it, and he has known by name an amazing number of the laity. He has loved to mingle freely with them, and take counsel for the welfare of the Church.

Next, we have had as our leader a man of unusual energy and industry. He has never spared himself, but indulged freely his passion for work and service. Each year he has visited every parish and mission in the diocese, not as a perfunctory routine, but with a loving, personal, human touch. He has not neglected the rural parishes where the smaller groups gather that constitute so important a source of the Church's strength. Nowhere is he stronger in the love of the people than in these rural parishes, and I can confidently speak of their love and gratitude.

Our Bishop has followed with keen personal interest the fortunes of the several organizations which make up so largely the life and activity of the Church. This is true from the great Cathedral enterprise which he inherited and to which he has given unwavering leadership, to the smallest organization laboring for the welfare of the children. His relation to them is not nominal or perfunctory, but personal and vital. Every group of workers in the Diocese is sure of kindly interest and good counsel from their Bishop. By his Christian optimism and the unaging spirit of hope, which is the heritage only of convinced and devoted servants of God, he has put courage and new life into all who are trying to bring in the Kingdom of God.

The Diocese of Maryland is proud and thankful for the place its present Bishop has attained in the councils of the National Church. Not only is he an influential member of the General Convention, but he was promptly selected from the large body which composes the House of Bishops to serve on the National Council of the Church, which has in charge the larger administration of her great mission to the nation and the world. Few know, perhaps, how greatly the duties of this position have added to his labors. No man can render efficient service in this capacity save one whose heart has been fired by the great missionary call of today, and an unconquerable conviction of what the Church with her resources ought to accomplish. This service to the General Church and to the great cause of world-wide missions has not impaired our Bishop's ability to meet his duties in his own diocese, but it has formed a link of connection between Maryland and the National Church, which lays a heavier obligation upon each one of us.

Swift-footed is the life of man as he runs his course through this world, and relatively of little worth are our appraisals one of another. It is only the verdict of our God that really counts, and yet the sympathy and esteem of our fellows is one of the grateful rewards of life. We, your clergy, who know something of your burdens, your visions and your joys, bear you on this significant anniversary the tribute of our loyalty and love. We recognize your sense of stewardship and your unsparing devotion to the Church of God, and we hope that in His gracious providence you may be spared for many added years to serve your great office in the fine old Diocese of Maryland.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letter to the Editor" will appear in our columns except over the signature of the writer.

"FRACTIONAL LOYALTY."

Mr. Editor:

I write to thank you for your editorial of November 8, entitled "Fractional Loyalty." No finer or wiser sentiments have appeared in the SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN in many months.

It is quite true, as you assert, that the raising of money for religious and charitable purposes has been made so remorselessly systematic and business-like that almost the last drop of religion and earnest enthusiasm are in danger of being crushed out. As the sum-total of the gifts has increased, the spirituality and cheerfulness that should accompany the giving have diminished. Churches and charities seem to have forgotten that the "Lord loveth a cheerful giver" more than a large donation extracted under a species of moral pressure and compulsion. "But how else are we to raise the money?" is the answer invariably given to any one who is bold enough to criticize the methods so generally adopted nowadays, such as "drives," "campaigns" and "house-to-house canvasses."

On this Advent Sunday, I wish we might all ponder over the thought contained in that splendid Fiftieth Psalm, which the Church appoints to be read today at Morning Prayer. In a magnificent and inspiring passage, the Psalmist shows the Almighty as indignantly reminding the people of Israel that God cares far more for their whole-hearted devotion to Him than for all the gifts they could possibly make at his altars. He tells them that all the beasts of the forest are his, and so are the cattle upon a thousand hills. And then follow these words of fine scorn and derision, "If I be hungry, I will not tell thee, for the whole world is mine, and all that is therein." God could easily manage without the puny gifts that Israel was offering, but He did ask for their hearts. In short, the lesson is the same that Our Lord taught centuries afterward, when He stood in the treasury and saw the rich men casting in their gifts, and saw also the poor widow throw in her mite. In God's eyes, she, who gave willingly and with a humble heart, was giving more than many who tossed in a thousand times greater sum in gold or silver.

Today the Church is in imminent peril of losing sight of this great spiritual truth. Will not God smite her and rebuke her for her covetousness and blindness? Has He not done so already? Just as He crippled the Egyptian army as it struggled through the Red Sea, is He not crippling some of the Church's most ambitious monetary plans? He has taken off her chariot wheels so that she drives them heavily.

CUTTING OUT THE WASTE.

Mr. Editor:

The Episcopal Church has gone in for Pension Fund Insurance, and Life Insurance for the clergy and laity. It may also be said to have a Building and Loan Association, though poorly backed. I think it ought to go a step further and create an agency for handling fire insurance on church buildings, and even fire and liability insurance on parish automobiles.

I understand that the Roman Catholic Church and the Methodist Church have created such an agency, in order that such net savings as may accrue in the administration of this important service may be applied for forwarding the general work of those churches.

I have no access to records that are comprehensive, neither have I the necessary data nor experience from which to draw conclusions, but I think you could contribute a vital and important service to the Church by gathering some rather complete information.

I note that in the State of New York some insurance is carried as follows:

Diocese of Albany	$ 4,233,168
Diocese of Central New York.....	437,005
Diocese of Western New York.....	2,624,025
Diocese of Long Island	4,739,025
	$12,033,223

I cannot glean from the Journal what amount of insurance the Diocese of New York carries, but I imagine it must equal the above total, making approximately $25,000,000 insurance carried by the Church in New York State.

I wonder if it is conservative to estimate that the Church in New York State carries about one-twentieth of the insurance carried by the National Church? If so, that would mean a total insurance writing of five hundred million dollars. If that represents only a one per cent expenditure to the Church every three years, but an expenditure on which perhaps ten per cent saving might result to the Church through its own insurance agency, then it might mean that several thousands of dollars would be available every triennium to relieve the Church at large and help in some places where the need was greatest, i. e., make an impression in the priority list!

Personally I think it is a rather deplorable waste of the offerings of the people of our Church when we charge off so much to "fire insurance." Some memorials, such as organs, require full insurance at high rate; some donors require full replacement insurance on memorials. If the risks which the Church offers in the majority of its church buildings (as well as in the lives of the clergy) are among the best risks of insurance in the country, there must be some margin of profit in the business which the Church has to offer.

I may be wide of the mark in my conjectures as to figures, but is there not a real principle at stake here, i. e., a little better stewardship and husbandry of resources?—at least, a real saving work for the Church to attempt? I would like to see you make some editorial comment upon this subject.

INFORMATION WANTED.

Mr. Editor:

Information is being sought by the Executive Secretary of Epiphany Parish, Washington, D. C., pertaining to the history of the Church from its beginning in 1841, to present date. What is especially needed, is a picture of old

Epiphany as it appeared when first completed in 1844, under the direction of the Rev. Dr. John W. French, first rector. Data is being collected with a view to compiling a complete, illustrated, history of the parish. We will appreciate any assistance any one who perhaps has had family connections at Epiphany, can render. Please address Mr. Thomas G. Spence, Epiphany Church, Washington, D. C.

THE CHURCH AND YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK

By the Reverend Karl Morgan Block, D. D.

THE MEETING OF THE SYNOD OF WASHINGTON.

ONE of the hopeful signs of a new consciousness of responsibility for our young people was an address made by Mr. Kercheval E. Smith of the Diocese of Maryland at the Synodical meeting of the Third Province, held recently in Charleston, West Virginia. As President of the Young People's Fellowship of Maryland and Vice-President of the new Provincial Organization, he addressed himself to the subject, "What the Young People Expect of the Church," with singular acumen and winsomeness. Needless to say, the talk was listened to with great interest, and the various reactions of the clergy present, expressed privately and publicly, showed only too clearly the Church's slow recognition of our young people's problem, and the need of a closer association and more intimate understanding between our pastors and their young people.

It is regrettable that the subject was one-sided and necessarily limited to the attitude of the young people toward the Church. Perhaps it would have been better had it been more inclusive, i. e., "What the Young People Expect of the Church and What the Church Has the Right to Expect of the Young People." I think it may be fairly said that the clergy who were present showed by their comments the intimacy of their contacts with the young people, or their lack of it. The speaker addressed himself most largely to the group who have been unhappily termed "flappers" and "cow-boys," and in the course of his address, read twenty or more replies given by the young people of one of the Maryland Societies, to the subject assigned him. These replies were gathered at an ordinary meeting, in a casual fashion, so that these young people wrote frankly, and in "not for publication" style. Therein lies their value. You can imagine the interest which attended this address when the speaker introduced his subject by the statement that he had put this question, "What the Young People Expect of the Church" to several members of other communions. One, a Lutheran, answered, "I don't expect anything." Another, a Roman Catholic, replied, "Nothing but the Collection Plate," and other reactions were similarly discouraging. He reminded his hearers that the Young People's Problem is not confined to our own Church, nor to the nation. And he quoted from a press report of a meeting of English College students, in which the Church was rather sharply taken to task, sometimes unfairly, perhaps, but none the less sincerely, for its failure in the minds of these young students, to meet present-day problems in a way expressive of hope for the redemption of the present age. To summarize somewhat briefly, he declared that the Young People's Movement in our Church has practically no past; it is strictly a Twentieth Century movement, or perhaps both an advantage and a disadvantage. The disadvantage lies in the fact that the older clergy and laity do not know much about it, and grew up without experience in it. It holds an advantage, however, because it affords the movement opportunity to develop along modern lines, to fit existing conditions. It is not embarrassed by traditions.

Young People realize that they are a problem to the grown-ups. This is impressed upon them in modern novels, newspapers, moving pictures, plays, etc. The older generation was reared with such maxims as "Spare the rod and spoli the child." "Children should be seen but not heard." But the new grew in a different atmosphere, where such aphorisms as the following, were held: "Do not break the child's spirit." "Do not kill his initiative." "Give him ample opportunity for self-expression." It is only natural, therefore, that different methods and a different environment should produce different results. There is nothing essentially wrong with our modern young people. Their horizon is broader because of available information through travel, newspapers, moving pictures, extension lectures, and the like. They have been much more indulged than their parents, and have had too much spending money for their good. But they are not entirely scatter-brained as regards the Church and religion in general. They may have misunderstood independence and liberty, but they have very definite convictions and are not loath to express them. In regard to this new movement, they oppose a rigid type of organization. They seem to desire greater freedom for themselves than is indicated in our formal type of service. They like variety in the schedule of topics for discussion, and they deplore any undue stress laid upon the financial side of the Society's activity.

Young people need the Church's help along three lines preeminently. First, financially: They are far from independent. Most of them are still in college or making a start in business, so that their financial freedom is rather definitely limited. The Societies need financial assistance to enable them to engage outside speakers for their mass meetings and conferences, for inspiration and leadership. They should like, moreover, to be able to send their leaders and delegates to summer conferences and camps, etc. Second, in the field of service, they desire the Church to open types of work that are at once definite and worthwhile. They are prepared to offer themselves to the Church, individually and collectively, for duties for which they have prepared themselves. The spiritual need is their greatest. They have facilities for developing physically, and ample opportunity for mental stimulation. If the Church fails to assist them in their spiritual development, they miss the most vital force in life, and the one which alone safeguards their usefulness.

The aims of the Young People's Movement are few and simple. It seeks to bridge the gap between the Church School work, and the adult activities of the Church. It seeks to empty by filling, affording such activities as will safeguard the adolescent period, and by training the young people as future workers in the Church and boosters for the Church. The aim of this movement, with God's help, is to bring the young people closer to Jesus Christ. "They also serve who only stand and wait" offers no attraction to them. Life is constantly transplanting the young people from home environment with its restraints, and nothing but the functioning Gospel of Christ can prepare them for their new relationships. The plea of the young people is that the Church lay seriously to its heart the great Master's command, "Feed my lambs."

This summary follows very closely the address given. And whatever else may be said, it shows the thoughtful and earnest reactions of one of our young leaders, who has endeavored to understand the psychology of his own age and the relation of the adolescent to the Church and Christianity. I am reserving for next week an outline of the replies of this unnamed Society, and a consideration of what this attitude of mind portends for the Church. Nothing could be more grimly tragic than for the Church to dismiss this movement from its mind as offering no vital promise or to resent what seems to be arrogance without looking sufficiently into the matter to find out if the attitude is representative of the great majority of our young people, and if what offends the ultra conservative is not a fermentation of a new leaven accomplishing a "consummation devoutly to be wished."

Service Objectives.

As we approach the new year, plans must be made for the work in the Five Fields. The custom has become very general to choose yearly objectives, not as exclusive labors in the field, but as a minimum program, to which may be added from time to time such lesser objectives as the funds of the Society permit. The Young People's Fellowship of Newark has suggestive material along this line in its "Service Objectives for 1924-1925," from which the following is quoted:

1. The Parish—
To be chosen by each chapter with the advice of the rector.

2. The Community.
3. The Diocese—A Ford Touring Car. The Bishops have asked for this car for one of the missionaries in the Diocese. By the use of a car services can be held in two or three missions by the same man.

4. The Nation—St. Andrew's Church, Mayaguez, Porto Rico. This congregation is erecting a new church building. It is already started. As money comes in more work is done, most of it by the missionary in charge. Let us help finish it! See the "Story of the Program," page 92.

5. The World—The Cathedral School for Boys, Anking, China. These boys need new school buildings. Five thousand dollars have been raised in China. Bishop Huntington has asked for enough money to start the work. Let us help start it. See "The Story of the Program," page 42.

Every chapter should have a part in attaining these objectives. First, learn about them. Assign a meeting to the study of each one. Information may be obtained from the Diocesan Council. Next, decide how your money will be raised. Then raise it. Do not try to raise the money for all objectives at one time. Spread them through the year. Use the block system. Pay the money for the first two objectives to the proper persons. Send all contributions for the last three to the Fellowship Treasurer. He will forward all money to the Diocesan Treasurer.

These assigned objectives are "money-raisers" not because money is considered most important, but because it is more convenient and accurate to keep a record of this form of service. Make sure that your program includes other kinds of personal service. Suggestions will be found on the pages devoted to service.

Christianity and the Community

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

The Rev. R. Cary Montague, Editor.

CLOSING IN ON WAR.

Arthur Brisbane in his daily column says:

"In the big war, noise overhead sent city dwellers to their cellars.

"In the next war, flyers will come in the night, released from the holes or decks of great ships off our coasts. There will be no news from these silent marauders, until the bombs begin bursting in the city streets.

"Our government really ought to take the flying machine, for attack and defense, a little seriously."

Wouldn't it be better for our government and the governments of the world to begin to take the Golden Rule seriously?

It is an odd coincidence that the War on War is moving forward from opposite directions. Christians are beginning to realize that Christianity demands "peace on earth and good will toward men," and that that really means PEACE.

On the other hand war machinery is rapidly being perfected to a degree that will soon make war well-nigh impossible by reason of its devastation.

A CHRISTIAN OBLIGATION.

The following is an extract from the account of the meeting of the City Council in a certain small town.

"Wants" Conditions At Jail Remedied.

"Mr. Page read a request from Mrs. Robert T. Barton, chairman of the City and County Welfare Board, urging council to remedy conditions at the county jail, where women inmates are frequently confined in the same room with insufficient sanitary facilities, both white and colored women often occupying one room. The Welfare Board's request suggested that necessary plumbing be installed in other rooms at the jail, so that adequate facilities may be provided for women prisoners.

"Upon motion of Mr. Bactjer, council agreed to cooperate with the Board of Supervisors of Frederick County to have the necessary improvements made at the jail, the city to pay its share of the costs."

In cold print it looks like a very small thing, but if the reader had been one of those prisoners this item would have meant a great deal. Those women prisoners, too, are not unlike the Samaritan at the well near Sychar to whom Our Saviour offered the living water (John, Chap. 4).

Our purpose in calling attention to this incident is to emphasize the importance of welfare committees.

Provision is now made in many states for the organization of these welfare committees. The service on them usually has to be voluntary, however, and without pay. Many people are apt to think that it is not worth while, that it only gives one a lot of extra trouble, and often an additional amount of abuse without any return.

This is an entirely wrong attitude to assume toward a great opportunity for public service. The fact that no pay is provided for these committees does not in any way minimize, and service on them is not only a duty of citizenship, but a Christian obligation which should not be shirked.

SEASONAL MINISTRATIONS.

We quote the following news item from Middleburg, Va., as showing one method in which the sinners and saints can help each other, at least on Thanksgiving Day:

"Thanksgiving Day at Middleburg.

"In accordance with a custom which was established three years ago the Thanksgiving Day service was in the nature of a Harvest Home Festival. The Chancel was decorated with fruits and vegetables in profusion, which had been solicited not only for beautifying the House of God, but as a contribution to the dinner for the convict camp prisoners. Thanksgiving service was held at 8:30 A. M., at which more than fifty persons were present. An offering for the Home for Homeless Boys at Covington was taken, and this amounted to $56.50.

"At the conclusion of the service the rector and his wife took a truck-load of provisions to the camp, and, in addition to the donations used to decorate the church, we had thirty-five pounds of candy, and plenty of tobacco for the men and the guards. A service was then held at the camp. In the evening a service was held at the Aldie Methodist Church, the rector officiating."

We use this account of Thanksgiving ministration to remind our readers that Christmas is drawing near and that no people need so much to be remembered at this joyous season as those within institutions whose friends are few and often poor, and at a distance.

Such persons are apt to feel that Christmas is just a secular holiday for revelry, and if Church people will remember them, and try to minister to them for His sake who died the death of a criminal on the Cross, it makes the Saviour seem much more real to them.

In this connection we take the opportunity to offer the service of the Social Service Department of Virginia as a purchasing medium. The writer of this page does extensive Christmas shopping every year at wholesale prices and if Church people wish to do some worthwhile Christmas work by furnishing a little present for the inmates of some nearby institution, and will write us giving a list of persons, men and women, for whom presents are desired and enclose whatever amount of money is in hand for this purpose we will take pleasure in making it go as far as possible.

The following report of a somewhat unique service and the fruits of an evangelistic campaign show that efforts among such persons are well worth the making:

"Scenes at the jail at Phillippi reenacted at Camp 48, near Middleburg: During the past ten days a revival service, conducted by all the ministers in Middleburg, has been held at the State Convict Camp, and the interest manifested has been most remarkable. The Methodist Baptist and Episcopal ministers have taken turns in conducting the services and preaching, and out of a total of fifty-five prisoners, twenty-five have made a profession of conversion, or have expressed a desire to return to their Christian duties. The movement had its inception in the conversion and baptism in the Methodist Church of Captain Higginbotham, who, with his wife, has been a valuable help in the work carried on in the camp. He is being transferred to a camp in Rappahannock County, and, on Sunday night, we had a farewell service. After brief devotional services by the rector, who was asked to act as master of ceremonies, a well arranged program was given by the men themselves. Duet, prayer, short address by Mr. Goldsmith, "Captain Higginbotham, the Citizen," duet, address by Miss Goldsmith, "Mrs. Higginbotham, Prisoners' Friend" (Mr. and Miss Goldsmith had worked in the Camp when it was located in Fairfax County, and were here for the occasion). Bible reading by Goode. Presentation of silver to the Captain by Elias Clarke on behalf of the colored prisoners, with address. Presentation of silver to Mrs. Higginbotham by Gardiner, on behalf of the white prisoners, with address. About thirty of the townspeople were present at this service, and the expression of genuine sorrow at the Captain's departure was as touching as if he were a faithful pastor leaving his flock. We cannot but feel that this is the direct result of the Christian work that has been maintained without interruption in this Camp for the past five years.

"There are several prisoners who desire to be confirmed, besides those who will be received into the Methodist and Baptist Churches. The Camp has been rated as being in the A-1 Class for some time, and there certainly is no work in which such appreciation and gratitude is shown."

BOOK REVIEWS

THE MODERN USE OF THE BIBLE. By Harry Emerson Fosdick. The Macmillan Company. New York.

The book is a brilliant presentation of the present mood of Biblical criticism with which, however, we find it difficult to sympathize. Somehow we feel all along that the writer is making out a case for the Bible. We grant the progressive nature of the revelation, the use of parable and metaphor which in various redactions of the Old Testament were, through the lack of literary skill on the part of the redactors, incorporated as records of actual occurrence, but somehow the brilliant writer has failed to make plain the stupendous power of these narratives in human history. The work here has been better done in Mozley's Ruling Ideas of the Early Ages, and in the book that gave the Bible back to educated Englishmen a generation ago, Myers' Catholic Thoughts on the Bible. Neither of these books was apologetic. They were scholarly, sane and reverent, and met the real difficulties squarely. After studying them it was necessary to recast many of the received opinions; but you were glad to have them go, for you realized better than before the worth of the whole body of the material. The present approach to the study of the Bible is destructive in that it invites any and all to remove from the narrative anything that offends the particular individual's canon of credibility. Dr. Fosdick is a charming writer, and a great Christian preacher, but we wonder if he or any of the iridescent school of critics could have found the source of inspiration in what is called the Modern Bible. Somehow we feel that the Bible in which the patriarchs and Moses and the rest were historic personages and said and did what they are recorded to have said and done, and in which Luke the Physician knew what he was writing about, and in which the Lord of Life was Lord of Nature too, must be a subconscious possession upon which the modern interpreters of God's will for man draw when they are able to stir men's hearts and inspire to loyalty.

Our own attitude is that of St. Peter in his second Epistle, or, as seems probable the unknown Christian writer whose name may or may not have been Peter at all, who wrote: "Our beloved brother Paul has written in his epistles some things hard to be understood." We are content to let it stand at that. Luke and Matthew as well as Paul have written some things hard to be understood, but we do not think the way to knowledge is by the mere assertion that these writers themselves did not understand what they were writing about.

SOME OPEN WAYS TO GOD. By Walter Russell Bowie, D. D. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. Pp. 235.

It is no exaggeration to call this volume a masterpiece from a master's hand. Dr. Bowie is truly a word artist, and the subject of this book gives him room for the most beautiful verbal decorations without obscuring in the least the central figure of his picture. The author is not one of those religious writers who thinks that we can overcome difficulties in the field of religion by going around them. He holds in high esteem the maxim "overcome evil with good," and faces frankly and fearlessly the present day chaotic condition of thought about "God," "Christ," "The Indwelling Spirit," and "Why belong to the Christian Church," and reaches so satisfactorily and definitely such conclusions that the book is certain to make good its title and to offer "Some Open Ways to God" to all thoughtful readers.

Dr. Bowie starts out with the theory that belief of some sort is essential to all conduct and illustrates it in the simile of the fact that it is more important to a landlady to have a lodger who has very little money but a conviction that honesty is an important part of his life and dealings, than to have one who has a great deal of money, but no belief in just conduct, because she is far more likely to get her due from the former than from the latter. From this foundation he builds up chapter by chapter, in a readable and attractive style, the importance and possibility of hearty belief in the various Christian doctrines of God, Christ and the Holy Spirit, concluding with an eloquent and convincing plea for earnest-minded people to anchor their conduct and allegiance to some organized body of Christians, as represented by the various churches.

This book is timely, convincing and thoroughly readable, and within the understanding and grasp of the average person, and we believe it is sure to wield a great influence for good by the wide circulation it is certain to have.

THE MASTER BUILDERS. By S. B. Macy. Longmans, Green & Company, New York. Pp. 291.

The story of the Acts of the Apostles is here presented in easy narrative form, the chapters being interspersed with devotional verse. It is interesting, sympathetic and reverent, and well-adapted to rouse in a child's mind a lasting admiration for the early heroes of the Faith.

M. L. G.

YOUTH AND THE BIBLE. By Muriel Streibert. The Macmillan Company, New York. Pp. 251.

It is an unthankful task to put the label "dangerous" on any undertaking so patently sincere, and especially on a book that endeavors to aid in interpreting the Bible to young people. The authoress, a professor of Biblical History in Wellesley College, appears so anxious to remove all obstacles to faith, that she leaves no challenge to faith. The Virgin Birth, and the bodily resurrection of Our Lord are directly or by implication set aside, as are His miracles. Though she is presenting material gathered from many sources, her own shade of opinion so colors the whole, as to leave the impression of an extreme view rather than that of modern scholarship as a whole.

PRIMARY STORY WORSHIP PROGRAMS. By Mary K. Berg. George H. Doran Company, New York. Pp. 192.

This little book should be of use to teachers desiring aid in the method of presenting lesson material in the primary grades. It is the outcome of practical experience and will repay study.

M. L. G.

WHAT SHALL WE PLAY? By Edna Geister. George H. Doran Company, New York. Pp. 169.

Woven into a story are fifty games, or variants of the same game, which should prove a boon to mothers of small but restless folk. They range from "sick-a-béd" games to "very noisy" games. Prettily bound and illustrated, the volume is an enticing one in appearance, and should lend many an inspiration for a rainy day, or an outdoor party.

M. L. G.

THE CANDLE OF THE NORTH. By C. M. Duncan-Jones. Mowbray and Company, London, Published in America by The Morehouse Publishing Co., Milwaukee.

Stories from and concerning the Venerable Bede are here retold in simple language. There are good colored illustrations, and the early history and legends of the Church of England are delightfully presented.

M. L. G.

THE CREEDS. By E. E. Bryant. Longmans, Green & Company, New York. Pp. 79.

The sub-title to this little volume, "Addresses to Candidates for Confirmation," describes it very well. It is divided into four parts, a short introductory chapter on belief, followed by one on, "I Believe in God the Father." Almost half of the book is devoted to various phases of belief in Christ, the last part being devoted to the final paragraph of the Creed. The style is simple, and the author does not discuss intricate controversial questions like the Virgin Birth, or the physical resurrection of the body. The book will be found useful and suggestive for preparing young people for confirmation, or preparing short addresses on the Creed.

MY MISS NANCY. By Ruby Vaughan Bigger. The J. W. BURK Company, Macon, Ga. (Paper.) Illustrated. Pp. 45.

There is no more romantic character in modern times than Lady Nancy Astor, and almost anything written about her would be of interest to the American public in whose heart she occupies as big a place as she does in the hearts of her faithful British constituents of Plymouth who continue to prefer her services in Parliament in spite of socialistic propaganda and argument. This booklet has nothing to do with British Parliaments, but carries one back to "Ole Virginy" in a series of attractively put-together reminiscences of Lady Astor's childhood and early youth as recounted by her old Negro "mammy." All who had the pleasure of knowing "Nannie Langhorne" in her girlhood days can vouch for the genuineness of such large-hearted, spontaneous deeds of love and kindness as are reported here. A characteristic autographed note of appreciation from Lady Astor herself, by way of preface, adds to the attractiveness of this booklet.

M.

CUSHIONED PEWS. By the Rt. Rev. Irving P. Johnson. Witness Publishing Company, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago, Ill. Pp. 230.

The fact that most of the material in this volume has appeared in the editorial columns of The Witness does not in any way detract from the interest and value of the book. Bishop Johnson's style is unique and forceful. He drives home his thought with short, sharp sentences and witty epigrams. This volume contains thirty-seven short essays or addresses on a great variety of subjects. They are divided into four parts, as follows: "Religion In America," "The Social Gospel," "The Church," "The Christian Year." Each one is based upon some text, or Biblical incident. The book will be most valuable to lay readers, and the clergy will find it both instructive and suggestive. It will also be far more readable than most books of sermons for the general public.

The Great Commission

CONTINUED NEED FOR FOREIGN CLERGY IN JAPAN.

Bishop Reifsnider considers it a great mistake to think, as some American Churchmen apparently do, that there is no further need for ordained missionaries in the three dioceses in Japan that specially look to the American Church for help. "On the contrary," he says, "I feel that the need cannot be too strongly emphasized. With self-support and the gradual establishment of independent dioceses throughout the Japanese Church, the need for American ordained missionaries becomes even more evident. We should have at least five ordained men each year. Bishop McKim is in hearty accord with this policy. Of course, these missionaries will have to be men of great adaptability and tact, as their work will be slightly different from that of the missionaries who have been in Japan up to the present. They will have to be pioneers or ground-breakers and consequently associate priests of the Japanese who will be priests in charge of the prefectural capitals. The Japanese priests themselves especially desire this association and cooperation.

"The time for the missionary to develop a parish and be in charge of it for some time is, in my opinion, past. But he can and should develop preaching-places until they are ready to become self-supporting parishes, and then turn them over to some properly qualified Japanese priest and go on to further pioneer work. The Japanese priests keenly desire the guidance and inspiration of ordained missionaries who are grounded in the traditions of Christianity and the Church.

"The Japanese Church, in order to become permanent, must be a national Church, that is, a Japanese Church rather than an American or Anglican Church, but at present the Japanese have not the necessary information, tradition and spirit of worship to establish a Japanese Christian Church. Perhaps this cannot be expected until the Japanese Church is under the control and leadership of second and third generation Christians. Right now, however, the Japanese Church is taking form, and ideals, traditions and the spirit of worship of ordained men from America and England are of primary importance. This becomes more and more evident as the Japanese become more and more independent; as more and more authority is given them, they more and more desire American missionaries to whom they can go for help and inspiration.

"In the new districts where as yet the Church has no work the Western missionary can get in touch with the local situation and overcome prejudices much better than the Japanese. Being a Westerner he is accorded a certain exalted position in the community, and through him the Church he represents is given a position that Japanese workers cannot bring to pass. For this and many other reasons we need in each missionary district in Japan at least five men per year for the next ten years. We have but three men in the Kyoto District, four in the Tohoku, and four in North Tokyo outside of the institutions.

"Both Bishop McKim and I when last in the United States tried for ten men for Tohoku and North Tokyo, but failed to get one."

Further particulars may be secured from the Rev. A. B. Parson, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York.

NOT WHERE TO LAY HIS HEAD.

Read it slowly: Read that motto
Written there for high and low
Traced in blood the dear Christ shed.
Read through glory's dazzling blaze
Read through sorrow's blinding haze
This! "Not where to lay His Head."

On the walls and swelling domes
Of the proud palatial homes,
In the place of title deed
See, a finger there doth draw
Strange word as Belshazzar saw,
This: "Not where to lay His Head."

My Rich Brother, are you sure
There's no Lazarus left your door,
Whose poor ghost 'unhoused, unfed,
May disclaimer round thee trace,
Make thy home a haunted place
With: "Not where to lay His Head?"

Round the meanest, mouldiest hovel,
Whose poor latch lifts but to trouble,
Over chinks and ragged bed
See! a Hand once pierced for us
Signs it with His own red cross,
This: "Not where to lay His head."

My poor brother, do you languish
In despair and bitter anguish
At the thorny road you tread?
Is thy lot a harder one
Than the Father gave His Son
This: "Not where to lay His head?"

On these spired and towering churches
Bowed with weight of jeweled crosses—
His poor cross was wood instead—
On embroidered robes that hold us
With the gift upon our shoulders
Write: "Not where to lay His Head."

Angels—ye who wait on mortals
Nail the words to all our portals
Where a human foot can tread,
Till we gage our every worth
By that measuring rod for earth.
The Cross whereon He lay His Head.
—"Tarply Starr."

Meeting of the Council, Province of the Southwest.

The following important resolution was unanimously adopted at a meeting of the Council of the Province of the Southwest, held at Oklahoma City, Wednesday, November 19, when Mr. Washburn reported informally for the committee to consider the enlarged powers of the Provinces, "That the Council is opposed to the Provinces having anything to do with the nomination, selection or election of either Diocesan or Missionary Bishops, within the Province," and voted nine to two against the Province having anything to do with the appropriation or the distribution of funds appropriated to the various dioceses and missionary districts within the Province by the National Council.

Bishop Kinsolving presided and the Bishops of Oklahoma and Salina were present. Arkansas was represented by the Rev. Mr. Stowell; Salina, by the Rev. Mr. Munday; North Texas, by the Rev. Mr. McCallum; West Missouri, by the Rev. Mr. Washburn and Mr. B. C. Howard; West Texas, by the Rev. L. B. Richards, Secretary of the Synod; Missouri, by Mr. T. Q. Dix; Oklahoma, by the Hon. L. W. Pratt; eight of the eleven districts being represented.

A budget of $3,000 was approved.

The Council elected as follows:

The Department of Missions—The Bishops of Texas, West Texas, West Missouri, the Rev. B. T. Kemmerer, El Paso, chairman; the Rev. W. P. Witsell, the Rev. H. A. Stowell, the Hon. L. W. Pratt.

The Department of Religious Education—The Bishops of Oklahoma, Kansas, Salina and North Texas, the Rev. B. N. Washburn, chairman; the Rev. B. C. Howard, and Professor Battle.

The Department of Social Service: The Bishops of Arkansas and New Mexico, the Rev. E. H. Eckel, chairman; the Rev. E. S. Travers, D. D., the Rev. S. A. Huston, the Very Rev. John W. Day, Mr. Thomas Q. Dix.

The Department of Finance—The Bishops of Missouri and Dallas, the Rev. Mr. McCallum, the Rev. Mr. Mundy, Mr. John McE. Ames, Chairman.

The chair appointed as a committee on constitution and canons the Bishops of Arkansas and Oklahoma, Mr. B. C. Howard, the Hon. L. W. Pratt, and the Bishop of Oklahoma and the Rev. John W. Sykes, as the board of examining chaplains.

Nickels and Dollars.

It is a very busy nickel which finds its way into a cafeteria where the coin goes in and the food comes out. From till to slot and back again is the ceaseless round of its service. The story of the service of the dollar in the Church Building Fund is the same. But the nickel has something on the dollar, for it may eventually get out into other occupations, while the dollar cannot get away when once it is located in the Permanent Fund.

At the November meeting of the trustees it was noted that 177,000 of these dollars had this year started on another round to thirty-two points in this country to finish churches, rectories and parish houses. But they will come back for another trip—all of them, in the next ten years, ready to go again as fast as they accumulate.

But the dollar has something on the nickel, for each one that is out becomes productive. So far this year 31,000 of them, produced by their parents, have taken a final journey as gifts and grants to forty-three towns and villages all around the world for the completion of church buildings.

Even so the demand for them has not been met, and service to the Church has had to be limited to the supply in the till. Does the Church want the Fund to do an even larger work next year? The answer and the remedy are not far to seek.

New President of Boone University.

Bishop Roots has appointed the Rev. Arthur M. Sherman to be President of Boone University in succession to the Rev. A. A. Gilman, S. T. D., Bishop Suffragan-elect of Hankow. Dr. Gilman will for the present continue his relation to the work of higher education in Wuchang as President of the Central China University, of which Boone University will be one of the units.

Clergymen's Retiring Fund Society.

At the annual meeting of the Trustees of the Clergymen's Retiring Fund Society on November 14, the following officers were reelected: The Rt. Rev. Frederick Burgess, D. D., President; Mr. J. Van Vechten Olcott, Secretary, and the Rev. Charles L. Pardee, D. D., Financial Secretary and Treasurer.

The trustees voted the customary twenty-five per cent annuity to three hundred members who had reached the annuity age. The sum of twenty-eight thousand dollars was thus apportioned.

The membership of the Society is now five hundred and twenty-three, of whom one hundred and sixty-nine are contributing members, three hundred and three are annuitants, and fifty-one having completed their payments are eligible for future annuities.

The Society is on a sound actuarial basis, and from the dues of members and the income of invested funds it has met the current annuity charges of the year. The invested funds of the Society amount to $387,422.04.

Repeated.

For two or three years "the first parish heard from" by the Church Missions House as to the results of the Every Member Canvass has been the Church of the Ascension, Montgomery, Alabama (the Rev. Peerce N. McDonald, rector). As usual, an oversubscription of the quota is reported. The message, dated November 30, reads: "Annual Canvass made today. Quota $1,800. Pledged already $1,908. More expected. The people first gave themselves to the Lord."

Church for Lepers Dedicated.

The new community church for lepers in the only United States leper colony at Carville, La., was recently dedicated. Dr. William Jay Schiefelin, President of the Board of Directors of the Leper Mission; Fleming H. Revell, the Treasurer, and W. M. Danner, one of the General Secretaries, attended the services.

This is the only Protestant Church for lepers in the United States. Contributions toward the building fund were received from virtually all Protestant denominations throughout the United States and from leper Christians in Siam and China, as well as from members of the leper congregation at the hospital itself.

Annual Service, Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

The Annual Corporate Communion of the Richmond Local Assembly of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew was held on the night of St. Andrew's Day, at St. Andrew's Church, the Rev. J. Francis Ribble, D. D., rector.

The Rev. P. W. Reed, rector of Christ Church, preached a strong Brotherhood sermon on personal work. He stressed the individual responsibility of every man. The Rev. W. Geiger Irwin, assistant minister at St. Andrew's Church and Chaplain of the local Assembly, celebrated the Holy Communion, assisted by Dr. Ribble, the rector.

After the Communion seven young men, former members of the Junior Chapter of St. Andrew's Church, were installed into the Senior Chapter by Dr. Ribble, assisted by the Rev. Mr. Irwin.

The success of the Junior Chapter at St. Andrew's Church, which has been developed in two sections for the last three years, is due largely to the fact that joint meetings of the seniors and juniors have been held at regular intervals, and when the time came for the promotion of the older juniors the transition was easy and natural. Weekly meetings are held and installation services have always been public, usually after a Sunday evening service.

Union Thanksgiving Service.

This year the Union Thanksgiving Service was held in Christ Church, Luray, the Rev. Dennis Whittle, rector. A congregation of about two hundred people had been counted on, but by the time the service commenced many more had flocked in. The seating capacity of the church was taxed to the uttermost. Extra seats were borrowed from the Christian Church, and from neighbors, and room was found eventually for every one.

N.-W. Conferences.

Mr. L. L. Gaillard, of New York, one of the Field Secretaries of the National Council, made an itinerary in the Diocese from November 14 to 21, holding conferences preparatory to the "Every Member Canvass"; especially for the laity of the Diocese, meeting the vestries at informal dinner conferences an hour or two before the congregational meetings.

The itinerary included the following places: Christ Church Cathedral, Lexington, for the parishes of the city and with representatives from Georgetown, Richmond, and Mt. Sterling.

St. Paul's Church, Newport, for the parishes of the Ohio River Region. Winchester and Maysville. Frankfort.

Accompanying Mr. Gaillard was Dean Massie of Lexington.

The Rev. C. S. Hall, of Ashland, accompanied Mr. Gaillard to Middleboro.

St. Andrew's, Fort Thomas: At the recent anniversary services of this church, announcement was made that the amount necessary to liquidate the debt upon the church had been subordinated.

The Rev. W. P. Stanley, of St. Andrew's Church, Lexington, Ky., who recently underwent an operation upon his throat, is now able to be out and at work.

Centennial Celebration of St. James' Church (Colored) Baltimore.

St. James' Church (Colored), Baltimore, the first church for colored people established in the South, celebrated its one hundredth anniversary and the thirty-third anniversary of the present rector, the Rev. George F. Bragg, D. D., November 16-23.

Sunday morning the opening sermon was preached by the Rt. Rev. Arthur Selden Lloyd of New York. In the evening the sermon was by the Rev. Dr. Hutchens C. Bishop, rector of St. Philip's Church, New York City.

St. James' Church was organized in 1824 by a colored clergyman, the Rev. William Levington, a native of New York, who was ordained to the Episcopal ministry by Bishop White, the first presiding bishop of the American Church.

The cornerstone of the first church occupied by this congregation was laid October 15, 1826, at North and Saratoga Streets, and was consecrated March 31, 1827, by the Rt. Rev. James Kemp, Bishop of Maryland.

Of this church between 1824 and 1873 the rectors were its founder, the Rev. William Levington, followed by the Rev. Joshua Peterkin, father of Bishop Peterkin, of West Virginia, and the Rev. J. N. McJilton, and again by a colored rector, the Rev. Harrison H. Webb.

The church, which had a membership of less than sixty when the present rector first assumed charge in 1891, has now a communicant list of five hundred.

Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, D. D., Coadjutor

Dr. Dillard's Talk on Missions in East Africa.

Dr. J. H. Dillard of the University of Virginia made a splendid address before a large congregation in Bruton Parish Church, Williamsburg, Sunday morning, December 7. His talk on "Missions I Have Seen," embodied his personal experiences and observations while on a tour of inspection last spring of the Missions of the English Church in East Africa. He spoke particularly of those in Uganda and the neighboring Provinces. The educational, medical and evangelical work of the missionaries is bringing the most remarkable results. Larger churches and schools are being built for the ever-increasing number of natives who are catching the vision of greater things.

Dr. Dillard pointed out that this mission is but one of many scattered throughout the world, which is serving those less fortunate than ourselves, and laid special emphasis upon the contribution and permanent value of the present missionary movement, the enduring work of the Christian Church in the historic life of mankind, and the necessary place that we must give to the Christ as we look towards the future.

Great interest was shown in the annual Historical Service held recently at the Old Glebe Church, at Driver, in Nansemond County. The speaker was Rev. H. H. Covington, D. D., of St. Paul's Church, Norfolk.

New Colored Church to be Built.

Mrs. C. E. Smith, of Lunenburg, president of the Auxiliary in the Colored Convocation of the Diocese, reports that the thirty circles of the Woman's Auxiliary have raised more than $3,000 during the past year, and that all have paid their assessment for domestic and foreign work.

Trinity Church, South Boston, is being provided with a new heating plant and other improvements are being made.

The Ministerial Union, of Suffolk, Va., gave a farewell dinner on November 25 to the Rev. and Mrs. A. L. Kenyon. Mr. Kenyon recently resigned as rector, of St. Paul's Church, Suffolk, and left on December 1 to take charge of his new work in Cincinnati, Ohio.

Archdeaconry of Williamsport: St. Mark's, Northumberland, Reopened.

After extensive exterior and interior repairs, St. Mark's Church, Northumberland, was opened in conjunction with the autumn meeting of the Archdeaconry of Williamsport. Bishop Darlington, of Harrisburg, and Presiding Bishop Talbot, of Bethlehem, were present for the entire day. Bishop Talbot arrived the night before in time for an informal reception, when many old friends greeted him at the home of the Misses Napp. The Holy Communion was celebrated by Bishop Darlington, the Rev. Floyd Appleton, Ph. D., who has been in charge for the past three years, read the Epistle, and the Gospel was read by Archdeacon Schmaus. The Presiding Bishop, in his sermon, made many encouraging remarks relating to the donors of the improvements and the bright hopes for the future of the parish. Between luncheon and supper, which were provided by the parish, the business session of the Archdeaconry was held, and stress was laid upon the means being taken to insure the completion of the missionary quotas. The evening service was conducted by the Rev. William Evans Kunkel, of Jersey Shore, who revived the parish twenty-five years ago, after long stagnation. Bishop Darlington preached an encouraging sermon. Twenty of the clergy were present, and the congregations were good, the singing hearty.

Christ Church, Berwick.

The Men's Good Fellowship Club, an organization of Christ Church, Berwick, the Rev. John Oliphant, rector, made a trip to Danville recently, where they were entertained by the Men's Club of Christ Church Parish, Danville.

A boys' orchestra has been organized in Christ Church. The Men's Club of the parish has presented the boys with a splendid bass drum. The boys now furnish the music for the Church School, and are always ready to help in parish affairs.

In the same parish, a splendid Club for Boys has been organized. With the help of the Men's Club, the boys are remodeling and furnishing a large room to be used as a club room.

Group Conferences: Under the auspices of the Diocesan Department of Religious Education, several group conferences have been held in the Diocese. The topics under discussion were about the best methods of teaching the Church Catechism and the advisability of giving rewards for Church School work.

A Missionary Conference, lasting a week, was conducted in the Church of the Ascension, Kulpmont, by the Rev. James H. Gorham, O. H. C., assisted by the Vicar, the Rev. Charles E. Niles. The mission services were well attended, the Roman Catholic and Russian Orthodox Churches being represented, as well as the Methodists and Lutherans.

Advent Services.

The joint commemoration of Advent Sunday and St. Andrew's Day served as a call throughout the Diocese for a Corporate Communion, not only of the Brotherhood, but the men and boy communicants of every parish. On the evening preceding, a service of preparation was held in Louisville in the Cathedral, conducted by the Rev. C. B. Reader, priest-in-charge of St. Thomas' Mission.

For the Every Member Canvass.

On the evening of November 20, the annual vestrymen's dinner was given in St. Andrew's parish house, the Rev. J. S. Douglas, rector, presiding as diocesan chairman of the Committee on the Church's Program. Every parish of the see-city was well represented, filling more than eighty seats, and a most helpful discussion followed, bearing chiefly on the approaching every member canvass. The Chairman, the Bishop, and Mr. J. D. Winston, Diocesan Treasurer, made notably forceful, and stimulating addresses. In accordance with a resolution passed, the following Sunday was marked by a general exchange of pulpits, the needful message being thus conveyed to every parish by new, yet familiar voices.

Stewardship Conference.

In seasonable conjunction with the Church's work at this time, an interdenominational Stewardship Conference opened its sessions in Louisville, November 29, and, in response to the suggestion of the National Council, willing cooperation through workers and clergy of our own communion was given. Able and inspirational speakers from various sections of the country were heard, and the message of man's responsibility as stewards of God was brought home to many hearts.

Within the diocese the parishes have been equally active in the cause, the Rev. J. S. Douglas and the Rev. E. G.

Maxted, minister-in-charge of the churches in Uniontown and Madisonville, ably presenting the committee's aims and hopes.

St. Thomas' Mission, Louisville, reports rapid growth along all lines, also many new improvements, and the gift of several beautiful memorials; among the latter is a new organ presented jointly by the Women's Guild and the Men's Club.

The Cathedral, through its latest enterprise, is truly "Broadcasting" joy and comfort, not only to many sick and shut-ins, but to thousands of every class, in its recently installed and most successful radio connection. Each First, Fourth and Fifth Sunday of the month the beautiful evensong service is thus made clearly audible to a congregation of devout listeners in unlimited numbers.

Church School Dinner.

The Church School Dinner took place at the Fort Pitt Hotel, on Wednesday evening, December 3. There was a large and representative attendance, numbering over three hundred, from the city, suburbs, and as far distant as Greensburg, Indiana, Johnstown and Scottdale. The dinner was given under the auspices of the Diocesan Department of Religious Education, of which Miss Charlotte E. Forsyth is Superintendent. The Rev. Dr. R. N. Meade, chairman of the department, being detained by illness, the vice-chairman, Mrs. Thomas J. Bigham, presided. The speakers were the Bishop of the Diocese, and the Rt. Rev. Arthur Selden Lloyd, D. D., Bishop Suffragan of New York.

For Missions.

On Thursday afternoon, December 4, in the parish house of the Church of the Ascension, a sale of oriental goods, from China, Japan, and the Philippines, was held under the direction of the Pittsburgh Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary. These goods were brought to this country by Mrs. Charles R. Pancoast, of Philadelphia. Mrs. Pancoast attended the monthly meeting of the Branch in the morning, and gave a talk on Conditions in China and Japan. The goods were very handsome, and a goodly sum was netted for the benefit of the missions from which Mrs. Pancoast had procured the various articles offered for sale.

Death of the Rev. S. W. Frisbie.

The Rev. Stephen W. Frisbie, for fifty-eight years a priest of the Church in the Mid-West and the oldest presbyter in point of service in the Diocese of Michigan, died suddenly at his home in Detroit on Friday evening, November 28, at the advanced age of eighty-four. Mr. Frisbie, although having been in poor health for some time, was not considered seriously ill, and his death came as a shock to his family and friends.

Mr. Frisbie was graduated from Racine College, receiving the degree of Master of Arts in 1862 from that institution. He was ordained to the Diaconate in 1864 and raised to the priesthood in 1866 by Bishop Kemper. After three years in charge of Trinity Church, Platteville, Wisconsin, Mr. Frisbie came to Michigan, being first in charge of the church at Niles. He was later rector of All Saints Church, Brooklyn, leaving that charge for Hudson, Michigan. In 1875 he came to Detroit where he has resided ever since, thirty years of which was as rector of St. James' Church, which position he filled until 1910, when the parish was amalgamated with Trinity Church, Detroit. At that time Mr. Frisbie became associate rector of Trinity Church, which position he has since filled.

During his distinguished service under the five Bishops of Michigan, Mr. Frisbie filled many important posts in the Diocese, having been at various times on the Standing Committee of the Diocese and for several decades secretary of the Diocesan Convention. A few years ago he was honored by election as secretary emeritus of convention for the remainder of his life.

The funeral services were held on December 1 at St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, and were attended by a large number of the clergy of the diocese and a goodly congregation of old friends and parishioners. The services were in charge of the Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., the Rev. W. Warne Wilson, the Rev. Lewis B. Whittemore, the Very Rev. Warren L. Rogers, and the Rev. W. D. Maxon, D. D.

Anniversary Services at Bramwell.

The thirty-seventh anniversary of the organization of Holy Trinity Church, Bramwell, was fittingly observed on a recent Sunday. In the morning Bishop Gravatt preached and confirmed a class presented by the rector, the Rev. H. B. McC. Jamison. At the evening service Bishop Strider preached the sermon and Bishop Gravatt dedicated a number of memorials that had been presented to the Church. The previous evening was marked by a reception in honor of the two bishops of West Virginia. The occasion was also noteworthy for the presence of a number of former parishioners from different parts of the country.

A New Rector for St. John's, Charleston: This church has called to its rectorship the Rev. John Gass, rector of Trinity Church, Parkersburg. Mr. Gass has accepted the call and will enter upon his new duties January 1.

Clergy Conference: Bishop Strider recently held a conference with several clergymen of the Northwestern Convocation relating to the program for the pre-Lenten meeting of the Convocation.

The Rev. Charles W. Sydnor preached his first sermon December 7 as rector of St. Luke's Church, Wheeling. The best that could be wished for any rector is that he may gain the affections of his people as was so notably attained by Mr. Sydnor's predecessor, Dr. Jacob Brittingham.

A Reception was given in the Community Hall, Eckman, to the Rt. Rev. R. E. L. Strider, D. D., Bishop-Coadjutor. Among the guests were Archdeacon Meade and the Rev. B. R. Roller, of St. Luke's, Welch. Bishop Strider spoke interestingly of the experiences and pleasures of a younger bishop.

Children's Advent Service.

The children of the Church School Service League of the Diocese of Washington, held their Advent meeting on Saturday, December 6, at St. Mark's Church, when twelve Sunday Schools were represented. A service in the church preceded the short business meeting held later in the parish hall, and this was followed by an interesting pageant presented by five Church Schools, under the direction of Commander C. T. Jewell. The pageant represented the five fields of service, which were taken as follows:

The Parish, by the Chapel of the Good Shepherd.

The Community, St. John's Church, Georgetown.

The Diocese, St. Margaret's Church. The Nation, Christ Church, Georgetown.

The World, St. Stephen's Church.

Vacation Bible School Conference.

The annual conference of the World Association of Daily Vacation Bible Schools, with headquarters in New York, will be held in Washington at Calvary Baptist Church, on January 6 and 7, according to announcement of the Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins, rector of Holy Trinity Church, Philadelphia, president of the Federation of Churches of that city. One of the speakers of that occasion will be the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop of Washington, who will deliver the address of welcome.

For the Bishop Rowe Fund.

At the December meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of Washington, a strong plea was made for the completion of the one hundred thousand dollar fund for the work of Bishop Rowe of Alaska. This fund will be in the nature of a permanent endowment of the work which Bishop Rowe has carried on for a long period of years and is raised as an evidence of appreciation of his services. The fund has reached the $80,000 mark and other calls for the time being having apparently crowded out the completion of the fund, it is being urged that the remainder be raised so that this fund may be administered at an early date.

The Rev. W. L. De Vries, D. D., Chancellor of the National Cathedral, was appointed by the recent Synod of the Province of Washington to be chairman of the Provincial Committee on Theological Education. Canon De Vries holds, besides this, the office of Chairman of the National Commission on the Ministry of the Episcopal Church. This commission holds its periodical meetings at one of the great universities of the country, where it is believed the students are given an opportunity and impetus to consider the ministry of the Church as a vocation.

Rt. Rev. T. J. Garland, D. D., Bishop.

For the Church's Program.

In virtually all the churches in the Diocese of Pennsylvania, members of congregations on Sunday, Dec. 7, made their pledges for support of the Church's work in the diocese, and in the General Church. The diocesan program for 1925, which does not include the amount fixed by parishes for parish support, calls for $215,266 for Diocesan maintenance, and $334,880 additional, the latter representing the Diocese's share in the General Church maintenance program.

Diocesan Missionary Appointed.

Announcement was made December 2 by Bishop Garland of the appointment of the Rev. James F. Bullitt, of Princeton, N. J., to the office of Diocesan Missionary.

It is a new office in the Diocese of Pennsylvania, under the personal direction of the Bishop. Mr. Bullitt will have charge of all missions in the Diocese, without a minister, act as chaplain of the Lay Readers' Association, which is ready for organization and perform other missionary duties under the Bishop's direction. He will begin his new duties January 1.

Mr. Bullitt is a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania and the Philadelphia Divinity School and was ordained to the priesthood in 1896 by the late Bishop Whitaker.

The Rev. J. Wesley Twelves, of the Church of the Holy Apostles, Brooklyn, N. Y., has just resigned to accept the call extended him by the Church of the Epiphany, Germantown.

Mr. Twelves has been rector of the Church of the Holy Apostles for almost four years. Prior to that he served St. Thomas' Church, Bethel, Conn., and for a time worked in the Missionary District of Utah. While preparing for the ministry in Philadelphia he served on the staff of the city mission. He is a native of Philadelphia, and received his education at St. Stephen's College, and at the Philadelphia Divinity School. He expects to begin his duties here the first Sunday in January.

The Rev. Cranston Brenton, President of the New York Drama League, and for ten years Professor of Languages in Trinity College, Hartford, Conn., was the special preacher at the evening service December 7 at the Chapel of the Mediator, West Philadelphia.

Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D. D., Bishop.

News Items of Interest.

Two Flying Squadrons toured the Diocese during the early part of November, holding conferences on the Program of the Church in eight centers. A special meeting with vestrymen in each place was one of the most important features. Two teams composed of members of the Colored Council visited four places presenting the same unified program as that used by the Flying Squadrons.

The Rev. J. A. Schaad was instituted rector of St. Paul's Church, Augusta, by the Bishop of Georgia on the Sunday before Advent. In this parish on the seventeenth Sunday after Trinity a beautiful mahogany pulpit was dedicated by the rector. The pulpit is the gift of Mrs. Frank Clark Doughty in memory of her daughter, Ruth Doughty Inman.

On the twenty-second Sunday after Trinity, the Rev. S. B. McGlohon celebrated his seventeenth anniversary as rector of St. Paul's Church, Savannah. The day was marked only by a celebration of the Holy Communion and the regular services. Mr. McGlohon is the only rector who has served the parish in the present building, and he held the first service in the new edifice on November 17, 1907.

In the will of Mr. C. Downing, late senior warden of St. Mark's Church, Brunswick, the Rev. J. W. Fulford, rector, a legacy of $5,000 was left to that parish. Mr. Downing also left $5,000 to a hospital in Brunswick, and $5,000 to the Y. M. C. A., when the fund of $50,000 is raised for the new building.

A pageant, entitled "A Thanksgiving Vision," and which depicted the early days of Christ Church, Savannah, the Rev. David Cady Wright, rector, during the time of the Rev. John Wesley, one of the first rectors, was given the day before Thanksgiving by the Church School, assisted by the boys of Bethesda Orphanage, the oldest boys' orphanage in the country. The rector took the part of the Rev. John Wesley, who, it is claimed by the parish of Christ Church, organized the first Sunday School in the world in 1736.

All of the colored churches in Savannah joined in an inter-church concert held in St. Philip's Methodist Church, December 3, all of the ministers' wives and twenty choirs taking part on the program. A silver offering was taken up for the benefit of the entertainment fund of St. Augustine's Episcopal Church, which will be host to the National Conference of Church Workers among Colored People in October, 1925. The spirit that actuated the promotion of the concert demonstrated the goodwill and cooperation that exist among the Negro congregations of Savannah.

Rt. Rev. C. B. Colmore, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. M. Ferrando, D. D., Suffragan.

Consecration of St. Andrew's Church, Mayaguez.

Sunday, November 30 (first Sunday in Advent, St. Andrew's Day), was a great and memorable day in the annals of St. Andrew's Mission, Mayaguez (the Rev. Frank Arthur Saylor, minister-in-charge). It was not only the patronal festival of the Mission, but also was the culmination of nearly eight years of labor and hopes, and in this case manual labor as well by Mr. Saylor. The occasion was the consecration of the new church of St. Andrew by the Bishop. This is the third of a series of buildings erected in St. Andrew's Mission by Mr. Saylor. These buildings occupy the three sides of the property all facing an open patio, which is entered directly from the street. The architecture is of Spanish type with massive walls and very plain lines. The west door opens into the patio so that one entering the church gets a pleasing view of the whole Mission compound. The church has a seating capacity of one hundred and fifty, and a space for choir and a generous-sized sanctuary. Beneath the church there is a large basement, which affords a fine assembly room, and besides this a sunken patio which is used for the dramatic work of St. Andrew's School.

The day began with the Holy Communion in English at seven o'clock, Bishop Colmore being celebrant. This service was attended by a large number of Porto Rican communicants, members of the Mission. At nine o'clock the church was filled for Holy Communion in Spanish, Mr. Saylor being celebrant, assisted by the Rev. Antonio Villafane, deacon, who read the Epistle. Bishop Colmore and his chaplain, the Rev. Charles Thacher Pfeiffer, Vicar of St. John's Church, San Juan, were present. The Bishop Suffragan was the preacher.

At eleven o'clock the church was again filled, this time with an English-speaking congregation, many of our Church people from all over the Island having come to assist. Chancellor B. J. Horton, of Mayaguez, read the certified statement that the church was free of debt. The Rev. John F. Droste, minister-in-charge of the Church of the Resurrection, Manati, read the Certificate of Consecration. The Rev. C. T. Pfeiffer read Morning Prayer. Bishop Colmore preached the sermon referring to the fact that this was the first church to be consecrated in Porto Rico during his episcopate, and took the congregation back in mind to the beginning of the work nearly eight years ago. He expressed his official thanks to all who had helped in the erection of the church both financially and actually, paying a glowing tribute to Mr. Saylor, who by his personal oversight and labor had saved nearly eight thousand dollars of the estimated cost. He also mentioned that the chancel had been given in memory of Miss Emily Hoyt of New York.

After the service luncheon was served the people by the Mission.

THIS, TODAY, EMMANUEL.

Lilla Vass Shepherd.

Babe within your chosen cradle
Of the restless, changing years,
Wrapt in love's immortal challenge
To our birthright of its tears:
Have you still a place of shelter
For our undiscerning prayers?

Has the angel chorus ringing
Through the ages that have gone,
Left you still anhungered, waiting
For the earthly cradle-song:
Has no human heart an echo
Of the love for which you long?

Jesus, Child Divine, still with us
In the least of these, as when Lowly, to a manger-cradle,
You were born in Bethlehem:
'Tis our empty arms deny us
Yet the Presence that we pray;
Any head that needs our shelter
Is Emmanuel's, today!

I remember a Scotch woman I knew and loved coming in from her sacrament with a face shining as it had been the face of an angel and a heart brimming over with fresh stores of love. I saw the same look on the face of an old Italian woman in Florence as she left the altar on an All Saints' day. To love is enough—even to yearn to love. If we thought so the blessed sacrament would become the bond of union among Christians.—Wyoming Churchman.

O Lord Jesus Christ, Who at Thy first coming didst send Thy messenger to prepare Thy way before Thee; Grant that the ministers and stewards of Thy mysteries may likewise so prepare and make ready Thy way, by turning the hearts of the disobedient to the wisdom of the just, that at Thy second coming to judge the world we may be found an acceptable people in Thy sight, who liveth and reignest with the Father and the Holy Spirit ever, one God, world without end. Amen.

The Way to Bethlehem.

Come, go with me tonight to Bethlehem;
The old world way is lighted by a star.
A silver song is ringing through the dusk;

The little village home-lights gleam afar.

Old vineyards by the way are singing out;

A thousand gentle fields ran sloping down,

The winding ways of all the world tonight

Lead on light-footed to one little town.

Mary has gone before us on the road
(O heart, be hushed with holiness tonight);

The snow-white flocks have awakened from their sleep.

The watching shepherds taken eager flight.

And suddenly, like bells across the snow,
The old, glad, poignant song rings out again.

"Behold, I bring you tidings of great joy,"
A far, clear call along the ways of men.

White wings flash high above the waiting fields.

Come, heart of mine; the road is kindled bright;

The whole earth walks the beaten path once more

To seek the little Saviour-King tonight.

"O Little Town of Bethlehem."

PART III.

A Visit to the Birthplace of Jesus.

The Rev. Clarence S. McClellan, Jr.

It is interesting in looking back over the annals of history and the accounts of travels to see how much has been written about Bethlehem and how those old-time chronicles and diaries written by men of renown and some of little fame give description of the City, people know anything now. His "travels" were reduced to a treatise by which could be written of it this very day. Perhaps we can do nothing of more interest, historically speaking, than to pass one of our evenings in the Bethlehem hotel in looking over some of these ancient stories of travel in and about Bethlehem. To read an account or description of any place on the spot itself makes the whole scene more real. Turning back over the pages we come to the year 700 A. D. to Bishop Arculf, about whom so few Adamnan, an Abbot of Iona. It is also of moment for us to observe that this treatise of Adamnan became a text book among the Anglo-Saxons and was edited by the Venerable Bede. Here is the account of this almost forgotten Bishop's trip to Bethlehem in the year 700 A. D.

"From Jerusalem Arculf went to Bethlehem, which is situated on a narrow ridge, surrounded on all sides by valleys. The ridge is about a mile long from west to east; and a low wall without towers, surrounds the brow of the hill, and overlooks the valley. The houses of the inhabitants are scattered here and there over the space within the wall. At the extreme eastern angle there is a sort of natural cave, the outer part of which is said to have been the place of our Lord's birth; the inside is called our Lord's manger. The whole of this cave is covered within with precious marble. Over the place where more especially our Lord is said to have been born stands the great Church of St. Mary. Near the wall is a hollow stone, which received back from the wall the water in which our Lord's body was washed, and has ever since been full of purest water without any diminution. If by any accident or service it has been emptied, it quickly becomes full as before. In the valley to the north of Bethlehem Arculf saw the tomb of David, in the middle of a church, covered with a low pyramid stone, unadorned, with a lamp placed above it. In another church on the slope of the hill to the south is the tomb of St. Jerome, equally without ornament. About a mile to the east of Bethlehem by the tower of Ader, that is, of the Flock, is a church containing monuments of the three shepherds, to whom, on this spot, the angel announced the birth of our Lord.

"There is a highway, according to Arculf, leading southward from Jerusalem to Hebron, to the east of which Bethlehem is situated, six miles from Jerusalem. At the extremity of this road, on the west side, is the tomb of Rachel, rudely built of stones, without ornament, presenting externally the form of a pyramid. Her name, placed by her husband Jacob, is still shown upon it."

We next come upon the travels of one Willibald, whose dates are about 721-727; that is the time of his literary activity. His "travels" were written from his own recital by a nun of Heidenheim. Willibald, it is said, was a kinsman of the great Boniface and a native of the Kingdom of Wessex, probably Hampshire. In the Roman Calendar his father was honored under the title of St. Richard. About the year 740 or 741 Willibald was consecrated Bishop of Eichstadt. He died about the year 786 A. D. Here is his account of his Bethlehem visit:

"He next came to the place where the angel appeared to the shepherds, and thence to Bethlehem, where our Lord was born, distant seven miles from Jerusalem. The place where Christ was born was once a cave under the earth, but it is now a square house cut in the rock, and the earth dug up and thrown from it all round, and a church is now built above it and an altar is placed over the site of the birth. There is another smaller altar, in order that when they desire to celebrate mass in the cave they may carry the smaller altar for the occasion. This church is a glorious building in the form of a cross. After prayers here Willibald came to a large town called Thecua, where the children were slain by Herod and where is now a church."

In the year 867 A. D. comes Bernard the Wise, a Breton monk of the celebrated monastery of Mount St. Michel. The ancient manuscripts distinguish him as "Bernadus Sapiens," although we have no other testimony to his wisdom except his "travels." This very valuable account was discovered by one Mabillon in a manuscript of the library of Rheims and printed in the "Acta Sanctorum Ordinis Benedictini."

"When we left Jerusalem on the way to Bethlehem, the place of our Lord's nativity, distant six miles, we were shown the field in which Habakkuk was at work when the angel of the Lord ordered him to carry his meal to Daniel in Babylon, which is to the south, where Nebuchadnezzar reigned, but which is now the haunt of serpents and wild beasts. At Bethlehem there is a very large church in honor of St. Mary, in the middle of which is a crypt under a stone, the entrance of which is from the south, and the egress from the east, in which is shown the manger of our Lord, on the west side of the crypt. But the place in which our Lord cried is to the east, having an altar where masses are celebrated. Near this church to the south is a church of the Blessed Innocents, the martyrs. One mile from Bethlehem is the monastery of the Holy Shepherds, to whom the angel appeared at our Lord's nativity."

Seawulf was the first pilgrim, who followed the Crusaders, who has left us a personal narrative of his travels in Palestine. He was an Anglo-Saxon, concerning whom little is known. In William of Malmesbury's "History of the English Bishops" we are told that Seawulf was a merchant, who often went to Bishop Wulstan, of Worcester, to confess his sins, and more often, when the reaction set in after his confession, went back vigorously to his old sinful ways. Wulstan advised him to leave the market place and go into the monastery in order to avoid temptations, but the stout-hearted merchant refused. William of Malmesbury, however, tells us that the day did come when Seawulf left "off the world" and became a monk in the abbey of Malmesbury. In all probability it was during the time of repentance while still a merchant that Seawulf undertook the journey to the Holy Land.

"The city of Bethlehem in Judea is six miles to the south of Jerusalem. The Saracens have left nothing there habitable, but everything is destroyed (as in the other holy places without the walls of the city of Jerusalem) except the monastery of the blessed Virgin Mary, which is a large and noble building. In the church there is a crypt under the choir, about the middle, in which is seen the place of our Lord's nativity, as it were to the left. A little lower to the right, near the place of the nativity, is the manger where the ox and the ass stood when the Child was placed before them in it; and the stone which supported the head of our Saviour in the sepulchre, which was brought hither from Jerusalem by St. Jerome the Presbyter, may be seen in the manger. St. Jerome himself rests in the same church, under the altar, to the northeast; and the innocents who were slain for the Infant Christ by Herod lie under the altar on the north part of the church, as well as the two most holy women, Paula and her daughter Eustochium, the virgin. There is the marble table on which the blessed Virgin Mary ate with the three Magians, after they had given their offerings. There is a cistern in the church, near the crypt of our Lord's nativity, into which the star is said to have fallen."

"Servants of God."

"Then in the hour of need
Of your fainting dispirited race.
Ye like angels appear!
Langour is not in your heart,
Weakness is not in your word,
Weariness not on your brow.
Eyes rekindling, and prayers
Follow your steps as ye go.
Ye fill up the gaps in our file,
Strengthen the wavering line,
Stablish, continue our march—
On to the bound of the waste—
On to the City of God."

—Matthew Arnold.

The Parson—His Titles and Duties.

The Rev. Thos. F. Opie, D. D.

"All a parson has to do," says one who knows, "is to talk as much as a lawyer, write as much as an editor, visit as much as a doctor, walk as much as a policeman—and take as much abuse as a plumber."

Some of the duties of the minister are indicated by the many titles by which he has been known from time to time in his various capacities.

The word "parson" is derived from "persona," Latin for a personage, a man of great importance. Time was when the parson was the big man of the community. He was looked up to by reason of his eminent learning and scholarship. He was distinctive. He was indeed a personage. Now, however, in the day of broad learning, when men are informed and scholarly and eminent in many fields, the parson is no longer conspicuous as the only one in the field who has any eminent qualities of scholarship and prominence.

"Minister" is also a Latin word and means literally a servant. The minister is ideally one who serves. He gives his life, his time, his sympathy and his help and counsel and advice to all who need them.

Another Latin word by which some ministers are known is "rector." This word goes back to "rego," to rule. Literally, the rector of a parish is one who rules his church—the chief authority in the parish.

Then there is the word "pastor," which is derived from the Latin word "pastor—pastoris," which means a shepherd. This is one of the most popular titles the average minister has. All ministers like to be looked upon as shepherds. It is a tender and endearing term.

The word "reverend" comes from the same language and is the gerundive, "reverendus," which means in the literal sense one who must be revered. Frequently, the expression Rev. Smith or Rev. Jones is crude and inelegant and incorrect. It should be Rev. Mr. Smith or Rev. John Smith.

"Vicar" comes from vicarius and signifies one to whom authority has been delegated. Cleric, clergy and clergyman all come from "clericus," which refers to one who performs sacred offices.

It will be seen from these and other entitlements which apply to the minister that his office is a varied and extensive one. The true minister of Christ knows no set hours of work and no limitations of service. The world is his parish and any one whom he can serve is his parishioner. He is the world's Good Samaritan.

"Today and Forever."

Man builds a castle on a hill,
He makes a citadel or town,
And ere the world may know his skill
Another comes to tear it down.
Yet day by day and year by year,
Through all the changing centuries,
While men appear and reappear,
God paints His sunsets on the seas.

Not all the years the world has known
Have changed the pattern of the stars—
Though men in conflict for a throne
Have mapped the world with battle scars,
Though men in their own blinded way
Have grown confused of wrong and right,
God gives them still the golden day
And silent glory of the night.

He turns time's record, page on page,
And writes his history the same,
While men blot out each bygone age,
In mistiness of fading fame.
In countless numbers men arose
And try their weakness or their force,
Yet calmly 'through the endless skies
The earth holds its appointed course.

Man's dreams as deeds to him appear,
And dreamlike, deeds and words are gone,
And day by day and year by year
We have the sunset and the dawn.
We never come to understand
The trenchant message brought by these—
God limns His sunrise on the land
And paints His sunsets on the seas.

Bible Stories for Children.

As the season of our Lord's birth draws near, our thoughts turn more and more to those little ones whom He took in His arms and blessed, and we long to send them, in His name, Christmas joy—and joy that shall be not for Christmas only, but for all the year and all their lives. We still read children's books, and it is hard to think what childhood would have been without our book friends. Yet there are thousands of children growing up without knowing any of the famous figures of romance, Cinderella or Robinson Crusoe or the Pied Piper or Ivanhoe or David Copperfield. While it is bad enough to have missed these, it is infinitely worse to have missed the greatest Book of all, never to have known the great stories which are inextricably woven into the background of all Christian thinking, the story of David and Jonathan, the story of Joseph and his brethren, the great story of the Creation, the tender story of Bethlehem. How infinitely rich is the child of whose daily life these are a part! How infinitely poor the child to whom they are quite unknown!

Dozens of books have been published giving the great Bible stories for children and making them vivid with fine illustrations. Occasionally we have money to buy one or two of these books for a school or a mission somewhere and so get them into the hands of a few of the hundreds of children for whom we would supply them if we could. But people rarely remember the children when they give money for books. Many people do not know how great is the opportunity for giving to children; many more do not know what splendid books the book stores have for children; and few think of Bible stories for them.

The Church Periodical Club knows the great need and is always trying to supply it, and so is the ever-ready channel by which the children can be reached. Where there is a C. P. C. parish librarian, she is always ready to help; and the central office of the Church Periodical Club at 2 West Forty-seventh Street, New York, is equally ready and eager.

Every year the Christmas season is saddened because so many of the children must be passed by. We wish that sometimes we might have enough for all of them.

Christmas Preparation.

There are three kinds of preparation for the keeping of Christmas, which may now fill our thought and time.

The foremost is the preparation of heart and life, making them a cradle in which we receive and adore the infant Jesus on Christmas morning.

The second should be the preparation now made to bring Christmas cheer into the lives of the poor, the sick and the lonely. We cannot do for Jesus, but He bids us do for all those whom He commits to our care.

The last is the preparation for ourselves—our home—our family. Christmas should ever be the happiest and the sunniest of all the home days of the year.

Remembering that first things should always have the first place, and remembering also that had Jesus not come to earth there could be no Christmas, we of this congregation will make Him our first thought in connection with Christmas. We will prepare and present Him a gift—the one most pleasing to Him—the gift of a reconsecrated life and service. Then we will give proof of that reconsecration by what we do for Christ's needy and sick folk, and by the amount of joy we bring into our respective homes.—"Brotherly Words," Church of Holy Communion, New York.

Wilt Thou Follow Me?

Jane Dalziel Wood.

And wilt thou follow Me, Child?
And wilt thou go with Me?
Then take thy life in thy two hands
And all thy heart with thee.

And give the whole of all thy store
When any heart lacks food,
For this no gold is good enough,
Love only is true good.

How many people kneel and pray, "O God, enable us to make this church a tremendous success! But do not ask the minister to work too hard, do not ask the men and women in the church to study and think too much, do not ask any one to do any sacrificial giving!" Does God answer those prayers? Hardly! God is apparently working on the principle that if things are to be changed, they will be changed—mainly, not exclusively—through human agencies. We should not ask God to relieve us from the necessity of cultivating our spiritual life, working hard to develop our churches, sacrificing ourselves for the cause of Christ, and by laying down our lives in His service.—J. G. Gilkey.

The Discontented Pine.

Helen Bayley Davis.

A small and sturdy pine tree stood alone
Upon a hilltop; discontented there
It brooded o'er its troubles; some were real
And like all other pine trees have to bear,
While others were imaginary ones.
The tears it shed were little brown pinecones.

It sighed, "The other trees are all a brighter green
And rustle like their leaves are made of silk;
I'm just a stark, ungainly tree; alas,
No leaves have I, no sap as pure as milk.
I'm full of needles, sharp and prickly points;
A sap like gum, seeps through my limbs and joints."

Time passed; the little pine grew thick and tall
And stately. As the Christmastide drew near

The eyes of men beheld its shapeliness
And coveted such beauty; yet no fear
The pine tree felt. Still discontented there
It stood; its pungent odor filled the air.

On Christmas morn it woke and gazed about

In wonder. Balls of red and glittering gold

With silver garlands gay, adorned its boughs

And little children clapped their hands and told

Of Santa Claus; they danced about in glee

And lovingly they touched the wonder-tree!

The pine, then gave a sigh of ecstasy.

So deep, its garlands quivered with delight;

The happy little children laughed and sang

Until, tired out, they lay at Christmas night

Asleep, beneath its boughs. Exultant, there,

The pine contented blessed them with a prayer!

fallen, and her weapons of war perished.

Jacob: Bethlehem hath ever been little among the princes of Judah, but now even Jerusalem, she that was great among the nations and princes among the provinces, is become tributary. Our inheritance is turned to strangers, our houses to aliens. The crown is fallen from our heads.

Gabriel stands beside the shepherds.

Gabriel: Yet fear not: for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour which is Christ the Lord.
And this shall be a sign unto you: ye shall find the Babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger.

A multitude of the heavenly host appear singing:

"Glory be to God on high and on earth peace, good will toward men. We praise Thee, we worship Thee, we glorify Thee, we give thanks to Thee, for Thy great glory, O Lord God heavenly King, God the Father Almighty."

The angels disappear.

Joel: Let us now go even unto Bethlehem and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord hath made known unto us.

(Curtain.)

Between Scenes 1 and 2 is sung Hymn
56, stanzas 4 and 1.

Scene 2.

This scene takes place outside the cave or stable of the Nativity. Joel stands at its entrance; within, Mary, Joseph, Jacob and Simon are grouped about the manger. The three kings enter. Melchior addresses Joel.

Melchior: Where is He that is born
King of the Jews?

Joel: What sign saw ye concerning Him?

Melchior: We saw a very great star shining among the stars and dimming them so that they appeared not. And thereby we knew that a king was born unto Israel, and we came to worship
Him.

Balthasar: And first we journeyed to Jerusalem, but lo, the star which we saw in the East went on before us, until it came and stood over yonder cave.

Joel: Even here shall ye behold the King Whom ye seek. For unto us a Child is born, unto us a Son is given:
and the government shall be upon His shoulder: and His name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty
God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace.

Joel guides the kings to the manger.
Gaspar (offering gold at the manger): Gold of Ophir I bring unto Thee Who canst not be valued with the precious beryl or sapphire, with rubies or the topaz of Arabia.

Joel: And Jehovah hath sworn that He shall be a priest forever after the order of Melchisedek.

Melchior (offering frankincense):
Frankincense, sweet and holy, would I give unto Thee Whose life shall be made an offering for sin.

Joel: The Spirit of the Lord God shall be upon Him; because the Lord hath anointed Him to preach good tidings unto the meek; He hath sent Him to bind up the broken-hearted, to pre-claim liberty to the captives and the opening of the prison to them that are bound.

Balthasar (offering myrrh): Precious myrrh, the holy oil of anointing, have I brought for One upon Whom the Spirit of the Lord shall rest, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the Lord.

A curtain at the back of the stage is drawn aside to show groups of angels on either side. They sing Hymn 49, "O Come, All Ye Faithful," as the play ends.

(Curtain.)

Try It.

Mother shook her head soberly. "You can never learn to play the piano without practice, daughter. Your music teacher practiced these same things over and over when she was a little girl.
That is why she can teach you and the other children so well today."

"I don't like to practice!" said Edna soberly.

Father came in just then, and he added: "Everything has to be practiced that we wish to do well, doesn't it, mother? Even being good will come easier if we practice at it every day, you know. Practice making your lips smile, Edna dear, and see how much easier it will be tomorrow."

Edna ran away to the piano and began to work busily at her exercises.—

Bob's Health Game.

Helena Lorenz Williams.

"What's the good of bein' clean," mumbled Bob, whose mother had just made him get up from the table to wash his soiled hands before he tackled a large slice of bread with which he always began his dinner.

"It makes you healthy," answered his mother. That was all she had time to say, because at that moment the baby dropped a spoon on the floor, and in the attempt to see where it had gone put his whole face in a bowl of oatmeal. It was a dramatic moment. Mother was distressed and Bob and father laughed until the tears rolled down their cheeks.

Bob's mother was right, however.
And the very next day at school he found out why. Miss Evans, the pretty teacher who had just come to Cornish from another town, introduced to the class a strange lady carrying a large portfolio. The lady, it turned out, was the county school nurse, and Miss Evans had asked her to talk to the class about a new game called the Modern Health Crusade.

It was the strangest game Bob had ever heard about. A fellow became a knight in a great war for health against the enemy, Disease. Stranger yet was the fact that in order to stay in the game one had to wash one's hands, clean one's teeth, take a bath and eat green vegetables. But the funniest thing of all was that these mean jobs no longer seemed so hateful. Because suddenly they became sword-thrusts at an enemy, and the oftener one gave a thrust, the worse for the enemy and the better for the warrior. A really good warrior, in fact, was pretty sure of victory, which in this case meant

THE LITTLE POET'S CORNER.

A Christmas Poem.

Jane Jones, Age 9.

On a cold winter night
Near the end of the year,
On a hillside some shepherds
Pretty music did hear.

They were frightened,
So their faces they hid,
But an angel said kindly,
"Please do as I bid."

"If you follow this star
The King you will see,
He is gentle and kind
As King Herod couldn't be"

They followed the star
Till they came to a stall,
And in it they found
The Saviour of all.

They blessed Him and blessed Him
As much as they could,
And whispered to themselves,
"He'll do us much good."

They loved Him real much,
As all people should,
And after many years
He did us all good.

that he was not likely to be bothered with measles, scarlet fever, whooping cough and other awful things that some people were always getting. Bob had had the mumps once, and to his dying day he wouldn't forget what it had felt like to have such a funny face and to stay indoors.

On his way home from school Bob and his little neighbor Lillian and her brother Joe talked the matter over. Girls, it seemed, could be Modern Health Crusaders, too. And they all decided enthusiastically that keeping clean, eating green vegetables and doing the other "chores" might not be so bad. The Crusaders received promotions in rank like the knights in King Arthur's day, from knight to knight banneret after which they could become knights of the Round Table.

There are more than seven million boys and girls in the United States who are enrolled in the Modern Health Crusade. They are all in the war against disease, particularly tuberculosis, in order to make a healthier and happier America. In order to give a still greater number of children the opportunity to enlist in this army, the National Tuberculosis Association will hold its seventeenth Christmas seal sale throughout the country in December.

A Little Shepherd Lad.

Eugenie du Maurier.

A little shepherd lad watched the smoke curl up lazily from the fire. The night was cold and the warmth felt good. A baby lamb, with its broken leg, cuddled up close to him, and the boy threw his arm around it in protection—bringing it nearer to the blaze. His heart ached for the little helpless thing.

The voice of the older shepherds came to him in a drowsy hum across the crackle of the fire. And his head drooped a little in sleep. He must have slumbered a few minutes. He roused up with a start. The whole hillside and valley were flooded with a strange great light. He saw that the others were crowded together in fright. So taking the lame little lamb in his arms, the little shepherd boy hurried over to be with them. It was not good to feel alone at this strange time.

But, even as he reached the group, gazing up into the heavens with frightened eyes, the air was filled with the music of sweet voices and a heavenly chorus sang praises to the Lord. And they said to the shepherds, "Fear not! We bring you tidings of great joy; for in Bethlehem is born to you a Saviour, Who is Christ the Lord. And this is a sign to you—you will find Him wrapped in swaddling clothes and laid in a manger."

The shepherds were filled with joy. And smiling, they said one to another, "Come, let us go and see this thing which is come to pass." And they moved on toward Bethlehem. And lo! a great star guided them and came to rest over a little stable.

The little shepherd boy followed as best he could; for the little lamb was heavy in his young arms. Yet he feared to leave it lest it come to harm. When at last he reached the stable he found the other shepherds on their knees. And the place was filled with a holy light. A young Babe lay in His mother's arms. And from these two the light seemed to come. Drawing the little lamb gently around his shoulders, he, too, knelt and adored the Holy One. The whole world seemed filled with a great peace—for was not this the Prince of Peace Who had come to bring joy and happiness to a tired world?

Speaking of Laziness.

It never entered Fat Dog's head to lie anywhere except right at the bottom of the front steps. People simply had to walk over him, that was all. He would have thought it too much trouble to find another place; besides, from that spot he could see the whole front yard without even turning his head.

One autumn morning he lay there blinking and listening to the wild bark of his neighbor, Rouser, who was chasing a rabbit. Presently he got up slowly.

"Well," he said, scowling. "I'm not going to lie here any longer watching and listening to laziness. I will go and talk to old Backbone."

Every one liked Backbone, the old house cat; she was wise and kind.

Fat Dog found her out by the woodshed earnestly watching a rat hole. "Well, I am glad to see somebody busy," he remarked, "for of all the lazy goings-on out there in front—"

Backbone jerked her tail nervously, and her whiskers quivered.

"Of all the lazy goings-on," Fat Dog repeated.

Backbone gave a patient sigh and sat upright. "There, I suppose you've scared him away," she said. "Who's lazy?"

"Every one out there in the front yard," was the reply.

Backbone turned her eye wistfully on the rat hole. "But who?" she asked.

"Well," said Fat Dog slowly, "that woodpecker for one. He has some kind of a foolish drum fixed up on a tree, and this whole morning he has done nothing but pound on it. He'd much better be at work."

After thinking solemnly for a while old Backbone asked, "Who else is lazy?"

"Oh, all of them," replied Fat Dog. "Take those nonsensical bees. This blessed morning they've flown round humming tunes and smelling flowers; I couldn't even take my nap."

Backbone blinked. "They must have been noisy indeed to keep you awake, Fat Dog," she said. "Well, and who else?"

Fat Dog was beginning to feel cross with his friend. "All of them, I tell you," he snapped. "That hen in the box in the shed has sat perfectly still on her nest for days without moving a feather. You'd think she might find some work to do, wouldn't you, now?"

"Well, at least she didn't keep you awake," was the answer.

"Yes, she did; she made me nervous. Then the squirrels with their silly chatter, running up and down tree trunks and switching their tails. I never saw the like."

Old Backbone mused again. "Did the ants bother you?" she inquired at last.

"They most certainly did," Fat Dog replied. "One of them had the impertinence to crawl over my nose. They were having some sort of parade; a lot of them marching in a long line—and on a hot day like this, too!"

Old Backbone got up suddenly and looked toward her rat hole; then she looked back.

"Fat Dog," she said mildly, "could you meet me and a few others under the big oak at dusk?"

Fat Dog looked sulky. "Maybe I can," he said, "if I'm not feeling too tired by that time, Backbone."

He waddled slowly back to his place by the steps.

That evening at dusk he strolled out to the big oak. Old Backbone was seated gravely under the tree. A number of squirrels were with her, and the woodpecker and the hen that had caused Fat Dog so much worry were perched just above. A few bees buzzed round and a company of ants had assembled on a hummock near by.

"Well, well," said the newcomer to himself, "all of our lazy friends seem to be out this evening." Aloud he said, "How do you do?"

The others all answered politely and then began to talk about the weather and the crops. An old gray squirrel remarked that the nut crop was pretty good that year.

"By the way," said Backbone, "the children had a nutting party yesterday and had luncheon in the woods. Did any of you go down afterward and look for scraps and crumbs?"

Fat Dog remarked to himself that they were doubtless all too lazy to go anywhere.

The woodpecker spoke up. "I was so busy getting a meal from the limb of that old dead birch that I didn't even know the party was going on."

"How about you, Mrs. Hen?" Backbone inquired.

"I couldn't leave my eggs," the hen answered softly.

Fat Dog began to fidget a little.

"We squirrels didn't go down," the old gray squirrel explained. "We couldn't stop gathering nuts for ourselves, you see. Business is business."

"Yes, yes," all the ants joined in together. "Business is business; work is work. Who knows, we might have left our jobs to go down to the wood and then have found nothing."

Fat Dog pricked up his ears. "Couldn't you have put off your parade for a little while?" he asked sharply.

"Parade? Parade" echoed the ants. They began to scramble round in much excitement.

Fat Dog looked at Backbone with a grin. "Didn't I tell you they were parading all the morning?" he said.

At that a sturdy young ant spoke up with dignity. "We were in line carrying our winter provisions to our storehouse," he explained.

"Oh!" said Fat Dog in a weak voice. He had begun to feel rather foolish.

Then the bees lost their patience with the meddlesome old dog; they all began to talk at the same time. One big brown fellow flew close to Fat Dog's ear and buzzed loudly into it. "We bees were busy, too. We were gathering and storing honey. Seeeeee-eeee-eeeeee?"

"Oh, stop, stop, stop!" whined Fat Dog. He was so ashamed of himself by that time that he got up and hurried off with his tail between his legs.

"Well, well," he panted as he reached the steps again, "they weren't so lazy after all!" He turned round three times and sniffed, "Maybe I'm the lazy one," he said.—Elizabeth Turner in Youth's Companion.

The Little Christ-Child.

There was cheer at the inn, with windows alight,
But no room to offer a child that night—

The little Christ-Child, so tender and small:

They made Him a couch in the cow's rough stall.

They covered Him there in manger's straw;

Only the humble cattle saw.

Warmth in the village, cheer at the inn.
And the straw in the manger scant and thin;

But angels sang on the hill nearby,
And a gold star rose in the winter sky;

His mother pillowed Him on her arm,
And the little sleeper was glad and warm.

Hundreds and hundreds of years have gone,
And still the angels are singing on:

Still the light of that lovely star
Over the world-hills shines afar;

Still into hearts where love is bright
The Christ-Child enters on Christmas night!

—Mary Talbot in Christian Observer.

The Silver Cones.

In the mountain land of Bohemia there lived in the long ago a little child named Hilda, whose father and mother were both dead. She was thus left entirely alone, and was very poor, but a kind-hearted miner and his wife, who were also poor and with six children of their own, took her into their home, which was hardly more than a hut. "We will divide what we have," they said. Hilda was a dear child, and they soon loved her greatly.

It was midwinter, and Christmas was not far away. All the children thought of nothing but St. Nicholas. They hoped he would not forget them upon the Holy Night, but the father told them they must not set their hearts upon his coming, as their hut stood so lonely in the forest that St. Nicholas might not find it.

At last the day before Christmas came. Little Hilda started out with a basket to gather pine cones, for she wished to make a bright fire that night, and also she hoped to sell them to some servant from the prince's castle, and so be able to buy a gift for the miner and his dear children.

Now, in that land of Bohemia, on the summit of a lofty mountain, a strange creature named Rubezahl made his home. He was possessed of many magic powers, and had great rooms of gold, silver and jewels hid deep in the center of the earth. He could change himself into any form he chose. Hilda had often heard of him, and wondered if she would ever see him. As she came near to the fir trees a tiny, white-haired man walked out from the shadows. He had a long beard and a jolly red face.

"What are you doing?" he called to her. Hilda told him how good the miner and his family had been to her, and how much she wished to make them a present. The little old man seemed greatly interested. "The largest cones are on that tree," he said, pointing; "gather the best." Then he went back into the forest.

Little Hilda thanked him, and ran to the great, dark fir. She could see the big, brown cones like beehives on its sweeping branches. Just as she came under the tree such a shower of them fell about her that she was frightened, but she took courage and filled her basket. Then she started for home again.

The cones seemed very heavy, and the further she went the heavier her basket grew. By the time she reached the hut she could carry it no further.

The children crowded about her as she uncovered the cones. They were no longer brown. They gleamed brighter than the moonlight through the fir trees. They were all changed into shining silver!—Adapted from the Story by Johanna Spyri.

The Tiger Hunt.

When all the grown-ups gather
Around the reading lamp
I put some chairs together
And make a hunting camp.

And then I hunt for tigers
In jungles in the hall;
And where it is the darkest
I very slowly crawl.

But once when I was hunting
I met some fiery eyes;
Though I was after tigers,
They took me by surprise.

I didn't know I shouted,—
The grown-ups told me that,—
And then I saw my tiger
Was just our old gray cat.

THE PARABLES OF SAFED THE SAGE.

The Parable of the Christmas Conspiracy.

Now this I have to report, that for certain days and weeks there have been places in mine own Home where I am not admitted, and that there go on whisperings behind my back which I am not permitted to hear. And the daughter of Keturah cometh to the house, and she and Keturah slip aside and converse in Low Tones. And I listen not in upon them.

And now and again they say unto me, Father, what shall we buy thee for Christmas? For thou art an hard man to buy things for.

And indeed it is hard to buy Christmas gifts for a man who hath no Bad Habits. For I require no Smoking Sets nor Boxes of Cigars nor such like things.

But this disturbeth me not, for I am well assured that when Christmas cometh I shall discover that Keturah hath not forgotten me, and the daughter of Keturah and her husband will have remembered me, and my four sons will have thought of me. Yea, and it may be that friends whom I have never seen will send me a Box of Cocoanut Candy or a Plum Pudding or something else that is good to eat. For this hath happened, and it hath not yet offended me; and I see no reason to anticipate that it would offend me if it occurred again.

But I am thinking about this Whispering and Conspiring that goeth on, and how it happeneth all over the land and over the world at this season. And I am thinking how it is that the goods that are sold in the Shops are sold unto those who desire them that they may give them away. And it seemeth to me a Remarkable thing that just now the Merchants are assuming that every man will be thinking what he can buy for Some One Else, and every Woman will be spending more than she can afford and doing it for Others.

And it may be that the thing is overdone, but if there be anything that we can afford to have overdone once a year, it is thoughtfulness for others.

And I think how marvelous it is that ever since the Wise Men opened their treasures to give unto the Christ Child Gold and Frankincense and Myrrh, men have had an epidemic of Altruism when they have remembered God's great Gift to men.

There is no good thing that may not be overdone, and I like not to see even a good thing done to excess. But taking it by and large, there is no excess of loving other people, and I am glad that on one day in the year, and on certain days preceding, men and women and little children are taught to think of others, for the love of the good God, whose thought of others sent into this human world its One Best Christmas Gift.—Selected.

God's Voice in the Darkness.

While our Lord and the three apostles were on the Mount of Transfiguration there came a cloud, we read, and overshadowed them, and they feared as they entered into the cloud. Then out of that cloud they heard the voice of God.

Some years ago we were coming down the western slope of Mount Mitchell in North Carolina, the highest point east of the Rockies. It was a lovely day. Above us stretched the sky like a wonderful blue dome. Below and reaching away into the distance were a hundred peaks and ranges with their green valleys. In the distance was a cloud that shut out a part of the view toward the south. The wind was from the south and the cloud was coming nearer. Soon it was very near, just over the valley below us. Then all at once the brightness of the sun faded out and cold and darkness and mist shut us in. If we had not known the road we should have been lost in the rain and darkness.

The cloud came over the disciples on the Mount and they feared. They were afraid that it might hide from their gaze Jesus, as it had shut out from their view Moses and Elijah. Then out of the cloud came the voice of God, bringing back hope and assurance.

This experience through which the disciples passed is one that has repeated itself countless times in the history of the Church and in the lives of individuals.

More than once clouds have overshadowed the Church. Such a time came in the dark days that preceded the Reformation. Read the literature of that day and you will see how it reflects the fear that everywhere possessed the souls of Christians. But God spoke out of the cloud and a new hope came to the Church.

Such a time came again only a little while ago. Science was beginning to work a revolution in the thinking of men. Darwin had come with his hypothesis. The geologists were reading in the rocks the messages of a million years ago. Chemists were telling us facts of which the world had not dreamed before. In the face of these things men asked what was to become of the old faith. The clouds of doubt and mistrust were sweeping the Church and men feared as they entered into the cloud. But God was speaking out of the cloud, giving the world a larger, truer, conception of Himself than we had known before.

Individuals, too, have known this experience. Job had loved and served God and his life had been happy with the peace and plenty which God had given him. Then the cloud fell upon him. He lost his property. He lost his children. He lost his health. Everything in which he had rejoiced was taken or estranged from him—everything but his faith in God. But in the darkness and loneliness of the cloud he listens and he hears there the voice of God and his soul comes out from the shadow with a new hope and new message.

Lachlan Campbell, of whom Macaren tells us, was an elder in the kirk of Drumtochty. He was a man of God who had tried all his days to do his duty as he saw it. But there was one great fault in his spiritual makeup. He loved God and he served Him, but sympathy and patience with others in their weakness was wanting in his heart. He had one daughter, whom he dearly loved. All the hopes of the lonely old man were bound up in her. One day the cloud came upon him. Flora ran away to a life of sin, and the heart of the father was broken. He bowed to the will of God, but he cast his daughter out of his heart and cut her name from the family Bible. Then Marget Howe came to him and told him of the lost sheep and the Shepherd, and he heard the voice from the cloud that had been trying to speak to him through the years. He opened his heart and his cottage to the prodigal, and to every other lamb who had gone astray.

Most of us have known what it was to fear as we entered into some cloud that had been drawing near us. But when it came we heard the voice of our Father and the fear passed away.

In the Sistine Madonna, Raphael has painted the mother and child against a background of clouds. But as you draw nearer you perceive that the clouds are the faces of myriads of angels sent to watch and guard those whom God loves. —Dr. S. N. Hutchison in Presbyterian Banner.

Taking Care of the Minutes.

Girls who hope to make good use of their spare time—those free hours that come to the busiest person—ought to make it a point to study their talents and take up some art that appeals to them. Many a girl who works all day can learn another profession in her spare moments. Perhaps she may be musically inclined, or have a decided gift for painting, and good use of her spare moments may some time enable her to turn this gift to practical account.

Indeed, it is a well-known fact that many persons have, in their spare minutes, begun and become proficient in some work that, when they least expected it, proved the stepping-stone to a better position.

Those who waste time in aimless "nothings" seldom reach the heights others, perhaps less talented, attain.

Those of us who toil for a livelihood have to regard time from a serious viewpoint, and not squander it in trivial nothings. Life is composed of moments, and, if we would have our days pass both pleasantly and profitably, we should make good use of each fleeting hour.

When we give our time up to aimless pursuits, we are spendthrifts of the most foolish type, and will, unless we change our views, develop into selfish, complaining women. It is a well-known fact that persons who are always deploring the "monotony of life" are those individuals who never try to interest themselves in anything worth while.

The girl who can ply her needle knows that many dainty and necessary garments may be made in the spare moments that come to her. As a result, she always appears attractively attired, and at about one-half what the young woman who does not sew must pay for her frocks.

Private Prayer and Public Worship.

Deeper reality in public worship is a startling need throughout the Church. The stranger who ventures in to a morning service ought to feel at once that "God is in this place," because the worshipping congregation realize His presence. The men of the congregation should go away, not only stimulated by an invigorating utterance from the pulpit, but refreshed by an assurance that they have been for an hour in communion with God. Behind every invitation which we extend to a fellow man to "go to church" should be the certainty that, if he accepts the invitation, he will feel, beyond peradventure, that he is in his Father's House. The priests of the Church, appointed to lead the congregation in worship, cannot perform their duty except they feel that the congregation is also leading them. The contribution of both the priest and the layman to public worship is thus of supreme importance if the Church is to introduce men to God.

This contribution is not fully described in the words, "a hearty service," or "good singing," though both are valuable if real. The chief need is that each man of us should pray in the pew, or at the prayer desk, not simply sit or kneel in an appointed place. The General Convention should be a confession of my sin, the General Thanksgiving an utterance of my gratitude, the Collect for Grace my own petition for God's protection, the prayer for all sorts and conditions of men my fervid appeal for the world's needs. We must personalize our public worship if we would make public worship worth while. As soon as it is evidently worth while, men will claim their place in the churches.

The secret must be learned, however, at home by the bedside, in the little sanctuary where we meet God at morning and night, and whenever we kneel to pray. Our private prayer must be loosed from its formality, and become the expression of the needs we feel most deeply. In a word, each man must learn by himself the habit of real prayer. Then our public worship with our brethren will become golden and glorious reality.

The man who sees the Face of God in the quiet of his own chamber will discern that Face in the great congregation, but, most of all, he will unconsciously lead his neighbor to see Him. —Edmund S. Rousmaniere.

Nothing is promised to the idle and the careless and to the man who postpones and dreams; but everything to the man who puts his soul into the service of God and the discipleship of Jesus Christ. Ask and ye shall receive; seek and ye shall find; knock and it shall be opened unto you—the gate of mercy and the gate of heaven.—W. L. Watkinson.

Just as the world in general appraises us socially and morally by the friends we choose, so does our choice of books proclaim our mental status; and just as we unconsciously assume, in a greater or less degree, the character and principle of those with whom we associate intimately, so are we unconsciously influenced by the books we read.—Exchange.

It is estimated that expenses will be less than the amount originally estimated as needed to execute the budget in the sum of.....	100,000

If these legacies are used to meet appropriations, the minimum amount necessary to be collected in December merely to pay the General Church's bills is.....	$868,086

WHAT IS THE WILL OF THE CHURCH?

In each year since 1919 there was a surplus of income over expenditures, except in 1922. For the four-year period, 1920-1923, there was a small net surplus. Shall there be a surplus or a deficit in 1924? At the joint conference of the Bishops and the National Council in October the Bishops expressed unanimous approval of a policy of advance rather than retreat and asserted that the solution of the financial problem of the Church lay in providing larger income rather than in retrenchment which would cripple the work or mean partial withdrawal from the field.

The Bishops also cited many evidences of the growing interest of the people of the Church in the national work. In confirmation of this it may be noted that the total amount received from the dioceses in 1923 was larger than in 1922.

If offerings to the amount of $868,086 are received by the close of the year, there will not be a deficit. Any surplus will be used for reduction of debt.

If the full budget quotas are met the debt will be materially reduced and the legacies released for new work. While these legacies are legally available for current expenses it is evident that such final gifts ought to be used for permanent advance work.

This desired end can be reached

- (1) If all pledges are paid before the close of the year, and
 - (2) If the friends of the work will supplement their regular offerings by direct generous gifts.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

A face without a smile is like a lantern without light.

"The yellow peril may become a golden opportunity."

"Give us our daily bread" is a prayer that God will feed the world.

Grumbling in a Christian is a sure sign that he does not pray enough.

God has two dwellings—one in heaven, and the other in a meek and thankful heart.—Izaak Walton.

"The Gospel of Jesus Christ is not only a Gospel for all men, but it is a Gospel for the whole man."—Capen.

Young and old must raise the lay
That their heart engages;
For the Child is born today
Who is King of Ages.

Oh, the freedom with which the gates of the divine forgiveness are thrown open! The Bible trembles, and burns and overruns with offers!—Phillips Brooks.

Many favors which God giveth us ravel out for want of hemming, through our own unthankfulness; for though prayer purchaseth blessings, giving praise doth keep the quiet possession of them.—Thomas Fuller.

Awake, awake, O sluggish heart!
O foes, be friends, forget your smart!
O cold hearth, glow; laugh, lonely place!
O'erflow, O earth, with every grace;
Sing, sing again, this blessed morn,
A Saviour, Christ the Lord, is born.

Because a lovely star
Above a town stood still;
Because some angels sang
Upon a lonely hill;
Because a little Child
Came down to be our King—
O Father, take today
The Christmas love we bring.

The Church is not one particular parish or one particular Communion. It is the whole company of God's people, whether scattered throughout the world and wearing many names, or resting in the quiet oneness of Paradise. Our parochial life is great only so far as this is remembered. It is good to identify yourself in spirit with those with whom you disagree in points of religion.—Bishop Brent.

Holyday or Holiday

These two words represent, of course, but two spellings of the same word, but to the popular mind they represent ideas as far apart as the poles. The reason for this change of content is not far to seek. So long as the Church represented the highest element of authority, Sunday and other holy days took their color from that authority. In the world today the ultimate authority is not the Church, but the civil law. The fact that Sunday and Christmas are legal holidays make them in effect the creations of civil law. There is therefore in the back of the mind a feeling that these seasons are set apart by government as recurring exemptions from ordinary obligations. Hence it has come to pass that Christmas, which represents man's effort to realize his sense of obligation to the Father of all, is, generally speaking, the season of popular forgetfulness of that fact. There still remains about the festival a spirit of kindness and generosity. The "scent of the roses" still clings to the shattered vase. One of the deepest lessons of this modern Christmas is that we never at any other time recognize so keenly how stupid, awkward and untrained we are in the expression of kindness. A little child in one of those mental confusions so familiar to those who know children, offered a petition, which, not as an irreverent jest, but as a real prayer, might come from the lips of us all—"Forgive us our Christmases as we forgive those who Christmas against us."

The heart of the Christmas story is that God at this time gave Himself to the men and women and children of this world. This gift was not merely to the good and noble; but to the evil and the degraded as well. "I am come to save that which has gone to smash" is as much the message of Christmas as is the Angels' song. It may be we can find our way back to keeping Christmas as a holy day, if with every little gift at this season we try to give something of the very best of ourselves. One of the wisest counsellors we ever had said to us once: "One of your duties as a clergyman is to minister to the poor. You must think of their physical needs at all seasons; but at Christmas, do not give them what they need, give them something that they long for; never mind how foolish the gift may seem; the fact that you understand will make it rich, and they will repay you in love." We would suggest an adventure for Christmas Day. The difficulty of carrying it through successfully will give to it all the zest that goes with high adventure. Find some one who is not going to have any Christmas. If you live in the city there are several thousand such people in a few squares of you. If you live in the country, there are many such just behind that big body of pines a mile or so from the main road. Choose some of the very best of the Christmas cheer in your home. Do not send it by a servant or a child. Take it yourself, and when you get to the door, be sure the gift is in your own hand. Tell the one you have come to seek that God has blessed your home with plenty and on the Christ's Birthday you ask the privilege of sharing His gift with some one else.

If any one think that this Christmas adventure be easy, he has either learned the lesson after many trials, or he has never tried it at all. To give yourself with your gift is among the highest achievements of the Christian spirit.

Prophets and Bitter-Enders

The difference between a Prophet and a Bitter-Enders is that a Bitter-Enders is ruled by the Past and the Prophet is ruled by the Future. It is perfectly true that no one understands the present unless he has studied the past, and no less true, that no one can speak for the future unless he understands the present. As Dr. Nash used to say, "The Bible was not written by scholars and mystics, but by statesmen and missionaries." The Bible is everywhere the Book of movement. It speaks everywhere the language of its present, but it always faces the future. The prophet's sense of certainty is grounded in history. He knows that the evils of today are rooted in the compromises the Past made with the evil of its day. The prophet's devotion is to the absolutely best, and he knows that God is on his side. He knows that the only way he can pay his debt to the Past is by trying to rectify the wrongs it has done and permitted. The Future is his to conquer, but the Past belongs to him and he must test its conclusions by his conscience, which is his reaction to the call of present duty. The Bitter-Enders stands as the guardian of values that have been; the prophets for living values; every one of which can be translated into action. As the prophet makes inventory of the Past, he finds there only human values. All else had value only as it helped to make value in individual lives. The prophet's reverence is for persons, not things. The prophet is concerned with a larger freedom for those who come after, knowing that freedom is creative and will provide its own institutions. To every man there comes a time of choice in which he must make his will, so to speak. A time when he must choose whether he shall, so far as he is concerned, wish upon the succeeding generation the mould, of his own mind, or give to the next generation the gift of reverence for one who dared to sacrifice that mould that his children might be free.

The generation that is stationary is succeeded by one that is stagnant. The true prophet is not one who measures values in terms of intellect alone, for most values are not intellectual. The prophet is one who frees his heart as well as his brain from the things that make life narrow and sordid and mean; and lives and loves and struggles today because he believes in a better tomorrow.

All that is good in the Present was inherited from the Past, but it is its living expression that concerns us.

It is interesting and instructive to study the sources, and trace the life-history of a high ideal, but the transcendent worth of the ideal is that it sends us out on a quest. In Frederic Myers' lecture on Wycliffe, there is a description of the truly great man which ought to be familiar to all. "In order to be a great man a man must be the minister of a great cause. He must be full of faith that in the seeming littleness of the Present there are latent the germs of an immeasurable Future. He must be a man to whom the inspiration of the Almighty has given an understanding above other men: a view into the essence of things visible and into the existence of things invisible; a wisdom not merely of the Intellect but of the Heart; not only a keener perception of the True and the Right, but an intenser love of them. Insight, Foresight, these are his; but so also always are Sincerity, Sympathy; a love of the Real, a hatred of the False; a fear of nothing but being wrong, a coveting of nothing so much as doing well.

To see the right when others cannot, and to choose it when others will not: to resist temptations which others yield to, and to bear burdens cheerfully which others shrink from bearing at all; to have such confidence in himself and in his cause as may enable him to live on the approbation of his own conscience, and to be careless of the mere praise of others; yea, to cherish and to accomplish a purpose of blessing for his brethren amid their persecution and their scorn—these are the characteristics of a great man. And he who shall prophesy to men of the Divine for a lifetime in sackcloth: he who shall plead before them for Humanity and the Rights of Conscience, ready at any moment to seal his testimony with his blood, such a man is, I think, among the greatest."

The Practice of Religion

By the Reverend Robert E. Browning

"As His custom was, He went into the synagogue on the Sabbath Day."—Luke 4:6.

HERE is something just a trifle better than following the old adage: "Practice what you preach." It is to practice first and then do your preaching afterward. This was Christ's method. It made His words ring with authority and earnestness. Confucius had a similar maxim: "Act first and then speak according to your actions." It puts us on solid ground with the world to let them see our deeds first. Words are cheap. An old woman leaving the church was asked if the sermon was done. "No," she answered, "the sermon has been said. It has to be done."

Religion is an art, and an art teaches us to do. Tolstaid of religion: "It is not only a song of consolation, but also a bugle blast for a charge." It is Christ's life in action. Some one has described the Church as the extension of His incarnation. Well enough. But what was His incarnation? "He went about doing good." A little boy climbed up into his father's lap, threw his arms about his neck and said: "Father, I love you, and I want to do something about it." Many persons have never learned that loving God means "doing something about it." The world is full of hearers. What is tragically needed are those who have the courage to be doers of the word.

Religion is an art, and an art teaches us to do. Tolstoid said that the greatest of all arts is that of knowing how to live well. Religion means a habit or rule of life. Haphazard, sporadic, desultory religion, taken up when inclination or fancy suits, is a sham. There is no vacillating about it. It is doing definite things at definite times. It is a part of the habitual life of man. "Habit," says the psychologist, "simplifies our movements, makes them accurate, and diminishes fatigue." This principle is pre-eminently true in religion. Why are the acts and practices of religion so irksome to many persons? Why is church going such a bore? Why must people debate long with themselves when church bells call them to heavenly things? There is but one answer. They have never made religion a habit or custom. They are out of practice religiously. For Jesus there was never any vacillating or indecision. "As His custom was" settled every religious duty without any violent exercise of will power. Instinctively, as when a youth in the temple, "He must be in His Father's house." A teacher of elocution gives this rule: "Use constantly the kind of voice you would like to use occasionally." It is a wise rule to follow always. In conscience we must be constantly the kind of person we would like to be on occasions. Our great crises will find us just what we have been on normal occasions. In time of sorrow we shall be fortified if we have used fortitude in the "even tenor of our way." "The battle of Waterloo," one has well observed, "was not won on the field of conflict, but on the cricket field at Eton." Our trial hours will find us ready if we have been at school beforehand. A successful man is winning his success all along the line, not simply when the world hails him as a hero. Look back into each life that reaches the top of the ladder. That top is reached not by a single bound, but rung by rung. Life, like Christ's garment, is woven without seam. It is a consistent whole. There is nothing miraculous about success.

This habituation in religion is what most of us need. Emerson said that down in his heart there was a plant called reverence, and it needed watering at least once a week. Therefore he went to church. Many let this plant go for weeks without water, and they wonder why the springs of religion dry up, and God becomes an unreality. It has often been noticed in married persons living together for years that they grow like each other. Similarly, practice of the presence of God, trusting in Him, resorting to Him in prayer and communion, walking with Him, like Enoch of old, making Him our Friend, the "silent Partner" of life, will make us grow more like Him. As Moses came down from the mount, his face radiant with divine glory, so will we also be "partakers of the divine nature," reflecting God's glory, as the sun, though unseen, is reflected in the glory of the moon.

Two pernicious errors today are poisoning men's minds in respect to the practices of religion. One is that religious habits and customs are old-fashioned, out of date. These perfectionists have outgrown the rather childish performance of going through the routine of religion. Can one not be just as good outside of church? Some elect souls may, perhaps, get along without these helps. Some men are known to get well without doctors and hospitals, and others get an education without schools. But finer and better schools are still in demand and doctors and hospitals still perform a valuable service to humanity. For the general run of people, the Church has no substitute in the building of character. There is an inseparable connection between religion and conduct. "Do you go to church?" asked the Bishop of London. "No, I don't," answered the man, "but I have one boy who does and he is the best boy I have." This almost invariably holds true. Said a business man to a young fellow seeking employment: "Where do you spend your evenings?" This was a legitimate question. What a young man does with his evenings will largely determine what he is. When this lad could answer: "In the church club, sir," the recommendation seemed a safe venture and employment followed.

A second deterrent is the over-questioning attitude. I do not see the reason or necessity. Our ultimate authority here must be the example and inspiration of Jesus. He saw the necessity for Himself, and in the words of Mary to the servants: "Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it," we find the soldier's challenge:

"It is not for us to reason why,
Ours it is to do and die."

Follow God's leading blindly, if you must, but follow. That obedience will soon lead you through the tunnel to the light. Obedience has always proven the organ of spiritual vision. It is a gift we can all offer to God. Faithfulness is a talent all may possess.

Then, when religion has become a habit of thought and practice, that which first was started with difficulty is continued with ease. "When virtue and goodness have become a habit," writes one, "life has become divine." John has voiced the same truth: "They who are in God cannot sin." A moral, not a physical compulsion, leads us unerringly along the "straight and narrow way." Hesiod, though he wrote six hundred years before Christ, voiced this noble Christian thought:

"Men follow vice in easy-going throng,
Smooth is the road, nor need they follow long.
But virtue's paths the gods immortal hedge,
Imposing sweat and toil as victory's pledge.
The way is long and rough at first, and steep.
Who strives to ascend must steadfast footing keep;
But once the height is scaled, the summit crowned,
Then easy runs the road that first so hard was found."

Partnership in Industry

A PARTNERSHIP plan which gives the employees of an industrial property a share in management and profits, equal in many respects to that enjoyed by the owners, is suggested for the consideration of industry generally in a report on "Sharing Management with the Workers," issued by the Russell Sage Foundation. The report is based on a study of the Partnership Plan of the Dutchess Bleachery, Inc., at Wappingers Falls, New York, which, in the opinion of Mary Van Kleeck, Director of the Department of Industrial Studies of the Foundation, is "one of the most significant of the several hundred current experiments in giving workmen a share in the management of business."

In making the report public, Miss Van Kleeck said: "The Dutchess Bleachery experience indicates affirmative answers to the much discussed questions: Is it financially safe for a company to permit its wage-earning employees to vote on questions of shop management? Do workers desire to have this share of responsibility? Lacking technical training and experience in administration, is their judgment valuable concerning questions of general policy? Will they have consideration for the interests of stockholders? The further point is made that in this case, when given power to determine policies, the employees did not use it to advance their own wages and decrease working hours regardless of the financial state of the business."

The report itself, a document of one hundred and fifty pages, was prepared by Ben M. Selekman, a member of the Foundation's staff, who conducted the investigation.

"The significance of this experiment, in so far as industry generally is concerned," declared Miss Van Kleeck, "lies in the fact that the Partnership Plan was introduced under such unfavorable conditions in the Dutchess Bleachery that its success in this plant indicates the possibility of securing equally, if not more, favorable results in almost any industrial property through equally sincere and efficient efforts."

Mr. Selekman found that the Partnership Plan of the Dutchess Bleachery not only affords representation to employees in determining the conditions of their employment, but admits a representative of the wage-earners in the mill to the Board of Directors, turns over entirely to a board of workmen the administration of the company's houses for employees' families, assigns definite responsibility for shop management to a Board of Managers composed of six officers of the company and of six wage-earners, and provides employees with information concerning the financial condition and conduct of the business.

Three years of such cooperation, Mr. Selekman says, has transformed a community of dilapidated and unsanitary houses into a town of clean, comfortable, and happy homes, and has at the same time revolutionized the attitude of employees toward production to such an extent that the company earned comparatively high dividends during two years when other plants in the same industry were idle because of the business depression.

"As managers, the representatives of the operatives have displayed good business judgment," says the report. "Not only have they utilized the machinery of the Partnership

Plan to present and adjust grievances, but they have cooperated in the constructive tasks of running a factory. They have suggested such methods of increasing efficiency as time clocks, foremen's conferences, and mass meetings. Together with representatives of the stockholders, they elected the present manager and superintendent. The whole tenor of their participation has been not 'How much can we get out of the bleachery for ourselves?' but 'What can we do to make this a successful and efficient business enterprise for every one concerned?'

"The Partnership Plan has revolutionized the attitude of the operatives toward production. All the foremen have perceived a new alertness on this subject among the men. To cut down waste, to make certain that no goods were spoiled in the process of bleaching, to finish the greatest number of yards, meant an increase in profits and a larger net income to each operative. Here was an incentive, direct and personal, such as only proprietors of a business have heretofore experienced.

"There can be no doubt that, in spite of the obstacles yet to be overcome, the Partnership Plan has had a very real success from the point of view of the workers as well as from that of the stockholders. Not only do operatives feel that they have a stake in the success of the business, but the active owners realize that a policy of cooperative management such as obtains in the bleachery does not necessarily mean a decrease of dividends."

The conclusion of the report is in this statement: "Because of the sincerity of those who devised the plan in seeking a more democratic as well as a more personal basis for human relations in industry than has hitherto prevailed, and because of their courage in putting it into operation, the Dutchess Bleachery has achieved a place of leadership. We hope that this record of cooperation and partnership between management and operatives in the bleachery may lead to equally far-seeing experiments in other industrial establishments."

The publication of this report reveals that the Russell Sage Foundation has had underway since 1919 a series of investigations covering, in addition to the Partnership Plan of the Dutchess Bleachery, the Rockefeller plan of employees' representation as practiced in the steel mills and coal mines of the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company, the Works Council plan of the United States government arsenal at Rock Island, Ill., and the employment policies of William Filene's Sons Company in their store in Boston. The report of the Foundation's investigation into the workings of the Rockefeller plan of employees' representation—the next in the series—will be issued probably within a month.

This series of studies was undertaken after interviews with a number of outstanding engineers, social workers, investigators, government officials, employers, and representatives of labor, whose advice had been sought as to how the Foundation could most effectively contribute toward the improvement of human relations in industry. Each study consisted of a first-hand investigation of the plants involved, extended conversations with both employees and employers, examination of records, and finally the checking up of all doubtful or disputed points.

A Christmas Meditation

Angels and shepherds, wise men and a star, gifts offered to a Babe in a manger surrounded by "beasts of the stall," a "Lowly Maiden Mother," and Christmas Carols filling the air for nineteen hundred years! "Mysticism," cries the modern philosopher! "The divine touch of human love and guidance," cries the believer. "Everywhere, Christmas tonight," sings the child as he looks with shining eyes at the lighted Christmas Tree, or holds his overflowing stocking which Santa Claus has so generously filled. Nor can the elders escape the contagion. No amount of labored reasoning can deaden the enthusiastic observance of Christmas Day, and "Merrie Christmas" is the greeting which makes the atmosphere vocal with honest joy.

We thank God for the mysteries which surround the day. Home and Church are made beautiful with "The fir tree, the pine tree and the box together" and the Sanctuaries are beautified indeed thereby. It is the "Spirit of Christmas," a spirit which came to the old earth when Christ was born in Bethlehem centuries ago; a spirit which is needed in the struggle between faith and doubt, materialism and philosophic speculation, so mighty in the world today. Oh, the joy of our hearts that once in the year at least poetry and music and dreams and visions and love hold sway, and that the hearts and lives of men are led by "A Little Child!"

And what else could we expect when God comes to earth with a message of salvation? Are not the angels' music, and the shepherds and their sheep, and the star, and the Wise Men, and the Sleeping Babe the gentle, loving results of a mercy which would lift human lives from the hard experiences of struggle to the rich mysteries of a heavenly care? Is not the very poetic abandon of Christmas time a proof of the meeting between earth and Heaven, of the kissing of righteousness and peace declaring a union never to be broken? Do we not prove all the sweet reality of the "Old Story" of Bethlehem when we think of giving rather than receiving and when we long to bring cheer to the lonely and poor and sad everywhere?

Dear Christ, help us to be glad in the dear story of Thy birth, so beautiful in its simplicity, so glorious in its vision of open skies and angel songs. Blessed Christ Child, make us all children in happiness and faith and purity at this Christmas time, for so only can we enter the Kingdom.—The Rev. Dr. Floyd W. Tompkins.

A Christmas Greeting

By the Rt. Rev. R. E. L. Strider, D. D.

MORE than nineteen hundred years ago in the song of a heavenly choir the Saviour's birth was heralded over the quiet, starlit hills of Palestine. The helpless, little Babe lay sleeping in His manger crib; the Shepherds in wondering amazement listened to the Angels' word; reverent heads bowed low for a moment over the new-born Child; there were excited whisperings, the patter of passing footsteps, a moment of confusion in the night. Then the Shepherds went back to their flocks, the vision of Angels in the sky faded away, and once again the world went serenely on. Perhaps no more than an hour or two of recorded time were consumed in the acting of this drama. But what a mighty drama! How tremendously fraught with meaning for mankind those few short hours.

Try to vision all that has happened in the world because the Holy Babe was born that first, starry, Christmas night. It staggers the imagination to picture how different the course of history would have been had the Christ not come to earth. There would never have been written the Gospel story of His perfect life. We should never have heard of John and Peter and Andrew, of Paul, of Athanasius, of Ambrose, of Francis. The desert places of the earth would never have been watered, fertilized, and made to blossom through the outpoured lives of devoted heralds of the Cross. It is inconceivable that Florence Nightingale, John Wesley, Martin Luther, Phillips Brooks, Daniel S. Tuttle could never have lived. There would very likely have been no Renaissance, no Reformation, no era of discovery. Modern civilization, had it come to being at all, would have been a pagan civilization. No aspect of human life today could be as it is had the Christ not been born a human child. No birth ever meant so much. No event of history has proved so potent in tracing the orbit of the world's progress.

Once again we are approaching the night on which we commemorate and call to mind what happened on the first Christmas Eve. Once more it is midnight and the silent stars go by. We would reproduce in every detail what so wondrously happened then. With these songs upon our lips, with these thoughts surging white-winged through our hearts we would find and worship Jesus the Saviour of Mankind. Like the Shepherds of old we hear the angels singing. Once more across the silent hills rings the glad refrain, "Born this day a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord." Where? we cry. Where is the Saviour born today that we may go and worship Him? And the joyous voices of God's Angels direct us to the only manger in which for us the Christ can ever be born: the manger of each soul's intense desire, inside the stony cavern of the human heart. There in the silence of our inner consciousness, if we will but have it so, lying in all the sweet innocence of Hope, new-born, we may find Him this Christmas Day.

The Shepherds did not know the place nor the way. But the "lovely voices of the sky" went before them and they followed. In like manner we do not know the way down into the dark canyon of our soul of souls. Most of the paths men love to follow lead outward. We are wont to seek our peace and joy without, not within, ourselves. It is wealth, and pleasure, and the world's regard, we covet, not the approval of the still, small voice within. Outward, not inward, run the broad highways of man's deep desire. Of all the paths of earth, that which leads within ourselves is the last we wish to travel. But the Christmas Angels point that very path to each of us, and we may not refuse to follow it. Who knows? When once we stand face to face with self in the narrow stable of our deepest souls, perhaps, in the midst of all the ugly beastliness we have allowed to have its lodging there, will lie the little Babe of Christ's Saviourhood, new-born for us this Christmas Day, destined to work His righteous will within our sinful lives for ever. Is it not thus that He has worked in the world of men for nineteen hundred years? That stable reeking moisture and the smell of beasts was in sooth an unlikely birth chamber for the Heir of all the ages. But the fact that He was born there prompts us to believe He will not shun the hearts of men and women in a later day, if the way be clear and the door be open.

It is this sort of Christmas which we covet for ourselves and for our friends: one which points the way into the deeps of our inmost selves, where the Dear Saviour longs to be, born afresh for us, radiant, sufficient unto every human need. Is not the secret of a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year the realization in our own consciousness of a new faith in Him Who first brought peace to men? Merry Christmas in this sense, then, let us wish for all the world with all our hearts.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letter to the Editor" will appear in our columns except over the signature of the writer.

CORRECTING A MISUNDERSTANDING.

Mr. Editor:

May I beg the courtesy of brief space in your correspondence columns on a matter which, although not perhaps of such seriousness as to be obvious, is nevertheless somewhat embarrassing to a cause in which many of us believe.

A short time ago a publishing company, which puts out a very worthy course of Church School lessons, sent to its mailing list a card quoting from our parish paper here a paragraph which stated that after examination of many other courses we had chosen this one. This paragraph was from an article under our Settlement House heading, having to do only with our simple mission school there. But the advertisement did not so state.

Inasmuch as I happen to be a member of the Department of Religious Education of the Church, the Province and my Diocese, and a member of the Church School Commission; since I was fortunate enough to be one of the original Christian Nurture group, a member afterward of the Junior and Senior Council of the Christian Nurture Course, etc., this advertisement has been interpreted by many as a defection from the Christian Nurture Cause. I would not ask that any contradiction of this be made for my own sake; but, for the sake of the cause I so sincerely believe in, I am reluctant to allow even a slight rumor to arise that a simple believer, such as I, has turned disbeliever. I have been astonished to find the matter acquired any scope of comment, but my friends urge me to straighten out this slight misunderstanding. Please believe I write this with very real reluctance, for I do not wish to seem to hold my own example at all influential. But I am more reluctant to permit any seed of distrust of the Christian Nurture Course to germinate, however tiny a seed it may be.

The publishers have with fine spirit apologized and promised not to quote this paragraph further. But this letter is an endeavor to erase its original sending. It is only just to the Christian Nurture Course, however unintentional may have been the intention of the firm to create the comparison unexpectedly drawn by some to whom, despite my small deserving, I am a straw to show what way a wind blows.

Sing, Christmas bells!

Say to the earth this is the morn
Whereon our Saviour—King is born!
Sing to all men, the bond, the free,
The rich, the poor, the high, the low,
The little child that sports in glee,
The aged folk that tottering go,— Proclaim the morn
That Christ is born,
That saweth them and saweth me.

OUR PRESIDENTS. By James Morgan. The Macmillan Company, New York. Illustrated. Pp. 336.

This book is quite handsomely bound and illustrated, and is a convenient addition to any library. Of course no single volume of this size could give anything like a real biography of all our Presidents, nevertheless a few pages devoted to the life of each can record the outstanding events in the lives of this group of men who are bound to be of interest to Americans by reason of holding the highest office at the disposal of the world's greatest republic. The author has a pleasant and readable style and exercises good judgment in the material which he selects for recording in the sketch he gives us of our Presidents. He gives the reader little personal glimpses of these distinguished characters in the form of little anecdotes or contemporary comments. For instance he quotes John Adams' remark about George Washington that "He is a mutton head, who has not been found out only because he has kept his mouth shut." (Had those words come under the eye of President Coolidge during the recent campaign it would have minimized considerably a good many things that his opponents were saying about him.) A good index adds to the value of this volume, which will be found both useful and interesting to any reader who likes history in homeopathic doses, and sugar-coated.

THE THIRTIETH PIECE OF SILVER. By Lilian Hayes. Macmillan Company. Pp. 326.

The book is very unusual, original and very interestingly written.

Judas sold Christ for thirty pieces of silver, according to the author; one piece was lost and impregnated with the traitor's greed; it passed into the world, and on to generations of future ages, to infect those who possessed it with treason, lust of gold or empire, until the terrible lesson was learned by each traitor in turn, that it "profited a man nothing, if he gained the whole world and lost his own soul."

The story is divided in six parts, as the lost coin roams through the world for twenty centuries.

The stories give one a keen insight into the social and historical life of the period, and are fascinatingly written, holding the readers' interest to the last. The book is strongly recommended to the public.

M. H. M.

THE HARDEST PART. By the Rev. G. A. Studdert Kennedy, M. A., M. C. (Woodbine Willie). George H. Doran and Company, New York. Pp. 195.

This is a book on religion, but it is entirely unique in its phraseology and probably will shock those who are accustomed to the usual books on such topics. Its author, however, has a reputation for being original that makes us expect the unusual in his writings. He here gives his impressions of religion under pressure, so to speak, in language that is plain to the point of being irreverent, and yet he is not irreverent, because one feels that it comes from the very bottom of his heart, a brave man's heart, yes, a hero's heart. Through these pages he talks religion as he goes over the top, as he establishes his Red Cross Aid Station in a hail of shells, and as he ministers to the wounded, and buries the dead. It is under such circumstances that men come near to God or else lose Him altogether—and Studdert Kennedy has not lost Him; on the contrary he has found Him tremendously, and he tells you about his findings in language so picturesquely vivid that it is difficult to lay the book down without finishing it. The following chapter headings will indicate the conditions under which it was written: "June 7, 1917, In the Assembly trenches on the morning of the attack on the Whyschaete Messines Ridge"; "June 15, 1917, In a shell hole near the pill box which was B. H. Q. The dawn of day after a battle. All night evacuation of the wounded had gone on"; "In the trenches during a heavy bombardment that lasted over two hours." Under such circumstances religion is real if it is anything, and according to this author it is certainly something—something very well worth reading.

Emmanuel

Glory to God in the highest and on earth peace, good will towards men! Soon again the skies will be filled with the celestial music of the angels' message. Once more we celebrate the birth in Bethlehem of the Christ Child.

Hundreds of years before the great event which we will commemorate on Christmas Day, the prophet Isaiah had written, "Behold, the virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son, and they shall call his name Emmanuel." His birth was to be the assurance of God's favor towards His chosen people. He was to be the living witness of God's good will toward Israel.

For us the birth of the Son of Mary means far more than it could have meant to Isaiah or any of the prophets. Looking back upon the greatest event in the world's history, we are able, if we will, to appreciate the tremendous significance of that name Emmanuel, which is, being interpreted, "God with us." The devout Jew, worshipping God as a far off and majestic deity, a royal King seated upon an azure throne far removed from the scenes of earth, a Being who could only be reached by much praying and placated by many sacrifices, could have but little idea of the full significance of that prophetic name—Emmanuel. For him God was with His people when their armies were victorious, He was angry and had withdrawn Himself when they were defeated; He was with them when the land gave her increase, He was displeased and had turned His face away from them when drought burned up their fields or locusts ate their growing crops.

But to us the name Emmanuel is filled with spiritual meaning. In the person of His Son, born of an humble virgin in a lowly stable in the obscure village of Bethlehem, God has manifested that He is with men: He is "God with us" in the hour of our exaltation when we ascend the mount of Transfiguration and behold the glory and splendour of the Ruler of the Universe; "God with us" when we know the peace and joy of work well done; but "God with us" also when we descend into the valley of the shadow of death; "God with us" when flesh is weak and faith dim and when the cares of life seem more than we can bear. Always and everywhere He is Emmanuel—"God with us."

What is lacking in our life as a people and as individuals is this God-consciousness. Too often we forget that we are not students of a dead Christ—a great spiritual leader who had His being some nineteen hundred years ago. We forget that we are called to be followers of a living Christ—the leader of the great spiritual forces which make for peace and justice and righteousness in the world today. We forget that the name of the captain of our salvation is Emmanuel—"God with us."—Southwestern Episcopalian.

GOD WITH US.

By Nancy Byrd Turner.

There were three lights that night:
The star above the darkness, crystal fair,
The foremost angel's garment flaming white,
The baby's circled hair.

Three sounds: upon the hill
A sudden song; low drawn, a woman's sigh;
And when the midnight deepened gray and chill.
A little, little cry.

Three woes: a witless lamb
Lost from the scattered flock; its mother's grieving;
The long, deep slumber of the townfolk—blind
And deaf and unbelieving.

Three wonders: dark-browed kings
Riding from far; young shepherd's lifted faces;
The silver beauty raining from the star
On Bethlehem's dark places.

There were Faith, Hope and Love:
Faith that had known, Hope that had waited well,
Love that had wrought; and in their trembling midst, Immanuel!

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

The Rev. R. Cary Montague, Editor.

A CHRISTMAS SUGGESTION.

It is not often that an opportunity to build for peace between two great world powers presents itself to a Church in so impressive a manner, as does the present situation in Tokio, Japan.

Our hospital buildings there were destroyed by the earthquake, as were the business houses of United States corporations. The latter are rapidly being replaced. How long shall the work of God lag behind the pursuit of Mammon?

In the meantime through the tactless action of the legislative department of our government a condition of dislike, and distrust has developed among the Japanese toward the Americans.

No action on our part would go so far toward re-establishing friendly and cordial relations between ourselves and our neighbors in the East, as the prompt rebuilding of St. Luke's Hospital in Tokio, and its reopening for ministrations of mercy. It would be the rendering of a piece of Christian Social Service that would have a world-wide influence for peace.

This is the season when, in all our churches we repeat the song of the angel chorus on the first Christmas night, "Peace on earth good will toward men." Why not put new life into the singing of those prophetic words, by using the gift, that we make every year at this season, a means of actually bringing "good will toward men," by giving to the rebuilding of St. Luke's Hospital in Tokio.

In the greater part of this country now, our local relief work is so systematically financed through Community Chests, or some other plan of cooperative organization that the acute appeal of Christmas is no longer necessary for relief work at home, and this affords a wonderful opportunity to enlarge the limits of our community to make it include the world, as was suggested by the angel paeon of peace, which reach far beyond the limits of Judea or Palestine and embraced "the earth."

When at Quantico, Va., they catch radio messages from New Zealand as they did last week, and they transmit photographs across the Atlantic Ocean in a few minutes with wireless apparatus, it is surely not too far fetched to ask our readers to consider St. Luke's Hospital, Tokio, in their community Christmas giving.

A Christmas present of from one to twenty-five dollars paid through your local Church, marked for St. Luke's Hospital, Tokio, or sent to Mr. Lewis B. Franklin, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York, from all our readers would add immensely to this humane and Christian cause, and would encourage Dr. Teusler in the noble efforts he is making as an apostle of world peace.

CUTTING A CHRISTMAS MELON.

Thirty dollars is the total cost of a man's hat above the initial purchase price—that is, if he is a patron of hotel and public restaurant check rooms.

Miss Mary Lindsley, manager of the Grace Dodge Hotel at Washington, D. C., makes this statement as an argument against the "tipping" custom. The Grace Dodge, opened three years ago by the National Board of the Y. W. C. A., as an experiment in hotel service for women, also experimented in the policy of operating a hotel with no tips in the check room, in the dining room, to bell boys or to maids. Throughout the entire building tips have been absolutely forbidden.

The result is highly successful, according to Miss Lindsley's report to the National Board of the Y. W. C. A. The Grace Dodge has worked out a wage scale for employees to compensate for loss in tips. Labor conditions are good. The service of employees is not mitigated by the absence of the stimulus which tipping is said to afford. Of the one hundred and fifty employees now included in the staff of the Grace Dodge Hotel, ninety-nine have been with the hotel for over a year.

The Grace Dodge determines its wage scale by taking the value of hotel jobs in the market as a minimum. Advances in salary are made at regular intervals and opportunities opened for promotion. Uniforms are provided and kept in order. Lockers and showers are furnished employees and a special cafeteria, where they may select hot nourishing food at cost price.

Guests whose gratitude exceeds all bounds and who feel that they must leave some expression of appreciation are permitted to donate to a general fund, which is distributed evenly among the employees at Christmas time. Thus the dishwasher behind the scenes is as well remembered as the bell boy.

"PINCHED FOR STEALING."

The National Probation Association issues the following appeal for humane treatment for delinquent children: The Police Sergeant has just caught Tony — stealing a box of cheap jewelry.

"There are two ways of dealing with Tony—or any first offender. One is to arrest him and lock him up in a cell. He was 'caught with the goods' and a thief's a thief no matter if he is a kid. That's one way—the old way.

The other way is to find out a little something about Tony—his mental, moral and physical condition, his home environment, past history and why he stole—before deciding what ought to be done with him. That's the new way—the way that may turn him into a useful citizen instead of a jail-bird.

"Every day, thousands of 'Tonys' come up against the Law in our big cities. Some of them are all wrong—mentally, morally, physically. Most of them are not. In all of them there's a good deal of plain boy.

"Official Court reports show that in almost ninety per cent of these cases of first delinquency the child is not to blame. Home neglect, poor health, improper guardianship, poverty, lack of friendly guidance, prove to be the real causes of the offense in thousands of cases.

"The best modern Court practice is to put such youngsters under the guidance of trained Probation Officers—and give them a chance to make good.

And Seventeen out of every Twenty of them do make good.

"All the energies of this Association are being devoted to improving, standardizing and extending the Probation work of our American Courts. We are trying to help make decent citizens instead of jail-birds. We are trying to extend our work so that in every Court true Justice may be administered. We need your help."

THE BOWERY MISSION.

On Sunday evening, November 30, after speaking with a Hebrew layman and Christians of various denomination at the memorial service of Dr. J. G. Hallimond, who had spent twenty-five years in earnest effort in the Bowery Mission, New York, before his death, Bishop Darlington visited by invitation, the "All Night Mission," at No. 8 Bowery, conducted by Mr. Dudley Tyng Upjohn. More than two hundred seats were filled with destitute and hungry men, who were allowed to remain in the seats all night to escape the inclement weather outside.

Since the opening of this mission in 1911, more than 4,500 religious services have been held, 40,000 have promised to lead new lives, over 900,000 have been fed, and nearly half a million have been sheltered.

Mr. Upjohn is a Churchman, and his work should have the approval and support of Churchmen, who should visit the "All Night Mission" and see the good work that is being done by Mr. Upjohn and his assistants.

The Church and Young People's Work

By the Reverend Karl Morgan Block, D. D.

WHAT THE YOUNG PEOPLE EXPECT OF THE CHURCH.

Here are twenty-three replies gathered from a characteristic group in a City Parish:

1. Any suitable means of bringing together the young people in a social way, and one which binds them and prompts Churchmanship at the same time.
2. Deeper spiritual training.
3. One should expect from the Church what one puts into it.
4. Have more socials for young people. Give the young people duties to do in the Church. Learn more about the Bible in Young People's Service League.
5. I want to learn more about Christ at Church.
6. The service not to drag.
7. An interest in Young People's Societies.
8. That character should be the uniting force to all people, even in preference to creed or religion.
9. The Church should not charge any admission, I mean pew rent.
10. Social gatherings to bring Young People together. Sermons occasionally to interest young people.
11. I like a good sermon and more hospitality to all members of the church. I don't like Sunday School, but I do like these meetings of young people.
12. Lots of singing and social activities.
13. A few more socials.
14. Evidences of true Christianity among the older members.
15. Read the Psalms more slowly.
16. Should have more social correlation, also coordinate present views in science with theological doctrines.
17. A natural and practical connection between the Church and our outside world.
18. Missionary meetings.
19. Shorter services.
20. Good sermons, social activity, and a field in which to work to my advantage as well as others. Plenty of singing and music.
21. More socials. Shorter Services.
22. I expect the church to provide for me some active Church work so as to keep my interest in the Church alive.
23. The fundamentals of Christianity. The Life of Jesus Christ.

These replies are rather luminous; first, because they classify the young people, and second, because they show that some of the young people are thoughtful and in earnest. The reading of these answers caused some irritation among the brethren at the Synod. Yet one could not but feel that those who were most irritated were those who least understand the young people. One layman was quite indignant at the request for shorter services, shorter sermons, more socials. He waxed eloquent in an oft-heard Philippic expressive of the decadence of modern youth. But when challenged to square his own religious life with the standard he had set for the young people, he frankly confessed that he had not set any special example in his desire for longer sermons, or longer services, or more services, or a willingness to contract his social calendar in favor of a more extended life of worship. There is a lot of adult hypocrisy here. I recall at a Conference on Young People's Work the complaint of one of the clergy that nothing could set a worse example than to see the young people leaving their meeting held at the church just as others were coming to Evening Service. He questioned whether any good could come out of an organization that would encourage its members to desert the regular services of the church. But he was similarly reminded that the young people in that very group had attended the Sunday School and the Morning Service, some adding a Monthly Corporate Communion. And he was asked the very pointed question, "How many of your adult communicants attend Sunday School, Morning Service, and a third devotional service on the Lord's Day?"

These young people were not writing for publication. And some of the answers the Church can lay to heart most earnestly. That this group may be seen as characteristic, I quote from a similar questionnaire held among students at the Church Congress at Oxford recently:

1. The Church is a middle-age institution, run by the middle-aged, for the middle-aged. It must rouse itself from its lethargy and send Youth a big, full message.

2. What are we to think when one Church Warden's wife will meet another Church Warden's wife on Committees and yet cut her on the street?"

3. What are we to think when we see professing Christians gambling on the Stock Exchange, under-paying their employees, and drawing revenue from slums?

4. It seems to us that the Church has made its own the three Pharisaic virtues of comfort, popularity and success.

5. There is a tendency to suppose that Youth is interested in nothing but food, football, sex, and the movies, whereas they want to hear about the realities of life and death.

Where the work of the Young People's Society is earnestly done, a refining process goes on apace. Will we never rid ourselves of the notion that this new Movement is a Philosopher's Stone and that its very institution in the Parish will bring about wholesale conversions? It is not method, it is morale, which achieves results. And if those very young people who want short sermons can only be persuaded to take a place on the program they are very apt to share the experience of adult laymen whose subjective and objective ideas of the propriety of sermon length are utterly different. Give a layman ten minutes on a program and nine out of ten will talk for twenty. As a general rule, this request for short services and short sermons is simply indicative of restlessness and inattention.

The young people are right. We do need congregational singing. We need to read the Psalms more slowly. We need services whose length is shortened by their intensity. And it may be that the request for more socials is an inarticulate repudiation of the secular social life with its absence of restraint and its questionable entertainment, a type which is impossible in the environment and atmosphere of the Church's buildings.

Kercheval Smith has done the Church a service. The Synod is not always characterized by timely messages that inspire healthy, useful comment. Those who have had the most experience with the young people, whose attitude has not been determined by what they have read in the press or heard in the pulpit, will continue to believe that this new movement is motivated by the Spirit of God, and that no better investment can possibly be made than the cultivation of the interest and the stimulation of the loyalty of our young people.

Next week we shall address ourselves to the other side of the question: What has the Church the right to expect of Her Young People?

The Bulletin of the Diocese of Maryland offers the following suggested topics for meetings:

1. Young People's place in the Church.
2. What does Jesus mean by eternal life?
3. Christianity and disarmament.
4. Does punishment tend to prevent crime?
5. The message of the pulpit for today.
6. How can we improve our recreations?
7. How to improve the meetings of our Society.
8. Capital punishment: Is it wrong?
9. The Church and the moving pictures.
10. What does the Holy Communion mean to me?
11. What does Confirmation mean to me?
12. What has been the greatest influence for good in my life?
13. What do Palm Sunday and Good Friday teach us about public opinion?
14. Am I solely responsible for my acts?
15. What are young people seeking?
16. How can young people use their abilities?
17. Choosing one's calling in life.
18. Will the radio help the Church?
19. Is the Sunday School doomed?
20. Self control: How to get it; its rewards.
21. A good name and how to obtain it.
22. How can we apply the Golden Rule today?
23. What has the Christian Church meant to un-Christianized countries?
24. Does a college education unfit a girl for home life?
25. Which is easier, to die the hero's death or to live the Hero's life?

Meeting of the National Council

Perhaps the most important item for the consideration of the National Council at its meeting December 10 and 11, 1924, preceded by meetings of all the departments on Tuesday, the 9th, was the plan of the Program to be recommended to the General Convention for the next triennium. The officers had been requested by the Council to bring in a plan for the Council's consideration. This plan was presented and considered with great care.

In preparing this plan full consideration had been given to the resolutions adopted by the Joint Conference between the House of Bishops and the National Council in October. As far as possible these recommendations were embodied in the plan.

The Council appointed a committee of its membership to work with the officers in perfecting the plan in detail and in the consideration of the requests from dioceses for a place in the budget and advance work.

Bishop Darst as Chairman reported for the Committee on a Spiritual Crusade.

In connection with the report, on motion of Bishop Francis, the following resolution was adopted by the National Council:

Resolved, That the National Council has heard with very great satisfaction the report of the Committee on a Spiritual Crusade on the part of the Bishops of the Church, and the Council requests the Committee, with the addition of two other Bishops, members of this Council, to accept responsibility for the presentation of this matter to the next General Convention.

The President named the following as additional members of the Committee: The Right Rev. Joseph M. Francis, D. D., and the Right Rev. Theodore I. Reese, D. D.

A committee composed of the Rt. Rev. William Cabell Brown, D. D., Bishop of Virginia, and the Rev. Ernest M. Stires, D. D., rector of St. Thomas' Church, New York City, classmates at the Virginia Seminary of the Ven. Dr. John G. Meem, prepared and presented the following Minute, which was adopted by rising vote:

Resolved, That the National Council has been deeply moved by the sad news of the death on November 20 of the Ven. John G. Meem, D. D., Archdeacon of Rio de Janeiro, and desires to place on record its high appreciation of the unselfish and devoted services of Dr. Meem in the establishment and subsequent development of the Church's mission in the land of the Southern Cross.

It would be hard to measure accurately how severe a blow has fallen upon the Brazilian Church, which during a third of a century has enjoyed the counsel and advice of this singularly gifted missionary, who not only distinguished himself as an evangelist, but was its faithful and efficient treasurer for some twenty-five years.

And yet severe as is the blow, we feel sure that the foundations laid by Dr. Meem in the churches built in Rio Grande do sul and in Rio de Janeiro, were so wisely and well laid, that his work will abide, and his name will be long held in reverent esteem by those whom he served so faithfully.

To the family of Dr. Meem the National Council would extend its tenderest sympathy over the loss of a great friend and devoted missionary.

The Department of Missions reported that it had appointed, subject to the confirmation of the Council, Mr. Homer P. Knapp of the Diocese of Ohio and Mrs. Charles R. Pancoast of Diocese of Pennsylvania, as additional members of the Department, and their appointments were confirmed.

The President announced that he had appointed the Rev. Robert F. Lau, D. D., as an assistant secretary of the Foreign-Born Americans Division, to succeed the Rev. Charles T. Bridgeman, and Miss Mabel Lee Cooper as Field Worker in the Department of Religious Education, and Miss Dorothea P. Coe in place of Miss Mildred P. Carpenter as Secretary for Church Institutions in the Department of Christian Social Service. All these appointments were confirmed by the Council.

The Committee of the Council on Taylor Hall at Racine College recommended that Mrs. George Biller, who had been in charge of Taylor Hall since April 1, 1924, be appointed as the representative of the National Council in charge of this national center for devotion and conference. This appointment was confirmed by the Council.

Miss Emily C. Tillotson, who acted as Executive Secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary in the absence of Miss Lindley during the greater part of 1924, suffered a breakdown and has been obliged to take a complete rest. The Executive Board of the Woman's Auxiliary recommended that Miss Tillotson be given a year's leave of absence, which was granted.

The Department of Christian Social Service, in the interest of Inter-National Peace, presented the following resolution to the Council, which was adopted:

The National Council of the Protestant Episcopal Church, recognizing the responsibility that rests on all of us as followers of One called through all ages the Prince of Peace, ask the Bishops and other clergy of the Church to urge upon their congregations earnest prayer during the Christmas season that methods of achieving World Peace may be successfully consummated, "That war may be abolished and that the Golden Rule may become the universal law of nations and peoples."

And in view of the critical importance of this subject and of the enormous responsibility resting on Christian people we further ask the whole Church, during the season of Epiphany or at such other period as may be more convenient locally, to study carefully the methods of establishing peace now presented before the peoples of the world. We recommend the organization of study groups in the parishes throughout the Church and we designate the Department of Christian Social Service to take charge of this project in the name of the National Council and ask the cooperation of all the Departments of the Council and the Woman's Auxiliary in the promotion of this great effort.

The Field Department reported that the acceptance of the Rev. J. I. B. Larned, rector of St. John's Church, Yonkers, N. Y., had been received. Mr. Larned was elected at the last meeting of the Council as a General Secretary of the Field Department. He had already been serving as an Associate Secretary and did most effective work.

The Treasurer reported that there had been received to November 1, 1924, on account of the Japan Emergency Fund $531,397.51. That on account of the Japan Reconstruction Fund there had been received to December 1, 1924, $425,545.66. This did not include unpaid pledges amounting to $257,162, and the more than $250,000 raised in the city campaign in Philadelphia, nor the gift just received from Mrs. Harri-man for a building in connection with St. Paul's College amounting to $40,000, and a gift of $5,000 made to Dr. Teusler by a friend for use at his discretion in the work of reconstruction.

The Council was informed through the Department of Missions that letters had been received from the Bishop of the Philippine Islands indicating that serious disagreement existed between the Bishop and the priests in charge of the station at Sagada. The Council authorized its President to appoint a committee, of which he should be the Chairman, to consider the whole matter and the committee was empowered to take whatever action might in its judgment seem best.

The committee as appointed consists of Bishop Gailor, President of the Council, the Bishop of Maryland, the Bishop of Rhode Island, the Bishop of Indianapolis, Bishop Lloyd, the Rev. George Craig Stewart, D. D., the Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., and Dr. Wood, Executive Secretary of the Department of Missions.

DEPARTMENT OF MISSIONS AND CHURCH EXTENSION.

At the meeting of the Department of Missions, which met on Tuesday, December 9, before the Council meeting, the Department was able to appoint nine new missionaries, of whom eight were women. Four missionaries went to the Domestic Field, one to Latin-America and four to the foreign field. Three were also employed in the field.

The Secretary for Latin-America in making his report called attention to the following encouraging news in his field:

St. Andrew's Church, Mayaguez, Porto Rico, has been completed and its title given to the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society; this building was made out of concrete and is a handsome addition to the properties of the Church; it has cost the Department virtually nothing, having been built out of the profits of the industry conducted by the Rev. F. A. Saylor, plus gifts to his work from friends.

Friends of Bishop Morris have underwritten the Panama Priority and authorized Bishop Morris to have plans drawn up for the house for Archdeacon Sykes, called for by the Priority.

Two cathedrals have been consecrated in Cuba and the Canal Zone; funds for the completion of the former having been contributed entirely by the congregation in Havana.

A new church has been given to the Bishop of the Canal Zone in consideration of the sum of $75, the said church to be used for the mission work at Cascades.

Work among the large colony of Japanese in Sao Paulo, Brazil, has been successfully started.

The Department heard with great regret of the death on November 20, 1924, of Archdeacon Meem. A committee composed of the Bishop of Virginia, and the Rev. Dr. Stires, both of whom were classmates of Archdeacon Meem in the Virginia Seminary, and the Bishop a co-worker with the Archdeacon in Brazil, was appointed to bring in a memorial for adoption by the National Council.

The Executive Secretary called attention to the death of Dr. Brandreth Symonds, who for more than a quarter of a century acted as Chief Medical Adviser of the Board of Missions, later the Department of Missions. A record of the appreciation of the Department of Missions was made.

The Executive Secretary also announced the death on November 21, 1924, of Mrs. Arthur S. Kean. Mrs. Kean was the wife of one of our missionaries at Wuchang in the District of Hankow.

Word was received from the Presiding Bishop that he had placed the Bishop Suffragan of Montana in charge of the Missionary District of Idaho until a Bishop has been secured for that field.

The resignation of Dr. C. McA. Wessel from the Church General Hospital, Wuchang, was received and accepted with regret.

The Executive Secretary reported that he had been informed by Bishop Roots that he had appointed the Rev. A. M. Sherman as President of Boone University now included as a unit in the Central China University. Mr. Sherman will take the place of the Rev. Dr.

Gilman, who was elected Bishop Suffragan of the District of Hankow. The Department extended to Mr. Sherman its hearty congratulations and assurance of its desire to do everything to further the important work of Christian education of which he had been placed in charge.

Owing to conditions in Japan it had been found necessary for the Rev. R. W. Andrews and family to remain temporarily in this country. At the request of the Province of the Pacific and with the consent of Bishop McKim, Mr. Andrews was assigned temporarily to work among the Orientals in that Province.

Many of our Christians in China have suffered the loss of practically everything they possess as a result of the looting of stations by Chinese soldiers. In the case of our Church workers their service to this Mission was seriously impaired because of this. Bishop Graves felt that it would be necessary to provide some measure of equipment for these workers in order that they might continue their effective service. He was authorized to care for such necessary cases in such way as seemed to him wise.

years ago by George Abbot, Archbishop of Canterbury, and was printed in London in 1617. Its title is "Doctrina et Politia Ecclesiae Anglicanae," and is of special interest to students of the history of the Church of England. A portrait of the author, George Abbot, has already been presented to the Cathedral by Mr. White, Charles Glover, James Parmelee and Dr. William C. Rives, and will be hung in the Mary Jessup Blair Memorial wing of the library, where the book will be displayed. On the cover of the book will be found the arms in gift of the Archbishop, and inside there are numerous marginal notes by the author. His signature, "G. Caut," is written in Script on the last page. George Abbot, Archbishop of Canterbury, was born at Guilford in 1562 and was buried there in 1633. The gift of this rare volume is recognized by the Cathedral Chapter as one of great value and will be given a place of honor in the Cathedral library.

The Christmas Carol Service held every year at the Washington Cathedral and anticipated by many as a real part of the Christmas season, will be held on Sunday afternoon, December 21, in Bethlehem Chapel. The carols will be drawn from sources ancient and modern, and will be sung by the Cathedral choir under the direction of Edgar Priest, Cathedral organist and choir master.

Church Intelligence

To the Relatives and Friends of Missionaries in Central China.

Recent newspaper dispatches concerning activities of bandits in Central China have undoubtedly caused serious apprehension in the minds of many friends of members of our staff in the Missionary District of Hankow. In answer to our inquiry, Bishop Roots cables that in the Provinces of Hupeh and Hunan which comprise the Diocese of Hankow, the situation is not nearly so bad as has been represented. He assures us that all missionaries are safe and that there is no cause for anxiety.

We shall be grateful if you will spread this reassuring information as widely as you can.

At the time of the consecration, Bishop Juhan was invested with a pectoral cross, the gift of an old friend in Auburn, Ala., and the episcopal ring, which he inherited from his predecessors, Bishop Weed and Bishop Young. His episcopal vestments had been given him by his friends in Greenville, S. C., who further gave him a silver service, and the children of the Church Schools there gave him a watch. At a reception at the Bishop's House after luncheon the men of the Diocese gave their new Bishop a set of furniture for his study.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. W. C. Brown, D. D., Bishop

New Building For Immanuel Church, Braddock Heights.

The vestry and congregation of Immanuel Church, Braddock Heights, Alexandria, have undertaken the erection of a church building to cost $25,000, and work has been commenced.

This congregation was started as a mission of Christ Church, Alexandria, and is ministered to by students from the Seminary. It is situated in the section of Arlington County adjacent to Alexandria. Of recent years this whole section is being so rapidly built up that the little chapel first erected is utterly inadequate to hold the people who would attend its services. Within the past two years the congregation has purchased the lots adjoining the chapel, so that it now owns almost the whole of a triangular block surrounded by streets and fronting on the main avenue from Alexandria to Washington. It is situated in a most desirable residential section, and very near the property of St. Agnes' School. So that in addition to ministering to a large and constantly growing section, Immanuel Church will minister to the school.

The Rev. A. Hugo Blankingship, who graduated from the Virginia Seminary last June, has been placed by the Bishop in charge of Immanuel Church, in connection with Trinity Church, Arlington, and under his active leadership the church is growing steadily.

Gymnasium for St. Margaret's School.

The new gynasium now being built for St. Margaret's School for Girls, at Tappahannock, is the gift of Mrs. Alfred I. Dupont, of Wilmington, Del., and is to be a memorial to Mrs. Dupont's parents, Thomas Ball and Lalla Gresham Ball. The new building is of frame, to harmonize with the other school buildings, and is expected to be ready for use in a month or two.

Mrs. Dupont is very much interested in the education of the boys and girls in Tidewater Virginia, and is supporting a scholarship at St. Margaret's.

Death of Mrs. Brayshaw.

Mrs. Ada Downing Brayshaw, widow of the Rev. Dr. J. Lacy Brayshaw, died suddenly Sunday afternoon, December 7, at the rectory of Westover Church in Charles City County. Funeral services were held from the church Monday morning, and the burial was in Glenwood Cemetery, Washington, D. C.

Mrs. Brayshaw is survived by three sons, the Rev. I. L. Brayshaw of Camden, S. C., the Rev. R. A. Brayshaw of Covington, and the Rev. William Brayshaw, rector of Westover Church.

Death of the Rev. U. B. Bowden.

The Rev. Upton Beall Bowden, a retired minister of the Diocese of West Texas, died in Warrenton, Friday night, December 12, after a long illness. Funeral services were held from St. James' Church, and burial was in Warrenton.

Mr. Bowden was of a Virginia family, but spent his active ministry in Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas. For the last two years he had made his home with his son, the Rev. Paul D. Bowden, rector of St. James' Church. He is survived by his wife, who was Miss Douglas, of Louisiana; four sons and three daughters, also his mother and a sister living at Gulf Port, La.

GEORGIA.

Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D. D., Bishop.

College Student Work.

One feature of the program of Religious Education which has attracted the attention of the Department in the Diocese of Georgia is the College Student work. For three years the Department has collected the names of all students who have gone forth from the Diocese to attend educational institutions outside. To these students the Department has issued a personal letter from Bishop Reese and has just recently commenced issuing a series of short one-page bulletins.

The Diocese of Georgia has the unique position of sending practically all its college students and boarding-school pupils outside its own borders, as there are only two educational institutions of any sort within the Diocese. These two are the Agricultural School at Douglas, to which practically no Church students are sent, and the Georgia State Woman's College at Valdosta, where each year are registered about ten Church girls from the Diocese and an equal number from without.

This does not include the work of colored schools. Georgia has seven institutions of learning for the colored, in each of which splendid work is being done among hundreds of boys and girls. One of these, St. Athanasius School, Brunswick, is an exceptionally fine institution.

The Department is writing a letter to the local rector at each of the institutions in which its boys and girls are located.

This program in no way conflicts with the individual rector's relationship with his own young people, but only augments keeping a point of contact between the Church and the student away from home, for an overwhelming percentage of these students attend institutions where there is no Church influence.

As to the results—rectors in the Dioceses have commented upon the fact that when these students return home for the holidays they attend Church as never before, speak to the rector and often ask if there is any work they can do. The Department wants to keep in touch with these students through

THE NATIONAL COUNCIL FACES A DEFICIT OF SEVERAL HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS AT THE CLOSE OF THIS YEAR. A PLAN FOR ELIMINATING THIS DEFICIT IS SUGGESTED IN THE FOLLOWING LETTER:

Rector's Study
Marvin Memorial Parish House
Church of Our Saviour
Akron, Ohio.

December 9, 1924.

Reverend and dear Brother:

A Merry Christmas to you.

Can we not by swift and voluntary action make it a Merry Christmas for the whole Church?

The National Church has a distressing deficit which may impede its great work. Our parish has sent its anticipated Christmas offering of nine hundred dollars to Lewis B. Franklin, National Treasurer, to help reduce that deficit.

We venture to suggest that every parish and mission in our land stimulate a Christmas offering of One Dollar for each Communicant, to be sent to New York to help eliminate the deficit.

This letter is being sent to five hundred leaders of the Church. If you are willing to cooperate will you not take steps to make known this movement to every parish and mission in your Diocese? And will you not enlist your people in this effort?

National Headquarters has approved this effort.

IF YOU WILL HELP, PLEASE TELEGRAPH TODAY TO MR.
FRANKLIN, 281 FOURTH AVE-NUE, NEW YORK.

May we not by prompt, vigorous, voluntary and generous action send a thrill of relief and hope throughout the Church?

Faithfully yours,
George P. Atwater, Rector.

Students have written to their rectors and the Bishop telling them they are attending services, singing in the choir, helping in Young People's Work, or rendering other services at the places they are attending school.

The Department will gladly furnish any one interested with copies of the Student Bulletins it has issued. Apply to Miss Emma Twiggs, Office Secretary, Greene Street, Augusta, Ga.

Meeting of the Church Club.

Bishop Mann, of Pittsburgh, and Mr. Frederick Morehouse, of Milwaukee, editor of the Living Church, were the honor guests and principal speakers at the annual dinner of the Church Club of Philadelphia in the Bellevue Stratford, Tuesday night, December 9. Bishop Garland and Bishop-elect Samuel B. Booth also spoke.

In the course of his address, "As Seen by a Layman," Mr. Morehouse spoke specially of three important subjects, which he represented as being vital to the complete understanding between the laymen of the Church and the Church itself. "Why don't we trust the Church. Why don't we support the Church? Why don't we understand the Church?" were the three questions which he outlined as being the most dominant issue of the present moment in the internal workings of the Church.

Bishop Mann said, "The great question before our country today is that of peace," and he asked Christian Churches to make it plain they were cultivating the temper of peace in their pulpits before they asked for the cessation of war among nations.

The music was rendered by choir boys and soloists from Old St. Peter's Church.

The Rev. Samuel McComb, D. D., of Cambridge Theological School, and formerly rector of Emmanuel Church, Boston, was the preacher Sunday morning, December 14, at St. Stephen's Church, Philadelphia, the Rev. Dr. Carl E. Grammer, rector.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop.

The Diocese Loses a Valuable Clergyman.

Effective November 30, the Rev. Charles W. Sydnor resigned the rectorship of St. Andrew's Church, Clifton Forge, to accept St. Luke's at Wheeling, West Virginia. Mr. Sydnor has been at Clifton Forge since September, 1919, and, in addition to the work there, he has had charge of Emmanuel Church at Eagle Rock, a few miles away on the James River. It is given to few ministers to make for themselves such a place as Mr. Sydnor has held in the affections of his immediate community and of his diocese. On the evening of Sunday, November 30, there was held in the Clifton Forge Baptist Church, of which the Rev. Herbert Barclay Cross is pastor, a union farewell service, which the ministers of the various denominations of the town took part and which was attended by more than a thousand persons. During the service the Scripture was read by the Rev. R. L. Fultz, D. D., prayer was offered by the Rev. L. H. Paul, D. D., and there were addresses by the Rev. E. W. Long, Mr. F. W. King, Mr. John R. Payne, Jr., and Dr. W. H. F. Miller,

Jr., Senior Warden of the Parish

After these Mr. Sydnor made a fitting response.

Mr. Sydnor was presented with several handsome gifts: a beautiful watch from the Kiwanis Club, a Knight Templar fob and chain from the Commandery, and a purse containing more than two hundred dollars from other friends.

Field Department Organization to Continue.

For the purpose of preparing for carrying out the Every Member Canvass for pledges to finance the work of the Church in 1925, there was set up in this diocese a well defined organization. Mr. W. D. Tyler of Dante, General Chairman of the Field Department, appointed seven District Chairmen and these in turn selected local vice chairmen to have charge of the work in all the churches.

The Executive Board of the Diocese feels it would be an excellent plan to have this organization continue to function, even after the canvass is over. In this way there will always be on the ground at every point a representative of the Diocesan Field Department who will have in his mind the interests of the Department and render to the General Chairman and other diocesan officers such assistance as may be possible from time to time in following up the results of the intensive work and in numbers of other ways that will come to their attention.

Accordingly all the members of the organization as noted above are being requested to hold their positions until the next session of Council, when it is probable that the new plan will be officially established as a part of the regular machinery of the Diocese.

The Church's Program.

A strenuous effort is being made to raise the whole program of the dioceses for 1925 and so put Atlanta on the right side of the Church's ledger for next year. When parish canvasses do not show pledges aggregating the full parish program, these parishes are being asked to hold another canvass and not to be content until the full quota desired is fully pledged.

Sunday, December 28, has been designated as Pay-Up Sunday in the diocese, and all communicants are being urged to pay up all back pledges to the Church on that day. In this way it is hoped to close the year without a deficit.

Work Among Students.

The second Sunday of each month the vestry of All Saints' Church, Atlanta, will attend a Corporate Communion with the Church students of the Georgia School of Technology. This is followed by breakfast and bids fair to be a great plan in bringing the boys in close contact with the vestry.

At St. Paul's Church, Macon, a Junior vested choir has been started, and all the organizations of this parish are exceedingly active. A Christmas pageant is being planned by them at the present time.

The Rev. William F. Moses, recently ordained deacon, has done great things since he became minister-in-charge of St. James, Cedartown and Ascension, Cartersville, and the work of these two places is showing a great upward trend. In both places additions are expected by confirmation this year and the people are cooperating in every way possible.

The Rt. Rev. Ethelbert Talbot, D. D., Presiding Bishop of the Church, visited the Diocese during the Convention of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ, in Atlanta, preached to a large congregation at St. Philip's Cathedral on the morning of the second Sunday in Advent, and at St. Luke's Church, Atlanta, that evening.

The Rev. Thomas Duck, missionary in North Georgia, in spite of bad weather and undeveloped roads, holds the mission frontier and his congregations lead the entire diocese in giving to the work of the Church, besides carrying on their own local activities.

The Rev. J. D. C. Wilson, in charge of the Church's work among the cotton-mill employees at La Grange, reports that things there are going nicely and that the Nation-Wide Campaign there this year, in spite of the mills being on half-time, will be better than usual.

Church Property Sold.

The Parish of the Heavenly Rest has sold its property in Fifth Avenue, corner of Forty-fifth Street, and has purchased a new site at the corner of Fifth Avenue and Ninetieth Street. It is to occupy its Church in Fifth Avenue until May 1, 1925, when it will consolidate with the Church of the Beloved Disciple, in Eighty-ninth Street, and until a new edifice is erected, use that parish plant, a very complete one, for work and worship.

The property in Fifth Avenue has a narrow frontage of only thirty-one feet, but is spacious in the rear, and has also a frontage on Forty-fifth Street of forty-nine feet. There is to be erected on the plot an immense business block, which is to cover a larger ground plot than that of the church. There now remains in this great district no Episcopal Church of any kind, and very few other places of worship. St. Mary the Virgin is farther to the west, out of the Grand Central Zone, and St. Bartholomew is farther north, in the Park Avenue district.

EAST CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., Bishop

Building Fund, the Thompson Orphanage.

The effort to have the Diocese of East Carolina do its part in the campaign to raise an endowment and building fund for the Thompson Orphanage, the Church home for the children of the North Carolina Dioceses, has resulted in the gift of $25,000 to date. This amount was given by three persons, one gift amounting to $21,000, or the estimated cost of a cottage of the type planned to take the place of the antiquated dormitories now being used. The East Carolina goal is $42,000. No general campaign is being undertaken. A committee appointed by the Executive Council of the Diocese is making a quiet but effective appeal to a few persons who see a unique opportunity to contribute to a worthy cause, and who are able to follow their inclinations. It is quite certain that the full amount will be subscribed shortly.

New Mission Started.

As an evidence of the missionary enthusiasm of the Diocese of East Carolina, the rector of the Church of the Advent, Williamston, the Rev. C. O. Pardo, and several of his laymen, have recently started a mission in a rural community in Martin County. They went into a community where there was one Church family. Starting with a congregation of twelve, they now have a Sunday School with an enrollment of over one hundred, adults and children. As a result of the enthusiasm engendered, a parish house is to be built, the material and work to be contributed by the people who are benefiting by the services.

An Interesting Pageant.

A religio-historical pageant, "St. Paul's Church and the Nation-Wide Campaign," was given in St. Paul's, Edenton, on Sunday morning, November 30. The pageant, written by a communicant of this parish, Mrs. Charles Wales, proved to be most interesting and a very effective preparation for the every member canvass for the Church's Program, which followed. The pageant was inspired by reverence for the ancient and honorable history of this parish, going back to the very beginning of the Eighteenth Century, and by admiration for the generous support which it now gives to every cause sponsored by the Church.

Preaching Missions.

A number of preaching missions have been held in East Carolina this fall. The Rev. W. E. Noé, Executive Secretary of the Diocese, has held missions at St. Luke's, Roper; St. Paul's, Beaufort; Holy Innocents, Seven Springs, and several other places. Bishop Darst held a three-day mission in Trinity Church, Lumberton. While in Lumberton the Bishop was asked to address a number of civic and religious meetings. The Rev. B. E. Brown, rector of Calvary Church, Tarboro, conducted a ten-day mission in St. Paul's, Edenton; and the Rev. J. E. W. Cook, rector of St. Paul's, Greenville, was at the Church of the Holy Cross, Aurora, for a ten-day period.

Friends of Mr. John G. Bragaw, Jr., prominent layman of the diocese, will be glad to hear that he is much improved in health. For some months Mr. Bragaw has been a patient at St. Joseph's Sanitarium, Asheville, recuperating from an attack of incipient tuberculosis.

The God with whom we have to do is no wasteful workman, and there should be no thought of waste about those lives which have been laid down for the general good. The present life was to train us for a larger life beyond. Life here, at its best, is only the prophecy of something better. All our present experiences quicken and justify that hope.—The Northwestern.

Collect for Fourth Sunday in Advent.

O Lord, raise up, we pray Thee, Thy power, and come among us, and with great might succor us; that whereas, through our sins and wickedness, we are sore let and hindered in running the race that is set before us, Thy bountiful grace and mercy may speedily help and deliver us; through the satisfaction of Thy Son Our Lord, to Whom, with Thee and the Holy Ghost, be honor and glory, world without end. Collect for St. Thomas' Day.

Almighty and ever-living God, Who, for the great confirmation of the faith, didst suffer Thy holy Apostle Thomas to be doubtful in Thy Son's resurrection. Grant us so perfectly, and without all doubt, to believe in Thy Son Jesus Christ, that our faith in Thy sight may never be reproved. Hear us, O Lord, through the same Jesus Christ, to Whom, with Thee and the Holy Ghost, be all honor and glory, now and forevermore. Amen.

Collect for Christmas Day.

Almighty God, Who hast given us Thy only begotten Son, to take our nature upon Him, and as at this time to be born of a pure virgin; Grant that we being regenerate, and made Thy children by adoption and grace, may daily be renewed by Thy Holy Spirit; through the same Our Lord Jesus Christ, Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the same Spirit ever, one God, world without end. Amen.

Collect for First Communion Christmas Day.

O God, Who maketh us glad with the yearly remembrance of the birth of Thine only Son, Jesus Christ; Grant that as we joyfully receive Him for our Redeemer, so we may with sure confidence behold Him when He shall come to be our Judge Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost, one God, world without end. Amen.

Collect for St. Stephen's Day.

Grant, O Lord, that, in all our sufferings here upon earth for the testimony of Thy truth, we may steadfastly look up to heaven, and by faith behold the glory that shall be revealed; and, being filled with the Holy Ghost, may learn to love and bless our persecutors by the example of Thy first martyr, St. Stephen, who prayed for his murderers to Thee, O blessed Jesus, Who standest at the right hand of God, to succor all those who suffer for Thee, our only Mediator and Advocate. Amen.

The Shepherds.

Virginia Baker.

What did the wondering shepherds see
On the first Christmas morn?
Heaven's starry portals opened wide,
And, through the dim gray dawn,
A band of seraphs, from the skies,
On white wings downward borne.

What did the wondering shepherds hear
On the first Christmas Day?
Celestial choirs, triumphantly
Voicing a joyful lay;
"Glory to God, peace on the Earth,
Good-will to men, alway!"

What did the wondering shepherds find
By the first Christmas light?
A little stable, roughly built,
A rude and humble sight;
A new-born King within its walls,
Of glory infinite!

If Christ Had Not Come!

The Rev. Thos. F. Opie, D. D.

It were well for theological debaters of all types to stop their acrimonious fault-finding and their hair-splitting as to certain abstract ideas about religion and reflect on what would be the world's condition today but for Christ having lived. Just drop debates on the subject of the Virgin Birth, the deity of the Saviour, the atonement, however fervently we may believe in all these—or however we may deny them all—and try to picture the world from the time of the Caesars of Rome up to now. The Christmas season is an opportune time for such reflections.

"Peace on earth to men of good will" was and is a Christian idea. Would the Romans still be murdering the "dogs," as they called the Hebrews? Would they be engaged in killing out all "hostes," or enemies, as they called every people not of the Roman empire? Or would they have blotted out the entire Latin peoples through selfishness, lust and luxury?

Would the disgraceful feasts of Bacchus and the equally reprehensible Saturnalian feasts be still the order of the day—or would the Christless world have originated newer and more intemperate and lascivious methods of carnival and voluptuousness?

Would Mohammedanism have gained the ascendancy as a world religion and through blood and the power of the sword destroyed all who would not come into its fold? Or would one of the religions of the East with its pessimism and ineptitude and incertitude, have taken the throne of the modern world?

Where would be our modern hospitals, our Christian ethic, our brotherhood of man, our Golden Rule, our altruism, our benevolent charity? Where, indeed, would be the whole human race? As bad and accursed as has been the life of nations and peoples of power and hedonism, despite the leaven of Christianity, is it beyond reasonable assumption that the very race itself might have destroyed itself and been drowned in brothers' blood, without the restraining influences and the ameliorating effects of the teachings of the Nazarene?

To the ancient Greeks all men outside the confines of that classic circle were "barbarians"—brutes to be subdued and thrown into slavery, or else to be wiped out with fire and sword. And even to the religiously inclined Hebrew, the Gentile "dogs" were nothing worth—one Jew being of more value in their sight than a whole nation of the unregenerate! What a setting it was into which the Christ came! What a task has been His! But for Him, His teachings, and His (some time blind, bigoted and misguided) followers who have struggled with elemental forces and tried to remake the world and to save it from utter ruin and self-murder—but for Jesus Christ having come to show men a higher and a better way of life, one shudders to imagine what would be the world's estate up to now.

How art would suffer did we not have the beautiful and inspiring Christian conceptions of Carlo Dolei, of Murillo, of Hoffman, of Da Vinci and a host of others who have made the world of art glow with their matchless canvasses of themes solely Christian! How literature would suffer without the Christ-inspiration! Possibly a third of all the literature of the present day, based as it is indirectly or essentially on things Christian, would never have been written had not Christ lived! Let any honest doubter look at this fact unprejudiced! What think ye? Literature, art, music, history, architecture—no less than religion, morals, ethics, the whole spiritual fabric of the human race—are all inextricably woven in their very warp and woof out of the threads of life made golden and radiant by the fact of Christ.

To even the most hardened and self-bound, the season of Christmas comes as a sweet breath of heaven—a time of peace and of love—a time of charity and of good will—a time of gift-giving and of generous impulse—a time of happy self-forgetfulness and of aspiration, of altruism and of holy sensation. But for Christ, no Christmas! But for Christ, nothing Christian! God in heaven, we adore Thee and praise Thy name for Christ and for Christmas with its thrill of the soul—and its "Peace on Earth to Men of Good Will."

Christmas Eve in Paris.

Christmas Eve in Paris for centuries past has been a magic word. When the night arrives the boulevards are always filled with gayly decorated booths extending from the Place de la Republique to the Church of La Madeleine. Happy children in great numbers find what please them best at the Yule-tide season, and wander from one booth to the next, buying tempting articles. All Paris mingles with the throngs in brilliantly lighted thoroughfares until the time for the Midnight Mass. Then the churches are crowded with worshippers, offering their tribute to the Babe of Bethlehem.

The organ preludes are selected from the old Noels, many of which were arranged by Guilmant when he played at La Trinite—and there, in the organ gallery, the great master, surrounded by his pupils and friends, would play as if inspired, for Guilmant loved these old carols, and played them with a rare charm. First he would choose his Fantasia on two Christmas hymns—then in succession his Noel Brabantin, Noel Landuocien. Noel Ecossais and Noel Saboly. Next the choir would sing one from Brittany, then one from Normandy, and again one from Alsace, so dear to all French hearts. It did not take many minutes for the people to catch the Christmas spirit, for every one sings. Who in France does not know the charming Noels? No one who has attended can forget these services, for the people sing with rare enthusiasm and from the heart, producing a wonderful effect.

At St. Eustache, with Joseph Bonnet at the Grand Organ; Notre Dame Cathedral, with Louis Vierendeux; The Madeleine, with Henri Dallery; St. Sulpice, with Charles Marie Widor, the old Noels, such as "Le petit Jesus," "Le Message des Anges," "Le Sommeil de l'enfant Jesus," "Les rois Mages," "Le bel ange du ciel," are sung until the midnight hour approaches and Mass begins. At its conclusion, the organ is again heard in another Noel as the people slowly leave the church to join the happy crowds in the boulevards—for is it not Christmas and a feast of great joy? Surely the French understand and appreciate the spirit of Christmas!—W. B. Carl.

A Christmas Prayer.

Mary May.

Once blessed Babe of Bethlehem,
Now on Thy throne on high,
O, hear my prayer as Thou dost care,
As though Thou wert nearby!

Let me adore Thee with my words,
Hope of Humanity,
And may my song lasting love,
Breathe Thy humility.

O, let me praise Thee with my life,
Devoted all to Thee,
Let my light shine for Thee, divine,
Throughout Eternity.

Send what Thou wilt; Thou knowest best,
And each New Year will bring
A heavenly ray to light my way,
Blessed Babe, my Christ, my King!

Christmas Preparations.

Do, not arrange everything yourselves, father and mother. Let the children have their part. Give them something to do. If you like home-made ornaments on the Christmas tree they can make chains of colored paper or they can pop the corn that can be strung and draped on the tree or else attach the little wires that are to hold single pieces of the pop corn to the tips of the tree making it appear like snowflakes. These things when finished can be placed at the door of the mysterious room which holds the tree by the children. When scurrying footsteps have died away their little offerings are taken in, and oh, the joy when they see that these things have been used. Such occupation quiets active nerves and helps make the wonderful festival more enjoyable. Then, too, allow them to make little Christmas greeting cards themselves, to be used with their gifts to those in the home or placed at the plates for the Christmas breakfast. This meal should be carefully arranged. Light food is best for high tensioned nerves which will be in evidence on this morning. Have the table prettily decked with holly or sprigs of evergreen. Draw the shades and have the room lighted by candles placed about the room.

The Prince of Peace.

Lucy Lyne.

He sweetly slept, the little Babe
The Christ the Heavenly King
E'en in His dreams He still could hear
The Heavenly Angels sing.

His mother, Mary, watched beside
The manger where He lay;
Sometimes she soothed Him with her voice,
Sometimes she kneeled to pray.

In far-off fields the shepherds wait
All through the silent night,
Oh! suddenly they hear a Voice,
And see a wondrous Light.

An Angel brings glad tidings
This first sweet Christmas Morn
"To you this day a Saviour
In Bethlehem is born."

The shepherds seek His presence
And hasten to adore
The Holy Christ whose coming brings
True peace forevermore.

Oh! may we find in Him that peace
The angel bands proclaim,
"Peace on the earth, good-will to man."
For this the Saviour came.

And whilst we kneel before Him
His Holy name to praise,
Oh! may we find in Him that peace
Which lasts through endless days.

The Holy Night.

Eugenie du Maurier.

We are in the shadow of the Holy Night. God made us for His glory. And that must be the keynote of our thoughts, as we listen to the angelic hosts singing: "Glory to God in the highest and on earth peace, good-will to men." They teach us a lesson, those heavenly singers, that if we give glory to God, then peace, the heritage of Bethlehem, will be our portion. It is the greatest gift of the Christmas tide—the same precious gift which the Risen Lord left His loved ones before going back to His Father. "My peace I give unto you, My peace I leave you." Surely we can ask no better gift at the manger on Christmas Day. May the sweet Babe of Bethlehem say to each one of us as He did unto His apostles, "Let not your heart be troubled, nor let it be dismayed."

There is something very pathetic about the dumb beasts into whose company the Blessed Babe came, the ox and the ass. As they warmed His little limbs with their breath, we remember how the lowly ass had carried the Virgin Mother from Nazareth to Bethlehem, carrying at the same time the hidden God, Who of old had said: "The ox knoweth his owner and the ass his master's crib, but Israel hath not known Me." They did what they could, those dumb beasts of the stable. So they, too, teach us a lesson.

"Simplicity is the highest grace." So we are not surprised that the first visitors and worshippers at the Manger are the lowly shepherds, those men who kept the night watches over their flock. They had been looking for the Messiah, so, at the angels' word, they go to seek Him, who is Christ the Lord, in the City of David. Prompt, ready, unquestioning was their obedience. Surely it pays to be one of the little ones to whom God reveals His great things.

Like the holy old man, Simeon, I think they could have been ready to die willingly after that visit to the manger and the sight of the Holy Child.

With them "let us go over to Bethlehem," the House of Bread, being sure that there our souls will be well fed, and our hearts sweetly comforted by the dear Babe.

The Adoration of the Shepherds.

A short and very simple Christmas pageant for the smallest Church School.

(One verse Hymn, "While Shepherds Watched." Enter Angel.)

Angel: Fear not; for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be to all people, For unto you is born this day in the City of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord. And this shall be a sign unto you; Ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger.

Reader: And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the Heavenly Host, praising God.

(Hymn, "It came upon the midnight clear," one verse. Enter Heavenly Host behind Angel.)

Heavenly Host: Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good-will towards men.

One of Shepherds: "Let us now go even unto Bethlehem, and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord hath made known unto us."

THE LITTLE POET'S CORNER.

Christmas.

Betty Page Dabney, age 12.

In the silence of the night,
While a star was shining bright
O'er a stable lowly
To Mary, maid, was born a son.
Angels named the little one Jesus, Saviour Holy.

"Glory be to God on high,"
Sang the seraphs in the sky.
"Christ salvation brings."
He, by shepherds from the fold
And by Eastern sages old,
Is owned the King of kings.

As of old the star has led Wandering strangers to Thy bed,
So Thy love divine
Leads us, by Thy heavenly grace,
That we, too, may see Thy face,
Ever to be Thine.

The Outdoor Christmas Stocking.

Of course Mother always knew, but still—and anyway she hadn't said for sure—

She had just said: "I'm afraid Santa Claus won't know where to find us this year." You see they had just moved from the drouth-stricken West and old Santa might not find out soon enough just where they had stopped.

But every year, before that he had come. Once there was a dolly. And once there were little dishes. And every year there had been candy.

And every year Ethel had written her Christmas letter to dear old Santa and sent it by the bright little fairies. One, two, three times—that was as far back as she could count—she had written the same loving little note in the script that little children use:

"I love you, dear Santa Claus. Please put something nice in my stocking this Christmas. I'll hang it right at the foot of my bed.

"Love and kisses from your little friend,

ETHEL."

And every time the warm-hearted little fairies had taken the message right to old Santa; and every time he had picked out something that she was just wishing for and put it in her plump little stocking.

"I think I'd better write to him anyway," she decided, "and maybe the fire fairies will find him in time."

So Mother sharpened her pencil and Ethel wrote very carefully. But when she came to "I'll hang it right at the foot of my bed," she stopped and thought hard.

"I don't believe I'll hang it at the foot of my bed this time," she said slowly; "the chimney on this little house might not be big enough for old Santa to get through. Oh, I know, I'll put it outdoors. There's a big nail right out on the side of the house, and I'll hang it right on that."

So Ethel finished her letter, and that night, sitting on her mother's lap in her little white nightie, she gave it to the fire fairies. And on Christmas Eve, right after supper, out she went and carefully hung her stocking on the big nail somebody had driven in the side of the house.

"Merry Christmas, sweetheart," called Mother, as Ethel's blue eyes popped open the next morning. "Come and see what a nice present old Santa brought."

She got into her clothes ever so fast and ran out, but—

The little fat stocking wasn't anywhere.

But, yes, it was. The wind had blown it down in a snug corner between the house and a big, roly-poly barrel. And snuggled right down on it was the dearest little kitten you ever saw!—Our Dumb Animals.

Santa Claus.

Alice B. Joynes.

Santa came down from the cold North Pole,
Bringing his Christmas trees.
A brimming pack he had flung on his back,
For he longed the children to please.

His reindeers, frisky, merry and gay,
Flew over the frozen snow.
His rein so slack never held them back,
There were many miles to go.

He whistled and sang, for his heart was light,
As he thought of the children's glee.
He had plenty of toys for girls and boys,
And many a Christmas tree.

His merry eyes twinkled, he laughed aloud,
And gayly clapped his hands.

"O children dear, for many a year,
I've traveled through distant lands,
To give you joy fills my heart with glee,
I never grow tired nor sad.

By day and night 'tis my one delight,
To make the children glad."

So on he journeyed that Christmas night,
From house to house he went.
His kind heart thrilled as each stocking
He filled.

And over the little ones bent.

He piled the presents around the trees,
And he worked with a loving care.
Without any noise placing dolls and toys,
For the children slumbering there.

Then up the chimney again he went,
And climbed in his reindeer sleigh.
His coursers flew as if they knew
Again they must be on their way.

O Santa, the children love you well.
They know you are good and kind.
Not a child forlorn awake next morn,
That Santa could possibly find.

Christmas Fairies.

Kate Goldsboro McDowell.

In a little green valley that was called Fairytown, lived some Christmas fairies. That's what they named themselves, and presently you'll see the reason why. The Queen's name was Good Will, and that of her maid-in-waiting,

Open Hands. The little Queen wore a crown sparkling with tiny icicles and she was always dressed in white, her robes brodered with the tiniest snowflakes, no larger than the head of a pin. Of course, there were lots of fairies in that Fairytown, but the names of the ones who dwell in the pretty fairy palace besides the Queen and her maid-in-waiting, were Great Heart and Kind Wishes, Bright Eyes and Wish-Come-True, Tear Drops and Smiles, Faith and Hope, and Love, who was much larger than the others. Perhaps you will be surprised to hear that these fairies had the cutest little sleighs you've ever seen. They were drawn by dragon flies. Near about Christmas time—for they were Christmas fairies you know—the tinkle, tinkle of their little sleigh bells sounded through the frosty air day and night. Often people hearing a hum of something like softest, sweetest music, paused to listen and try to find out what it could be. But as the fairies were invisible, people could only go on their way wondering. Doesn't it seem funny that these little sleighs should have had for their horses Dragon flies? You would never have guessed it. Well, the reason the fairies were so busy at Christmas, was that they were taking trips back and forth to the home of Santa Claus. He lived in Make-Believe town. It was a place just full of work shops where all kinds of things that children love were made.

The sleighs ran smoothly along the snow covered roads of the little green valley, then they would mount up in the air, carried along by the dragon flies, and away and away to the Home of Santa Claus. They often formed a procession. First was the Queen Good Will, with her maid-in-waiting, Open Hands. Then seated in another sleigh together would be Great Heart and Kind Wishes; then Bright Eyes with Wish-Come-True; next, Tear Drops and Smiles; then Faith and Hope; and Love in a sleigh alone, because she was the largest and took up more room. That was the busiest little procession of workers in the world; they never got tired day or night. They were trying to do a good work, so that kept them from ever growing weary. You may wonder why they paid so many visits to Santa Claus. Well, Santa was head over heels in work when Christmas was drawing near, and so it was hard for him to hear about and remember all the little children. He wanted to do it, but many of the people were rich, and they gave him their list first; that kept him so busy, that it was hard for him to know about and keep in mind all the other children. In that way he was apt to overlook children that lived in humble, out of the way places; who had no beautiful homes nor loving fathers and mothers to remind him to bring their children lovely toys.

That Christmas, the fairies had found a poor sick boy who lay on a bed in a small room with scarcely any covering to keep him warm. His mother went out to work every day to try to earn enough to get them something to eat. Good Will and Open Hands asked Santa to go down the chimney there and leave some nice warm cover for the sick boy and some toys. And on the little table in a corner to put enough good things to eat to last for a long time. Then Great Heart and Kind Wishes whispered in his ear about a little girl who was just crazy for a nice doll, but her mama was too poor to buy her one. So Santa jotted her name down on his list. Bright Eyes and Wish-Come-True told him about a little lame boy who had been longing for a bicycle, and Santa promised that he should have it. All the other fairies, too, found poor little boys and girls who had no sweet mother to hang up their stockings. Day and night, the fairies were going in and out of the place, where Santa Claus lived, reminding him when he was awake, whispering in his ear when he was asleep, about the children he might happen to overlook. They never stopped, so Santa Claus could not forget even if he wanted to, all the little ones that they knew about. Love stretched out her arms and declared: "I would like to gather together all the poor little neglected children in the world and make them happy."

And Christmas morning when children were taking down their stockings, the fairy voices were joining in the song of the Angels: "Peace on earth, good will to men."

A Little Shepherd Boy.

Eugenie du Maurier.

Fear not to enter in, dear little shepherd boy,
Go, take your little lambs, your heart's delight and joy!
And with them, gather round the manger, cold and bare,
And greet the new-born Babe, so kindly smiling there.
Breathe gently, little lambs, and drive away the cold;
For see! thin swaddling clothes His baby form enfold.
And thou, O shepherd boy, the deepest joy be thine,
When nestles in thine arms the Lamb of God Divine.

Childhood's Shining Armor—Health.

Helena Lorenz Williams.

No one has ever discovered why small boys detest having their ears scrubbed or hate to wash their hands before they come to table; or why, for that matter, they never voluntarily clean their fingernails. One might think that these are only trials that descend upon mothers to try their love, as well as their tempers, except that science has now found a way to lighten the burden of making children hygienic just as efficiently as she invented the vacuum cleaner and the washing machine.

Several years ago a man named Charles M. DeForest, whose young son was as averse to performing his ablutions as anybody else's son, hit upon the idea of combining the pursuit of cleanliness with adventure, and romance. He simply converted each "chore," as he called the boy's daily health tasks, into so many sword thrusts against the great dragon Disease. The plan worked; so well in fact, that the National Tuberculosis Association organized a nation-wide Modern Health Crusade movement as one of its educational departments. Since then more than eight million boys and girls have been enrolled as warriors in the fight for perfect health.

This great child health movement is such a success that a number of states have incorporated the Modern Health Crusade system in the school curricula as an adjunct to the study of hygiene. As the children progress in the work they receive the titles of knight, knight banneret, knight banneret constant and Knight of the Round Table. Bright gold and enamel insignia proclaim their ranks.

The education of the children in correct habits of health, is one of the greatest factors in the control of tuberculosis. The National Tuberculosis Association and its affiliated organizations, therefore, concentrate a large part of their activities on this phase of the campaign. In order to continue the work, the seventeenth annual Christmas seal sale will be held throughout the country in December.

1925 LESSON PREPARATION

You say: "In preparing the lesson you have all the lesson helps you need." Granted. Keep them, but add Snowden. Read on. There's a reason.

1925 SELF-PREPARATION?

In the preparing of yourself have you help enough? You will hesitate to answer yes.

Snowden is of chief assistance in Self-Preparation. His Scriptural fervor is contagious.

Snowden's Sunday School Lessons
Improved International Series
1925 $1.25

"Dr. Snoyden is one of the sanest writers on religious matters in America. His Sunday School Lessons are worthy of a place in every preacher's and every teacher's library."—Bishop Edwin D. Mouzon.

"I am using Snowden's Sunday School Lessons in teaching a large adult class in the First Christian Bible School of Canton. I like his treatment of the lessons, his plan is suggestive and the lessons are full of practical helps. I unhesitatingly commend the volume to any desiring an up-to-date work on the International Lessons."—Rev. P. H. Welshimer (Disciples), Canton, Ohio, Pastor of a Sunday School with Six Thousand Members.

"This book is a model of what teachers' helps should be. Each study covers eight pages. The Scripture passage is divided into convenient sections the meaning and teaching of each section being briefly but carefully discussed. The book is full of striking suggestions, pithily expressed. The matter is well arranged; leading thoughts are printed in bold type, and the whole production in its appearance is neat and workmanlike."—Homiletic Review.

Jesus asks to be supreme among our interests. He wishes no shadowy, illusionary, impersonal relation with us. He desires no cold affection, no lifeless regard, no far-off hero worship. We must have faith enough in Christ to take up His views of wealth, war, the poor, the peoples of other races, the sinful and the outcast. We must love Him until we feel as He felt toward the sick, the depressed, the poor, the lonely, the sinful, the rich and the powerful, and to act as He acted toward all humanity. It is this hope and faith and love, the essentials of the higher life, which will create the new world.—W. S. Stranahan.

Dear Friend, whose presence in the house,
Whose gracious word benign,
Could once at Cana's wedding feast
Turn water into wine:
Come, visit us, and when dull work
Grows weary, line on line,
Revive our souls and make us see Life's water glow as wine.
—James Freeman Clarke.

Every difficulty contains prospective wealth. We appropriate the strength of the enemy we vanquish. Overcome a difficulty, and its power henceforth enlists on our side. Let us, therefore, look at difficulties as promises in the guise of tasks. They are treasure-houses presenting the appearance of bristling forts. Break them open, I say, and the treasure is yours. To dare is to win!—J. H. Jowett.

MRS. LUCY WARD YOUNG.

Entered into life eternal, LUCY WARD YOUNG, from her home in Louisville, Kentucky, on November 22, 1924.

Mrs. Young was the wife of the late Colonel John D. Young and daughter of David May, Esq., and his wife Maria Pegram May, of Petersburg, Va. She was born at Petersburg and was there bred in the best traditions of the Virginians of her day. Beautiful in person gracious in manner, true to her Church her family and her State Mrs. Young will ever be a gracious memory to all who knew her. The funeral was from Calvary Church of which Mrs. Young had been a devoted member for many years. Interment at Cave Hill Cemetery, Louisville, Ky.

ELIZA GORDON RIVES.

Entered into Eternal Rest at Essex Fells N. J., in the home of her daughter, Mrs. Francis Lee Stuart, on November 9, 1924, Eliza Gordon Scott, wife of Captain J. Henry Rives, of "Sherwood," Albemarle County Virginia, and daughter of Hon. Robert Eden Scott, of Fauquier County, and Ann Morson, his wife.

Mrs. Rives was born at "Oakwood," the home of her father, August 20, 1839. She received her education at "Oakwood" from the best tutors, and in the City of Richmond, where she spent a large part of her young life with her father, who was leader of the Whig party in the House of Delegates of Virginia and also a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1861 and of the Provisional Congress C. S. A. There she became acquainted with all the men of affairs who were leaders in the great events which foreshadowed the War Between the States. In appearance Mrs. Rives was one of the handsomest women of her day—mentally and in charm of manner she had no superior. Her memory was most remarkable of men and events that happened during her life, even when the shadows grew longer, she would most interestingly speak—her hearers listening with rapt attention. A most devoted wife and mother; a friend who brought comfort and good cheer to all whom she came in contact, and her hand never ceased from good works.

She was a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church and died in the hope and certainty of that promise of Eternal Life which is made to those whose lives have followed closely in the footsteps of our Lord and Master.

Mrs. Rives left four children, Mrs. Francis Lee Stuart, Miss Mary Rives, Mrs. Clarence Conrad and Mr. George Tucker Rives, her oldest child, R. E. S. Rives, having died before her. On Wednesday morning, November 12th, Mrs. Rives was laid to rest in the Cemetery at Lynchburg beside her loved ones.

Even to the end Mrs. Rives retained her active mind and memory. She may have had equals in beauty of character and strength of mind but no superior. We will not look upon such a woman again, because she was a product of a civilization that is passed and gone forever.

THE REVEREND ANGUS CRAWFORD, D. D.

Dean Emeritus of the Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary in Virginia.
At a meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary in Virginia, held on November 12th, the following tribute of respect was ordered to be entered upon the minutes of the Board and published in the Southern Churchman.

The Board of Trustees have learned with sincere regret of the death of the Reverend Angus Crawford, D. D., Rector Emeritus. Though Doctor Crawford had retired from active service, he still gave to the Seminary the help and the inspiration of his loyalty and his love. Coming as a stranger, he soon became identified with the old School of the Prophets, and through long years of untiring and unselfish labors rendered a service which has abiding results.

As a teacher of Hebrew and of Old Testament Literature, Doctor Crawford stood foremost among the scholars of America. The men he taught, who are now in the ministry, realize their indebtedness not only to his linguistic ability but to his reverence for God's Holy Word. He was not only a master of the language but a lover of the truth of God as revealed in the Holy Scriptures.

As Dean, he gave himself untiringly to building up the material welfare of the School. With him it was not a duty, but a work of love. We feel that to him the Seminary owes much of its present strength and of its beauty. Unselfishly and with an enthusiasm that never waned, he labored to build for the future, and with signal success.

His life and his example were in themselves an unconscious professorship of consecration to the service of Christ that supplemented the teaching of his class and left its impression upon his students. His home, a place where prayer was wont to be made, was a home where the doors were open to all comers and where hospitality was as gracious as it was unstinted.

The Board of Trustees extend to the family of Doctor Crawford their warmest sympathy and pray that God may bless and comfort them with the comfort that comes from above.

We thank God that we keep on the list of those who have served Him here the name of one whose faith and zeal for the service of Christ and His Holy Church helped all whose lives he touched. He has gone to be with Christ and has heard His "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Christmas Legends.

Martha A. Kidder.

Our candles light the Christ-Child on His way, Through all the world His sacred feet must stray
On Christmas Eve, as men and angels pray.

At every step the radiant flowers grow
To breathe their fragrant worship all aglow,
In weather clear or stormy, ice or snow.

The animals can talk, the legends tell,
On Christmas Eve, the sick at last are well,
Rejoicing as they hear the Christmas bell.

The purest souls the angel-guard may hear
Who hover round the Holy Child who
dear,
Their hymns of praise arising sweet and clear.

By faith Thy holy Face, dear Lord, we see

On this the Feast of Thy Nativity,
So shall we in our rapture sing to Thee.

"Christmas peace is God's peace; and He must give it Himself, with His own hand, or we shall never get it. Go, then, to God Himself. Thou art His child, as Christmas Day declares; be not afraid to go unto thy Father. Pray to Him; tell Him what thou wantest: say, 'Father, I am not moderate, reasonable, forbearing. I fear I can not keep Christmas aright, for I have not a peaceful Christmas spirit in me; and I know what I shall never get it by thinking and reading, and understanding; O Father, give me Thy Christmas peace'."—Charles Kingsley.

It is the quiet worker that succeeds. No one can do his best, or even do well, in the midst of badinage or worry or nagging. Therefore, if you work, work as cheerily as you can. If you do not work, do not put even a straw in the way of others. There are rocks and pebbles and holes and plenty of obstructions. It is the pleasant word, the hearty word, that helps.—Anon.

ESTABLISHED 1877

AT Christmas, forty-seven years ago, we extended our greetings to the members of the church; and we greet them again in this Year of Grace 1924. During these decades we have devoted our best efforts to the designing and execution of Furnishings for the House of God. That our efforts have proven successful, and are appreciated by the Clergy and Laity is testified to by the fact that hundreds of examples of our work are placed each year in Churches throughout the United States and its possessions.

MUCH pleasure may lie, this glad Christmas Season, in the planning of a gift to the Church, as a remembrance or memorial to a relative or friend; or as a Thank Offering for Blessings given. Something specially designed and executed is worthier of its purpose. This, however, requires some little time:—for the careful studying of design and detail; for the selection of materials; and the proper building and finishing of the work.

LENT begins on February 25th; Easter Day is April 12th. We suggest that those contemplating Easter memorials communicate with us at the earliest convenient date, giving as detailed particulars as possible.

RUNE thou thy words, the thoughts control

That o'er thee swell and throng;

They will condense within thy soul,

And change to purpose strong.

But he who lets his feelings run

In soft luxurious flow,

Shrinks when hard service must be done,

And faints at every woe.

Faith's meanest deed more favour bears,

Where hearts and wills are weigh'd,

Than brightest transports, choicest prayers,

Which bloom their hour and fade.

Forever.

Forever! Oh, blessed promise!

Forever! Oh, blissful word!

There's shelter from every tempest

For all who will trust the Lord.

No danger can ever befall them,

No want shall they ever know,

But always, in perfect safety,

His loved ones shall onward go.

Whatever the danger nigh us,

Though sin should our hearts beguile;

His strong arm shall ever shield us,

Doubts melt 'neath His loving smile;

Though oftentimes our footsteps falter,

He'll guide them in ways of peace,

And if we but follow humbly,

His mercy shall never cease.

Humanism twists the doctrine of truth by saying we must follow our own inclinations. It tells us to do as we please, to follow the path of least resistance and ignore all external authority. Daily, the temptation comes to us all to "go roundabout," rather than to "go through." Even Christ pleased not Himself. He served others. He forgot self. He did good. All the best in civilization is derived from Christ-centred lives, which express themselves, not in what the world bestows upon them, but by their gifts to a needy world.—R. Braunstein.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

God has plenty of work for one-talent people.

It is not place, but love that makes neighborhood.—C. Wordsworth.

The divine commission is not to defend the gospel, but to preach it.—E. J. Brown.

The praying life cannot be an anxious life. Patience in prayer means a trustful soul.—John T. Stone.

It is a high, solemn, almost awful thought for every individual man that his earthly influence, which has had a beginning, will never, through all ages, were he the very meanest of us, have an end.—Carlyle.

Abram was seventy and five years old, an age when he should rather have had rest and settlement; but if God will have him to begin the world again now in his old age, he will submit.—Matthew Henry.

Say, would'st thou work for God?

Thou need'st not ask

Some special task.

The ways which other men have trod

To do His will Lie open still.

Walk though therein with humble heart;

Seek there thy part!

—Record of Christian Work.

There is no maxim for a noble life like this: count always your highest moments your truest moments. Believe that in the time when you were the greatest and most spiritual man, you were your truest self.—Phillips Brooks.

O lovely voices of the sky,
Which hymned the Saviour's birth,
Are ye not singing still on high,
Ye that sang "Peace on earth"?
To us yet speak the strains
Wherewith in time gone by Ye blessed the Syrian, swains,
O voices of the sky!

Felicia Hemarns.

After all there is only one failure in life, one really big and terrible failure. It is the failure to love! And, however, numerous our successes may have been, if we have failed in love, we have disappointed the Father and made bankruptcy of life.—G. W. Barton.

'Tis an old wish, yet a new wish,
With which countless hearts have thrilled

With the old hope, yet a true hope,
That our souls by Christ be filled
With the old peace, yet a new peace,
Which has many a conflict stilled,
And the old joy, yet the true joy,
Such as God for men has willed.

Remember, all things that have stirred the world have come from within. Is it not written of the Son of Man that "as He prayed the fashion of His countenance was altered?" Yes; it was from His prayer that His transfigured glory came. It was from the glow of His heart that there issued the glow of His countenance; it was when He was musing that the fire burned.—Matheson.

In referring to a "cheerful giver," Paul does not mean one who is naturally liberal, but one who is liberal because of the grace of God in his heart, although one can be liberal by nature and liberal by grace.—James Astema.

NEW YEAR ASPIRATIONS

Bishop Randolph in one of his council addresses reminded his hearers that "there is ever the subtle temptation to make the acknowledgment of a duty the vicarious atonement for its fulfilment," which was only a striking way of stating the frequent futility of good resolutions. Warned by our own repeated failures, we have not the temerity to suggest that our readers cheat themselves into the belief that the evils of the individual life can be cured by self-legislation any more than public evils can be cured by legislative action. Still the New Year is for every one of us the beginning of a new session in the school of life. It offers an opportunity to make an appraisal of life's values, and to map out anew the course of endeavor. So, not as resolutions, but as the reasonable aspirations of a Christian man, we submit the following:

I. To remember that no matter how small our part may be in the great world, our part in the home is a large one, and that it becomes us to be as courteous, as kind and as considerate to our own home-folk as to anybody else in the world; realizing the neglected truth that the world would be a cheerier, sweeter dwelling place for all if men were as gracious to their own wives as to somebody else's wife, as kindly to their own daughter or sister as to somebody else's daughter or sister, as just and as patient with their own sons or brothers as with those of other people.

II. To remember that no friendship is worthy of the name unless we give to him we call friend the very best of self, lending with glad heart of our strength to mend his weakness, and leaning on his strongest virtue when our own feet are slipping; bearing any scorn and making any sacrifice rather than that any word or act of ours should make evil for him an easier choice or cause the high call of truth and duty to be for him a less compelling summons.

III. To remember that the crucial test of our sincerity is when we kneel in prayer; and that our ways convict us of hypocrisy if we fail to seek by diligence that which we make show to seek by prayer. Ever bearing in mind that it is folly to pray to be honest if we are unwilling to surrender the profits of dishonest dealing; folly to pray to be true if we are unwilling to suffer the present loss of comfort, or to bear blame in Truth's defense; folly to pray for God's Spirit to lead us into all truth if we open our Bible merely to strengthen our own opinion and are unwilling to be enlightened.

IV. To remember that one of the chief values of the Church of God is that it is a miniature world, a training school for the larger world. Its support is voluntary, but it trains us in community responsibility; its family relations optional, but they help us to realize the family and relationship of all men to God, attendance upon its services are unforced but they are the best discipline of loyalty; participation in what is called divine service being a training for taking our part in the liturgy of labor for all men in Christ's Name and for His sake.

V. To strive to get a community conscience. The map of our town is more valuable to us as Christians than the map of Palestine. Men travel to Palestine to identify some spot where the Master stood. We can find the living Christ in some dingy middle room over a store on Main Street. He waits to reveal Himself to us in some home of squalor in the back streets of our own town.

OLD YEAR MEMORIES

The Elizabethan adventurers who planted English civilization in Virginia brought with them a bit of Shakesperean English which took root there and has continued ever since. The phrase never flourished in the colder North, and has long ago vanished from the common speech in England. Harriet Beecher Stowe goes out of her way to cast a jibe at this quaint provincialism. So far as we know they "raise children" in the South alone. Everywhere else, among English-speaking people children are "reared" or "brought up."

There is a witchery in familiar words like that which attaches to some common flower or bird—

"Weed ye trample underfoot
Floods his heart abrim—
Bird ye never heeded
Oh, she calls his dead to him."

Some years ago, after preaching at a Lenten service in Boston, a woman came up and said with tears in her eyes, "There was one word in your sermon which made me homesick for the land of my childhood. Oh, how I should like to walk in a garden again! I was born in Virginia."

Perhaps it is just an evidence of the enhancing power of the possessive pronoun, but somehow there seems to us a peculiar worth in living in a land where children are raised, not reared. It is true that other things than children are raised in Virginia. In the olden days when a man's wealth was measured in tobacco, they spoke of raising so many hogsheads of tobacco. One of the Northern biographers of Thomas Jefferson, having read that Peter Jefferson, the father of Thomas, raised two hogsheads of tobacco with two hands, happened to be ignorant of the colloquial use of "raise," and of the further fact that the slaves were never called slaves, but were always designated as servants, when their work was in the household; and hands when employed in the field. Having found documentary evidence that Peter raised two hogsheads of tobacco with two hands, he inferred that Peter was of Herculean strength, and wrote a chapter on Peter the Giant. Which same is an interesting side-light on the value of documentary evidence and critical philology.

But all this is but a rambling prelude to what we started out to say, namely, that the art of raising children becomes increasingly difficult in the South as the country empties itself into the cities. There was a time when most of the children were raised in the country. Those unfortunate ones who lived in town, went "down to Grandma's farm" for the summer, where Grandma and the old servants proceeded to correct whatever was amiss in their "raising." One of the principal elements in that training was to teach the children the traditions of the family, and to teach them "their manners." The primary tests of good raising were to tell the truth under all circumstances and to be polite to the servants. The hall-marks of a gentleman discernible in youth and age alike, were courage and courtesy. To these was added a third characteristic; a man must be generous. To be close-fisted was an affliction infinitely worse than to be club-footed.

The old civilization was far from perfect. Pride sometimes bit too deep into the life; generosity sometimes sunk to prodigality; courage sometimes lost itself in recklessness; but the basis of high manhood was there; and it was a noble breed of men who were raised amid the corn and tobacco fields. If under the pressure and in the hurry of our urban civilization we fail to stress the ancient virtues of a comely life, then nothing that material success or education in the knowledge of books gives, can compensate for the lost "raising," which is at once the explanation and cause of whatever was great in our past.

THE LAITY AND THE CLERGY

By the Reverend H. P. Scratchley

DUALISM seems to be a natural quality of man's thinking. No matter how inconsistent this may be with actualities, no matter how often it may have been shown that nature gives no evidence of anything that is simple, so simple as to be termed absolutely good or absolutely evil, men are continually dividing the universe into two realms, are continually demanding two standards of conduct, and continually approving or condemning absolutely acts as if they were simple not mixed. Mankind has been divided into classes, and the classes have been treated as if they had no common ground of conduct. Different standards have been set for each class, and this not so much in those acts which are peculiar to each class as in those things which are common to both. Members of the Church are divided by their functions into two classes, the clergy and the laity. The tendency is to separate these so completely as to demand two different standards of conduct for each, even in those things which are common to their common Christianity. In theory no one today defends this dualism, but in fact, even such bodies as the Protestant Congregationalists are placing their ministers into a different category from their laity as to conduct.

For ages the world has demanded a different standard of conduct from women than from men. Their morals were to be purer, on a higher plane, than those of men. For this double standard of ethics there is no justification in the Christian religion. As Christians men are called to just as high a code of morals as are women. In the New Testament there can be found no distinction between men and women as to faith and morals. The modern woman is right when she demands equal freedom in life with men. If an act is morally wrong for woman it is equally wrong for man; if an act is right for man it is right for woman. The command for purity of life is just as binding on the Christian man as it is on the Christian woman. Because modern "feminism" has come to mean a lowering of women rather than an elevation of men in no way invalidates the force of the argument. It is a misfortune that at present there seems to be a demand for equality in vices rather than a demand for equality in virtues. It is for the Christian women to demand that men live as they have demanded that women should live. For whatever St. Paul may have taught as to the official position of women in the Church, he clearly held that, "in Christ Jesus there is neither male nor female," and to be in Christ Jesus is to be filled with His life. Whatever may be the biological and psychological difference between man and woman, there can be no difference in the moral demands. In the revolt of the modern woman against the double standard, the Church must insist, as it has ever taught in theory, that purity of life, self-control, and integrity of thought are as much a moral necessity for the Christian man as it is for the Christian woman, no more and no less.

Today, subconsciously men have retained the ecclesiastical dualism of the Middle Ages between the laity and the clergy; then the word Church was taken to mean the clergy just as the word religious was taken to mean the monastic life. In thought and in life the conduct of each class was judged by a different standard. Since men could find no trace of this in the New Testament, this dualism was one of the causes of the growth of congregationalism in the Seventeenth Century. Undoubtedly there is a separation between the clergy and the laity, and there must be, but it is a separation as to duties of office, a separation of functions, not a difference of morals or of life. The cleric is both a Christian and an officer in the Church of God. His conduct is therefore conduct of a mixed nature, but the conduct of the officer cannot be completely separated from that of the Christian nor completely confused with it. The conduct of the officer is different from that of the non-officer only as to the duties of the office; back of the officer is the Christian, and dominating the conduct of the officer is the conduct of the Christian. The priest of God has, so far as he is priest, to live as the priest, but only in those things which belong to his office; in all other things he lives but as all Christians should live.

The ministry of the clergy is merely the focused ministry of the Church. They are in a very true sense the specialized organs of the Body of Christ, which is the Church of the Living God; their priestly activities are but the activities of the priesthood of the Church. This priesthood of the whole Church has been focussed, as it were, in ordained men, and because it is the priesthood of the Body, it is the priesthood of the Head of that Body, the Lord Jesus Christ. Ordination is but the setting apart of certain men to exercise definite assigned offices and duties in the Church, to be ministers and stewards of the things of God for and to the whole body. No special privileges are conferred, only special duties and special functions. For these God does give grace with power sufficient for their performance just as He gives to all Christians for the living of the Christian life in that sphere to which He has called them. It is required of stewards that they be faithful whether they are placed over many or few cities.

Yet, however much this may be accepted in theory by the world or however much Christians may have been taught the priesthood of the whole Church of God, in practice a different standard of conduct is demanded from the clergy than from the laity. By very many the sins of the clergy are magnified, even in some cases to be evidences of the failure of the Christian religion, while the same sins are but the frailties of human nature when found among the laity. Even in the ordinary acts of every day life, the clergy have, nilly-willy, a standard set them by the laity which these do not consider binding upon themselves. There is a temptation to say that the laity regard the Sermon on the Mount and the other ethical demands of Our Lord as binding upon the clergy, but not on the laity. The parishioners are prone to think that in some magical way the rector has lost his human nature, for should he show this by temper or by forgetfulness, they are ready to abandon God's cause, while they do not think that they are bound by the same restrictions.

The truth is that Our Blessed Lord in the Sermon on the Mount as well as in His other teachings included all His disciples, not merely His apostles. Whatever He demanded of the latter, He demanded of the former, save perhaps the going into all the world and making disciples, thus building up His Church on earth. But even in this, the preaching of the Gospel is as binding a duty on the laity as on the clergy, however different the way of accomplishment may be. When the apostle called the Christians a royal priesthood, he had in mind all those to whom he wrote, not merely the ministers and stewards.

The holiness of the Church is the holiness of the whole Body of Christ; not of the clergy alone, but of the laity as well. The holiness of the priest who serves at the altar should be no greater than the worshipper in the pew, no matter how obscure such a one may be. As Christians both are called to the holy life of their Lord and Master. If the visible Church lacks apparently the note of holiness, it is not because the clergy alone lack it or conspicuously fail in it, but because the laity fail to grasp the truth that they are equally called to a life of holiness. Today the laity seem to have lost sight of the fact that they are included in the utterance: "Ye are the Church of God." "Be ye perfect as I am perfect," is a command of the Lord of equal force for the layman as for the priest. If the Church fails to impress the world today with its holiness, it is not completely the fault of the clergy. The world, whatever it may think of an individual priest, readily acknowledges that, as a body of men, the ministers are remarkably true to their office. It may not think much of the office; it may regard the occupants of the office as ignorant, as dreamers of past ages, or as unintellectual, but it does pay them the tribute of sincerity. Can the same be said of the ordinary layman? Is the world impressed with the sincerity and the holiness of the Christian laity?

Too long has this dualism been the governing thought of Christian people. If the world is to be won to Christ, it must be when the Christian laity recognize in fact that they are bound equally with the clergy by the ethical commands of the Lord. All Christians, lay as well as cleric, must have before them as an ideal to be lived for the high standard of the holy perfection of the Lord, the Incarnate Son of God. This holiness is not to be merely in thought, not merely the possession of the Sunday worship, but to be a fact in the every-day life of business and of society. Purity, honesty, sincerity, unselfishness, love—all attributes of holiness—are as much parts of the layman's life as they are of the clerics. When the layman will live in all his activities as Christianity demands, the Church will again be the leavening power in the world that its Head meant it to be, but not until then. The holiness of the priesthood is of much power, but the holiness of the laity is of greater. Eloquence, great learning, and spiritual force have much influence to persuade men that Christianity is true, but the humble walking with God of the laity often compels men to accept Christ. The world today is well-nigh sermon proof, but it has not yet become hardened to the life of the holy man.

The priests of God are called upon to live in and for the things of God; they are stewards and ministers of the mysteries of God. This is true, but they are not called upon to hoard the treasures of God. They are to be faithful dispensers of the Word of God and administrators of the Sacraments of the Church, but to whom and for what are they to dispense the Word and to administer the Sacraments? The duty of the laity is the hearing of the Word and the reception of the Sacraments that they may be a people acceptable to God. A sermon is valuable, not because it is eloquent, not because it shows theological learning, and surely not because it is up-to-date, but because it aids to the building up of the spiritual life and leads to the holy life. It is preached not only to but for the laity. It is the sowing of the seed. Because the clergy are called to a study of God's Word, they are the doctors and teachers of the Church; they are called upon to sow the seed not of their own planting, but of God's; they are to sow God's seed. But even God's seed will fail of germination and fruition if it falls upon the unprepared soil. When the laity are prepared by knowledge of God's Word, by prayerful meditation thereon, and by humble willingness to accept whatever one can, the sermon will be of force to promote holiness of life.

On the other hand, when the laity wish merely to be amused or are carping critics of what is preached or have a mind closed to new things or to unaccustomed things, the seed falls upon the beaten path, upon the rocky soil, or into the brambled hedge. Whose fault is it that the soil is such? The most perfect demonstration of a truth fails to convince the ignorant and the stubborn. To learn requires the open mind and the willingness to learn as well as the elemental knowledge of the subject. One of the modern educational fallacies which runs through all our thinking is that words in themselves have value. So we have come to believe that, if one only preaches and teaches enough and with sufficient forceful insistence, all men will accept the teaching and live accordingly; that if an edict is promulgated, a dogma taught, or a law passed a moral revolution will immediately follow. So in the Church the clergy are faulted because the Christian Faith is not everywhere accepted and Christian ethics everywhere followed. The truth is that all these things have been set forth with insistence from the chancel, but have not been met in the pews by the prepared soil.

The Bible and the Book of Common Prayer are as accessible to the laity as to the clergy. They are to be studied by the one as much as by the other. The laity are as well educated as the clergy. They have the facilities of buying and reading books dealing with the Faith, with religion, and with the ethical requirements of Christianity. The obligation to be versed in the Word of God is as binding on them as on the clergy. They should be as ready to give a reason for the faith that is theirs as are the clergy. The Faith once delivered to the saints is the Faith of the whole Body of Christ. It is equally to be believed by the faithful communicant as by the ordained minister of God. There may be difference of the knowledge possessed, but both are to grow in this knowledge as they grow in the Christian life.

The approach to a knowledge of the things of God is through the way of the humble mind. Humility of mind recognizes that something more can be learned, something more may be experienced, and therefore is willing to learn and ready to try out the precept. Success in secular affairs makes no man a judge of spiritual things. A man may be a great scientist and yet may be densely ignorant of theology. It is as true in religion as elsewhere that only experience makes the expert. Yet how often does the successful business man sit in the pew as a judge of theology and religion without having studied theology or lived religiously. Be the cleric ever so spiritual or ever so learned, his efforts fail to impress such a hearer. The sermons will be of more power when they are preached to a spiritual laity, who have some knowledge of the Word of God and who have prepared themselves for the sermon by prayer, meditation, and life.

The separation of the clergy from the laity is nowhere more apparent than in the way each is supposed to live in their every-day conduct. A short time ago a vestryman, looking for a rector of a parish, complained of the unwillingness of the clergy to accept small salaries. He asserted that self-denial was lacking in the clergy. What is this but the latent thought that the clergy should not desire what money gives while the laity can, as Christians, heap up unlimited sums. They seem to think that it is perfectly right and proper for a layman to be a millionaire but absolutely wrong for a cleric to desire to live comfortably, if not luxuriously. Self-denial is by many deemed a clerical virtue not a lay; in popular thought detachment from the world is demanded of the clergy, but never of the laity. One can gather this to be the prevalent thought of Churchmen today from their actions. Our Lord taught no such a dualism. Poverty in itself is no virtue. Voluntary poverty, for the Kingdom of God's sake may be, but when it is, it is a virtue to be acquired by the laity as well as by the clergy. Worldliness, which is but the engrossment in the things of this life to the detriment of the things of God, is a sin for the laity as well as for the clergy. The love of money which is but the putting of the acquisition of money before all else, is just as damnable in the layman as in the cleric. If it is right for the layman to work for greater riches, to desire a larger house and a larger income, and the ability to live more comfortably, it is equally right for the cleric. To be able to give one's children a better education, to be able to buy works of art, and to ride in luxurious cars, is no more the privilege of the laity than of the clergy. The Christian layman is to be just as self-denying as the Christian priest, because God's law is equally binding on both. Both are called upon to live and work for God, for the benefit of men, and for the upbuilding of the Kingdom of God on earth. Both are summoned to be co-workers with God, to be laborers in God's vineyard, though the work may be different.

It is fine for a priest to become rector of a parish of self-denying poor who give freely of their little to the Church of God. It is not fine for a parish of well-to-do people to offer its rector less than what many give their chauffeurs, and no priest is to be faulted if he refuse to work in such a parish. If the clergy are called upon to accept small salaries, thus foregoing the acquisition of books, forced to rigid economy to live decently, the laity are called upon to tithe themselves for the glory of God, even if this involves some self-denial, the non-gratification of some desire. When a man loves, he gives. Giving is the essence of love. When therefore the laity love the Church of God with the same degree of love that they are demanding of the clergy, they will give abundantly and there will be no scarcity of funds. Love is the fulfillment of the law.

The Church in its entirety must come to realize that, whatever may be the diversity of spiritual gifts and spiritual functions, it is the one Body of Christ. The moral law is the same for all; the ethical requirements of life are the same for all. Laity and clergy alike are but co-workers in the vineyard, fellow members of the One Body. Whatever frailties humanity has belong alike to the clergy and the laity. The Grace of God is freely given to both for the work He has given them to do. This work is building up the Kingdom of God, the spreading of knowledge of Christ in the world, and the changing of society into Christianity. This work is the work of all, not the work of one portion of the people of God, each man and woman doing what he or she has the opportunity to do. Only so shall the world be brought to Christ.

A MESSAGE TO THE CHURCHES

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, assembled in its fifth quadrennial meeting, sends to the Churches a message of fellowship.

SITTING together for six days face to face with the great tasks of the Church, the sense of our present oneness in Christ has become very real. We believe in the same God, are redeemed by the same Christ, are comforted by the same Spirit, study the same Book, offer the same prayers, sing the same hymns, strive for the same character, and long for the same Kingdom.

We rejoice in the same growing manifestation of unity in essentials shown in city and state councils of churches, in great federal missionary movements at home and abroad, in the earnest effort to find ways of giving organized expression to unity in village and open country, and in the great ecumenical gatherings soon to assemble.

The world is in desperate need of fellowship—conscious fellowship of men with God and with one another.

A world in quest of such fellowship must look to the Church. For the Church has found in Christ the true secret of fellowship. Through Him we are brought near to God and through Him all cleavages of nation, class and race can be bridged.

We call upon our Churches to proclaim with fresh faith the unshakable conviction that only in a Divine fellowship can the need for human fellowship be met. "Our fellowship is with God and with His Son, Jesus Christ." Apart from this we shall seek in vain for real solutions to any problem. The fullest fellowship between man and man requires fellowship with God in Christ. This is our basic need. And this brings us to the fundamental work of the Church—evangelism. We note with gratification the co-operation of the Churches in this service, the concerted appeal to men to follow Christ and ally themselves with His Church, the joining of the denominations in the Federal Council in simultaneous and united endeavors. We commend yet closer cooperation in order that the voices of all the Churches may be lifted up in one common summons to men to turn to God.

The issue of true fellowship with God Our Father is fellowship with all His children. There is no more searching test of the extent to which our civilization is truly Christian than the measure to which fellowship has come to prevail in all the relations of men with one another. The fellowship to which Christ calls us is not for parts of life, but for all of it. It is not to stop at home or Church, it is to reach beyond the factory gate, the national boundary and the color line. All the gulfs that separate men into self-seeking, suspicious or unfriendly groups are to be bridged by the spirit of fellowship that Jesus Christ releases in human life.

Our industrial and economic life we must seek to build upon a basis of deeper fellowship. Unless brotherhood be a reality in the shop, the mine, the market-place—where most men spend the greater part of their waking hours—it is not likely to be a reality elsewhere. In this sphere it is the primary function of the Church to infuse the lives of men with the Spirit of God, thus breeding a race of men of good will disposed, even eager, to incorporate the principles of Christ's kingdom into the entire social order.

Intelligent sympathy for all classes of men is a prerequisite for preaching the social gospel. Given that sympathy, let all ministers of the gospel call men to follow Christ in all social relations and in the practice of the stewardship of all that they are and have.

We gladly emphasize the fact of a steadily developing social conscience in our country, which actually, if not consciously, has as its underlying principle Christ's law of neighborly love. Our national prohibition law is a striking illustration of this new social conscience, which brushes aside without hesitation any claim of any individual to indulge any appetite or to perform any act which is a menace to the social order. The effect upon the physical, economic, social and moral life of the nation of this extraordinary effort of society to protect itself from the liquor traffic, has been so beneficial that it is now generally agreed that the law will stand, based as it is upon the unassailable purpose "to promote the general welfare." The present day duty of the moral citizenship of the Nation we believe to be:

(1) To magnify the value of the principle of total abstinence, and the obligation upon law-abiding citizens to practice the same,

(2) To make unmistakably clear to both the lawless sellers and the lawless buyers of intoxicants that the liquor traffic has been permanently outlawed in the United States as the enemy of society; and

(3) To urge local, state and federal governments to cooperate with increased vigor against the present organized resistance to the prohibition law, until as adequate enforcement of that law has been secured as of any other social legislation.

The modern world, now a single neighborhood, demands for its very life the acceptance of the principle of fellowship among the nations. In our world today what happens anywhere happens everywhere; what affects one affects all. We are all members one of another. Against war, as the denial of the Christian ideal of fellowship, we must bear clear and united witness. The voice of the Churches is unequivocally for the pacific settlement of all international disputes, for justice and security to all nations on the basis of codified international law, for the outlawry of war through the development of international agencies for bringing aggressor nations under the collective moral condemnation of the world. Realizing that the present burden of armament not only means a terrific economic strain, but also fosters the militaristic mind and leads to an atmosphere of fear in other nations, we voice the clear call of the Churches for a program of drastic reduction of armaments by all nations, in which our Government should participate and if occasion calls should lead the way.

The fellowship which the Christian Gospel seeks includes all races. "Has not one God created us? Have we not all one Father?" Whatever superficial differences there may be, the body of humanity is one. For "if one member suffer all the members suffer with it, and if one member be honored all the members rejoice with it."

Upon every Christian falls the personal responsibility to seek justice for all, to cultivate mutual appreciation and cooperation, and to dispel false racial pride or desire to dominate others.

Upon every minister of the Gospel falls the inescapable duty of leadership in promoting a common fellowship in Christ as the ideal in race relations. The Christian Church cannot lower the standards of Christ. It is therefore uncompromisingly opposed to any effort, organized or unorganized, which creates or fosters racial prejudice and suspicion and destroys that fellowship which should characterize the family of God.

From among the remaining tasks of the Church we single out two which especially challenge cooperative endeavors, religious education and missions, both at home and abroad.

The urgent need for constructive attention to religious education calls for no argument. Upon this depends the moral and spiritual fibre of our nation. Here the sorry results of the divisions of Christendom are conspicuously manifest; because of them religious education has been all but completely banished from our public schools, to the grave peril of the nation's future. This is a sin for which the Churches and the States should be called to repentance and to a conversion that should find some process in, or in connection with, the public schools, for matching intellectual training with that of the moral and religious nature.

More directly are the Churches responsible for religious education in the home and in the Church. That the competition for the interest of the child with growing multitudes of other concerns become more and more intense, and that the discipline of the home becomes more lax, only magnifies the importance of redoubled effort to stimulate in the home and provide in the Church those effective processes of education which shall secure the spiritual foundations of tomorrow.

Both at home and abroad the work of Christian missions is increasingly a cooperative task. In the interest of the strength of the denominations themselves, although yet more for the sake of the victories of the Kingdom, we urge the Churches everywhere to cooperate with the mission boards in their purpose to avoid competitive overlapping on the one hand and consequent overlooking of less attractive fields on the other, and to arrive at effective comity. We would also summon the entire membership to the adequate financial support of the magnificent enterprise of the Churches which seeks to carry out the commission of the Master to witness for Him, beginning in our own community and reaching through State and Nation to the very ends of the earth. The challenge is not alone that of a world in need, but of a world that is ready.

Finally, it is the call to fellowship with the Master which inheres in these differentiated calls. To this crowning fellowship you, the churches, are summoning yourselves in this fraternal greeting from your representatives,

FEDERAL COUNCIL OF THE CHURCHES OF CHRIST IN AMERICA.

BISHOP JAMES STEPTOE JOHNSON

His Works Do Follow Him.

By Elizabeth Gilman

ONE of the great-hearted soldier Bishops of our Church finished his work here on Earth within the octave of All Saints' Day. He was over eighty years of age and on account of failing strength had retired about ten years ago from the strenuous work of the Diocese of West Texas, but during these ten years he kept up an active interest in all the undertakings for good in San Antonio, where he was honored by people of all shades of religious belief. He not only believed in Church Unity, but he lived it. At his funeral he was mourned as the city's most beloved son, or perhaps we should say as the Father of the Community, where he had lived for over thirty-five years.

Since his death there has been sent me a letter which he wrote last July, which ends with these words:

"I could well wish that this might be my last word of brotherly love to this city where I have lived so long and for whose highest interests I have done my best. God be with you and help you by your united effort to make this city one in which dwells righteousness and brotherly love."

This letter was written by the Bishop after he had read in the San Antonio Express the pitiful story of a little baby, whose parents on account of poverty, caused by the father's ill health, could not give adequate food to the little thing and who virtually starved to death. Then there followed the added grief to the parents of burial in the pauper's cemetery. The story touched the Bishop's heart; and I quote a part of what he wrote: "Christ's idea was not simply to get men into heaven, but to get more of heaven onto this earth. . . . Forty years ago, long before I ever dreamed of coming to Texas, I preached a sermon in Mobile, Alabama, declaring that in a Christian community there should be no such thing as unrelieved human suffering, caused by sickness the result of poverty. . . . We organized a society, called St. Martin's Guild. . . . Everybody in the congregation was asked to become a member of this Guild, which they could do by paying monthly the smallest sum, but each was asked to give according to his ability. We had the usual number of poor and impotent people who drift into all cities. . . . The idea was practical and took root and is still bearing fruit in the parish after all these years. The fund had in its treasury never less than $100, to be used for any emergency, such as the one told in the story with which we began. It created a strong feeling of fellowship which continues to this day. I wonder if every church and synagogue in this city could not have something of this same kind."

Bishop Johnston was a Southern gentleman of the old school, one of General Lee's scouts in 1861, when he was only a lad at the University of Virginia. He was wounded, he was imprisoned, but his spirit only increased, and after the end of the war and after his marriage with his childhood sweetheart, the lovely Mary Green, he decided to enter the ministry and served as a parish priest in Fort Gibson, Miss., Mt. Sterling, Ky., and at Trinity Church, Mobile. Indeed, after his retirement from active work as a Bishop, he served as rector of a little country parish, in his own Diocese. He went to Texas as a Missionary Bishop, and his visitations on horse-back or in a buggy, or stage coach, took him far afield; a round-trip sometimes meant 1,800 miles of such travel. He would come occasionally to the East to gain friends for the work which, however, under his able leadership became self-supporting and in 1894 he became its first Diocesan, for up to that time it had been only a Missionary Jurisdiction. He built schools, for boys and girls, black and white, and was the friend and counsellor of rich and poor, gentle and simple.

At the celebration of his eightieth birthday last year Bishop Capers, his successor, said of him: "His high office has been his opportunity to approach all peoples and his love for his fellow man has given him the cement of an abiding friendship."

We have not heard whether there is to be any special memorial of him in San Antonio, but following the thought of his last letter, which has formed the basis of this brief appreciation, why could not there be a San Antonio Guild of St. Martin to which Bishop Johnston's friends, in East and in the West could feel that they were carrying out his last wish? In this letter he quoted the poem which he had recited as a boy, "Abou Ben Adam," by Leigh Hunt. The words seem like an epitaph to the dear Bishop, "Write me as one that loves his fellow men."

A Woman's Enterprise

For the past two years the Berkeley Divinity School has held a Summer Session of three weeks for women students. Plans are under consideration for the enlargement of this work in the summer of 1925. An enthusiastic meeting was held at Grace Church, New York City, on December 6 to discuss plans. About forty women were present, among whom were Mrs. Keasbey, Mrs. Leach, Mrs. Parrish, Mrs. Elihu Root, Jr., Mrs. Kate O'Hare, Mrs. Alphonse Koelble, Miss Anna Rochester and others of New York and many former and prospective students.

At 12:30 a Service of Intercession led by the Dean of the School was held in Grace Church Chantry. At the luncheon which followed there was a lively discussion. It was agreed that in addition to the regular curriculum the School should be asked to provide a series of discussion conferences on important problems of the day to be led by experts in various fields—a sort of School of Inquiry. Such subjects as the following were suggested: Christianity and Art; the Church and Labor; Psychotherapy; Religion in Modern Literature, etc. It is likely that an English woman lecturer will be invited to give a course of lectures.

The idea behind the Berkeley project has been that the theological seminaries of the Church should provide an opportunity to women for the honest and thorough-going study under expert guidance of the fundamental principles of the Christian faith, of the Bible in the light of modern scholarship, of the origin and history of the Church, of the practical application of Christ's teaching to the life of today, and of other religious subjects. Though the Summer Session itself is still in the experimental stage two things seem to have become clear: first, that there is a growing desire on the part of the keen, intelligent women of the Church to consider frankly and intently what they believe as to God and the spiritual life, and why they believe it; second, that there is a growing need in the work of the Church for women who are adequately equipped with an intelligent understanding of the purpose of God for the world and for the man of today. The "School of Inquiry" will, it is hoped, bring together young women who are interested in modern movements and are looking for further light on the relation of these movements to the Church and are questioning whether they can join the Church or whether they should remain in the Church.

The plans for the 1925 session are in the hands of a committee consisting of the Rev. Horace Fort, Chairman; Miss Adelaide Case of Teacher's College, New York; Miss Mary Van Kleeck, of the Russell Sage Foundation; Mrs. Marguerite Wilkinson, the poet, and Mrs. Ripley Hitchcock. Another luncheon will be held in New York on January 24, 1925.

Another year to follow hard,
Where other souls have trod;
Another year of life's delight,
Another year of God.

SOCIAL SERVICE COUNCIL OF ADVICE MEETS.

The Council of Advice to the Executive Secretary of the Social Service Department of the National Council, made up of social service leaders from all parts of the country, held its annual meeting at Chicago in December.

The meeting began on Tuesday evening, December 2, with the representatives from the different provinces giving brief reports on the work that was being done in their own parts of the country. On Wednesday, the Rev. William B. Spofford, editor of "The Witness," and secretary of The Church League for Industrial Democracy, spoke on "The Church and Industry." Mr. Spofford briefly described his visit to the meeting of the American Federation of Labor at El Paso, the Employer's Conference at Boston last spring, and the Chicago meeting of clergy and labor men on the subject of injunctions. He called attention to the fact that the Boston conference is to be repeated this year with the same group as a nucleus, the meeting to be conducted on the basis of a questionnaire made by Dr. Sheffield of The Inquiry. Copies of this may be obtained through the national department. He also described the study of the silk workers' strike in Paterson, New Jersey, which is being made by the Church League for Industrial Democracy. The report of this study will soon be published.

It was felt that we are under obligations by the action of the General Convention of 1922 and by the findings of the informal conference held at that time to press upon our people the challenge and need of industrial subjects. The following resolution was passed: "The increasing importance of the industrial problem and the perplexing relation of the different groups involved challenge the Church to secure a more intimate contact with, and knowledge of the whole matter. It is evident that there is need for conferences of such a character as will permit representatives of Church groups to meet with employers as well as with employees. Such few conferences as have been held indicate a method by which more comprehensive undertaking of the problems may be secured. It is the opinion of the Council of Advice that the Executive Secretary should encourage this method of conference and endeavor to find those best fitted to set up such conferences from time to time in various parts of the country, reporting such findings as may be submitted to those interests."

Rural Work.

On Wednesday evening, the Rev. Mr. Goodwin, the new Secretary for Rural Work, spoke about the importance of the Church work in rural communities and the need of more training for work in this field. He pointed out that often rural parishes are thought of simply as stepping stones to larger city parishes and that the Church must realize the importance of rural work for its own sake. He stated that it is estimated that there are about 101,000 Protestant Churches in rural America. Long ago, when there was only some one hundred churches, practically the whole rural population went to them. Now, when the churches have multiplied a thousand fold, only one person out of five goes to church. He stated that there are 1,038 abandoned rural Protestant Churches in Ohio alone and that in the country districts there are over four million children who either do not or cannot go to church. The only solution of this problem for the Church is to develop vocations for rural work on the part of the clergy and to provide the clergy with some more training in the technique of the rural pastor. He stated that the Methodists have seven hundred rural pastors at Summer Conferences each year discussing their common difficulties and taking courses in rural sociology and other subjects that will help them in their work. He stated that most of the other Protestant bodies had been studying the rural problem for fifteen or twenty years. He said the Episcopal Church had two advantages in getting into the field late. One was that it has the experience of the other Churches to learn from and the other is that we have not made any mistakes because so far we have not done much of anything. Our own Church Conference for Rural Pastors held each summer in Madison, Wisconsin, is becoming more successful each year and is beginning to give the rural clergy of the Episcopal Church the feeling that they are doing an important and a worth-while piece of work and that the Church is interested in their achievements, as well as to provide them with new ideas and new methods to help them in their local fields.

Summer Schools.

On Thursday morning the Council discussed the question of social service courses in the summer schools. The Rev. Mr. Kreidler, of Scranton, gave a summary of a group meeting which discussed this subject at the National Conference on Social Service of the Church at Toronto this spring. The Council of Advice concurred in the three conclusions which the earlier conference had come to, namely that the present tendency to overcrowd and overload the programs of the summer conferences should be avoided; that the smaller conferences are valuable and necessary and offer a good opportunity to present social service problems; and that social service courses in summer schools should be as definite as possible and give those who take them definite ideas to use in their own parishes when they go home. It was brought out that there were last summer forty-one summer conferences held by the Episcopal Church throughout the country. It was recommended that this summer the National Social Service Department be prepared to provide material and, as far as possible, leaders for two out of the three following courses in the summer schools:

(1) A general introductory course on social service using for a text book the new edition of "The Social Opportunity of the Churchman."

(2) A course in Case Work, particularly in relation to the Church School.

(3) A course on social service in the parish under some such title as "The Parish and The Community."

The Denver-Manitou Conference.

The National Conference of Social Work is to meet next June in Denver. Arrangements have been made to hold the Church Conference on Social Work at Manitou, near Denver, June 6 to 10, 1925, just preceding the national conference. Manitou is near Pike's Peak in a most interesting and attractive part of Colorado. Arrangements have been made to have the living quarters and the place for services and meetings of the Conference all under one roof. A large attendance of Church social workers, especially from the West and Middle West, is expected.

The following were elected members of the Program Committee of the Conference: Dean Lathrop, Dr. Jeffrey R. Brackett of Boston, the Rev. Charles K. Gilbert of New York, the Rev. Robert P. Kreidler of Scranton, and Dean Dagwell of Denver.

Young People and Social Service.

There was some discussion of the relation of the Young People's movement to the social service work of the Church. Mr. Newberry of the National Department spoke of the value of the social service material in the hand book for Young People's Societies published by the National Council and urged a more extensive use in Young People's meetings of study and discussion of such topics as "World Peace," "Industry" and "The Duty of the Citizen and the Churchman to His Community."

Jails.

The conditions in county jails throughout the country has been the subject of study by a large number of groups both within the Church and outside of the Church during the past year. The Social Service Commission of the Federal Council of Churches, the National Catholic Welfare Council, and the Association of Jewish Rabbis have all been working on a common program to get the importance of the jail situation before their various bodies. It has been said that the county jails of our country might be made the greatest reformatory influences that we have. As many people come out of the county jails each year as come out of the colleges and universities of the country. More money is spent annually in support of penal institutions than is spent in support of our colleges and universities. A large number of those who go into county jails are first offenders. A large number of the inmates of county jails are convicted of no crime at all but are simply awaiting trial. In most of our county jails, these first offenders and innocent people are locked up side by side with hardened criminals. In many of our jails, the fee system of paying the jailer is in vogue, that is, the jailer is paid so much per prisoner. He gets for his salary all he can save out of this amount after providing for the food and care of the prisoners. This naturally puts a premium on bad care and leads to many abuses. Reports of the members of the Council of Advice brought out the fact that many Church groups have been studying their local jails not with the idea of making a sensational clean-up of the jail, but with the idea of showing people in the Churches what jail conditions are, as the only thing which can solve the jail problem in the long run is an enlightened public opinion.

Dean Lathrop reported on his cooperation with the three commissions of the Federal Council of Churches on matters of common importance. An extract from a letter to Dean Lathrop from the General Secretary of the Federal Council was read, showing the appreciation of the Federal Council for this cooperation.

On motion of Dr. Tyler, it was resolved that the Council of Advice express its appreciation of the report of the Executive Secretary showing the fine cooperation which has existed between his department and the commission of the Federal Council of Churches.

The following members of the Council of Advice were present at this meeting:

Representing the Department of Christian Social Service of the National Council—Dean Lathrop, the Rev. F. D. Goodwin, Mr. Alfred Newberry.

Representing the Field—Miss Anne Vernon of Providence, R. I., the Rev. Charles K. Gilbert of New York, the Rev. Robert P. Kreidler of Scranton, the Very Rev. B. D. Dagwell of Denver, the Rev. G. S. Keller of Winona, Minn., the Rev. L. N. Taylor of Roanoke Rapids, N. C., the Rev. Samuel Tyler of Rochester, N. Y., the Rev. J. M. Nelson of Louisville, Ky., and the Rev. Charles L. Street of Chicago.

THE CHURCH AND YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK

By the Reverend Karl Morgan Block, D. D.

WHAT HAS THE CHURCH THE RIGHT TO EXPECT OF THE YOUNG PEOPLE?

THIS question has been addressed to a number of young people at Conferences and Summer Schools, and has been a subject of inquiry in the Devotional Meetings of many Societies, and the answers vary as might be expected, from the utterly pious to the blithely indifferent. The answer depends, I take it, on the acceptance of an axiomatic but much neglected truth: The Christian Church is built upon Service. The development of individualism has put a fantastic emphasis upon what one gets from, rather than what one gives to the Church. When the young people irritate us with their demands that the Church contribute to their entertainment, their inspiration, their sense of the general fitness of things, etc., and withhold an expression of loyalty until this ideal situation is achieved, they are but reflecting the adult mind. So often what irritates the adult is his own shortcomings reflected in Youth. It makes a great deal of difference whether one is on the outside looting in, or on the inside looking out.

We forget too often that the Church incarnates itself in each and every one of us, for weal or for woe. It is not an impersonal entity which we can abuse and mourn over as though we had no obvious relationship to it. It is a composite picture which reflects unerringly our virtues and our vices, our achievements and our failures. And each one of us is charged with sins of omission and sins of commission in so far as he shares this responsibility in his individual Church life. One has a perfectly legitimate right to condemn the adolescent who in his irritation at the status quo admits helplessness and assumes the old monastic attitude of desertion when help is most bitterly needed.

What specifically has the Church the right to expect of the young people? Of course it is hard not to be obvious.

First, LOYALTY. This is one of the finest characteristics of Youth. Boys and girls at school spend nights of sleepless anxiety over the big game of the season with their special rival. "School Spirit" has developed a marvelous sense of corporate responsibility, and any self denial which assists in setting forward the school's reputation is recognized as a supreme virtue. Moreover, loyalty in adolescence is very definite and well defined. It is futile to talk to enthusiastic young people on such propositions as these: "It does not make any difference what school you attend. They all teach the same subjects." "It adds to one's intellectual breadth to move from school to school and choose what ever is best in each." "If the personality of one of the teachers is unattractive, withdraw from the school at once, and try another." The Church has a right, therefore, to expect her young people to have an undivided loyalty to their own Communion. All Churches suffer from ecclesiastical tramps and religious jelly fish, if that is not contradiction in terms. The word "booster" may have an unpleasant connotation, but every one will admit that we have enough silly, destructive, unreasoning and whining criticism in the Church not to aggravate it by a toleration of that sort of thing in our young people when the morale of their school frowns upon any suggestion of inadequacy in their Alma Mater. All young people in boarding schools grumble about food, about the injustice of school discipline, about the severity of lesson assignments, etc. But they never question meetings called to learn the school yells, extra practices for various school enterprises, and they will leave their comfortable beds in the dark of the early morning, in the rain or storm, to send off a team with their encouragement and benediction. The Church has the right to expect her youth to express, in her organization, some virtues peculiarly characteristic of the enthusiasm of their age. The boy or girl who is cynical in the earlier ages of adolescence is unhealthy, physically, or morally, or spiritually, or all together.

Second, IDEALISM. This virtue has been suggested. Youth must never acquiesce in failure. It is always willing to "take a chance." The gambling instinct is a perversion of a noble impulse. The motto of the adult age too often is "safety first." We are a conservative Communion, too often distrustful of our emotions and of our enthusiasms. We should expect of our young a vision of growth and progress; a willingness to hazard for the Church in some such terms as they are willing to spend and be spent for their Schools and their other loyalties. The producing age is relatively youthful, and we can ill afford to lose from the Church the buoyancy of spirit, the optimistic outlook, and the absence of spiritual rigidity which comes from experience in the atmosphere of the world.

Third, SERVICE. The young people are quite right in their insistence that a place must be found where they can serve. One aspect of religion suggests that it offers a haven of rest for tired voyagers whose battered craft has long been buffeted by the storms of life. But another, and a perfectly legitimate one suggests religion as motion, activity, the sending of one's craft into the beckoning Unknown. The thrill comes not to the clam digger off the coast of New Jersey, but to the deep sea fisherman off the banks of Newfoundland. Surely there is something in the Church more important than the distribution of literature and a type of work which an errand boy could do, that may be offered to our young people. True service involves missionary activity, and the young people are obviously the missionaries to their own age. Those who are earnest and consecrated can search out the boys and girls of the parish and community for Confirmation and can suggest to the Church officials opportunities for service that are distinctive and within the capacities of their own age. The cry today is and always will be for leadership. Children are peculiarly susceptible to the influence of the older group. They are usually endeavoring to tag after them, and are always imitating them. The sternest discipline that life knows is the discipline of the older children on the younger. The experiment of having our Service Leaguers teach in the Church School, considering the lack of special preparation, is an earnest of success. The personnel of our Summer Schools is becoming more and more youthful. And the Church has the right to expect that her young people shall take work that is at once fascinating and difficult. There are other and more detailed expressions of functioning membership which the Church can lay upon the conscience of her young people. She expects them to attend Divine Worship, where the "rectifying influence of the Sanctuary" will save them from the age drift. She has a right to expect of them that they shall reflect the generosity of youth and itself forgetfulness in their contributions to the support of the Church's Mission at home and abroad.

The very fact that the young people have become articulate in their insistence upon a new order obligates them to cultivate leadership. Greater flexibility of organization and a far wider evangelistic work can be done if our young people will undertake to accept responsibility. The main criticism of that age today is its unwillingness to assume definite obligations and distinct responsibility. We need those who have been trained by experience to lead Prayer and other Devotional Meetings, where the habit of extemporaneous prayer can be helpfully expressed. We need the youthful spirit of idealism, willingness to serve, intolerance of sham and hypocrisy, developed and maintained until the entire organization catches the contagion of this spirit and urges a reluctant race into the Kingdom of God.

It seems as though we have learned nothing from the War. We have apparently forgotten that under what they believed to be a proper impulse, the youth of the land were willing to lay down their lives for an ideal. If the Church can only recognize an obvious fact, she will expect great things of her young people, and in that expectation she is not apt to be disappointed. Those who have been most with the young people and ought to know them best, recognize a growing number who are prepared for any service which offers a real challenge. The depleted ranks of our missionary forces can be filled. The ministerial quota can be properly maintained. The wider and more diversified opportunity for service in the Church as an organization can be easily met if we cease to distrust our young people and lay upon their hearts the Master's challenge to personal sacrifice. This sounds unhappily like spread-eagle oratory. But one need only consult the men who are now in our Seminaries, most of them as an invariable result of their war experience, or the growing number of young people who have offered for service in foreign fields to find a vindication of this promise. And the Church does demand of her young people that they "empty by filling." If the situation in the Home Parish is intolerable because of its ultra conservatism or its obscurantism, then let us say to our young people, "Come in and do better." The indoor sport of America is abuse of the Church. Nine times out of ten it is at heart insincere. It is part of the unfortunate habit of an excuse making age. If the young people think they have much to demand of the Church, the Church has infinitely more to demand of them. For the Church is very largely what they make it and in a few years they will be face to face with their own expressed standards and will be judged by the program which they have so clearly outlined for their elders.

Church Intelligence

Report of the Committee on Sagada to the National Council.

At the meeting of the Council on December 10 and 11, the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That the National Council hereby authorizes the committee on Sagada appointed by the President to consider all questions that may have arisen with regard to the conduct of the work in that mission, and render a decision on behalf of the Council.

Your Committee respectfully reports:

1. That it has not been practicable to arrange a conference in the near future, in the United States, between the Bishop of the Philippine Islands and the priests in charge of the Sagada Station.

2. That we have heard from the Bishop of the Philippine Islands that in his letter of October 15, 1924, he definitely accepted the resignation of the priest in charge of the Sagada Station, and regarded the resignation as final and complete.

3. That communication with the Bishop showed clearly that further delay on our part to uphold the authority of the Bishop would seriously embarrass him in carrying out plans he had already made to care for the Sagada work in the immediate future, and that he himself was going to Sagada immediately.

4. That the following cables, signed by the President of the Council were despatched on December 17:

(a) To Bishop Mosher—
"Understand you regard Staunton's resignation and removal decided and necessary. We agree and have notified him. Think however your early visit to this country most desirable."

(b) To the Rev. J. A. Staunton, Jr.—
"Understand you are coming to the United States. Beg to advise that your resignation and retirement from Sagada is regarded by Department of Missions as an accomplished fact and final."

5. That the foregoing action was taken unanimously.

All of which is respectfully submitted,

THOMAS F. GAILOR.

Walking 1,700 Miles in Alaska.

Archdeacon Drane, of Alaska expects to leave Nenana about January 1 for a winter journey of more than three months. Going down the Tanana River, he will first visit the Indian Mission and the white community at Tanana; then he will strike across country one hundred and fifty miles northeast to St. John's in the Wilderness. From there he will follow the Koyukuk River northward to Wiseman and Coldfoot to visit the few white miners in those isolated camps. Another overland journey across the Yukon Mountains will bring him back to the Yukon at Rampart and then he will go up the Yukon to Stephen's Village, Fort Yukon, Circle, and Eagle. From Eagle he will make a difficult cross-country journey to Tanana Crossing, and from there will follow the Tanana River down stream to Nenana, reaching home, he hopes, about April 15. When he reaches Nenana again he will have traveled approximately 1,700 miles on foot.

Foreign Missions Convention of the United States and Canada.

The Foreign Missions Convention to be held under the auspices of the Foreign Mission Boards of Canada and the United States is announced to meet at Washington, D. C., January 28-February 2, 1925.

The primary purpose of the Convention is for the information and inspiration of the churches of Canada and the United States. It will be an educational, not a deliberative or legislative assembly. It will not deal with questions and problems of administration on the mission field. Its messages will be designed to enlarge the interest and deepen the conviction of the Christian people at the home base as to their foreign mission responsibilities and obligations.

The attendance will be limited to 5,000 delegates, representing the Foreign Mission Boards and Societies of Canada and the United States. It is recommended that each delegation include: officers and members of Foreign Mission Boards (both men and women); pastors of churches; laymen and laywomen in equal numbers; general Church officials; theological and college professors; foreign missionaries at home on furlough; student volunteers and other candidates for the foreign mission field.

The Committee on Arrangements is organizing a program which will include as speakers the best qualified men and women to be found in Canada, the United States, Great Britain, and on the Continent of Europe, as well as those from the foreign mission fields.

Special meetings will be arranged for the representatives of different denominational groups for the purpose of considering the best methods of gathering up results of the Convention and carrying to the churches and the membership of the different denominations the inspiration of the Convention.

The benefits of this Interdenominational Missionary Convention to the Churches of Canada and the United States cannot be estimated. Held at this opportune time in the history of the Church, bringing together so many of the leaders of the different denominations of these two countries as well as the leaders of the Christian forces in many other lands, the Foreign Missions Convention at Washington cannot fail to give a mighty impulse to the spiritual life of the churches and inspire them to greater sacrifice for the missionary objective and make possible a notable advance in the foreign missionary movement.

If this inspiring hope is to be realized, it is essential that all who are interested in the progress of Christ's Kingdom give themselves faithfully to prayer on behalf of the Convention arrangements, exercising large faith in God, the source of all power.

Admission to all sessions of the Convention will be by ticket. Tickets will be furnished only to delegates presenting credentials issued by the Secretary of the Foreign Missions Conference and countersigned by the Secretaries of the Mission Boards appointing the delegates.

Correspondence should be sent to the Secretary of your Board of Foreign Missions or to L. B. Moss, Convention Registrar, 25 Madison Avenue, New York City.

Medical Education in Eastern China.

St. John's University, Shanghai, is taking the lead in developing medical education in Eastern China.

In 1881 St. John's established the first medical school in China. President Pott says: "The plan for the development of a Union Medical School has moved forward a step by the offer on our part to place at the disposal of the school for as long a period as necessary our medical faculty, laboratories, class rooms, hospitals and dormitories.

"The Northern Baptist Mission and the Southern Methodist Mission hope to make arrangements so that they may become cooperating units in the school. There is good prospect of the Chinese medical profession in Shanghai joining in the enterprise by forming a unit.

"We hope that through this union medical education in this part of China may be advanced and placed on a firm foundation.

"We are adapting the third floor of the old Science building so that it may serve as lecture rooms and laboratories for the Medical School."

All of the five graduates at the last commencement have become internes at St. Luke's Hospital, Shanghai.

General Theological Seminary: Reunion of Alumni.

The Mid-Winter Reunion of the Associate Alumni of the General Theological Seminary will be held on Tuesday, January 20, 1925.

The Seminary will entertain the Alumni at luncheon at one o'clock. Those who wish to attend the morning lectures for undergraduates will be welcome.

After luncheon there will be opportunity for the reunion of classes in private rooms, which will be assigned for this purpose on application to the Bureau.

At half past four o'clock two lectures will be given for the Alumni in Sherred Hall.

Evening Prayer will be said in the Chapel at six o'clock.

The Annual Dinner will be served in the evening.

Notice.

At the meeting of the Army and Navy Commission of the Episcopal Church held at the Church Missions House, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City, on Thursday, December 11, the following motion was made and carried: "That the Episcopal Clergymen, seeking appointment as Chaplains in the Army or Navy or Officer's Reserve Corps, send their applications to the Chairman of the Executive Committee, Army and Navy Commission, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City."

New Church Opened.

On Sunday, November 23, the handsome new stone church of St. Peter's Parish, La Grande, Oregon, was opened with impressive services. It was an event long looked forward to by the people, and the consummation of their hopes was made possible by the splendid gift of $30,000 towards this object by Mrs. Anna Honan. Bishop Remington and the rector, the Rev. S. W. Creasey, conducted the opening services. Celebration of the Holy Communion at eight A. M. The Church School entered their new quarters, complete and up-to-date in every particular. By eleven o'clock the new church was full to overflowing.

Bishop Remington preached an appropriate sermon from the text, "Where thy treasure is there will thy heart be also."

A Growing Sunday School.

The Church School of St. Paul's, The Dalles, has completely outgrown its building, and their rector, the Rev. Jos. A. TenBroeck, has made an appeal to his congregation to see that the Church of tomorrow is not crippled and handicapped by lack of accommodations. A new class of junior high students has been formed studying "Our Bible" under the leadership of an experienced teacher; a personal supervisor has been appointed to have charge of all enrollment, looking up of absentees and of sick pupils in cooperation with the teachers. An objective of one hundred has been set for this year. Mr. TenBroeck also has a Home Department Correspondence School in connection with his mission at Antelope and Shaniko, having sixty-eight pupils enrolled in this correspondence school.

Some Discouraging Figures.

The Ohio Federation of Churches has just issued a most complete and scientific survey of the churches and communities in Hamilton County, Ohio, exclusive of the City of Cincinnati.

This report shows that although the county has good roads, excellent means of communication, rich farms, plenty of automobiles, yet there is a tremendous percentage of the population of Hamilton County yet to be reached by the Gospel. In cold figures it is stated that 90.05 per cent of the people are not members of any church, while a large and disheartening percentage are members only in name.

Only fourteen of the eighty-seven churches have full-time resident pastors. Forty-five churches in the county have one hundred members or less, out of which only fourteen are growing in membership; twenty-three churches have fifty members or less, out of which only four are growing; six churches have twenty-five members or less, of which not one is making progress. Only seven churches report any attempt to carry on missionary, educational, social or charitable work.

The Episcopal Church has only two churches in this area and of these one is served by the rector of a city parish. Is it not plain that the Church with her program of the five fields of service and her departments of Church Extension, Religious Education and Social Service, is particularly fitted to lead in the evangelizing of this field in which less than ten per cent have been effectively reached by the Gospel?

Encouraging Reports.

The results of a survey by the Federation of Churches of the City of Cincinnati have just been made public. It is a very interesting document. It shows that our own churches (white) report 5,476 members in 1924 as against 5,071 in 1923, a gain of four hundred and five, while our colored church reports three hundred and thirty-three members, a gain of twenty-six in the year. All churches show gains, though some are very slight showing a gradual return to normalcy. In many churches the lists of members have been carefully revised and inactive names dropped.

It is interesting to note that though the Episcopal Churches of Cincinnati were in the midst of their annual every member canvass, they gave a generous contribution to the Near East Relief and also underwrote their share ($5,000) of the budget of the Joint Protestant Agencies.

A beautiful processional cross was recently presented to the Church of the Holy Trinity, Madisonville, the Rev. J. D. Harron, D. D., rector, by Mrs. A. L. Dobson, in memory of her son, Reginald Edward Dobson.

Meeting of Men's Club.

An interesting meeting of the Men's Club, of St. John's Church, Hampton, Va., was held this week. Major Martin, who commanded the famous "Around the World Fliers" and who was wrecked in the mountains of Alaska, told the story of his experience. Dr. Howe presided and Major Westover, commanding officer of Langley Field, introduced the speaker.

Miss L. deR. Cotchett, returned missionary, is spending ten days in the Diocese, visiting the churches in and around Norfolk, to tell of the work which is being done in Alaska.

Christmas Music.

Christmas Music was taken to many "shut-ins" this Christmas season by some of the church choirs. The young people's Glee Club of St. Stephen's Church visited several institutions, including the Mt. Alto eVeterans' Hospital in the Christmas season for the singing of carols. The choir of Christ Church, Georgetown, sung at Walter Reed Hospital in the wards where the men were too sick to attend the Christmas exercises being held at the hospital. The choir of St. John's, Georgetown, furnished the music as usual at the Christmas service of the Home for Incurables.

A Community Christmas tree was the center of Christmas music on Christmas Eve night in Georgetown, and members of the Georgetown choirs cooperated to make the music help-

GEORGIA.Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D. D., Bishop.*Church Work at Fort Screven.

Through a request of the Commanding Officer at Fort Screven, Tybee Island, the rector of Christ Church, Savannah, the Rev. David Cady Wright, has taken charge of services at the Post, where only the Roman Catholic Church has offered services for some time. Sunday morning services will be conducted by a group of laymen, the rector holding a Celebration of the Holy Communion, whenever possible. Under the direction of the parish superintendent of religious education, Mrs. T. P. Waring, several women of the Post have been banded together as teachers in a school where the Christian Nurture Series will be used. With this school, the parish school and the parochial mission of the House of Prayer, there is now a total membership of six hundred on the rolls. At the House of Prayer Mission in the southwestern part of the city, the women's society has been organized into a Unit of the Health Center, and the Head of the Health Center is giving a course in Home Nursing, leading up to a certificate of the same.

Presentation of the Diocesan Program of the Department of Christian Social Service of the Diocese, was made by the Vice-Chairman, the Rev. H. Hobart Barber, of Augusta, and a member of the department, the Rev. John Moore Walker, of Albany, by a tour of visits in November and December to nineteen parishes and missions. The Department is recommending that parish committees make a study of juvenile courts, detention homes and other child welfare work, and to develop the "Big Brother and Big Sister" movement.

The fourth annual Church Normal School for the Savannah parishes was opened in St. John's Parish Hall in November. During the first hour the classes that meet simultaneously are "Child Study," "The Bible," "Training the Devotional Life," "C. S. S. L. Administration and Projects," and the courses taught the second hour are "Principles of Teaching," "The Prayer Book," "Church School Ideals," and "Story Telling."

At St. John's Church, the Rev. W. A. Jonnard, rector, Savannah, on the second Sunday in Advent, two memorials were blessed. One a Litany Desk, the gift of Miss Abbie Orme, in memory of her sister, Miss Lucy Orme, and the other two large brass bases, the gift of St. Thomas', Morgantown.

During the month of November memorial windows were placed in the entire church. This is one of the oldest parishes of the diocese. It was founded by Colonel Thomas A. Morgan in 1734. The new pews also are memorial pews. Every one was given by the children of former parishioners. St. Thomas' was rebuilt in 1922, having been destroyed by fire in 1918.

New Rectory.

The congregation of Trinity Church, Lansford, is erecting a rectory on the Church lot. Some years ago the vestry the Church School and some of the organizations took a number of shares of Building and Loan. With the cash in hand when these shares mature, they will have enough money to pay for the

Mr. F. M. Cornell, in memory of his wife.

An addition has just been completed to the church building of St. Michael and All Angels' (the Rev. J. D. Miller, rector), Savannah, which now gives a parish hall long needed. The hall will be arranged so that sliding partitions will make it possible for four individual class rooms and also for an assembly room.

The Rev. Robert J. Stilwell, of the Faculty of the DuBose Memorial Church Training School, Monteagle, Tenn., is spending his winter vacation in the Diocese of Georgia, and on his offering to do pastoral work, the Bishop has assigned him to St. Matthew's and St. Andrew's Missions, in Fitzgerald and Douglas, respectively. These two Missions have been without regular services and the care of a pastor for nearly a year. At St. Andrew's, Douglas, a campaign for new members has just been held for the Church Schools, which is being carefully supervised by Mr. Hatley J. Quincy. The senior warden, Hon. F. Willis Dart, has recently organized a Men's Bible Class.

The Small Mission of St. James', Quitman, which has a membership of eighteen communicants, through the Woman's Auxiliary and the Guild, has new stained glass windows, and a carpet, and now the fund for a pipe organ is increasing. During the long summer vacation when there were no Church services, the members of the congregation attended the Church School conducted by the senior warden. The older girls have donated a set of white markers for the Bible. The Woman's Auxiliary members have contributed to the box work assignment of the diocese for a Porto Rican Mission.

A handsome glass door multiform bulletin board has been presented to St. Athanasius' Church (Colored), the Rev. J. Clyde Perry, rector, by the Young People's Fellowship. A preaching mission was held in this parish from December 14 to 19, conducted by the Rev. T. T. Pollard, priest in charge of St. Mary's Church, Columbia, S. C. The Rev. H. A. U. Powell, a former congregational minister with his wife, was confirmed in St. Mary's Church (Colored), Augusta, in November by the Bishop of the Diocese. The Rev. Mr. Powell is a man of exceptional ability and has had over twenty years' experience as a pastor. He is a postulant for Holy Orders.

The Order of Sir Galahad.

The fifteen courts of the Order of Sir Galahad had a service in Holy Trinity Church of St. James' Parish, at which the Court of St. James Church, the Bronx, gave the full conclave ritual in ceremonial regalia. The exemplification of the ritual was interspersed with addresses explaining the Order, what it has done, and what it hopes to do. A letter carriers' band accompanied the organ. Different rectors explained what the Order is doing in their respective parishes.

Teacher Training Classes.

The recently elected Director of Religious Education, Miss Zattan Gordan, has organized a number of classes in the larger cities of the diocese. The attendance is large and the interest increases from week to week. The course is that of the National Teachers' Accredited Association.

Chapel Reopened.

Trinity Chapel of St. Luke's Church, Lebanon, was closed soon after the Rev. J. M. Page left the city some twelve years ago. During the passing years the ravages of time and the hands of iconoclasts broke practically all the windows, smashed the doors, defaced the pews and walls on the inside as well as outside. The building was a wreck.

The new rector, the Rev. Mr. Philbrook, with nothing but faith and his own bodily strength to begin with, renovated the place, and started services and a Church School. Over two hundred persons attended the first service. The vestry of St. Luke's has put in their budget for 1925, $2,000, to continue the services in Trinity Chapel.

Special Meeting of the Convention.

A special meeting of the Diocesan Convention was held in Christ Church, Little Rock, last month for the purpose of approving changes that had been proposed and of adopting a new set of canons for the diocese. This was accomplished.

The second reason for calling a special meeting was to emphasize the importance of the Church's Program for the year 1925, and to take action to stir a new interest in the matter.

Meeting of the Daughters of the King.

The Diocesan Assembly of the Daughters of the King was held in St. John's, Camden. There was the Corporate Communion and an address by the rector. The business usually transacted at such assemblies was done. The women of St. John's entertained their guests at the Orlando Hotel for luncheon; there was a tea at the Country Club in the afternoon; and at night the local chapter gave a reception to the visiting Daughters and to the whole congregation in honor of their new rector and his wife, the Rev. Randolph R. Claiborne and Mrs. Claiborne.

Other Notes of Interest.

The Rev. J. J. D. Hall, "Daddy Hall," will spend a month or more in this Diocese holding Missions. He will begin in Helena on January 4.

Archdeacon Webber will also come to the Diocese for the purpose of preaching several Missions. He will come at the beginning of Lent.

In preparation for the Annual Canvass, the rector of St. John's, Camden, divided the congregations into groups in different sections of the city; and there were six different conferences conducted by him on the Church's Program. His aim was to reach every member. Probably eighty per cent were reached in this direct way.

The churches of Camden united for a Thanksgiving Service on the Wednesday night before in the Methodist Church. The rector of St. John's Church preached.

A Successful Mission.

The Mission of Instruction conducted at St. Philip's, Ardmore, by the rector, the Rev. Jos. Carden, closed on Sunday evening, December 14, and a class of fourteen was confirmed on Tuesday evening, the sixteenth, as a result—the second class within eight months. The Every Member Canvass was begun on the closing Sunday of the Mission and with more than one-half of the probable subscriptions still to be received, the parish is $27 over the top on the Church's program. The vestry was so anxious to provide the parish quota of the Church's budget that they underwrote one-half of the apportionment before the canvass.

An invitation to meet with the president at Immanuel Rectory January 13, 1925, was accepted. Luncheon was served at the rectory to the clergy and their wives, by Dr. and Mrs. Kirkus.

Upon reassembling, the Bishop of the Diocese gave an interesting address on the last meeting of the Provincial Synod.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Edward Griffith, who has had several years' experience in the Anglican Church of Australia, where he was ordered deacon and advanced to the priesthood, has become rector of Christ Church, Hudson, Ohio. Mr. Griffith only recently came from England, after taking a post-graduate course at Cambridge University.

The Rev. Francis D. McCabe, formerly rector of St. Luke's Church, Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, has accepted a call to Trinity Church, Alliance, Ohio, and St. Matthew's Church, Setring, Ohio.

The Rev. H. J. Beagan, rector of St. Luke's Church, Chester, Penn., gave an interesting illustrated lecture the Sunday before Christmas on Henry Van Dyke's "The Other Wise Man."

The Rev. Weston Edmund Grimshaw, formerly of Fayetteville, N. Y., has entered upon his new duties as rector of St. Paul's Church, Trenton, N. J. By a peculiar coincidence, the Rev. Mr. Grimshaw returns to the parish where he received his early Sunday-School training and where he later became prominent in boys' work.

Growing Older.

Anna Hamilton Wood.

I'm growing older, dear.
Each day on day
Climbs up the calendar and proves to me
The turning of a year.
No other way
But by its paper countenance I'd see!

I'm growing wiser, dear,
In many things.
I've found the blessed recompense of age
And need not fear
My youth take wings,
So full I find maturity's wide page!

I'm growing kinder, dear,
And I love more.
I feel the blessedness of human touch.
Where I drew near
With doubts before
I now bring faith which overcometh much.

I'm growing older, dear,
And I am glad!
My slower pulses beat to harmonies
More sweetly clear
Than those youth had,
And bathe with subtler light my fantasies.

O Little Town of Bethlehem.

Part IV.

The Rev. C. S. McClellan, Jr.

The travels of Sir John Maundeville form, perhaps, the most popular work of the fourteen and fifteenth centuries, and it continued long afterwards to be read eagerly in a variety of forms. Yet all we know of Sir John is that he was a native of St. Albans—the rest of his biography is a tissue of errors. Bale tells us that he died at Liege on the seventeenth of November in 1371 and was buried there in the abbey of the Guillemites. The date of his journey to Bethlehem is about 1322 A. D.

"From Hebron we proceeded to Bethlehem, in half a day, for it is but five miles; and it is very fair way, by pleasant plains and woods. Bethlehem is a little city, long and narrow, and well walled, and on each side enclosed with good ditches. It was formerly called Ephrata, as Holy Writ says, 'Lo, we heard it at Ephrata.' And towards the east end of the city is a very fair and handsome church, with many interesting towers, pinnacles, and corners strongly and curiously made; and within are forty-four great and fair pillars of marble. And between the city and the church is the Field Floridus, that is to say, the field flourished; for a fair maiden was blamed with wrong, and slandered that she had committed fornication, for which cause, she was condemned to be burnt in that place; and as the fire began to burn about her, she made her prayers to Our Lord, that as truly as she was not guilty, He would by His merciful grace help her, and make it known to all men. And when she had thus said, she entered into the fire, and immediately the fire was extinguished, and the fagots that were burning became red rose bushes, and those that were not kindled became white rose bushes, full of roses. And these were the first rose trees and roses, both white and red, that ever any man saw. And thus was the maiden saved by the grace of God. And therefore is that field called the field that God flourished for it was full of roses. Also near the choir of the church at the right side, as men go down sixteen steps, is the place where Our Lord was born; which is full well made of marble, and full richly painted with gold, silver, azure and other colors. And three paces from it is the crib of ox and ass. And beside that is the place the star fell, which led the three kings, Jaspas, Melchior, and Balthazar; but the Greeks call them Galgalathe, Malgalathe, and Saraphie; and the Jews call them in Hebrew Appelius, Amerrius and Damasus. These three kings offered to Our Lord, gold, incense and myrrh; and they met together by a miracle of God, for they met together in a city in India called Cassak, which is fifty-three days' from Bethlehem, and yet they arrived at Bethlehem on the thirteenth day, which was the fourth day after they had seen the star, which they met in that city; and thus they were nine days from that city to Bethlehem and that was a great miracle. Also under the cloister of the church, by eighteen steps at the right side, is the charnel-house of the Innocents, where their bones lie. And before the place where Our Lord was born is the tomb of St. Jerome, who was a priest, cardinal, and translated the Bible and Psalter from Hebrew into Latin; and without the church is the chair he sat in when he translated it. And close by that church at a distance of sixty fathoms, is a church of St. Nicholas, where Our Lady rested after she was delivered of Our Lord. And forasmuch as she had too much milk in her breasts, which grieved her, she milked them on the red stones of marble; so that the traces may yet be seen all white in the stones. And you must understand that all who dwell in Bethlehem are Christians. And there are fair vineyards about the city, and great plenty of wine, which the Christians make. But the Saracens neither cultivate vines nor drink wine; for their books of their law, that Mohammed gave them, which they call their Alkoran (and some call it Mesaphe and in another language it is called Harme) forbids them to drink wine. For in that book Mohammed cursed all who drink wine and all who sell it. For some men say that he slew once a hermit, whom he loved, in his drunkenness, and, therefore, he cursed wine and them that drink it. And also, the Saracens breed no pigs and they eat no swine's flesh, for they say it is brother to man, and it was forbidden by the old law, and they hold all accursed who eat thereof. Also in the land of Palestine and in the land of Egypt, they eat but little or no veal or beef, except when the animal is old, that he may work no more; for it is forbidden because they have but few of them, and they keep them to plough their lands.

"From Bethlehem to Jerusalem it is two miles. And in the way to Jerusalem, half a mile from Bethlehem, is a church, where the angel announced to the shepherds the birth of Christ. And in that way is the tomb of Rachel, the mother of Joseph the patriarch, who died immediately after she was delivered of her son Benjamin; and there was she buried by Jacob, her husband. In the same way, half a mile from Jerusalem the star appeared to the three kings. In that way also are many churches of Christians, by which men go towards the city of Jerusalem."

The last old history book we shall read is one by Henry Maundrell. We know very little about Maundrell. He was a fellow of Exeter College at Oxford, England, and left there to take the appointment of chaplain to the English forces at Aleppo. His descriptions of his travels in Palestine are extremely accurate. The date of this particular travel which we are about to recount is 1697, comparatively late. The travel is really in the form of a Diary:

"March 31, 1697. This morning we all decamped at half an hour after two, and returning the same way by which we came, arrived in about six hours near the walls of Jerusalem. Our company did not think it fit to enter the city, resolving to go immediately to Bethlehem; in order to which we turned down into the valley of Jehoshaphat; and so, passing by the city instantly took the road to the place intended.

"From Jerusalem to Bethlehem is but two hours' travel. The country through which the road lies is the Valley of Rephaim, as may be gathered from Josephus, a valley so famous for being the theatre of David's victories against the Philistines. In the road you meet with these following remarkable places: first, a place said to be the house of Simeon, that venerable old prophet who taking our blessed Saviour in his arms, sung his nunc dimittis in the temple; secondly, the famous turpentine tree, in the shade of which the blessed Virgin is said to have reposed when she was carrying Christ in her arms to present Him to the Lord at Jerusalem; thirdly, a convent dedicated to St. Elias, the impress of whose body the Greek monks residing there pretend to show in a hard stone, which was wont to serve him for a bed. Near this convent also is a well, where you are told it was that the star appeared to the eastern magi to their exceeding joy. Fourthly, Rachel's tomb. This may probably be the true place of her interment mentioned in Genesis 35:19, but the present sepulchral monument can be none of that which Jacob erected; for it appears plainly to be a modern and Turkish structure. Near this monument is a little piece of ground, in which are picked up a little sort of small round stones, exactly resembling peas, concerning which they have a tradition here that they were once truly what they now seem to be: but the blessed Virgin petrified them by a miracle, in punishment to a surly rustic, who denied her the charity of a handful of them to relieve her hunger.

"Being arrived in Bethlehem, we immediately made a circular visit to all the holy places belonging to it, as namely, the place where it is said Our Blessed Lord was born; the manger in which it is said He was laid; the chapel of St. Joseph, His supposed father; that of the Innocents; those of St. Jerome, of St. Paula and Eustochium, and of Eusebius of Cremonia; and lastly, the school of St. Jerome, all which places it shall suffice just to name."

So much for the stories of Bethlehem that have come down to us from those far-away days. How much in them seems to be very modern as we consider the Bethlehem of our own time! They give us interesting glimpses and impressions of those travelers, who came to the birthplace of Jesus so many centuries ago.

Before we retire for sleep, let us go out again to the Field of Shepherds and see the little town of Bethlehem by night, for it is the night view of Bethlehem that I would have my readers especially remember. Let us gaze at its little houses and roads again under the starlight. Let us journey quietly, aye, reverently. How still it is 'out there in the Field with its memories of that first Christmas night! The very air is soft and the night glorious. As we walk along and begin our way through the Field how those lines from John Finley's "A Pilgrimage in Palestine," written during the Great World War, come to us with renewed significance—

"I walked one night in the Shepherd's Field
The stars in their wonted courses wheeled
And no new glory the skies revealed—
There was no peace on earth.
But as I climbed the Bethlehem hill
I saw one bend o'er one who was ill
And another bearing coals to fill
A neighbor's empty hearth—
And I knew that the Christ was there."

It is good to remain long in meditation in the Field of the Shepherds! It is well to think again upon that marvelous story as told by Saint Luke in the second chapter of his Gospel! Christmas is very real in the Shepherd's Field near Bethlehem.

Then we turn back to the little town to spend the remainder of the night in peaceful slumbers and happy dreams within the friendly, generous walls of Christ's town. How wonderfully calm the night has become! And those long shadows across the streets, how mysterious they are! And the heavens over us, how like velvet studded with a myriad of diamonds! The magnificent, passionate, colorful Orient, how beautiful, and yet how deep in spirituality! Let us say, "Good Night," and as we close our eyes let the thoughts of that dear, old Christmas Hymn go with us into dreamland—

"O Little town of Bethlehem!
How still we see thee lie;
Above thy deep and dreamless sleep
The silent stars go by;
Yet in thy dark streets shineth
The everlasting Light;
The hopes and fears of all the years
Are met in thee tonight."

The Goal of Life.

L. C. Cummings.

We are not born that we may die, but that we may live more abundantly. The will of God for men is life, full, free and rejoicing. The goal of our vision is not the valley of death, but the gates of life.

Few of us think of death without awe and dread; many persons regard the end of human existence with terror and thus live in bondage.

Yet Jesus Himself has promised to meet us at the gates of death; that we shall not be alone; that its seeming strangeness should not oppose the imagination—that it is not the end!

He has appointed the trysting places. He has pledged to meet us at the Cross, in the Sacrament, in our joys and sorrows—and in the valley of the shadow of death, where we are to "fear no evil."

In the later years of life, we grow weary waiting the call, wondering at delay, no longer content with the bondage of life, its sufferings, sorrows and separations.

The places in our hearts, more beautiful than others to recall, are those where we have kept the faith with those dearer than life; and now we have reached the time of our tryst with God—the greatest adventure of life is before us! The Divine Presence itself has promised to await and convey us and place us once again among those loved and lost awhile!

We are born to live—in more stately mansions of the soul, in circumstances fitting to our character and work upon the scale of Heaven! This life here as it must be hereafter should be glad, full, free and, "though sorrowing yet always rejoicing." "It is not all of life to live nor all of death to die."

All is bright and beautiful if only we are marching forward under the leadership of God, certain that in His strength we shall be fit to meet everything here and hereafter. There is the transfiguration of the dusty road and the monotony of living. This is the goal of life!

The Greatest Story.

Eugenie du Maurier.

Thousands of years old, the story is as fresh today as when its various parts were first written. In its pages is to be found all the best wishes that the human mind could attain, as well as riches of truth beyond the power of the intellect to fathom. As truly as a star-beam, it has come from above; and in its light and beauty, the best men and women of all times have walked.

Its first pages are mighty with the story of the beginning of things: Darkness, darkness, darkness; and—God, Whose word rolled thunderous through the gloom; and in obedience, Light tenderly appeared, like an angel, to part the awful curtains of Night—the drama of the universe had begun.

Paradise glitters before us. Our first parents gleam. Sin creeps as a serpent. Punishment descends; Darkness again falls; and only a single, though vivid, ray of light remains; the promise of a Saviour.

The swift current of the centuries passes. At length the scent becomes Bethlehem. Night again enfolds all things; but a night of purple, velvet beauty, golden-eyed with stars; and Nature is hushed with expectation.

Christ Our Saviour appears—Light is restored, richly restored, in our world. Heaven embraces earth, the reign of peace has begun.

All this is described in language of matchless beauty, simplicity and dignity, in our letter from the skies. Up out of its sacred pages rises the dearest, most wonderful of Friends; humble, tender, strong, majestic, meek, loving; Jesus—God. His very lips speak to us. His voice sounds through two thousand years as clear as though He were standing beside us.

All the books in the world together are as nothing in comparison with this letter from God. All the wealth of literature, in comparison, is poverty, without this Letter of Letters, this Book of Books.

Ghosts of Yesterday.

Helen Bayley Davis.

Around my dim-lit attic wander Ghosts
Of Yesterday; they roam at will
Amid the kindly dust that covers posts
And beams and battered windowsill.

The Ghost of Grandmamma in flowered gown
Of satin brocade trimmed in jet;
How daintily she curtsied up and down
The gay ball-room, with Lafayette!

Small Ghosts of little ones whose broken toys
And tiny boots are stored away
With many tears: of laughing bright-eyed boys
And girls—Ah, was it Yesterday?

I touch my treasures with their faint perfume
Of musk; I kneel upon the floor;
Then creeping from that dim and ghost-filled room
I turn and softly close the door.

The truest service which men and women render is the service of character; patient, persevering, constant adherence to high principle which finally inspires us to follow in their footsteps. As we look back across the years we find that three or four people stand out from all the others, people who have served us best; they may not have done great deeds, but they have BEEN GREAT SOULS. They have exemplified that Power and Might of Jesus Christ which "strengthens unto all patience."

For the Young Folks

No Lullaby Need Mary Sing.

No lullaby need Mary sing
For Christ, the little new-born King;
The angels woke the fields of earth
With song the evening of His birth.

No lamp nor torch need Mary light
To chase afar the shades of night;
The light of heaven broke on earth
And glory shed upon that birth.

No tidings need she haste to send
Of this Child's birth to kin and friend;
The news had been proclaimed afar
That evening by a shining Star.

Annie Wilton's Christmas.

(Supposed to be told by the little eight year old daughter of a missionary in the far West, to a group of children on the doorstep in her yard.)

Now children, if you'll all sit in a row and keep perfectly quiet, and not interrupt ('cause it's very impolite to interrupt), I'll tell you a lovely Christmas story.

It's a really truly one too 'cause the Bishop told it to us last night at supper. You know bishops always tell ministers' families everything and that's why he told it to us.

It's about a little girl with blue eyes that shine like stars, and she has lovely golden curls, and her name is Annie Wilton. She lives with her papa and mamma in a little log cabin way out on the prairie. It's awfully far out, 'cause you can't see another house anywhere, and it's miles and miles and miles to the next one.

She was seven years old last summer, and—what do you think! She had never seen a dolly or heard a fairy story in all her life, just think of that! Her papa and mamma were too poor to buy her a doll, and they had to work so hard they hadn't any time to tell fairy stories.

And she'd never heard of Santa Claus until last spring when some cowboys stopped there, and one of them asked her where her dolly was, and if Santa Claus didn't bring her one last Christmas. When the cowboys had gone she asked her mamma why she didn't have a dolly, and who was Santa Claus. Her mamma almost cried when she told Annie that they were too poor to buy a doll, and that they lived so dreadfully far out on the prairie she was afraid Santa Claus would never find his way there.

Little Annie said a little prayer every night, and that day she made up a new one herself, and asked God to please show Santa Claus the way to find little Annie Wilton way out on the prairie, and she said it every night of her life after this.

Well, you know the Bishop has to go all over the prairies to look out for the Injuns and cowboys and one day in the summer when he was on his way to some cowboys he came across the tiny little log cabin all alone on the prairie and he stopped there to rest.

Little Annie saw him when he got off his horse, and ran right up to him and said, "Did you ever see a dolly?" and when he told her he had seen one she took right tight hold of his hand and wouldn't let go. After he got in the house and had talked a little to her papa and mamma, he took Annie on his lap and asked her if she knew any fairy stories. She said she didn't know any at all, so he told her a lot of them, "The Three Bears," "Cinderella," "Red Riding Hood," "Jack and the Bean-stalk" and a lot more, and then he told her "Cock Robin" and "Phoebe, where are your berries, child," and she looked into his face, her eyes shining more and more. After he had rested he started on his way to see the cowboys, but when he kissed Annie good-bye, he told her to look out sharp for he thought Santa Claus would surely find his way there this Christmas.

When he got back home from seeing all the Injuns and cowboys he started way East to Boston to get some of the people there who had lots of money to help him in his Bishop work.

All the time he kept little Annie Wilton in mind, 'cause he had made up his mind that somehow she must have a Christmas. So he went to one of those churches that have a Periodical Club. "What kind of a club is that?" (I told you not to interrupt.) Don't you know what a Periodical Club is? Well, I do—It's a club that has fairy stories, and picture books, and gografiy books, and "Little Women" and the "Birds' Christmas Carol" and Injun books, and all kinds of books that you ever heard of; and games and everything, and they send them to every place you ever heard of too, to little boys and girls that haven't any books or toys. That's what a Periodical Club is,—the very nicest club in the world!

Well, the Bishop told that club in the church he went to, all about little Annie Wilton, and that he wanted them to send her a box of fairy stories and picture books and games and toys and they said they would. Then he asked them if they 'sposed they could find some one to send Annie a lovely doll. They said they thought they could and they bought the loveliest doll you ever saw. It had real curls, and could open and shut its eyes, and it had little teeth, and if you squeezed it, it could say papa and mamma, and if you wound it up it could walk! It had on a pink silk dress and a white coat and hat, and a white fur tippet and muff (the white fur that has black spots on it) and lovely pink slippers. You have never seen such a beautiful doll as it was.

They packed the doll in one box, and the books and games and toys in another and sent them out here to the Bishop's house, 'cause the Bishop wanted to take those things to Annie himself.

When it came Christmas Eve, the snow was piled high all round the little log cabin, but it was just as still, and the moon came up so it was most as light as day; and when little Annie was undressed she stood in her nightdress by the fireplace looking up the chimney to see if she could see Santa Claus or hear the bells on the reindeer. Then she said her little prayer again and her mother put her in the little trundle bed, and tucked her in and she went fast asleep.

Way in the evening 'bout nine o'clock the Bishop and a cowboy came riding up to the little log cabin on horseback bringing the boxes. They rode softly 'cause they didn't want to wake up Annie; and they came in softly too, and then they fixed all the things around the fireplace, the dolly standing up, and the fairy books and the toys piled around and some candy, and oranges and a little dress that the Bishop had bought himself; and then they all went to bed.

They got up very early in the morning 'cause they wanted to see what Annie would do when she saw the things. They were all sitting around the fire when she awoke and climbed out of the trundle bed and came in her nightie to the fireplace, and—when she saw that wonderful doll, she stood just as still as still could be, and looked and looked, and looked, and looked and didn't say one word.

And the Bishop said he almost cried, and her papa and mamma did cry to see her stand there and look at that doll (I don't see what they had to cry for, but the Bishop said they did really and truly cry.) After she had looked a long time she put her arms around the dolly and hugged it as if she would never let go and then she went over to the Bishop and got up in his lap and put her face and the dolly's face right against the Bishop's cheek, and said "Thank you for bringing Santa Claus to a little girl in a log cabin way out on the prairie."

Now, I think that Periodical Club was pretty nice to send those things out there and give such a beautiful Christmas to a little girl, don't you?

Well, now get down and go home. Next time the Bishop comes I'll tell you another story.—Martha Pitkin, in The Confab.

The New Year.

Betty Page Dabney, age 11.

I the New Year am. I greet you,
Fresh and clean before your eyes,
Use me rightly, I entreat you,
In your hands my future lies.

Stranger, tell me, will you use me,
My wee seconds well, I pray?
Or will you maltreat abuse me,
Throw my priceless hours away?

In your hands my fate is lying
Hark! there rings the New Year bell!
Speak! the 'old year fast is dying!
Stranger, hear me, use me well.

New Year's Day In Japan.

"Lo! housecleaning is here!
Gods of Buddha and Shinto
Are jumbled together
Out on the grass."

a Japanese poet once wrote, for the greatest of all celebrations in Japan comes at the beginning of the New Year. It sounds rather like Christmas to hear that just as our boys and girls rush to feel their stockings early in the morning, so the Japanese boys and girls feel eagerly beneath their pillows to see if Takara-bune is hidden there! This is a picture of a Treasure Ship with the Seven Gods of Good Fortune on board; the ship is supposed to come to harbor every New Year's Eve bringing such weird rare cargoes as the Lucky Rain Coat, the Inexhaustible Purse, the Sacred Key and the Hat of Invisibility.

At four o'clock in the dark, dark morning the father of the family always arises, puts on new clothes, then goes to worship the idols on the god-shelf and the ancestral tablets, then he hastens to congratulate his aged parents: "Honorable parents, may you be as old as the pine and as strong as the bamboo; may the stork make nests in your chimney and the turtle crawl over your floor!"

This seems like a curious wish, but it is the height of politeness in Japan where the stork and the turtle are symbols of long life.

Meanwhile, mysterious decorations are stretched across the front gateway; on each side stand guardian pine trees between which is stretched a rope of rice straw. A number of little (and big!) objects dangle from this rope, such as a red lobster, a green fern, a budding leaf. These all have a deep meaning, and to the Japanese mind they say: "May the folks in this house live till their backs are bent double and their beards reach to their knees, like the back and the feelers of this lobster. And may they have as many children as there are leaves on this fern!"—Exchange.

Simon's Happy New Year.

His name was Simon, and he was a poor little orphan who remembered neither his father nor his mother. Daly's Lunch Room had hired him from an orphan asylum to help in the kitchen, for it was before the days when children were obliged to go to school.

In the orphanage Simon had had only enough schooling to make him long for more. He was naturally a studious child, and many an evening after work he took his worn books to his little room above the kitchen and pored over them by candle light. But he was so tired after scrubbing tables and carrying dirty dishes that he sometimes fell asleep over his books and had to be put to bed by Hardy, the cook's chief helper, in one of the sleeping rooms over the restaurant. As Christmas drew near, Simon wondered what he should get.

"We always had a toy and a bag of nuts and sugar plums at the orphan asylum," he told Hardy one day. He was only nine years old, and he still loved toys, even though he was a hard-working little man. But Christmas came and went and there was no Christmas gift for Simon the dish-washer.

Late that evening Hardy stole into Simon's tiny room and laid a rosy-cheeked apple beside his pillow, which was damp, for Simon had been crying in his sleep.

"Poor lad!" muttered Hardy as he left the room.

A week went by, and New Year's Eve came bright and clear.

"I wish—oh, I wish something beautiful would happen for New Year's!" Simon said with a sigh as he went up to bed. "Hardy says that in some countries Santa Claus comes at New Year."

Then he fell asleep.

Sometime before midnight he waked with a start. He heard a jingle of bells and the soft thud of feet on the bare floor. Could it be that Santa had arrived a week late?

But the next moment a small furry thing leaped upon the bed, and a plaintive voice said, "Mee-ow!"

It was a kitten. Simon chuckled with delight as he stroked its glossy fur. The little thing purred happily at having found so cozy a nest. It had seen his open window and had climbed in from the branch of a small maple that grew outside.

The next morning Simon played with the kitten as he dressed for his daily work, and at breakfast he gave it some milk from his oatmeal.

"Let's take a look at it," said Hardy. "He doesn't have the look of a stray cat, now does he?"

"He isn't a stray," said Simon. "He's my very own Santa Claus kitten."

Hardy laughed. "There isn't any such thing as a Santa Claus kitten," he answered.

"Well, he came in the night with a jingle of bells, and he was a New Year present," insisted Simon.

"Of course he jingled, seeing that he has bells on his collar," said Hardy, "but that doesn't make him a Santa Claus kitten."

Hardy picked the creature up and examined his collar, which bore a small name plate that Simon had overlooked. On it were engraved the words:

P. H. Ingoldsby,
Beaton Place,
London West.

"This cat already has an owner," said Hardy. "I suppose he must have got lost and found his way here. Must be a valuable cat, or they wouldn't label him!"

Simon was ready to cry, "Oh, I hoped he was my present," he said.

But later he made up his mind that the right thing to do was to return the kitten to the owner. Beaton Place was not so very far away from the part of London where Simon lived. He could go there and back in forty-five minutes.

As there was still an hour to spare before dish-washing time. Simon wrapped the kitten in his red wool scarf and started out. The kitten purred contentedly, because he was warm and happy.

Simon found Beaton Place to be so large and fine-looking a mansion that he was almost afraid to approach it in his shabby clothes. When he lifted the heavy brass knocker on the door and the noise echoed through the house he trembled slightly.

"I hate to give you up," he whispered into one black ear of the Santa Claus kitten.

The front door was opened by a man-servant in livery, "Go away, child," he said crossly, thinking that Simon was a "wait," or little carol singer, begging for money.

"I came to bring back this kitten," Simon said bravely.

"Oh! It's Master Paul's pet," said the man. "Come in. I'll take it up to him."

Simon waited patiently in the hall until the footman came back.

"Master Paul wants you to come up and see him," said the footman. "He's had a long illness, and he can't walk yet. Come right up."

Simon followed the man upstairs and found Master Paul stretched on a deck chair before an open fire that blazed merrily.

"Happy New Year to you!" said Paul cheerily, and he looked very happy as he held the black kitten in his arms.

Simon was not happy at losing his Santa Claus kitten, but he said bravely and politely, "Happy New Year to you, sir."

"Sit down and warm yourself," Paul invited him. "It was very good of you to bring back Frederick. He slipped out night before last, and we searched but could not find him anywhere."

"So Frederick's his name," said Simon. "I called him the Santa Claus kitten, because he came in the night with a jingle of bells."

Paul burst out laughing. "You're a funny boy!" he said. "You must come often and play with me. I like boys who say funny things."

"Thank you," said Simon. "I will come when I can. You see I work all day in Daly's Lunch Room, and I haven't much time to go anywhere except early in the morning or late at night."

Then Simon told Paul all about the orphan asylum and what hard work it was to scrub tables and dirty dishes when he had much rather be playing or reading his books.

When he had done speaking, Paul looked at him with a kind smile. "It must be awfully hard," he said. "I never do anything but sit by the fire all day or look at books and play with toys. I have so many toys that I am tired of them."

Simon couldn't imagine any one's being tired of toys.

Then Paul whispered something to the footman, and the footman brought a large basket and filled it with some of Paul's toys and books, and on the top he put some sugar plums and nuts and a big slice of Christmas cake.

"The cake was made ten days ago," said Paul with a laugh. "But mother keeps it in a crock, and it's so rich that it lasts a long time."

Simon was so delighted that he could hardly say thank you.

"When you come over you can pretend that Frederick is your kitten," said Paul generously. "We'll call him Santa Claus on those days."

Simon laughed and promised that he would come.

When he had gone Paul called his mother and told her all about the boy.

"And, mother," he added, "Simon hasn't a really, truly home like other children. He has to live over a kitchen and wash dirty dishes all day, even Christmas and New Year's day!"

Mrs. Ingoldsby looked at Paul tenderly. "It certainly is not right that a child of his age should have to work for his living," she said. "I will go down and find out all I can about him."

And, oh, mother!" cried Paul. "I should like to have Simon for a playmate. I wish that he could come here to live. Only the other day you said you wished I had other children to play with."

"We shall see," said Mrs. Ingoldsby.

Some time later she went to Daly's and talked with Simon and his employer. She was much taken with the child's refined face and his gentle ways.

So it came about that Simon found a home with the Ingoldsby family, and Paul and he had a private tutor until the invalid boy was strong enough to go to a good boys' school; and when he went Simon was not left behind.

Once during his Christmas vacation Simon ran round to Daly's to visit Hardy. "I've had the best luck in the world," he said, "and it all came about through the Santa Claus kitten."

Hardy was about to say, "But there isn't any such thing." "Instead, he found himself saying, "Well, perhaps."—Youth's Companion.

The Place Where the Earth and the Sky Came Together.

Once some shepherds who were watching
O'er their flock on Judah's plain,
Saw an angel form descending
With God's glory all aflame.

Once the midnight skies were parted
O'er the fields of Bethlehem,
While through heaven's high arches sounded
"Peace on earth, good-will to men."

Once a tiny Babe was nestled
In a stall where cattle fed,
Once some wise men came to worship
One to Whom a star had led.

Once for all the skies are parted
Never more to close again,
Heaven and earth are re-united,
God in Christ, and Christ in men.
—Rev. William Davis.

A Great Soldier and a Little Lamb.

Garibaldi was a brave soldier who lived in Italy. His father was a fisherman, and the boy learned to be a fine sailor, but his country was in trouble, so that he became a soldier when he was a very young man. Twice he had to go away to fight for his country. He was so brave that he made others brave, and they fought on until they won the victory.

But a story about him shows that he was gentle and kind, as well as a great soldier and leader. One night when he was in camp with his army, a shepherd came to them in great trouble about one of his lambs that was lost. The soldiers brought lanterns and went back and forth over the hillsides hunting for the lost lamb, but one by one they gave up and came back. Garibaldi himself went out with them, and no one noticed that after all the others had come back, their general was not in his tent.

The next morning some one peeped into his tent, and there, sound asleep lay the brave soldier with the little lost lamb beside him. He would not come back and sleep while a poor little lamb was lost, and he had hunted almost all night until he found it.

This story will help us to remember that Jesus is never too busy with the great things of this world to have time to know all about every little child, and to lovingly, tenderly care for each one. He knew all about the shepherds of His country—how they lived with their sheep and loved them and cared for them as David had done, night and day. How safe and happy we may feel with Him for our Shepherd!—Elizabeth Donovan.

Mists.

"Hurry, Ellen; I want to show you the San Benito Valley from the cliff this morning."

Ellen fastened the last buckle on her mountain boot and jumped up. "All ready, "Molly," she said. "Where are Edith and Kathryn?"

"They aren't coming," said Molly flushing, and seeing Ellen's surprised look, she added shortly. "They acted perfectly horrid last night, and—well, we had a quarrel and I don't want them along now."

"I see," said Ellen thoughtfully, as they set off.

The four girls had come up the mountain the evening before to spend a few days at Liveoak Camp. It was Ellen's first trip, and the other girls had taken her at once to the edge of the cliff in order that she might see the lights of the valley and of their own little city spread out below. It was a beautiful sight, and she had been eager to see the valley in the morning sunshine. But as they walked along she was not thinking of the beautiful scene which would soon lie before her, nor even of the grandeur of the rugged scenery about her.

"If I had gone to bed early, perhaps I might have prevented the quarrel," she was thinking unhappily. "But I was so tired; I'm not much used to mountain climbing yet. And they were tired, too, and probably quarreled over some little unimportant thing, and now it will spoil their good time."

Her thoughts were interrupted by an exclamation from Molly. "Oh, dear! there's a mist over the valley."

"So there is!" said Ellen. "How queer it seems to be up here in the sunshine and see the clouds piled up in drifts down there."

"A mist is a wretched thing, isn't it?" said Molly dolefully. "I did so want you to see the valley. It's just lovely in the morning sunshine. And now this old mist had to spoil everything."

"Look, Molly!" cried Ellen suddenly. "It's beginning to break up. The sun seems determined to send it flying."

As the girls stood watching the mist slowly dispersed and presently the valley with its green fields and orchards, its ranch houses and little towns and cities, lay spread out before them.

"Isn't it beautiful!" said Molly, looking at her companion. "Why, Ellen, what are you smiling at?"

"I was thinking," replied Ellen, "that if sunshine can do that to a mist, why can't the sunshine of friendliness and good humor break up a little misunderstanding between friends, which is nothing but a mist, after all."

Molly stood looking stubbornly before her for a moment, and then, suddenly a smile broke through and she turned and ran off down the path.

A few moments later Ellen heard gay voices and laughter, and soon Molly, Edith and Kathryn appeared around the bend in the path.

"The view is wonderful this morning," Molly was saying as she flashed a smile at Ellen. "There was a mist, but the sunshine sent it flying."—Girls' World.

A Recipe For a Happy New Year.

The soul that has learned to know God in Christ, that by persistent daily practice of fellowship with the Great Companion has caught by contagion "that mind and spirit that were in Christ Jesus," he who by cultivating faith in Christ, trusting Christ, has acquired the faith of Christ—that soul finds life and the world illumined and irradiated by the "light that never was on land or sea." A new spirit and will are born within him which makes each day a glad New Year's day, opening out new vistas of opportunity. He can sing daily "All my fresh springs are in Thee." For what is life to him? It is simply a chance to love and to serve, to be "about the Father's business." Like Christ it becomes his "meat to do the will of Him that sent me and to finish His work." And what is God's will and work? It is always there—plain, simple, visible—in every duty, however humble and commonplace, in every chance to lend a hand to lift burdens, comfort sorrows, guide straying feet, to brighten and better the world—and finally to help bring in the Kingdom of Heaven on earth, the heavenly order in this present world. And, behind him, beside him, within him, he is aware, now dimly, now clearly—of God, inspiring, directing, enabling. He is "a fellow worker with God." That is the meaning and mission of life, of every life, as seen in the light of faith. But how shall you develop that faith?

I suggest two ways—simple but hard.

Go to Christ in His gospels every day this coming year, preferably in the quietude and freshness of the "morning watch." Take some time every day to "read, mark, learn and inwardly digest" those words of His that are "spirit and that are life" until they get into your spiritual circulation and build themselves into your daily conduct and character. For, being a Christian means something more than "keeping decent and going to church occasionally," though many church members have no other conception of personal religion. It does involve actually and persistently learning from Jesus His way of life and His program for the world and then dedicating yourself to the following of that way and the achieving of that program.

And then there is the practice of prayer, something more than "storming the throne of grace with voluble and vociferous petitions" or "saying prayers." It is the "practice of the presence of God" at all times. It is cultivating the habit and discipline of "conversation with Christ"; whether in speech or in silence opening your needs to Him and then standing at attention—holding all your faculties of mind and soul, focussed and sensitive, to receive the messages, the illuminations, the inspirations He will surely pour into your heart. That is the way to win and cultivate faith—and faith always gives meaning, power and joy to life.

This is the only trustworthy recipe for a "Happy New Year." "May the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing that ye may abound in hope through the power of the Holy Ghost."—Bishop Page, in Michigan Churchman.

The Old Year.

Alice B. Joynes.

The Old Year is dying, dying,
Slowly sinking to rest.
The sun of his life is setting,
Afair in the golden west.

Old Year, we welcomed you gladly,
When you came to us strong and young;
And now you are passing from us,
The song of your life has been sung.

We loved you and still we love you,
Now you are grey and old.
There's a sigh in the heart that the story
Of your life is so nearly told.

The bells are sadly tolling
The sound of his funeral knell.
The sands of his life have run out
Old Year, good-night—farewell.

When you would rather do His will, whatever His will may be, than to be sure of yourself and choose your own paths, when your consuming desire is to know the will of God as revealed through Jesus, and when you start in your search for the truth eager to do the first thing that may be shown you, then I think you are going to know whose will you are doing.—A. Prayer.

There are many difficulties in the way of a perfect understanding and practice of prayer. Some of these difficulties are so serious that men have been led because of them to give up praying. One difficulty comes from a mistaken view of God's universe. They believe that God created the world—there is no other conclusion to which they can come if they are reasonable beings—but having once created it and set it in motion, He went off and left it to run according to laws He had set in operation. These laws are fixed and unchanging. The sun rises every morning and it sets every evening. The tides ebb and flow with such invariable constancy that they can be predicted to the minute a hundred years from now. There are diseases the outcome of which the physician can tell you with the utmost accuracy.

Now if everything is thus determined beforehand by laws that do not change what is the use of praying. We cannot alter things that are unalterable. The sun is going to set tomorrow, and the tide is going to ebb, and weeds are going to grow, and people are going to die in spite of my praying. I can't change what has been determined beforehand.

This is the reasoning of many earnest thinking people and there they stop. The trouble is they do not go far enough. The fact that the universe is under the reign of law does not prevent us from resisting that law. It is a law of nature that the victim of small-pox either dies or is disfigured for life. But we have checked the ravages of the disease and shorn it of its power. There is no longer need for any one to die of the small-pox. Now if we may thus overcome a law of the universe and turn the clock of nature so that the hands go the other way, may we not believe that the Creator who set it in motion in the first place has the same power?

Another fact also is to be noted. As some one has expressed it, "God's will and knowledge embrace not only certain ends that are to be accomplished, but also the means by which they are to be brought about. It is not inconceivable that God may have ordained that such and such things take place as the result of the prayers of His people. Prayer then is not an interference with God's plans but a fulfillment of them.

To use a simple illustration: A writer tells of going for a visit of inspection through the waterworks of a small city. The building into which they entered was equipped with an engine designed for the equalizing of the water pressure at all times throughout the city. As they stood by the steam gauge they noted constant changes in the amount of steam produced. There was no cause for this apparent in the engine and they asked the engineer for the explanations. "That," replied he, "is done by the people of the city. As they open their faucets to draw water the draught upon our fires is increased. As they close them it is diminished. It was the design of the maker of the engine to so construct and adjust it that it would respond to the smallest needs of the people. A little child can change the movements of this engine according to his will." It is all very simple when we understand it.

And shall we deny to the Maker of the Universe the power so to adjust its working that prayer may directly modify its action, just as the hand of the little child can open a faucet and change the action of a waterworks engine miles away.

"We know that men, corrupt and vain
Will grant their children's prayer,
And shall we think Thou wilt not deign
To make our wants Thy care?"

For Thou, O God, our Father art,
And Thou art wholly good,
And every need of every heart
By Thee is understood.
—Stuart N. Hutchison, in Presbyterian Banner.

I am sure that as we grow better and better Christians, this will become more and more the source and fountain of our strength. We shall come so close up to all the world's wickedness that it cannot strike us. We shall be saved from it by our pity for it. We shall be far from its contagion the closer that we come to its needs. We shall be pure as the angels the more completely we give ourselves up to the ministering angel's work. This is the true positiveness of the Christian's purity, the real safety of the loving and laboring life.—Phillips Brooks.

All our going on is following Christ so long as we are in the way of life. For He whom we know and trust has been there before us and has left the marks of His going to guide us in the way. We cannot turn back, for the backward path is closed to us. We dare not turn aside, for that is to forfeit the companionship of our guide. Our hope, our confidence, our satisfaction are all in going on.—Isaac Edwards.

Why Chinese Students Study Aloud.

Most people think that the reason Chinese students study aloud is due to the fact that they live on the other side of the world from us and so just naturally do everything opposite from the way we do it. However, most people have a reason for doing things different and the Chinese are just the same as most people. They have a reason for most things they do, only we do not happen to know it.

Now, for centuries the principal subject for study in the Chinese schools has been the national classics, especially poetry, of which every Chinese scholar worthy of the name commits an astounding quantity to memory. As Chinese poetry is written in such a way that it is better sung or chanted, how else could any one learn it correctly except by repeating it aloud? It is learned just the way it is intended to be used to the best advantage.

Then the Chinese student turns his back to the teacher when he recites. That is another thing which is directly opposite to the way boys and girls do in the country. But there is a reason for this too. When the student repeats his lesson he has to stand directly in front of his teacher's desk. With ever so many voices chanting lessons aloud in the room the student must be close to the teacher in order to be heard. On the teacher's desk is the open book where written in large characters is printed the lesson, and the student might peek and so refresh his memory if it failed him. Consequently he is made to face the other way and be beyond temptation.—Boy's Weekly.

This, Books Can Do.

This, books can do;—nor this alone; they give
New views to life, and teach us how to live;
They soothe the grieved, the stubborn they chastise,
Fools they admonish, and confirm the wise;
Their aid they yield to all: they never shun
The man of sorrow, nor the wretch undone;
Unlike the hard, the selfish and the proud,
They fly not sullen from the suppliant crowd;
Nor tell the various people various things,
But show to subjects what they show to kings.

—Crabbe

The sun, that bids us rest, is waking
Our brethren 'neath the Western sky,
And hour by hour fresh lips are making

Thy wondrous doings heard on high.
—John Ellerton.

"Dr. Guild knows how to preach to the modern day a message that is equally full of gospel and of interest."

The Romance of Religion

By Lewis Thurber Guild

THERE is more than a touch of the modern in this preaching. It fits into the need of the times, discusses the things that today's people are thinking about, tackles courageously the vexing and vexatious problems of the hour—and has always and everywhere the same effective balm and cure and solution—the teaching and example of Jesus Christ. This preacher believes that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation and shouts that out from the housetops.—The Christian Advocate.
